But have pleaded, Not Guilty; and whether they are so or no, you are to determine, upon the Evidence given you. There have been two Witnesses produced for the King, Robert Bradinham, and Joseph Palmer: I will not trouble you with the Repetition of their distinct Evidence, because they agree in all Things; and if I mention what one has said, it is, in effect, what the other said also.

Gentlemen, It appears, that Capt. Kidd, with seventy Persons aboard his Ship, called The Adventure-Galley, went from England in the Year 1696, having a Commission of Mart and Reprisal, to take the Vessels, Ships and Goods of the French King, or any of his Subjects, he then being at War with the King of England; and another Commission for seizing Pirates. He has not indeed produced these Commissions to you now, though he did on another Trial. But he went out on a very honest Design, and in pursuance of it he took a French Ship in his Passage to New-York, and brought her thither, and had her legally condemned. But while he was there, it appears, that he had other Thoughts possessed him, and wicked Intentions to turn Pirate, and not to take them; and that he might be well mann'd, he makes Proclamation amongst the Mariners there, that such of them as would come aboard his Ship, and assist him in his Enterprizes, should have their Shares of what Prizes or Booties could be taken; and he proposed, that he would have forty Shares for himself, and the rest should be equally distributed amongst the Mariners according to Agreement, the whole being divided into 160 Shares, as I remember: By this means his Number was increased from 70 to 150. They set sail from New-York, and (after many other Places mentioned by the Witnesses) they came to a Place called Babs-Key, which it seems is in the Red-Sea; and there they stay'd a considerable Time, I think about three Weeks, and this was in Expectation to meet with the Mocca Fleet, which he intended to make a Prize; and during his Stay at Babs-Key, he sent his Boat three several times to get Intelligence of this Fleet; the two first Times there was no Account of any Thing, but the third Time there was notice brought, that they were ready to sail, and that they had English, Dutch, and Moorish Colours: And when he had this Intelligence, to prevent their escaping him, he sends Men ashore, to go on the high Lands, to observe when they did actually sail, and when he had notice that they were under sail, he likewise sailed, and went through the Fleet, and made some Shots at some of the Ships; but it appearing that they had a Convoy, and that they were too strong for him, he quitted the Prize there, of which he had so great Expectation. But afterwards he went on, and took his Course towards Carrawar, and there he takes a Moorish Ship; and Parker, an Englishman, the Commander of her, and a Portuguese also were taken out of her. From thence they went to Malabar, and there he sent some Men ashore, and there they burnt some Houses; and after that took a Moorish Ship, for which they have been tried. Afterwards, in December 1697, (now I come to the first Indictment) upon that very Coast, some Leagues from Callicut, they took a Moorish Ketch, and this Ketch and the Goods aboard it, which were some Quantities of Sugar-candy, Sugar, and Tobacco: It seems these Goods were shared between them aboard the Ship; the Witness is not confident what Share the Captain then had, but what the Captain had not was divided amongst them. The Witnesses say, they burnt this Ketch, because she was not useful to them, and the Men that went on board were put ashore. Now this is the Matter of the first Indictment, the piratically seizing and plundering this Ketch, and taking the Goods out of her, and dividing them amongst the Prisoners; both the Witnesses prove there was a Distribution of them

They then come to the next Month, and that is January; and this is the Matter of the second Indictment, for piratically taking several Goods, to the Value of Seventy Pounds, from the Mariners of the Ship called the Portugal Ship: And these Witnesses prove the taking of this Ship on the Coast of Callicut; and there were aboard this Ship several sorts of Goods, Opium, Rice, Beeswax, Butter, and other sorts of Goods, which they judge might be worth Four or Five hundred Pounds. Now after this, there were some Dutch Ships that gave chase to the Captain, and he was forced to leave the Ship; but he took some of the Goods into his own Ship, and the rest were sold, and the Money divided among the Men: The Captain called them one by one into his Cabin, and so they had their several Shares, according to the Proposals at New-York. It is not possible for them to say they saw every Man's Share paid, but they say, that they were all called by Name to receive their Shares, and they went into the Cabin for that Purpose, and they believe they had all their Shares according to Agreement, because none complained that they had it not.

Gentlemen, There is but one Thing more that I will mention to you. When they came to Madagascar, there was one Culliford, who was a Pirate; and he sent some of his Crew aboard, to know whether Capt. Kidd was not come with a Design to seize them, and hang them; and he declared, he had no such Design: And he and Culliford were extremely kind to one another, and made Visits and Presents to each other; and Capt. Kidd gave two Guns to Culliford, as one of the Witnesses says; but the other Witness says, there were four Guns that he gave to Culliford, who was engaged in the same Design of Piracy; and Culliford presented other Things to Kidd.

But now, Gentlemen, the Business you are to inquire into is, the piratical taking of these Ships: And the Witnesses have positively and directly proved not only the taking the Ships, but the seizing the Goods, and selling them, and sharing the Money: And if these Witnesses say true, as nothing appears to the contrary, by the Prisoners cross examining them, or otherwise, they are not at all contradicted, or their Credibility made questionable: And they are such as are most likely to know what was done, being with them in the whole Voyage, and engaged with them in these Enterprizes. And if you can give entire Credit to the Witnesses, you will probably find these Persons guilty of the Piracy they are charg'd with; which I leave to your Consideration.

Now indeed there are three of them that are Servants, and perhaps you may think their Case is different from the rest; Robert Lamley, who was a Servant to Owens the Cook; William Jenkins, who was Servant to the Mate; and Richard Barlicorn, who was Servant to Capt. Kidd. And though the Witnesses do prove, that they had their several Shares of the Goods and Money; yet, notwithstanding, that they being Servants, their Masters might be entitled to their Shares: So that if you believe they were Servants, and commanded to serve and assist their Masters in what they did, I must leave it to you, whether you will think fit to distinguish their Case from the rest. I do not find, that the others say any Thing material in their own Defence, they have called no Witnesses at all. The Captain lays the Blame on the Men, and the Men seem to lay the Blame on him: He went out on a good Design, to take Pirates, had he pursu'd it; but instead of that, it appears, that he turned Pirate himself, and took the Ships and Goods of Friends instead of Enemies, which was a notorious Breach of Trust, as well as a manifest Violation of Law. The Evidence seems strong against them, which I leave to you to consider of.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a short Space brought in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names: Jo. Watson.

Jo. Watson. Here, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall speak for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you? Is William Kidd guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof he stands indicted in the first Indictment, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Robert Lamley Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is William Jenkins Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Gabriel Loffe Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Hugh Parrot Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Richard Barlicorn Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty?

Cl. of Arr. Is Darby Mullins Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

The same Verdict was given to all the Prisoners upon the other Indictments.

Robert Culliford, Nicholas Churchill, Darby Mullins, and John Eldridge, were arraign'd for taking the Ship called the Great Mabomet, and seizing the Goods to a considerable Value; to which they pleaded, Not Guilty.

VOL V.

Robert Culliford, Churchill, Howe and Mullins were again indicted for another Ship taken piratically by them, to which they pleaded, Not Guilty.

Robert Culliford and Robert Hickman were again arraigned for piratically seizing another Ship, called the Satisfaction, to which they pleaded, Not Guilty.

Robert Culliford and Robert Hickman were again indicted for Piracy committed on a Moorish Ship; to which they pleaded, Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeding to the Trials of the Persons forementioned; Robert Culliford retracted his Plea, and pleaded Guilty, and argued his coming in upon his Majesty's Proclamation; and his Case being particular, was argued by his Council, for the Benefit of his Majesty's Pardon: And Churchill, Howe, Mullins and Hickman, likewise pleading Guilty, John Eldridge was tried by himself, and found Guilty.

After the Trials were over, Judgment against Culliford was respited, and he set aside; the other Prisoners were called to the Bar in order to receive their Sentence, as follows:

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) What canst thou say for thy self? Thou hast been Indicted for several Piracies, and Robberies, and Murder, and hereupon hast been convicted: What hast thou to say for thy self, why thou should'st not die according to Law?

Kidd. I have nothing to say, but that I have been sworn against by perjured and wicked People.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, Hold up thy Hand, What hast thou to say, &c.?

Churchill. I came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, What hast thou to say, &c.?

Owens. I came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation, and desire the Benefit of it.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, What hast thou to say, &c.?

Mullins. I came home upon the King's gracious Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. John Eldridge, What hast thou to say, &c.?

X x

Eldridge.

Eldridge. I have but little to say; I am accused but for one Thing, and that is all, and I have been fallſly accused; I caſt my ſelf on your Lordſhips and the Honourable Bench.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Hickman, What haſt thou to ſay, &c.?

Hickman. I came in according to the King's Proclamation; I came in within the Time limited.

Then Proclamation for Silence was made, while Sentence was pronouncing.

Dr. Oxenden. You the Priſoners at the Bar, William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Abel Owens, Darby Mullins, Robert Hickman, and John Eldridge; you have been ſeverally Indicted for ſeveral Piracies and Robberies, and you William Kidd for Murder. You have been tried by the Laws of the Land, and convicted; and nothing now remains, but that Sentence be paſſed according to the Law. And the Sentence of the Law is this:

You ſhall be taken from the Place where you are, and be carried to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and there be ſeverally hang'd by your Necks until you be dead. And the Lord have Mercy on your Souls.

Kidd. My Lord, It is a very hard Sentence. For my Part, I am the innocentest Perſon of them all, only I have been ſworn againſt by Perjured Perſons.

Capt. Kidd was afterwards Executed according to the Sentence.

Then the House was adjourn'd during Pleasure. After some Time, the House was resumed, and the Lord Steward reported the Message; which was read and agreed to, as followeth, viz.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Sir Richard Holford, to acquaint them, That they having, on the First Day of April last, sent up to their Lordships an Impeachment against William Earl of Portland, of High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and having also, on the Fifteenth Day of the same Month, severally impeach'd John Lord Sommers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Halifax, of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, their Lordships think ARTICLES exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, against Edward Earl of Orford, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

I. THAT whereas for many Years past there hath been a long and expensive War, both by Sea and Land, carried on by his Majesty and his Allies against the French King for the preserving the Ballance of Europe, and for preventing the Growth of the immoderate Power of the said French King; towards the Prosecution of which War great Sums of Money have been given and levied by Authority of Parliament, and many Debts have been contracted, which remain a very heavy Burden upon the People of England; the said Earl being then of his Majesty's most honourable Privy-Council; but always preferring his private Interest to the Good of the Publick, and taking Advantage of the ready Access he had to his Majesty's Person, during the Continuance of the said War, in Violation of his Duty and Trust, hath procur'd from his Majesty one or more Grant or Grants of several Manours, Messuages, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, within the Kingdoms of England or Ireland, or elsewhere within his Majesty's Dominions, of a great Yearly Value; and also of exorbitant Sums of Money to be made to him, or others in Trust for him, but to his Use, the Profits whereof he now enjoys; whereby themselves oblig'd to put them in mind, that as yet no particular Articles have been exhibited against the said Lords; which, after Impeachments have been so long depending, is due in Justice to the Persons concern'd, and agreeable to the Methods of Parliament in such Cases.

Die Veneris, 9^o Maii, 1701.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Colonel Bierly, and others, with the Articles of Impeachment against Edward Earl of Orford; and to acquaint this House, That the Matter of the Charge was contain'd in the Articles; and also, That he was commanded to pray and demand, that the Earl of Orford do give sufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the House of Lords.

A Committee appointed to consider of the Manner of the Commons delivering Articles of Impeachment, and demanding Security to abide the Judgment of this House, and report to the House.

The House was adjourn'd during Pleasure, for the Committee to meet presently. After some Time the House was resumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported, That the Committee had met, and inspected the Journals: That they do not find any mention of the Commons reading the Articles at the Bar; and as for giving Security, they find none.

Then the Articles were read by the Clerk, as follows; viz.

The ANSWER of Edward Earl of Orford, to the Articles exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against the said Earl for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, suppos'd to be committed by him. Deliver'd in 14^o May, 1701.

THE said Earl, saving to himself all Advantages of Exception to the said Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words or want of Form in this his Answer; and saving to him all Privileges and Rights belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm; for Answer to the said Articles, humbly saith,

I. To the First Article, That he having for several Years render'd his Majesty his utmost Service and Duty, as a good and loyal Subject ought to do, his Royal Majesty was graciously pleas'd, upon several Occasions, to take notice of the same, and out of his wonted Bounty, and of his Freewill, was pleas'd to give the said Earl two Grants, one whereof was a Reversionary Grant for Years, of some Houses depending upon a then precedent Estate for about Nine and twenty Years; which being a Reversionary Interest at so great a Distance, altho' the said Earl thankfully receiv'd the same from his Majesty, as his Grace and Bounty, yet the same was of no great Value: And the other of them was a Grant of the Remainder of a gross Sum, amounting to about Two thousand Pounds a Year, for Five Years: Which are the only Grants of whereby the Standing Revenues of the Crown of England, which ought to be applied to the Service of the Publick, are greatly diminish'd, and the People of England thereby burthen'd with Debts, and subjected to grievous Taxes.

II. That in Breach of the Trust reposed in him whilst he was Commander in Chief of the Navy Royal of England, in or near the Straights of Gibraltar, and within the Time aforesaid, he, the said Earl did receive great Sums of the Publick Money, issued out to him for the Service of the Navy, which he hath converted to his own private Use, and unlawfully and unjustly procur'd a Privy-Seal, or Privy-Seals, to discharge him from accounting to the Publick for the same; and also hath receiv'd other great Sums of Money from his Majesty's Exchequer, as Paymaster or Receiver-General of the Navy, without giving a due and legal Account thereof, whereby he hath occasion'd great Clamours and Discontents among the Seamen, and others belonging to his Majesty's Navy, who are thereby reduced to great Miseries and Necessities for want of their just Dues, to the great Discouragement and Discredit of the Publick Service.

paid for by him, the said Earl; and which Objections in like Cases had not been made or stood upon, nor could be reasonably expected; his Majesty was pleas'd to direct and order a Privy-Seal to dispense with the Form in that Particular; but the said Earl did make no Advantage to himself thereby; nor was his Majesty, or the Government, in the least defrauded therein; it appearing, upon a very strict Examination, that less Rates were allow'd for the said Provisions than had been allow'd before in like Cases; or, as the said Earl is inform'd, hath been since allow'd. And to the latter Part of the said Article saith, That for the Moneys by him receiv'd, as Treasurer or Receiver-General of the Navy, he hath already deliver'd in his Accounts, and is ready to perfect the same, according to the ordinary Method, some of 'em plying ready with the Auditors to be declar'd, and the rest of 'em being made up and deliver'd in to be examin'd, in order to be pass'd; and saith, After just Allowances had, he does not believe he shall appear to be indebted upon the said Accounts: And also denies, That any Persons are Sufferers for want of their Dues, in respect of the said Accounts, or that the Publick Service is, or hath been, any ways discourag'd or discredited thereby, as in the said Article is alledg'd.

III. That he the said Earl, while he was in several Ports belonging to the King of Spain's Dominions, did receive from the said King of Spain and others considerable Sums of Money, and great Quantities of Wine, Oil, and other Provisions for the Fleet, to a very great Value; for all which he ought to have accounted: But the said Earl did convert the same to his own Use, and did either embezzle those Provisions, or reckon 'em as bought with the Money allow'd for furnishing the Navy with fresh Provisions; and that for advancing his own private Interest, and securing himself from rendering any Account to the Publick, he, the said Earl, during the said War, procur'd, enjoy'd, and possess'd divers great Offices, which were inconsistent, and in their Nature improper to be executed by one and the same Person, and which ought to be, and by the Laws and Usages of this Realm, were and are appointed and design'd as Checks one upon the other, in Breach of the said Laws, to the Dishonour of his Majesty, and Prejudice of his People.

IV. That of any Manours, Messuages, Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, or Sums of Money whatsoever, which he, or any in Trust for him, hath had from his Majesty; and which said two Grants his Majesty was graciously pleas'd, after many Years Service, freely to bestow upon him the said Earl, without any Surprize, sinister or indirect Means of the said Earl in obtaining the same, and which Grants he humbly conceives were not unusual in like Cases, the excepting whereof he humbly hopes was not any Violation of his Duty, or of any Trust in him the said Earl repos'd.

II. To the Second Article the said Earl answereth and denieth, That he at any time converted to his own private Use any Publick Money issued to him for the Service of the Navy; or that he the said Earl ever procur'd, or had any Privy-Seal, or Privy-Seals, to discharge him from accounting for the same; but saith, That he the said Earl did make up, and upon Oath pass his Accounts for the Moneys impress'd to him for the Service in this Article mention'd; which Account was legally declar'd and pass'd, upon very strict and great Examination, by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury; and he, the said Earl, hath his Quietus est, in due Course of Law upon the same. But the Commissioners of the Victualling-Office making some unusual Objections to part of the said Account, concerning some Provisions furnish'd to the Fleet by the said Earl, in the King of Spain's Dominions, altho' the same were truly and really had and spent by the Seamen in the Fleet, and

III. To the Third Article the said Earl answereth, and denies, That he receiv'd any Moneys whatsoever from the King of Spain, or any other Person, as in the Article is alledg'd; and saith, That what Wine, Oil, or other Provisions were receiv'd from the King of Spain, or any others, for the Fleet, were duly deliver'd and distributed amongst the Officers and Seamen thereof; and denies he did embezzle any of the Provisions, or reckon'd them, or any part of them, as bought with the Moneys allow'd for furnishing the Navy with fresh Provisions: And does also deny, That he the said Earl did enjoy any Offices inconsistent in their Nature (as he is advis'd) one with the other, or which were, or ought to be, Checks one upon the other; or, that he any ways secur'd, or pretended to secure, himself from rendering any Account to the Publick, by any Office or Offices whatsoever; or, that he is guilty of the Breach of any Laws, to his Knowledge, by executing any Office or Offices, or ever executed the same to the Dishonour of his Majesty, or to the Prejudice of his People, as in the said Article is alledg'd.

IV. To

IV. That he the said Earl, within the Time aforesaid, hath clandestinely, contrary to the Law of Nations, sold and dispos'd of several Vessels, with their Ladings and Cargo, taken under Pretence of Prize by his Majesty's Ships of War, without Condemnation or judicial Proceedings, and converted the Money to his own Use; well knowing if they had been condemn'd, as by Law they ought to have been, one Tenth (after Customs allow'd) and one Third Part of the Value thereof, the Customs and the said Tenth being deducted, are by Act of Parliament appropriated to especial Uses: By which Proceedings the Publick has been greatly endamag'd and defrauded, and the Debts of the Nation encreas'd.

V. And whereas Complaints were made to the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England (where the said Earl at that Time presided) by the Company trading to the East-Indies, of divers Piracies committed in the South-East Seas, to the Destruction of their Trade, desiring they might have Letters of Mart granted to them, whereby to be empower'd (tho' at their own Charge) to suppress such Pirates: But the said Earl, preferring his own Interest, discourag'd and rejected their Request and Proposal; and, in some short Time after, jointly with others, did procure a Commission for one William Kidd; as likewise a Grant under the Great-Seal of England, to and for the Use of him the said Earl, and others, of the Ships and Goods of certain Persons therein nam'd, and also of all Goods found on board the said Ships. And the said Company having Intimation of a Commission granted to the said Kidd, being apprehensive of the ill Consequences of the same, did apply themselves to the said Board of Admiralty, desiring to know what Powers and Instructions were given: But such their reasonable Request was deny'd; and Kidd, who was known to be a Person of ill Fame and Reputation, order'd to pursue the intended Voyage; in which he did commit divers Piracies and Depredations on the High Seas, being thereto encourag'd thro' the Hopes of being protected by the high Station and Interest of the said Earl, in Violation of the Law of Nations, and the Interruption and Discouragement of the Trade of England.

VI. That the said Earl, within the Time aforesaid, when an horrid Conspiracy was discover'd against his Majesty's sacred Person, and the Kingdom was under an Apprehension of an immediate Invasion from France, and divers Ships of War (particularly the Ship Dutchess) were Arm'd out, Equipp'd and Mann'd in Defence of the Realm, to oppose the intended Invasion, did his utmost Endeavour to prejudice and weaken the Navy Royal

IV. To the Fourth Article the said Earl answereth, and saith, He believes that the Prizes taken in the late War were appropriated as by the Act of Parliament in that behalf is provided; but denies, that he did, at any Time, sell or dispose of any Vessel or Vessels, or their Ladings or Cargo taken as or under the pretence of Prize, by any of his Majesty's Ships of War, without Condemnation or judicial Proceedings, or converted the Moneys arising by Sale of any Vessel or Vessels, or their Lading or Cargo, taken as or under pretence of Prize, by any of his Majesty's Ships of War, to his own Use; but, on the contrary, did from time to time, in his Station, give Orders, that the Prizes taken should be carefully preserv'd without Embezzlement, and duly proceeded against, and the Produce answer'd as the Law directs: And therefore humbly insisteth, that the Publick hath been no ways endamag'd, or the Debts of the Nation encreas'd, by any Neglect or Default of the said Earl.

V. To the Fifth Article the said Earl saith, That the East-India Company, about the beginning of March, One thousand Six hundred Ninety and Six, did apply to the Admiralty Board, of which the said Earl was one, to empower their Ships and Officers to seize and take all Pirates infesting the Seas within the Limits of their Charter; and likewise to erect a Court of Admiralty in those Parts, to try and condemn such Pirates as they should take. Upon which Application the Board of Admiralty did take Advice, and were inform'd, They had no Authority to grant the same; and denies, he the said Earl, ever discourag'd or rejected the Company's Request therein, unless it were by telling them, That the Admiralty by Law could not grant the same: And denies, that the Company was ever deny'd Letters of Mart in common Form, to the Knowledge of the said Earl: And saith, as to the Matter of Kidd, in the Article mention'd, He was gone upon his Expedition about twelve Months before that Time. And as to his Commission, and the Grant in the said Article mention'd, the said Earl humbly conceives, and is advis'd, the same were not contrary to Law; but sure he is, the said Expedition was intended for the Publick Good and Service; and saith, The said Kidd had no Powers or Instructions from the Board of Admiralty, other than the ordinary and common Letters of Mart, the Contents whereof are common, and well known to Merchants. And the said Earl doth deny, that he knew the said Kidd to be of ill Fame and Reputation: But in case the said Kidd hath committed any Piracies, he, the said Kidd, is answerable, and ought to answer for the same, he never being order'd by the said Earl so to do; nor had he ever any the least Encouragement given him by the said Earl, or any other, to his Knowledge, to expect or hope for any Protection therein, or in any illegal Action done or committed by him.

VI. To the Sixth Article the said Earl saith, He believes it to be true, that there was a horrid and barbarous Plot and Conspiracy against his Majesty's sacred Person, and that there was an Apprehension of an immediate Invasion; but the said Earl hopes, no Neglect of Duty in his Station can be imputed to him to prevent the same. And as for the Ship Dutchess, which was, amongst many others, arm'd and equipp'd in Defence of of England; for that he, the said Earl, by Colour of his Office (being then First Commissioner for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England) without the Privy of the other Commissioners, contrary to his Oath and Duty, and preferring his Hopes of Gain to himself, to the Safety of the Publick, did order Capt. Steward, Commander of the Ship Dutchess, to deliver over, and put on board the said Kidd, mention'd in the foregoing Article, out of the said Ship The Dutchess, a great Number of able Seamen, levied and provided at the Expence of the Publick, and then discharging their Duty in Defence of their Country, and against their own Consent, to the Prejudice of the Publick Security, and to the endangering of the said Ship The Dutchess, if it had been attack'd by the Enemy.

VII. That the said Earl, during the said War, and at a Time of the greatest Exigency and Necessity, when Ships, Men, and Money were wanting to guard the Seas, and protect our Trade, did by Misrepresentations, and contrary to his bounden Duty, and the Trust reposed in him, procure a Grant or Order for his Majesty's Ship The Dolphin, then fitted out, mann'd and equipp'd for the Service of the Publick, to be employ'd in a private Voyage and Undertaking, for the Advantage of himself and others concerned with him. In pursuance whereof, and for their private Gain, the Ship was, at the Publick Expence, continued in Foreign Parts for several Months, to the Destruction and Loss of his Majesty's Subjects on board the same, to the weakening the Navy, by rendering the said Ship unserviceable, and the increasing the Debts of the Publick.

VIII. That the said Earl, during the Time of his Commanding the Navy Royal of England, did, through Neglect, and in Contempt of Orders, unnecessarily hazard and, expose to imminent Danger the said Navy; and, that during the Time aforesaid, having had many Opportunities of taking or destroying the Ships belonging to the French King, the said Earl, contrary to Advice, in Disobedience to Orders, and in Neglect of his Duty, did suffer and permit the said Ships to return safe into their own Harbours.

IX. That the said Earl, well knowing our Sovereign Lord the King to have been engaged in several Alliances with the Emperor of Germany and other Princes and States, particularly in a Treaty concluded with his Imperial Majesty in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Six Hundred Eighty-Nine, the End and Intention of all which Leagues and Treaties were to prevent the Growth of the Power of the French King, and no secure England, and the ancient Allies of England, against the same, did notwithstanding, in concert with other False and Evil Counsellors, advise our said Sovereign Lord the King in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety-Eight, to enter into one Treaty for the Realm, the said Earl saith, that the Men in the said Article mention'd to be taken from on board her, were but some of the very Persons that were just before taken from on board Capt. Kidd, and returned by their own Consent on board Capt. Kidd again, not being above twenty in Number; and saith, all Fears of the Invasion were then over and at an end; and denies, that the same was intended to weaken, or did weaken the said Ship, or the Navy Royal; or that the said Seamen, so returning on board the said Kidd, were levied or provided at the Expence of the Publick, or did return or were put on board the said Kidd against their own Consent, or to the Prejudice of the Publick Security; or that the Ship Dutchess was thereby endanger'd, if she had been attack'd, as in the said Article is alledg'd.

VII. To the Seventh Article the said Earl answereth, and denies, That he did, by Misrepresentation, or otherwise, obtain or procure a Grant or Order for his Majesty's Ship Dolphin to be employ'd in a private Voyage or Undertaking; but what was done therein, was done upon the Peace concluded, and by his Majesty's Command, at the Instance and Request of other Persons, and not of the said Earl, but contrary to his Opinion: Nor was the said Earl any way concerned in Interest therein, till after his Majesty's Orders were given about the said Ship; and then, and not before, some of the Persons concerned in the said Adventure, desired the said Earl to take some Shares therein (the Number whereof he doth not remember) which the said Earl accordingly did; but humbly insists, that his Actings therein were not contrary to his Duty, or the Trust in him reposed, or the Debts of the Nation thereby increas'd.

VIII. To the Eighth the said Earl answereth, and denies, That at any Time while he commanded the Navy Royal, he did, through Neglect or Contempt of Orders, unnecessarily hazard or expose to Danger the said Navy; and also denies, that upon any Opportunity of taking or destroying the Ships of the French King, he did, contrary to Advice, or in Disobedience to Orders, neglect to do the same: And also denies, that he did suffer or permit any of the French King's Ships to return into their own Harbours, when he had Opportunity to prevent the same; and humbly insists, he is not guilty of any Neglect or Omission of his Duty herein, nor did expect in this Particular to be charged therewith, considering his faithful Services rendered against the French Fleet.

IX. To the Ninth Article the said Earl saith, He believes it to be true, that his Majesty hath been engaged in several Alliances with several Princes, and particularly with the Emperor, in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred Eighty-Nine; and that the End of those Alliances was to prevent the Growth and Power of France, and to secure this Kingdom and its Allies: But the said Earl does deny, that he did advise his Majesty to enter into the Treaty of Partition, charged upon the said Earl in this Article; and so far as the said Earl was any ways acquainted therewith, he objected to, and gave his Opinion against the same.

X. To dividing the Monarchy and Dominions of Spain; in in pursuance whereof, in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety-Nine, one other Treaty was entered into to the like Purpose; by which Treaties great Injustice was done to the Emperor, an ancient Ally of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and a large Part of the said Spanish Dominions were to be added to the Crown of France; both which Treaties were Prejudicial to the Interest of the Protestant Religion all over Europe, Ruinous to the Trade of England, and Dishonourable to our Sovereign Lord the King, and the People of these Kingdoms.

All which Crimes and Misdemeanors were committed and done by him, the said Earl, against our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, the Peace and Interest of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the several Trusts reposed in him the said Earl.

X. And he the said Earl of Orford was One of the Lords Justices, during his Majesty's Absence beyond the Seas, the First Commissioner for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England, Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Navy Royal, One of his Majesty's Privy Council, and Treasurer of his Majesty's Navy, or in some or one of the said Stations during the Time that all and every the Crimes before set forth were done and committed.

That the said Commons, by Protestation, saving to themselves the Liberty of Exhibiting, at any Time hereafter, any other Accusation or Impeachment against the said Earl, and also of Replying to his Answers, or to any of them, and of offering Proofs of all the said Premises, or any of them, or any other Impeachment or Accusation that shall be exhibited by them, as the Case shall, according to the Course of Parliament, Require; Do Pray and Demand, That the said Earl may be put to Answer for all and every of the Premises; and that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments, may be upon every of them had and uled, as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

After Reading in the House the Articles of Impeachment brought up against Edward Earl of Orford, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, his Lordship humbly desired to have a Copy of the said Articles, and that he would put in his Answer to them in as short a Time as the House should think fit: It is thereupon ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Edward Earl of Orford may have a Copy of the said Articles.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Pitt, to acquaint them, That upon Search of the Journals of this House, they do not find any Precedent of Security given to abide the Judgment of this House by any Peer, upon an Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Die Mercurij 14^o Maij, 1701.

This Day Edward Earl of Orford delivered his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment of the House of Commons against him, which was read by the Clerk.

The Committee appointed to consider of the Manner in delivering Articles of Impeachments

X. To the Tenth Article the said Earl answereth, and saith, That true it is, his Majesty was pleased to employ and intrust him in the several Offices and Stations in this Article mentioned, for several Years, as his Majesty's Occasions required, although not for all the Time in the said Article mentioned; and hopes, and humbly insisteth upon it, that he the said Earl did from time to time, according to his Duty, and the Trusts in him reposed, discharge the said Offices and Employments with Loyalty, Faithfulness and Zeal to his Majesty and his People.

And thus having laid his Case before your Lordships, he the said, Earl, does humbly insist, and answer to the said Impeachment, and all and every the Articles aforesaid, exhibited against him, That he is not Guilty of all or any of them, or of all or any the Matters or Things by the said Articles charged, in Manner and Form as the same are therein, and thereby alledg'd against him; and that the Matters by him before set forth to be done and transacted, or any of them, were not done or committed by him, the said Earl, against our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, or the Peace or Interest of this Kingdom, or in Breach of the Trust reposed in him, the said Earl; and humbly submits himself herein to your Lordships Judgment.

by the Commons being Revived, the House was adjourned during Pleasure; and the Lords went to the Committee. And some Time, the House was resumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported, That they had inspected the Journals, and find the first Step, after Answers to Impeachments are delivered, is, to send a Copy thereof to the House of Commons. Whereupon it is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That he Answer of Edward Earl of Orford, delivered this Day to the Articles of Impeachment depending against him, be Copied, in order to be sent to the House of Commons To morrow Morning, by two Masters of Chancery.

The Earl of Orford having this Day delivered in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment against him, desired that Mr. Dodd and Mr. Pooley might be assigned Council for him upon his Trial. It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Mr. Dodd and Mr. Pooley shall, and they are hereby assigned Council for the Earl of Orford, as desired.

Die Jovis 15^o Maii, 1701.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Pitt, to carry down a Copy of the Earl of Orford's Answer to the Articles of Impeachment against him.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Pitt, to acquaint them, That they having on the First Day of April last, sent up to their Lordships an Impeachment against William Earl of Portland, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and having also, on the Fifteenth Day of the same Month, severally impeached John Lord Sommers and Charles Lord Hallifax of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, their Lordships think themselves obliged to put them in mind, that as yet no particular Articles have been exhibited against the said Lords, which, after Impeachments have been so long depending, is due in Justice to the Persons concerned, and agreeable to the Methods of Parliament in such Cases.

ARTICLES exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, against John Lord Sommers, Baron of Evesham, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

THAT a Treaty and Alliance between Leopold, the Emperor of Germany, and the States-General of the United-Provinces, was made and concluded in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred Eighty-nine, upon their Consideration of the Greatness of the Common Danger, which then threaten'd all Christendom, from the excessive Power of France, and the unconstant Faith of the French in the Observation of Treaties; whereby it was agreed, That there should be, and remain for ever, a constant, perpetual, and inviolable Friendship and good Correspondence between his Imperial Majesty and the States General; that each of them should be obliged to promote the others Interest, and, as much as in them lay, prevent all Damages and Inconveniencies to each other.

That during the Continuance of the War, there should be not only a Defensive, but also an Offensive Alliance between the said Parties; by Vertue whereof, they should both of them act in an hostile Manner, with all their Forces by Sea and Land, against the French King, and such of his Allies as should refuse to separate themselves from him: That, after the War should be ended, and a Peace concluded, there should remain between his Imperial Majesty, his Heirs, and Successors, and the States-General, a perpetual Defensive Alliance against the Crown of France, and its Adherents.

That if the Crown of France should again attack either of the said Confederate Parties, at what Time soever the same should be done, they should faithfully assist each other.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons return Answer, viz. That the Articles against William Earl of Portland, John Lord Sommers, and Charles Lord Hallifax, are preparing, and in a short Time their House will send them up to the House of Lords.

Die Lune 19^o Maii, 1701.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Harcourt and others, with the Articles of Impeachment against John Lord Sommers; and to acquaint this House, That the Matter of the Charge was contained in the Articles; and also, That he was commanded to pray and demand, that the Lord Sommers do give sufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the House of Lords.

The Articles were read by the Clerk, as follows; viz.

The ANSWER of John Lord Sommers, Baron of Evesham, to the Articles exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, suppos'd to be by him committed. Deliver'd in 24 May, 1701.

THE said Lord Sommers, saving to himself all Advantages of Exception to the said Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words, or want of Form in this his Answer; and also saving to himself all Rights and Privileges belonging to him, as one of the Peers of this Realm; for Answer to the said Article humbly saith:

I. To the First Article, That he believes the now Emperor of Germany, and the States-General of the United-Provinces, being in the Year One thousand Six hundred and Eighty-nine, engaged in a War with France, a Treaty and Alliance was concluded between them, and a Separate Article then made, to the Effect in this Article mentioned; and that his Sacred Majesty did afterwards enter into, ratify and approve the same; to which Treaty, Separate Article, and Ratification (for Certainty thereof) he referreth himself: And further saith, That in the Year One thousand Six hundred and Ninety-eight, his Majesty, before he left England, was pleased to tell him, That some Intimation had been given to the Earl of Portland, when in France, that the French King inclined to come to an Agreement with his Majesty, concerning the Succession to the Crown of Spain. And afterwards, in August, One thousand Six hundred and Ninety-eight (his Majesty being then in Holland, and the said Lord Sommers at Tunbridge-Wells, by his Majesty's Permission, for Recovery of his Health) Mr. Secretary Vernon communicated to him a Letter he had then received, writ-writ-

That his Imperial Majesty and the States-General should at all Times, by all Means, with all their Forces, protect and defend all the Rights of each other against the Crown of France, and its Adherents.

And other Provisions were thereby made for their mutual Security, as well during the Continuance of the War, as after the Conclusion of a Peace.

That certain Separate Articles were also at or about that Time made, whereby the States-General maturely considering that France had openly declared in several Courts, that (notwithstanding the most solemn Renunciation) they continued their Pretensions by Force of Arms to assert for The Dauphin the Succession of the Spanish Monarchy, in Case the King of Spain should die without Issue; and also considering what a Blow their State would receive, and what a Prejudice might happen thereby to the publick Affairs, and Quiet, did promise, That in Case his said Catholick Majesty should die without lawful Issue, they would with all their Forces assist his said Imperial Majesty or his Heirs, in taking the Succession of the Spanish Monarchy, lawfully belonging to that House, together with its Kingdoms, Provinces, Dominions and Rights, and in their obtaining and securing the quiet Possession thereof, against the French, and their Adherents, who should directly, or indirectly, oppose that Succession, and with Forces repel the Force that should be brought against them.

That at the Instance of the States-General, in pursuance of the said Treaty and Separate Articles, our most Gracious Lord and Sovereign, his most Excellent Majesty King William III. was invited to enter into an Alliance of the aforesaid Treaty, and into the Agreement of the said Separate Articles; and thereupon, for restoring and preserving the publick Peace and Quiet, did afterwards, in the said Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred and Eighty-nine, enter into, and under the Great-Seal of England, accept, approve and ratify, and in the most solemn Manner, engage and promise religiously and inviolably to observe the same, without violating the said Treaty, or Separate Articles in any Article, or suffering the same to the utmost of his Power to be violated.

That in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred and Ninety-eight, a Treaty was projected and contrived in France, to be set on foot between his Majesty, the French King, and the States-General, for a Partition of the Spanish Monarchy, whereby many large Territories thereunto belonging were to be allotted, and delivered up to France.

That the Tenor and Design of the said last mentioned Treaty, whilst the same was in Negotiation, was communicated to the said John Lord Sommers, then One of the Lords Justices of England, Lord Chancellor of England, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council.

That the said Lord Sommers, well knowing the most apparent evil Consequences, as well as the Injustice of the said Partition, did not, according to the Trust and Duty of his said several Offices, dissuade or endeavour to obstruct its taking effect; but, on the contrary, having neither written by the Earl of Portland, by his Majesty's Order, wherein it was mentioned, That Count Tallard (who was then Ambassador from the French King to his Majesty) had declared an Accommodation might be found out in Relation to the Succession of Spain, in Case of that King's Death: And that his Majesty had founded France, upon what Terms an Agreement might be made; and the Conditions were near of this Nature; (viz.) That the Electoral Prince of Bavaria should have the Kingdom of Spain, the Indies, the Low-Countries, and all that depends upon the Spanish Dominions (except the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, Sardinia, the Province of Guypuscoa, on this Side of the Pyreneans, Fen-tarabia, and St. Sebastian, Final, and the Places in Tuscany, of which Spain then stood possessed): In Consideration of which, France was absolutely to renounce the Right it pretended to the Succession of Spain, and Milan was to be given to the Arch-Duke, second Son to the Emperor: And that his Majesty commanded the said Mr. Secretary to speak to him, the said Lord Sommers, touching that Matter; and that his Lordship should discourse it with those he thought he might trust with that Secret, which to keep with the utmost Care, was by the said Letters mentioned to be of the highest Importance; and at the same Time, the said Lord Sommers received a Letter from his Majesty, signed by himself, intimating, that Count Tallard had made some Propositions, touching an Agreement with his Majesty, concerning the Succession of the Kingdom of Spain, the which the said Earl of Portland would write to Mr. Secretary Vernon, to the End his Majesty might have some Opinions upon that Affair, which required the greatest Secrecy, and in which no Time was to be lost, if that Negotiation were to be carried on: And for that End his Majesty thereby commanded the said Lord Sommers to send full Powers to him under the Great-Seal of England, with Blanks for the Names of Commissioners to treat with Count Tallard; which his Majesty, by his said Letter, was pleased to say, he believed might be done secretly: That none but the said Lord Sommers and Mr. Secretary Vernon, and those to whom the said Lord Sommers and Mr. Secretary should communicate it, might have Knowledge thereof; and that the Clerks who were to write the full Powers, might not know what they were, or to the like Effect; and the said Lord Sommers did immediately return the Earl of Portland's said Letter to Mr. Secretary Vernon, and desired him to communicate the Contents thereof to the Earl of Orford, and the now Lord Hallifax (Two of the then Lord Justices, who, as he was assured, were then in Town, and also to such others as they and Mr. Secretary Vernon should think fit; who, in regard of the King's Command to have that Affair kept a Secret, thought fit to impart it to the Duke of Sbrowsbury only (as the said Mr. Secretary afterwards acquainted the said Lord Sommers): And some Time afterwards the said Lord Hallifax came down to the said Wells; and Mr. Secretary Vernon coming thither also about the same Time, they, and the said Lord Sommers, had Discourse together concerning the said Proposal; and the said Lord Sommers, by Letter dated the 28th of August, One thousand Six hundred and

Regard to his Majesty's Honour, engag'd by the said Treaty with the Emperor and States-General, as aforesaid, to the Trade and known Interest of this Kingdom, or the Peace of Europe, did advise his Majesty to enter into the said Treaty, and did so far encourage and promote the same, that the said Treaty was concluded and ratified under the Great-Seal of England (then in the Custody of the said Lord Sommers) and thereby the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, the Places depending on the Monarchy of Spain, situate on the Coast of Tuscany, or the adjacent Islands, comprehended under the Name of Santo Stephano, Porto Hercole, Orbitello, Telamone, Porto Longone, Piombino, the Town and Marquisate of Final, the Province of Guypuscoa, particularly the Towns of Fontarabia and St. Sebastian, situate in that Province, and especially the Port of the Passage, which is therein compriz'd, with several other Parts and Things of, or belonging to, the said Kingdom of Spain, were allotted to the Dauphin for his Share; and the Crown of Spain, and the other Kingdoms, Islands, States, Countries, and Places depending thereon (except such Part, as aforesaid, which was thereby allotted to the Dauphin for his Share, and the Dutchy of Milan, herein after mention'd) was given and assign'd to the Electoral Prince, eldest Son to the Elector of Bavaria, for his Share, to enjoy the same to him, his Heirs and Successors, for ever, never to be molested therein on any Pretence of Right or Claim on the Part of the French King, or the Dauphin, or his Issue, Heirs or Successors, nor on the Part of the Emperor, the King of the Romans, the Arch-Duke Charles, his second Son, and other Children, or his Heirs or Successors; and the Dutchy of Milan was thereby agreed to be given to the said Arch-Duke for his Share, and in Extinction of all Pretensions and Rights which the said Emperor, the King of the Romans, the said Arch-Duke Charles, all his other Children, Successors, and Heirs, might have to the said Succession of Spain. By which Treaty it was also further agreed, That if any Prince whatsoever should oppose the taking Possession of the Shares thereby agreed on, as aforesaid, his Majesty, the French King, and the States-General, should assist one another against such Opposition, and hinder the same with all their Power.

That by a Secret Article of the said Treaty, in like manner ratified under the Great-Seal of England, 'twas provided, That if the King of Spain should die without Issue, and the Electoral Prince of Bavaria should afterwards die without Issue, his Electoral Highness of Bavaria, his Father, should succeed him in all the Kingdoms, Islands, States, Countries, and Places assign'd to the Electoral Prince, as aforesaid, and enjoy the same to him and his Children, Successors, and Heirs, then born, or to be born; so as neither the Emperor, his Children, nor any other Person, should or might, under any Pretext, form the least Pretension to that Succession; his Majesty, the French King, and States-General, thereby engaging themselves to employ all their Power, by Land and by Sea, for maintaining the Order establish'd by the said Secret Article, relating to the Succession of the Monarchy of Spain.

That the said Treaty was ratified under the Great-Seal of England (then in the Custody of the said Lord Sommers) as an Agreement between his Majesty, the French King, and States-General,

Ninety and Eight, did (as his own Thoughts, and as what he apprehended to be the Result of their Consideration) humbly represent to his Majesty, First, That the entertaining of such a Proposal, as was mention'd by Count Tallard, seem'd to be attended with very many ill Consequences, if the French did not act a sincere Part; but that they were soon at Ease, as to any Apprehension of that sort, being fully assur'd his Majesty would not act but with the utmost Niceness in an Affair wherein his Glory, and the Safety of Europe, was so highly concerned. That the Second Thing they consider'd, was the very ill Prospect of what was like to happen upon the Death of the King of Spain, in case nothing was done previously towards the providing against that Accident, which seems probably to be very near; the King of France then having so great a Force in such a Readiness, that he was in a Condition to take Possession of Spain before any other Prince could be ready to make a Stand. That his Majesty was the best Judge whether that was the Case, who was so perfectly informed of the Circumstances of all Parts abroad. But, so far as related to England, it would be the Want of Duty not to give his Majesty this clear Account, That there was a Deadness, and want of Spirit, in the Nation universally, so as not at all to be disposed to the Thoughts of entering into a new War; and, that they seem'd to be tir'd out with Taxes, to a Degree beyond what was discerned, until it appeared upon the Occasion of the then late Elections: That that was the Truth of the Fact, upon which his Majesty would determine what Resolutions were proper to be taken. The remaining Consideration was, what would be the Condition of Europe, if the Proposal took place; but of that they thought themselves little capable of judging; but it seem'd, that if Sicily were in the French hands, they would be entirely Masters of the Levant Trade: That if they were possess'd of Final, and those other Sea-Ports on that side (whereby Milan would be entirely shut out from Relief by Sea, or any Commerce) that Dutchy would be of little Signification in the Hands of any Prince; and, that if the King of France had Possession of that Part of Guypuscoa, which is mention'd in the Proposal, besides the Ports he would have in the Ocean, it did seem he would have as easy a Way of invading Spain on that side, as he then had on the Side of Catalonia. But it was not to be hoped, that France should quit its Pretensions to so great a Succession, without considerable Advantages; and they were assured his Majesty would reduce the Terms as low as could be done, and make them (as far as was possible in the then present Circumstances of Things) such as might be some Foundation for the future Quiet of Christendom, which all his Majesty's Subjects could not but be convinced was his true Aim. And if it could be brought to pass, that England might be some way a Gainer by that Transaction, whether it was by the Elector of Bavaria (who was the Gainer by his Majesty's Interposition in that Treaty) his coming to an Agreement to let the English into some Trade to the Spanish Plantations, or in any other manner, it would wonderfully endear his Majesty to his English Subjects: That it did not appear, in case the Negotiation should proceed, what was to be done on his Majesty's Part, in order to make it take place; whe-notwithstanding the said Lord Sommers well knew that the same had been concluded between his Majesty's Commissioners and the French Ambassador, or the Commissioner of the French King only; and, that the Purport thereof had never been communicated to the States-General at the Time of the Ratification thereof under the Great-Seal of England, notwithstanding the Negotiation thereof in Holland.

towards the latter End of September following; when he had receiv'd an Account, that a Treaty relating to the Succession of the Crown of Spain had been adjusted, concluded, and sign'd by the Commissioners named by his Majesty for that Purpose, and the Ambassador and Plenipotentiary of the French King. And the said Lord Sommers doth deny, That the said Treaty of Partition, or any Proposition for such Treaty, or the Transaction thereof, was communicated to him, the said Lord Sommers; nor was he acquainted with the same, or the Design thereof, or any other Matter relating thereto, at any other Time, or in any other Manner, before he was told of the concluding and signing thereof, as aforesaid, than as is herein before mention'd to be done by his Majesty, as aforesaid, and by his and the said Earl of Portland's Letter, herein before-mention'd. And the said Lord Sommers doth deny he did, at any Time whatsoever, advise his Majesty to enter into the said Treaty, or any way encourage or promote the same; but having made the Objections before-mention'd in his said Letter to his Majesty, against the Propositions so communicated to him, as aforesaid, and clearly laid open such Thoughts and Observations as occur'd to him upon the said Matter; he did thereby (as he conceived) fully and faithfully discharge his Trust, and the Duty incumbent on him. And the said Lord Sommers further saith, That afterwards Mr. Secretary Vernon did acquaint him, that he had receiv'd, by his Majesty's Command, a Copy of the Treaty relating to the Succession of the Crown of Spain, and of Two Secret Articles relating to the Matter of that Treaty; and, that he had likewise his Majesty's Command to prepare the Instruments for the Ratification of the same, and to leave Blanks therein for the Names of the Commissioners of the States-General. And accordingly the said Mr. Secretary did prepare the said several Instruments, and did bring the same, for prepar'd, to the said Lord Sommers, to pass the same under the Great-Seal; which was done accordingly, the said Lord Sommers having a good and lawful Warrant so to do; and the said Ratification was transmitted to his Majesty, to have the same perfected in his Presence: Which Treaty and Secret Articles were to such or the like Effect, as in this Article is set forth; but, for more Certainty, he refers himself to the said Treaty and Articles. And the said Lord Sommers, not being privy in any other manner than as aforesaid to the said Treaty, or the Transaction thereof, doth not know when, or in what manner, the same was communicated to the States-General.

II. That for the more effectual carrying on the said Treaty, one or more Commission or Commissions was or were prepar'd, amended, enlarg'd, or alter'd by the said Lord Sommers, without any lawful Warrant for his so doing; whereunto the said Lord Sommers, contrary to the Duty of his said several Offices, and in Violation of the great Trust repos'd in him, in or about the Month of September, 1698, without communicating the same to the rest of the then Lords Justices of England, or advising in Council with his Majesty's Privy Council thereupon, did presume to affix the Great-Seal of England.

That no certain Persons of known Honour, Fidelity, and Experience were therein nominated Commissioners, at the Time of the affixing the Great-Seal of England thereto, but a Blank or empty Space was left in the said Commission or Commissions at the Time of the sealing thereof, wherein the Commissioners Names were to be afterwards inserted beyond the Seas; notwithstanding which, an Unlimited Power was thereby granted to the Commissioners, whose Names were therein afterwards to be inserted, as aforesaid, or to either of them, without any written Instructions whatsoever to restrain, guide, or direct them in the Exercise thereof, in his Majesty's Name to confer and treat with the Commissioner or Deputy, or Commissioners or Deputies, of the French King, and also with the Commissioners or ther any more was requir'd, than that the English and Dutch should sit still, and France it self was to see it executed; and if that were so, what Security ought to be expected, that if, by their being Neuters, the French should be successful, they would confine themselves to the Terms of the Treaty, and not attempt to make further Advantages of their Success. And the said Lord Sommers saith, That after the writing of his said Letter, he had no Account whatsoever, nor heard any thing of the said Treaty, or knew or heard whether the same was proceeded upon, or not, until tohe was acquainted by Mr. Secretary Vernon, That he had receiv'd an Account, that a Treaty relating to the Succession of the Crown of Spain had been adjusted, concluded, and sign'd by the Commissioners named by his Majesty for that Purpose, and the Ambassador and Plenipotentiary of the French King. And the said Lord Sommers doth deny, That the said Treaty of Partition, or any Proposition for such Treaty, or the Transaction thereof, was communicated to him, the said Lord Sommers; nor was he acquainted with the same, or the Design thereof, or any other Matter relating thereto, at any other Time, or in any other Manner, before he was told of the concluding and signing thereof, as aforesaid, than as is herein before mention'd to be done by his Majesty, as aforesaid, and by his and the said Earl of Portland's Letter, herein before-mention'd. And the said Lord Sommers doth deny he did, at any Time whatsoever, advise his Majesty to enter into the said Treaty, or any way encourage or promote the same; but having made the Objections before-mention'd in his said Letter to his Majesty, against the Propositions so communicated to him, as aforesaid, and clearly laid open such Thoughts and Observations as occur'd to him upon the said Matter; he did thereby (as he conceived) fully and faithfully discharge his Trust, and the Duty incumbent on him. And the said Lord Sommers further saith, That afterwards Mr. Secretary Vernon did acquaint him, that he had receiv'd, by his Majesty's Command, a Copy of the Treaty relating to the Succession of the Crown of Spain, and of Two Secret Articles relating to the Matter of that Treaty; and, that he had likewise his Majesty's Command to prepare the Instruments for the Ratification of the same, and to leave Blanks therein for the Names of the Commissioners of the States-General. And accordingly the said Mr. Secretary did prepare the said several Instruments, and did bring the same, for prepar'd, to the said Lord Sommers, to pass the same under the Great-Seal; which was done accordingly, the said Lord Sommers having a good and lawful Warrant so to do; and the said Ratification was transmitted to his Majesty, to have the same perfected in his Presence: Which Treaty and Secret Articles were to such or the like Effect, as in this Article is set forth; but, for more Certainty, he refers himself to the said Treaty and Articles. And the said Lord Sommers, not being privy in any other manner than as aforesaid to the said Treaty, or the Transaction thereof, doth not know when, or in what manner, the same was communicated to the States-General.

II. and III. To the Second and Third Articles the said Lord Sommers saith, That he having receiv'd his Majesty's express Commands, by his Letter mention'd in his Answer to his First Article, to send to his Majesty full Powers, under the Great-Seal of England, for negotiating the said Treaty, with Blanks for his Majesty's Commissioners Names; which he humbly conceives, and is advis'd, was a sufficient Warrant for him to pass a Commission under the Great-Seal for that Purpose; and the same being prepar'd in usual Form of Commissions of full Powers, with Blanks for Commissioners Names, according to his Majesty's Directions, he did affix the Great-Seal to the same; and the said Commission was sent to his Majesty, then in Holland, to be perfected in his Presence, by inserting the Names of such Persons as his Majesty should think fit to commissionate therein (as he conceives might legally be done); which Commissioners were to receive their Instructions from his Majesty, for the Execution of their said Power, together with their said Commission, in usual manner: But what Instructions, or whether any Instructions in Writing were given to the Commissioners, in relation to the executing the said Power (the same no ways concerning the said Lord Sommers) he knows not. And the said Lord Sommers saith, He did desire his Majesty, that a particular Warrant for the said Commission (which had been before sent by Mr. Secretary Vernon to his Deputies of the States-General, for preserving the publick Peace, and touching the Succession to the Crown of Spain; and his Majesty did thereby engage himself to approve, ratify, and confirm whatsoever should be thereupon concluded by them, or either of them.

III. That the said Lord Sommers, contrary to the Duty of his said Office of Lord Chancellor, did affix the Great-Seal of England to the said Commission or Commissions, not having first receiv'd any lawful Warrant for that Purpose: In hopes of concealing which evil and most dangerous Practice, the said Lord Sommers, after he had sealed the said Commission or Commissions, used his Endeavours to procure a Warrant to be transmitted to him, for affixing the Great-Seal to the said Commission or Commissions, and that it might not be known but that he had it in due Time.

IV. That the said Lord Sommers, contrary to the Duty of his said several Offices, affixed the Great-Seal of England to the Ratification of the said Treaty, made in the Year of our Lord 1698, not having first communicated the same to the rest of the then Lords Justices of England, or advis'd in Council with his Majesty's Privy-Council thereupon; and at the Time of his affixing the Great-Seal thereto, one entire blank Sheet, and many other Blanks, were left in the said Ratification, with an Intent to be afterwards fill'd up by other Persons beyond the Seas, as should be thought fit.

V. That in the Year of our Lord 1699, another Treaty was enter'd into, in pursuance of the said Treaty made in the Year 1698, and concluded by and between his Majesty, the French King, and the States-General, and also ratified under the Great-Seal of England, then in the Custody of the said Lord Sommers; whereby the Kingdom of Spain (in case his Catholick Majesty should die without Issue) was agreed to be divided, and many large Territories thereof were allotted to the Dauphin for his Share: Which Treaties were evidently destructive of the Trade of this Realm, dishonourable to his Majesty, highly injurious to the Interest of the Protestant Religion, and manifestly tended to disturb the General Peace of Europe, by altering the Ballance of Power therein, and strengthening France against the good Friends and ancient Allies of our Sovereign Lord the King.

VI. That whereas by the Laws and Usages of this Realm all Commissions under the Great-Seal of England, for the making any Treaties or Alliances with any Foreign Princes, States, or Potentates, and all Ratifications under the Great-Seal of all such Treaties and Alliances, ought to be enrolled and enter'd on Record in the Court of Chancery, with or by the Prothonotary of the said Court, for a perpetual Memorial thereof; and, that the Merchants and other Subjects of England, having Commerce or Correspondence in Foreign Parts, may not, through Ignorance of the same, incur the Pains and Penalties by the Law due to those who shall any ways infringe, break, or act contrary to such Treaties; he the said Lord Sommers, not his Majesty (as he inform'd the said Lord Sommers) for his signing) might be signed and returned: Not that he doubted his Majesty's said Letter to be a sufficient Warrant, but for that such Warrant might be more proper to be produced, if Occasion should require, than his Majesty's said Letter; which, by reason of other Matters therein obtain'd, ought not to be produced without his Majesty's Permission, and which is now made use of by Majesty's gracious Leave. And the said Lord Sommers further saith, That his Majesty having by his own, and the Earl of Portland's Letter before-mention'd, directed, That his Majesty's said Commands should be kept secret; he did not communicate the making of the said Commission, otherwise than to the Persons mention'd in his Answer to the said First Article.

IV. To the Fourth Article he saith, That Mr. Secretary Vernon having prepar'd, by his Majesty's Command, the Instruments for Ratification of the said Treaty, with Blanks therein, as is before set forth, he did affix the Great-Seal to the said Ratification with such Blanks (which he conceives, and is advis'd, he might lawfully do); and having also his Majesty's Command, that the said Treaty should be kept secret, he did not communicate the same to the rest of the then Lords Justices, or his Majesty's Privy Council; which besides he conceiv'd was unnecessary to be done, in regard his Majesty had then, by his Commissioners, perfected the said Treaty, so that the same could not be alter'd.

V. To the Fifth Article the said Lord Sommers saith, He believes that in the Year One thousand Six hundred Ninety and nine, another Treaty was enter'd into and concluded between his Majesty, the States-General, and the French King, to such or suchlike Effect as in this Article is mentioned; to which Treaty, for more Certainty thereof, he referreth himself: And denieth, that he had any Knowledge of such Treaty, or any Transaction in order thereunto, save only that a Draught of the said Treaty was read over in the Presence of divers of the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council (whereof the said Lord Sommers was one); to which Draught the said Lord Sommers, as well as others then present, did make several Objections; but they were inform'd by his Majesty's Plenipotentiaries for transacting the said Treaty, who were then also present, That the said Treaty was so far perfected, that nothing could then be alter'd therein; and his Majesty afterwards, by his Warrant, requiring the ratifying of the said Treaty under the Great-Seal, he did affix the Great-Seal to such Ratification, being (as he conceives) oblig'd so to do.

VI. To the Sixth Article he saith, He conceives it was not incumbent upon him, as Lord Chancellor, to see the Commissions or Ratifications, in this Article mention'd, enroll'd, the same being prepar'd and brought to the Great-Seal by the Secretaries of State ready engross'd; and when sealed, taken away by them, and the Original Treaties remaining in their Custody: But the Care of enrolling the same, if necessary, doth (as he conceives) belong to the Prothonotary of the Court of Chancery.

he the said Lord Sommers, not minding minding the Duty of his Office, did not in any manner enrol or enter on Record, or cause to be enrolled or enter'd on Record, any of the said Commissions or Ratifications in the foregoing Articles mention'd, as by the Duty of his Place he should and ought to have done; but so to do did totally neglect and omit, in Breach of his Duty, and in Violation of the Laws of this Realm.

VII. That the said Lord Sommers, when the Custody of the Great-Seal of England was committed to him, did swear well and truly to serve our Sovereign Lord the King, and his People, Poor and Rich, after the Laws and Usages of this Realm, and truly to counsel the King, and his Counsel to keep, and not to know nor suffer the Hurt or Disinheriting of the King, or, that the Rights of the Crown should be decreas'd, as far forth as he might lett it; and, if he could not lett it, that he would make it clearly and expressly to be known unto the King, with his true Advice and Counsel; and, that he should do and purchase the King's Profit in all he reasonably might, or to that effect; and the said Lord Sommers afterwards took the said Oath, as Lord-Chancellor of England.

That the said Lord Sommers, being Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal, or Lord-Chancellor of England, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, whilst this Nation was engag'd in a tedious and most expensive War against the French King, for preserving the Ballance and Liberties of Europe, and almost exhausted with Supplies and Taxes for carrying on the same, and under such heavy Debts, as without the utmost Frugality, or laying insupportable Taxes on the Commons of England, were impossible to be satisfied; contrary to his said Oath, did pass many great, unreasonable, and exorbitant Grants under the Great-Seal of England, of divers Manors, Lordships, Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Revenues, and Interests belonging to the Crown of England, amounting to a most prodigious and excessive Value; and did advise, promote, and procure divers great, unreasonable, and exorbitant Grants to be made of several of the late forfeited Estates in Ireland, in Contempt of the Advice of his Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Commons of England in Parliament assembled, and without any Regard to his Majesty's most gracious Assurance thereupon to both Houses of Parliament; and engag'd to procure, and accordingly did procure, divers Acts prepar'd for confirming the said Grants in Parliament in Ireland, to be approv'd in Council in England, and afterwards remitted the same, under the Great-Seal of England, to be pass'd into Laws in Ireland.

VIII. That the said Lord Sommers, during the Time of his being Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal, and Lord-Chancellor of England, did not only receive and enjoy the Fees, Profits, and Perquisites of, or belonging to the Great-Seal, establish'd by Law, as a sufficient and ample Recompence and Reward for the faithful Discharge of that high Station; but also, as a further Encouragement, through his Majesty's most abundant Grace and Bounty, received an annual Pension or Allowance from the Crown of Four thousand Pounds, and many other Profits and Advantages; notwithstanding which, the said Lord Sommers, not being contented therewith, contrary to his said Oath, begg'd and procur'd, for his own Benefit, many great, unreasonable, and exorbitant Grants of several Manors, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Hereditaments, VII. To the Seventh Article he saith, That when the Great-Seal was committed to his Custody, he took the Oath of Office, to the Effect in that Article set forth; and, during the Time he had the Custody thereof, he did carefully, diligently, and honestly endeavour to keep the said Oath, and hopes and believes he hath duly observ'd the same; and doth acknowledge, That, during the Time he was Lord Keeper and Lord-Chancellor, he did pass several Grants to divers Persons, of several Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, belonging to his Majesty in Right of his Crown of England; but saith, That before any of them came to the Great-Seal, the same were regularly pass'd thro' the proper Offices, and brought with sufficient Warrants for the Great-Seal; and believes more considerable Grants have pass'd in the like Number of Years, in most his Predecessors Times; and conceives, and is advis'd, That being required by his Majesty, by Warrant, to pass the same, he ought so to do; and denies, That he did ever advise, promote, or procure any Grant to be made to any Person whatsoever, of any Forfeited Estate in Ireland, or did procure any Act or Bill prepar'd for confirming any such Grant in the Parliament in Ireland, to be approv'd in the Privy Council in England; and saith, That what Bills of this Nature were remitted under the Great-Seal of England, to be pass'd into Laws in Ireland, the same were first approv'd and pass'd in the Privy Council in England, according to the usual Form in such Cases; and being so approv'd, were, by Order of Council, sent to the said Lord Sommers, who was by the said Order required to affix the Great-Seal thereto.

VIII. To the Eighth Article he saith, He did, during the Time he had the Custody of the Great-Seal, receive the Profits and Perquisites thereto belonging, which before his Time were become very inconsiderable; and did also receive an Annual Pension or Allowance from his Majesty, of Four thousand Pounds, being the like Pension that had been allow'd to several of his Predecessors; but denies, that he did ever beg, or use any Means to procure any Grant whatsoever from his Majesty for his own Benefit; but saith, That what his Majesty was pleas'd to give, proceeded from his Majesty's own Motion, and of his meer Bounty; and (as his Majesty was pleas'd to declare upon that Occasion) as an Evidence of his Gracious Acceptation of the said Lord Sommers's zealous Endeavours for his Service; and the same was done without reditaments, and Revenues belonging to the Crown of England.

That in, or about the Month of April, 1697, the said Lord Sommers, being then Lord Chancellor of England, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, contrary to his said Oath, did procure and pass a Grant, under the Great-Seal of England, without any real Consideration whatsoever, to Joseph Jekyll, Esq; and his Heirs for ever, of the Manour or Manours of Rygate and Howleigh, with all and singular their Rights, Members, and Appurtenances, situate, and being in the Parish of Rygate, or elsewhere, within the County of Surry; and of all Quit-Rents, Rents of Assize, Free-Rents, Conventiary-Rents, Copyhold and Customary-Rents, and all other Rents whatsoever, to the said Manour or Manours belonging, or appertaining, with the Site of the ruined Castle, and of all other Demefne-Lands of the said Manour or Manours, with the Rents reserved on any Leases then in being, of any Parts thereof, and of all other Lands, Meadows, Feedings, Pastures, Messuages, Houses, Edifices, Buildings, Barns, Stables, Dove-houses, Tolls of Markets, or Fairs, with the Market-house there; and also of all Warrens, Chases, Parks, Commons, Woods, Underwoods, Wood-lands, Wastegrounds, Courts-Leet, Courts-Baron, and other Court-Services, Franchises, Heriots, Fines, Issues, Amerciaments, and all other Profits and Perquisites of the said Courts, Rights, Royalties, Jurisdiccions, and of divers other Matters, Hereditaments, and Appurtenances to the said Manour or Manours. or either of them, or to the Royalties thereof belonging, or in any wise appertaining, which Premises were Parcel of the Demefnes and Revenues of the Crown, and of the Value of Twelve thousand Pounds, and upwards.

That under Pretence of purchasing divers Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents, vested in Trustees for Sale thereof, in pursuance of several Acts of Parliament, made in the Reign of his late Majesty King Charles the Second, the said Lord Sommers, in the Year of our Lord 1697, procured a Warrant from his Majesty, under his Sign-Manual, to the Commissioners of the Treasury then in being, to contract, or give Warrant to the Trustees for Sale of Fee-Farm Rents, to contract with Humphry Hetberington, Esq; or such as he should nominate, for as many Fee-Farms and other Rents, then remaining unfold (except such Rents as were set apart for Payment of Pensions in the Pension-Deed as should amount unto Eight hundred Pounds per Annum, at the Rate of Sixteen Years Purchase; and that, upon such Contract, the said Commissioners of the Treasury should give Warrant for conveying the said Rents to the said Humphry Hetberington, or such as he should appoint, and his Heirs.

That under the like Pretence, and at or about the same Time, the said Lord Sommers procured another Warrant from his Majesty, under the Sign-Manual, to the said Commissioners of the Treasury, to contract, or give Warrant to the said Trustees to contract, with Richard Adney, Esq; or such as he should nominate, for as many Fee-Farm and other Rents, then remaining unfold (except as aforesaid) as should amount to Seven hundred Pounds per Annum, at the Rate of Sixteen Years Purchase; and that, upon the said Contract, the said Commissioners should give Warrant for conveying the said Rents unto the said Richard Adney, or such as he should nominate, and his Heirs.

That under the like Pretence, and at, or about the same Time, the said Lord Sommers procured another Warrant from his Majesty, under his Sign-Manual, to the said Commissioners of the without any previous Solicitation by him the said Lord Sommers, or any other to his Knowledge or Belief. And that in the Year One thousand Six hundred Ninety-seven, his Majesty, of his own Motion, did grant, for the Benefit of the said Lord Sommers, the Manour, or Manours, of Rygate and Howleigh, as in the said Article is mentioned; but the same was, and is far short of the Value thereby suggested. And the said Lord Sommers further saith, He never pretended to purchase in his own Name, or in the Name or Names of any other Person, or Persons, in Trust for him, any of the Fee-Farm Rents, or other Rents vested in Trustees for Sale. But his Majesty taking notice, that several of the said Fee-Farm Rents and other Rents, so vested in Trustees, were unfold, and the said Trustees being, by the Acts of Parliament vested in them the said Rents, declared to hold the same for the Benefit of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, his Majesty did, in the Year One thousand Six hundred Ninety-seven, of his own Motion, without any Solicitation, Procurement or Means used by the said Lord Sommers, acquaint the then Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, or some or one of them, That it was his Majesty's Pleasure, that Two thousand One hundred Pounds per Annum of those Rents should be granted, to or for the Benefit of the said Lord Sommers, and his Heirs; and that all proper Methods should be used for vesting the same for his Benefit, as of his Majesty's Free Gift. And the said Acts of Parliament having directed, That the said Trustees for Sales, should convey the said Rents, pursuant to Contracts to be signed by the Lord Treasurer, or Lords Commissioners of the Treasury for the Time being, or any Two of them, for the Satisfaction of the said Trustees only, and according to the Method that had been used from the Time of making the said Acts, in passing Grants of any of the said Rents, even such as were meerly of the Bounty of his Majesty's Predecessors, and of his Majesty; such Warrants were made by his Majesty to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, to contract, or give Warrants to the Trustees to contract for the said Rents; and such Contracts were pursuant thereunto made, and such Grants of the said Rents were passed, as in the said Article is mentioned; and the Money mentioned in such Contracts was for the perfecting of his Majesty's said intended Free Gift, discharged by Tallies struck for that Purpose. And the said Lord Sommers saith, The said Contracts were not intended, or designed to make the Grantees of the said Rents appear to be Purchasers; but the said Lord Sommers always acknowledged he received the said Grants of his Majesty's Bounty; and he humbly conceives it was lawful for him so to accept the same.

the Treasury, to contract, or give Warrant to the said Trustees to contract with Samuel Newton, Esq; or such as he should nominate, for as many Fee-farm and other Rents, then remaining unfold, (except as aforesaid) as should amount to Six hundred Pounds per Annum, at the Rate of Sixteen Years Purchase; and that, upon such Contract, the said Commissioners should give Warrant for conveying the said Rents unto the said Samuel Newton, or such as he should nominate, and his Heirs.

That in Pursuance of Warrants of the said Commissioners of the Treasury thereupon, certain Contracts were made, or pretended to be made, with the said Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, for the real Sale of divers Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents, of the several and respective yearly Values aforesaid; by Virtue whereof the said Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton became oblig'd to pay into the Receipt of his Majesty's Exchequer at Westminster, for the Purchase of the several and respective Rents to them respectively to be convey'd, as aforesaid, the Sums herein after mentioned; that is to say, the said Humphry Hetherington Twelve thousand Eight hundred Pounds, the said Richard Adney Eleven thousand Two hundred Pounds, and the said Samuel Newton Nine thousand Six hundred Pounds.

That in Pursuance of such Contracts, or pretended Contracts, thro' the Power of the said Lord Sommers, and by his Means and Procurement, divers Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents, were, by certain Indentures Tripartite of Bargain and Sale, bearing Date on or before the Sixth Day of January, 1697, in Consideration of Three thousand Two hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the said Humphry Hetherington unto his Majesty at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Westminster, or by other Assurance in the Law, granted and convey'd by the said Trustees, by the Appointment of the said Humphry Hetherington, to Leonard Hancock, of Chebbunt in the County of Hertford, Esq; and John Warner, of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, Goldsmith, and their Heirs.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale of the same Date, or other Assurance in the Law, divers other Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, in Consideration of Nine thousand Six hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the said Humphry Hetherington to his Majesty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Westminster (being the Residue of the said Sum of Twelve thousand Eight hundred Pounds) were, by the said Trustees, granted and convey'd to the said Humphry Hetherington, and his Heirs; which Fee-farm, and other Rents, so convey'd unto or by the Appointment of the said Humphry Hetherington, amount to the full yearly Value of Eight hundred Pounds.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale, of the same Date, or other Assurance in the Law, and in Consideration of Two thousand Four hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the said Richard Adney unto his Majesty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Westminster, other Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents, were, by the Appointment of the said Richard Adney, granted and conveyed by the said Trustees to the said Leonard Hancock and John Warner, and their Heirs.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale, of the same Date, or other Assurance in the Law, in Consideration of Eight thousand Eight hundred Pounds, in the same Indentures mention'd to have been paid by the said Richard Adney to his Majesty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Westminster (being the Residue of the said Sum of Eleven thousand Two hundred Pounds) divers other Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, were granted and convey'd by the said Trustees to the said Richard Adney and his Heirs; which Fee-farm, and other Rents so convey'd to, or by the Appointment of the said Richard Adney, amount to the full yearly Value of Seven hundred Pounds per Annum.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale, bearing Date on or about the Twenty-fifth Day of April, 1698, or other Assurance in the Law, in Consideration of Two thousand Four hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the said Samuel Newton to his Majesty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Westminster, other Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, were, by the Appointment of the said Samuel Newton, granted and convey'd by the said Trustees, to the said Leonard Hancock and John Warner, and their Heirs.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale, of the same Date, or other Assurance in Law, in Consideration of Seven thousand Two hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the said Samuel Newton to his Majesty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer, at Westminster (being the Residue of the said Sum of Nine thousand Six hundred Pounds) divers other Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, were granted and convey'd by the said Trustees, to the said Samuel Newton, and his Heirs; which said several Rents so convey'd unto, or by the Appointment of the said Samuel Newton, amount to the yearly Value of Six hundred Pounds.

That the said several Manours and Rents aforesaid, were granted to the said Joseph Jekyl, Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, and their Heirs respectively, as aforesaid, in Trust for the said Lord Sommers and his Heirs.

IX. That the said Lord Sommers, in order to procure a Grant of the said Fee-farm Rents for his own Benefit, whilst he was Lord-Chancellor of England, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, whilst his Majesty was engaged in the said War, and the Nation under such heavy Debts, as aforesaid, did enter into several Treaties, and had many Communications with

IX and X. To the Ninth and Tenth Articles the said Lord Sommers saith; That after his Majesty had given such Directions to the Lords of the Treasury, for granting Fee-farm Rents, and other Rents, to the yearly Value aforesaid, for the Benefit of the said Lord Sommers and his Heirs; and after Warrants were signed by the Lords of the Treasury to the said Trustees, for making with divers Persons entrusted with the Care and Management of the said Fee-farm Rents; and particularly with Reginald Marriott, of the Parish of St. Clement Daves, in the County of Middlesex, Auditor of the Rates, or acting as Auditor; and with John Digby, of the Parish of St. Bride's, London, Clerk of the Trustees for Sale of the said Fee-farm Rents, and other evil-dispos'd Persons; and for encouraging the said Marriott, Digby, and others, to discover to him such particular Fee-farm and other Rents as then remain'd undispos'd of, to the Intent the said Lord Sommers might beg the same, he the said Lord Sommers contracted and agreed with the said Mr. Marriott, to give the said Marriott, for himself and his Accomplices, as a Reward for the said Discovery, one full Fourth Part of all such Rents so discover'd, whereof the said Lord Sommers should procure a Grant from the Crown: And accordingly the said several Grants from the said Trustees to the said Hancock and Warner, being together of the Yearly Value of Five hundred Pounds per Annum, and upwards, were so made by the Direction of the said Lord Sommers, in Trust for the said Marriott, Digby, or others.

X. That notwithstanding the said pretended Contracts and Payments, there was not any Sum of Money whatsoever really and bona fide paid, as the Consideration of the Conveyances of the said Rents from the said Trustees; but such Contracts and Payments of the said several Considerations (amounting in the whole to Thirty-three thousand Six hundred Pounds) were colourably and fraudulently contriv'd and made by Direction of the said Lord Sommers, contrary to his said Oath, in Deceit of his Majesty, and Elusion of the said Acts of Parliament.

XI. That many Quit-Rents and Copyhold-Rents standing in Charge as Parcel of, or belonging to several Manours, or reputed Manours, Rents reserv'd upon Leases or Estates, the Reversion whereof was in his said Majesty King Charles the Second at the making the said Acts, Rents convey'd before in Lease, or granted to other Persons; Rents appropriated by, or in pursuance of Act or Acts of Parliament, for Payment of Pensions, Stipends, Salaries, Annuities, Alms, and Allowances for the Maintenance of Grammar-Schools or Scholars; or for, or towards the Reparation of Churches, Chapels, Highways, Causeys, Bridges, Schools, Alm-houses, Castles, or other Uses; and many Quit-Rents of Manours, and other Rents by Act of Parliament united and annex'd to the Castle of Windsor, with Intent to support and maintain the Yearly Reparations and Charges of the said Castle, and discharge and pay the Fees and Wages of the Officers, Servants, and Attendants in the same Castle, and the Forests, Chases, and Parks to the same belonging, and for making Contracts for conveying Rents of the said Yearly Value, for the Benefit of the said Lord Sommers, it did appear, that the said intended Contracts and Grants could not be perfected, for that neither the Lords of the Treasury, nor the said Trustees, were sufficiently inform'd what Fee-farm Rents, or other Rents, remain'd undispos'd of; so that the whole Benefit of his Majesty's intended Bounty would have been lost, without Information could be gain'd of such particular Rents. And the said Lord Sommers being inform'd, that Reginald Marriott and John Digby, in this Article named, were the most likely, if not the only Persons capable, to give Information therein, Application was made to them for that Purpose; and the said Marriott and Digby being so apply'd to, after the said Warrants of his Majesty and the said Lords of the Treasury were executed, as aforesaid, did refuse to give any Account of such Rents, unless they might have, as a Reward for their so doing, Rents amounting to near a Fourth Part of such Rents whereof they should give such Account, convey'd in Trust for them in such manner as in the said Article is mention'd; which the said Lord Sommers did (as he conceives he lawfully might, it being only to his own Loss and Prejudice) comply with, not in order to any such End as is suggested in the said Article, but that he might perfect the Grant before design'd and appointed to be made to him by his Majesty, of his own Free-will, and not at the said Lord Sommers's Solicitation; the Discovery of any of the said Rents not being made by the said Marriott and Digby, or any other Person, till after the said Warrants of his Majesty and the Lords of the Treasury, as aforesaid. And accordingly the several Grants, in this Article mention'd, were made to Hancock and Warner, in Trust for the said Marriott and Digby (as was affirm'd to the said Lord Sommers); and the said Lord Sommers saith, There was not any Sum of Money paid as the Consideration of the Grants of the said Rents; but the Contracts were made, and the Payment of the several Considerations thereof were discharg'd, in the Manner, and for the Reasons, herein before set forth; and were not colourably or fraudulently contriv'd in Deceit of his Majesty, or Elusion of the said Act of Parliament.

XI. To the Eleventh Article the said Lord Sommers saith, He believeth, that several of the Rents mention'd to be granted in Trust for him, as aforesaid, had been before granted to other Persons by the said Trustees; and, that others of them were not in the Power of the said Trustees to grant, which was and is very much to his Prejudice; and believes the same were inserted by mistaken Informations given touching the same, and not out of any Design; and the like Mistakes have frequently happen'd in other Grants of other of the said Rents; and denies, that to his Knowledge or Belief, any of the said Rents so granted for his Benefit, were ever united or annexed to the Castle of Windsor, for any Purpose whatsoever; or, that any Oppression or Vexation hath happen'd to any of his Majesty's Subjects by reason of the granting of any of the said Rents; and, as he believes, little or no new Charge to the Crown.

XII. To

many Years apply'd according to the Intention of the said Act; and also many Quit-Rents of or belonging to divers ancient Manours, heretofore and yet Parcel of the Demesnes or Possessions of the Crown, as if the same had been entire Fee-farm Rents issuing out of those Manours, were, by the aforesaid several Indentures of Bargain and Sale, thro' the Direction and Power of the said Lord Sommers, convey'd by the said Trustees for Sale of Fee-farm Rents, to the said Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, and to the said Hancock and Warner, and their Heirs, or unto some of them, contrary to the true Intent and Meaning of the said Acts of Parliament, to the great Vexation and Oppression of many of his Majesty's good Subjects, and creating many new and unreasonable Charges on other Revenues of the Crown.

XII. That by the Direction of the said Lord Sommers, the said Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, Samuel Newton, Leonard Hancock, and John Warner surrender'd several of the said Rents to them, granted as aforesaid, amounting to the yearly Value of Three hundred Forty-seven Pounds Eleven Shillings and Five Pence Farthing, on Suggestion, that the same were either convey'd before in Lease set apart for Payment of Pensions, old Supers bad or illeivable, or Part thereof bad or illeivable, or wrong convey'd: And the said Lord Sommers, in the Year of our Lord 1699, being then Lord-Chancellor of England, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, in Breach of his Duty, and contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, procur'd other Rents of the yearly Value of Three hundred Ninety-one Pounds Three Pence Half-penny, to be allow'd by way of Reprise, and to be convey'd to the said Richard Adney and his Heirs, in Trust for the said Lord Sommers and his Heirs, as if the said yearly Rents of Three hundred Forty-seven Pounds Eleven Shillings and Five Pence Farthing, so surrender'd, had been really and bona fide purchas'd in pursuance of the said Acts for Sale of Fee-farm Rents.

XIII. That in the Year of our Lord 1695, the said Lord Sommers, being then Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal of England, and also One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, together with Edward Earl of Orford, then First Commissioner for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England, and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Navy Royal, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, Richard Earl of Bellamont, in the Kingdom of Ireland, Governor of New-York, New-England, and others then in high Stations, and in great Power and Authority, procur'd a Commission to be granted unto one William Kidd, a Person of evil Fame and Reputation, and since that Time convicted of Piracy, to apprehend and take into his Custody divers Persons therein named, and all such Pirates as the said Kidd should meet with upon the Coasts or Seas of America, or in any other Seas or Parts, with their Ships and Vessels, and also such Merchandizes, Goods, and Wares as should be found on board or with them. And afterwards the said Lord Sommers, in the Year of our Lord 1697, with the Assistance of the said Earl of Orford, and other Persons aforesaid, procur'd a Grant from his Majesty, and the said Lord Sommers pass'd the same under the Great-Seal of England, whereby all and whatsoever Ships, Vessels, Goods, Merchandizes, XII. To the Twelfth Article the said Lord Sommers saith, That his Majesty having design'd, of his Bounty to him, the said Lord Sommers and his Heirs, Fee-farm and other Rents, to the annual Value of the said Grants mention'd; and the said Trustees having covenanted, as was usual for them to do, That they had not made any former or other Grant, or Conveyance, of the said Rents, or any of them; and Three hundred Forty-seven Pounds Eleven Shillings and Three Pence Farthing per Annum of the said Rents so granted, as aforesaid, having appear'd to be granted before, or not to be grantable by the said Trustees, or not leviable on Surrender of such Rents, the said Trustees, by Warrant of the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury (who were thereunto sufficiently authoriz'd) in Lieu and Satisfaction of the said Rent, and Arrears thereof, and in Discharge of the Covenants of the said Trustees, did, the Twenty-first Day of October, 1699, grant divers other Rents, amounting to the yearly Value of Three hundred Ninety-one Pounds and Three Pence Half-penny, to Richard Adney and his Heirs, as in the said Article is mention'd; which were not so granted, as if the said yearly Rents of Three hundred Forty-seven Pounds Eleven Shillings and Three Pence Farthing had been bona fide purchased, but was in Lieu and Reprise for the same as granted of his Majesty's Bounty, for the Benefit of the said Lord Sommers and his Heirs, as aforesaid; which he conceives might be, and was lawfully done.

XIII. To the Thirteenth Article the said Lord Sommers doth admit, That in the Year 1695, he being then Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal of England, his Majesty being inform'd, as the Truth was, That Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, and several other of his Majesty's Subjects in his Plantations of America, had associated themselves, and did frequently commit great Piracies, Robberies, and Depredations on the Seas in the Parts of America, and other Parts, to the Hindrance and Discouragement of Trade and Navigation; for preventing the said Mischiefs, did grant a Commission, as in this Article is mention'd, unto William Kidd, in this Article named (who was then Commander of the Ship call'd The Adventure Galley, and was not then, to the Knowledge or Belief of the said Lord Sommers, esteem'd a Person of ill Fame or Reputation) to apprehend, seize, and take into his Custody the said Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, and all such other Pirates as he should meet with in the Seas of America, or any other Seas, with their Ships and Vessels, and such Merchandizes, Moneys and Wares as should be found on board or with them, and to cause such Pirates to be brought to a legal Trial: the granting of which Commission was then apprehended to be necessary for the Preservation of Trade and Naviga-dizes, Treasure, and other Things whatsoever, which since the Thirtieth Day of April, 1696, had been taken or seiz'd upon or with, or did belong to, or which should be taken or seiz'd upon or with, or did, or should belong to Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze (in the said Letters Patents mention'd to have been complain'd of, and inform'd against, for committing many Robberies, Piracies, and Depredations upon the Seas in the Parts of America, and other Places, but never convicted or attainted for the same) or which since the said Thirtieth Day of April, 1696, had been taken or seiz'd upon, or which did, or should belong to any of the Adherents of the said Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, or any other Pirates, Free-booters, and Sea-rovers, by the said William Kidd, or other Commander of The Adventure Galley; or which by, or by means of, the said Ship or Galley should be taken, or forced on Shore in any of his Majesty's Plantations of America, were granted unto the said Richard Earl of Bellamont, and unto Edmund Harrifon Merchant, Samuel Newton Gent. William Rowland Gent. George Watfon Gent. and Thomas Reynolds, of St. Martins, their Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, to their own sole Use and Benefit, and as their own proper Goods and Chattels, without any Account thereof or therefore to be made: In which Grant the Name of the said Samuel Newton was used in Trust, and for the only Benefit and Advantage of the said Lord Sommers: Which said Grant under the Great-Seal of England manifestly tended to the Obstruction and Discouragement of Trade and Navigation, the great Loss and Prejudice of Merchants and others, being his Majesty's Subjects, or Subjects of the Friends and Allies of his Majesty, and the Dishonour of the King and Kingdom; and the said Lord Sommers was, by procuring and passing the said Grant, Guilty of a notorious Breach of his Duty.

son, Thomas Reynolds, and Samuel Newton of the other Part; They, the said Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harrifon, William Rowley, George Watfon, Thomas Reynolds, and Samuel Newton, did Covenant, Promise, and Agree with his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, well and truly to account for, and deliver upon Oath, to the Use of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, or the Commissioners of his or their Treasury, or his or their High-Treasurer, a clear Tenth Part (the whole in Ten equal Parts to be divided) of all and every such Ships, Vessels, Goods, Merchandizes, and other Things whatsoever, which in and by the said Grant should be given, or which should from Time to Time be taken, or seiz'd, or secur'd by them, or any of them, their, or any of their Executors or Administrators, Officers, Agents, Servants, or Assigns, by Vertue or Colour thereof. To which Grant and Indenture the said Lord Sommers, for more Certainty, referreth himself; and further saith, He conceives, and is advis'd, That the said Grant did not any way tend to the Obstruction or Discouragement of Trade or Navigation, or to the Loss or Prejudice of Merchants, or others his Majesty's Subjects, or the Subjects of his Friends or Allies, nor to the Dishonour of his Majesty or the Kingdom; nor was the passing of the same any Breach of the Duty of the said Lord Sommers; but the said Grant was form'd as a Recompence to the said Grantees, who, at their own Charge, had provided and fitted out the said Ship, to enable the said William Kidd to execute the Powers in the said Commission mention'd, whereby the Publick might have receiv'd great Benefit, had the said William Kidd faithfully discharg'd the Trust in him repos'd by his Majesty and the said Grantees: Which he failing to do, the Owners of the said Ship have lost their Expences, and have not receiv'd any Benefit of his Majesty's said Grant.

XIV. That the said John Lord Sommers, to the great Oppression of the Subject, and contrary to Magna Charta, and divers good Statutes of this Realm, and in manifest Breach and Violation of his Oath, as Lord High-Chancellor of England, hath, in several Causes depending before him, by many extraordinary Methods, and unwarrantable Practices for several Years, delay'd Proceedings in the Navigation: And the said Lord Sommers doth also admit, That a Grant, dated the Twenty-seventh Day of May, 1697, did pass under the Great-Seal of England, as in this Article is mention'd, whereby reciting the said Commission so granted to the said William Kidd; and, that the said Adventure Galley was with his Majesty's Knowledge and Royal Encouragement bought and fitted out to Sea for the Execution of the said Commission, at the Charge of the Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harrifon, Samuel Newton, William Rowley, George Watfon, and Thomas Reynolds, in this Article named; his Majesty, for encouraging and rewarding the said Undertaking, did grant unto the said Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harrifon, William Rowley, George Watfon, Thomas Reynolds, and Samuel Newton (who was named by, and in Trust for, the said Lord Sommers) their Executors and Administrators, all and whatsoever Ships, Vessels, Goods, Merchandizes, Treasure, and other Things whatsoever, which since the Thirtieth Day of April, 1696, had been taken or seiz'd upon or with, or did belong to, or should happen to be taken or seiz'd upon or with, or which did, or should, belong to the said Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, or their Adherents, or any other Pirates, by the said William Kidd, or other Commanders of the said Adventure Galley, or which by, or by Means of, the said Ship or Galley should be taken, or forced on Shore, on any of his Majesty's Plantations in America, so far as the said Premisses, or any of them, did, should, or might belong to his Majesty, or could or might be granted or grantable by him, or was or were in his Power to dispose of: Which Grant was not intended to be without an Account. For the said Lord Sommers saith, That by Indenture, bearing Date the Two and twentieth Day of May, 1697, made (after the Warrant for the said Grant was sign'd, and before it was pass'd) between his Majesty of the one Part, and the said Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harrifon, William Rowley, George Wat-

XIV. To the Fourteenth Article the said Lord Sommers saith, He did not delay any Proceedings in any Cause or Causes depending before him, as Chancellor of England, longer or otherwise than as the Circumstances and Justice of each Cause requir'd; but did, to the very manifest impairing of his Health, constantly apply himself to the Dispatch of the Causes depending before him; Z z z and the said Causes; and, by Colour of his Office, hath made divers Arbitrary and Illegal Orders, in Subversion of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm; and hath, of his own Authority, revers'd Judgments given in the Court of Exchequer, and without calling before him the Barons of the Exchequer, to hear their Informations, and the Causes of their Judgments, as the Statute in those Cases expressly direct; assuming thereby to himself an Arbitrary and Illegal Power; and hath declar'd and affirm'd in publick Places of Judicature, That particular Subjects might have Rights and Interests without any Remedy for Recovery of the same, unless by Petition to the Person of the King only, or to that effect: Which Position was highly dangerous to the legal Constitution of this Kingdom, and absolutely destructive to the Property of the Subject.

And the said Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, by Protestation, saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting, at any Time hereafter, any further Articles, or other Accusation or Impeachment against the said Lord Sommers; as also of replying to his Answer which he shall make unto the said Articles, or any of them; and offering Proofs to all and every the aforesaid Articles, and to all and every other Articles, Impeachment or Accusation which shall be exhibited by them, as the Cause shall, according to the Course of Parliament, require; do pray, That the said John Lord Sommers may be put to answer the said Crimes and Misdemeanors; and, that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials, and Judgments may be thereupon had and given as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

After reading this Day the Articles of Impeachment brought up from the House of Commons against John Lord Sommers, and hearing his Lordship thereupon, who desir'd a Copy of the said Articles, and said, He would put in his Answer so soon as possible he could; It is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lord Sommers may have a Copy of the said Articles against him.

Die Martis 20^o Maii, 1701.

The Earl of Orford desiring that a Day may be appointed for his Trial, the House thereupon order'd, That the Committee appointed to consider of the Manner in delivering Articles of Impeachments by the Commons be reviv'd, to inspect the Books, and meet immediately.

Then the House was adjourn'd during Pleasure, and the Lords went to the Committee.

After some Time, the House was resumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported the Precedents following; viz.

‘ 21 Decem. 1680. That Mr. Seymour was Impeach'd, and Articles deliver'd.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, “ That the House having been desir'd by the Earl of Orford, that a Day may be appointed for his speedy Trial, their Lordships finding no Issue join'd by Replication of the House of Commons, think fit to give them Notice thereof.

And as to all other Matters and Things in the said Articles contain'd, and not herein before particularly answer'd unto, the said Lord Sommers saith, He is not Guilty of them, or any of them, in Manner and Form as the same are charg'd upon him in and by the said Articles; and humbly submitteth himself to your Lordships Judgment.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Bromley and others (the 31st of May) to acquaint this House, “ That in answer to the Message of the One and twentieth Instant, the Commons have prepar'd a Replication to the Earl of Orford's Answer to the Articles of Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors exhibited against him, and at present defer

A Message was also sent to the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Mr. Grey, to acquaint them, ' That they having, on the First Day of April last, sent up to their Lordships an Impeachment against William Earl of Portland, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and having also, on the Fifteenth Day of the same Month, Impeach'd Charles Lord Hallifax for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and there being as yet no particular Addresses exhibited against the said Lords, their Lordships think themselves oblig'd to put them in mind thereof; which, after Impeachments have so long depended, is a Hardship to the Persons concern'd, and not agreeable to the usual Methods and Proceedings of Parliament in such Cases.

' bringing it up to your Lordships, because in the Trials of the several Impeachments now depending, the Commons think it most proper, from the Nature of the Evidence that will be given at the said Trials, to begin with the Trial of the Impeachment of John Lord Sommers of High Crimes and Misdemeanors. And as to your Lordships other Message, the Commons take it to be without Precedent, and Unparliamentary; they, as Prosecutors, having a Liberty to exhibit their Articles of Impeachment in due Time; of which they who are to prepare them are the proper Judges: And therefore, for your Lordships to assert, That having not yet exhibited particular Articles against William Earl of Portland and Charles Lord Hallifax, is a Hardship to them, and not agreeable to the usual Methods and Proceedings in Parliament in such Cases; does, as they conceive, tend to the Breach of that good Correspondence betwixt the two Houses, which ought mutually to be preserv'd.

It is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That a Copy of the Answer of John Lord Sommers (deliver'd this Day) to the Articles of Impeachment depending against him, be sent to the House of Commons; and accordingly a Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Sir John Hoskins, to carry down a Copy of the Lord Sommers's Answer to the Articles of Impeachment against him.

Die Veneris 30^o Maii, 1701.

It is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Monday the Ninth Day of June next shall be, and is hereby appointed for the Trial of Edward Earl of Orford, in Westminster-Hall, upon the Articles brought up against him by the House of Commons, whereby he stands charg'd with several High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Sir John Hoskins, to let them know, ' That this House hath appointed Monday the Ninth Day of June next, for the Trial of Edward Earl of Orford, in Westminster-Hall, upon the Articles sent up against him, and that the Commons may reply, if they think fit.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Sir John Hoskins, to acquaint them, ' That they having on the First Day of April last, sent up to their Lordships an Impeachment against William Earl of Portland, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and having also, on the Fifteenth Day of the same Month, Impeach'd Charles Lord Hallifax for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and there being as yet no particular Articles exhibited against the said Lords, their Lordships think themselves oblig'd to put them in mind thereof; which, after Impeachments have so long depended, is a Hardship to the Persons concern'd, and not agreeable to the usual Methods and Proceedings of Parliament in such Cases.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Harcourt and others (the Fifth of June) to acquaint this House, ' That the Commons, on Consideration of your Lordships Message to them of the One and thirtieth of May, concerning the Earl of Orford, think it their Undoubted Right, when several Persons stand Impeach'd before your Lordships, to bring to Trial such of them, in the first place, as the Commons apprehend, from the Nature of the Evidence, ought first to be proceeded against; to the intent all such Offenders may, in due time, be brought to Justice: And, That no Day ought to be appointed by your Lordships for the Trial of any Impeachment by the Commons, without some previous Signification to your Lordships from the Commons, of their being ready to proceed thereon.

' The Commons could not receive this Message from your Lordships without the greatest Surprise; your Lordships Proceedings in this Case being neither warranted by Precedents, nor (as the Commons conceive) consistent with the Methods of Justice, or with Reason: Where-‘ Wherefore the Commons cannot agree to the Day appointed by your Lordships for the Trial of the Earl of Orford.

‘ As to your Lordships Message, at the same time, relating to the Earl of Portland, and Charles Lord Hallifax, the Commons take the same to be without Precedent, and Unparliamentary; and conceive your Lordships frequent Repetition thereof, in so short a Time, after the Commons had transmitted to your Lordships their Articles against Two of the Impeached Lords, and were daily preparing their Articles against the others, manifestly tends to the Delay of Justice, in obstructing the Trials of the Impeached Lords, by introducing Disputes, in Breach of that good Correspondence between the Two Houses, which ought inviolably to be preserved.’

It is order’d by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lord Great-Chamberlain do attend his Majesty, humbly to acquaint his Majesty, That this House hath appointed Monday the Ninth Day of June next, for the Trial of Edward Earl of Orford, in Westminster-Hall; and humbly to move his Majesty, that he will be pleased to give Order for a Place to be prepar’d in Westminster-Hall against the said Time, for this House to proceed upon the said Trial.

“ Impeachment there has ever been so long a

Die Veneris 6^o Junii, 1701:

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. St. John and others, to desire a Conference with this House upon the Subject Matter of the Message of this House of the Fourth Instant.

It being proposed to return Answer, That this House will send an Answer by Messengers of their own, and Debate thereupon:

The House agreed to a present Conference.

Then the Commons being called in, were told, That the Lords agreed to a Conference as desired, and appoint it presently in the Painted-Chamber.

Lords were named Managers of the Conference.

The Commons being come to the Conference, the House was adjourned during Pleasure, and the Lords went to the Conference; which being ended, the House was resumed, and the Lord-Steward reported, That the Lords had attended the Conference, and that Mr. Harcourt managed the Conference, and said, As above.

Or-

Ordered, That the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of the Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet To-morrow upon the Report of this Conference, and inspect the Journals, and Report to the House.

Die Sabbati, 7^o Junii, 1701.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, That they have inspected the Journals, and ordered him to report the Precedents following; viz.

‘ 16 April, 1624. Report is made of the Commons Complaint and Charge at a Conference against the Earl of Middlesex, Lord-Treasurer.

‘ 24 April, 1624. Ordered, That the Lord-Treasurer shall appear on Tuesday next at Nine a-Clock, to answer his Charge at the Bar; and that if he hath any Witnesses to be examined, they may in the mean time be Sworn and Examined.

‘ 27 April. The Lord-Treasurer petitioned, That his Witnesses might not be examined, till he hath answered; but the House did not think fit to alter the Day.

‘ 28 April. The Lord-Treasurer desires the Interrogatories to his Witnesses may be respited till he hath answered; and that he may have Copies of the Depositions taken on both Sides.

‘ His Lordship was answered, That his Desire is so unfit, as the Lords think him ill advised to make such a Request; and according to the former Order, expect his Appearance To-morrow, and to hear such Answer as he shall make.

‘ 29 April. The Lord-Treasurer petitions, That in regard of his being indisposed, he may have a further Day for presenting his Answer. The House, in respect of his Indisposition, is pleased to respite his Appearance this Day, but enjoin, that Saturday next he brings in his Answer, according to former Orders; and the Lords do peremptorily assign Friday, the Seventh of May, for his Appearance in Person, and for the final Hearing and Determining of the Cause.

‘ 7 May. The Lord-Treasurer was accordingly brought to the Bar, and the Trial proceeded.

30 Aug. 1641. The Earl of Bridgwater was Impeached by the Commons.

‘ 6 Sept. 1641. Ordered, To answer the second Tuesday in November.

‘ 17 Octob. 1641. Ordered, To be heard on the Ninth of December.

‘ 2 November, 1641. Ordered, That the Earl of Bridgwater may answer on the Ninth of November.

‘ 31 March 1642. At a Conference desired by the Commons, they desired Articles of Impeachment against George Benyon. Benyon was ordered to answer in four Days, and to have Liberty, with his Keeper, to go any where, and Council assigned.

‘ 4 April, 1642. Benyon put in his Answer: Then it was ordered, That this Cause against George Benyon, upon the Impeachment of the House of Commons, shall be proceeded in on Wednesday next at this Bar.

‘ 5 April, 1642. A Message was sent to the House of Commons, to acquaint them, That the Lords have appointed to proceed in the Cause against Benyon To-morrow.

‘ The House of Commons return Answer, That they will send a Committee of their House, to manage their Evidence against Benyon, To-morrow.

‘ 6 April, 1642. The Committee of the House of Commons being come to manage the Evidence against him, had the Articles read, &c. and the Trial proceeded.

‘ 5 July, 1642. Sir Robert Gurney, Lord-Mayor, was Impeached at a Conference, and brought to the Bar, and heard the Articles read, had Council allowed him, and was ordered to Answer on Friday next.

‘ 8 July, He deliver’d in his Answer, which was read, and the Cause was ordered to be heard on Monday next, and the Commons were acquainted therewith by Message.

‘ 11 July, The Commons at a Conference deliver in a further Impeachment against him, and the Articles were read to him at the Bar, and he desired Council, which was allowed, and he had Time given him to answer till To-morrow Seven-night.

‘ 19 July, Sir Richard Gurney put in his Answer; and the same Day it was order’d, That this House will proceed against him on Friday next, on both the Impeachments; and the House of Commons are then to produce all their Proofs to prove the said Impeachments: And a Message was sent to the Commons to acquaint them with the said Order.

‘ 22 July, The Committee of Commons being come to manage the Evidence, the Trial was proceeded in.

‘ 17 July, 1645. The Earl of Stamford desiring Time to put in his Answer to the Impeachment of the House of Commons against him, it was Ordered, he put in his Answer on Monday next.

‘ 21 July, The Earl of Stamford delivered in his Answer; which was read, and ordered to be heard at the Bar on Friday next; and the Commons were acquainted therewith by Message.

‘ 25 July, A Message from the Commons to desire another Day for hearing of the Cause of the Earl of Stamford’s Impeachment, because they cannot be ready this Day.

‘ Eodem Die, A Message to the Commons, That they have appointed Monday next; and in regard it concerns his Lordship so much, their Lordships have appointed so short a Day.

‘ 26 July, 1645. A Message from the Commons, to desire a further Day, in regard their Witnesses cannot be ready.

‘ 28 July, 1645. Ordered, That the Earl of Stamford’s Business shall be heard the first Tuesday after Michaelmas.

‘ 30 Septemb. The Clause of the Earl of Stamford, upon the Impeachment of the House of Commons, was heard, a Committee of the Commons managing the Evidence against him.

‘ 21 Decemb. 1680. Edward Seymour, Esq; was impeached of High Crimes, &c. the Articles were brought up against him; he had the Articles read to him, and ordered to answer.

‘ 23 Decemb. He delivered in his Answer.

3. January, Mr. Seymour petitions for a speedy Trial: Whereupon a Message was sent to the House of Commons, That the House finding no Issue join'd by Replication from the House of Commons, thought fit to give them Notice thereof.

8. January, Order'd, That Saturday the Fifteenth is appointed for the Trial of Mr. Seymour.

Upon Consideration of the Precedents above-mentioned, it is Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, That in Answer to the Message of the House of Commons, of the Fourth Instant, the Lords say, by their Message sent on the Third, wherein they declare themselves ready to proceed to the Trial of any of the Impeach'd Lords, whom the Commons should be first ready to begin with, They have given a full Proof of their Willingness to comply with the Commons in any thing which may appear reasonable, in order to the speedy determining of the Impeachments now depending: And therefore, as the Lords conceive the Commons had no Occasion to begin any Dispute on that Head, so their Lordships are careful to decline entering into a Controversy which seems to them to be of no Use at present.

The Lords think themselves obliged to assert their undoubted Right to appoint a Day for the Trial of any Impeachment depending before them, if they see good Cause for it, without any previous Signification from the Commons of their being ready to proceed; which Right is warranted by many Precedents, as well as consonant to Justice and Reason; and their Lordships, according to the Example of their Ancestors, will always use that Right with a Regard to the equal and impartial Administration of Justice, and with a due Care to prevent unreasonable Delays.

This being the Case, the Lords cannot but wonder, that the Commons, without any Foundation for it, should make use of Expressions which, as their Lordships conceive, have never been used before by one House of Parliament to another, and which, if the like were return'd, must necessarily destroy all good Correspondence between the two Houses.

The last Part of the Commons Message being in effect a Repetition only of their former, of the Thirty-first of May, to which the Lords have already returned a full Answer, their Lordships think it not requisite to say more, than That they cannot apprehend with what Colour their calling upon the House of Commons to send up Articles against Two Lords, whom the Commons have so long since impeach'd in general Terms, can be said to tend to the Delay of Justice: And therefore, as the Lords think the Commons ought to have forbore that Reflection, so their Lordships, in saying no more upon the occasion of this Message of the Commons, think they have given a convincing Proof of their Moderation, and of their sincere Desire of preserving a good Correspondence between the two Houses, which is so necessary for the Publick Security, as well as doing Right upon the Impeachments.

meet on Monday next, at Ten a-Clock in the Forenoon, to draw an Answer to be sent to the House of Commons, to their Message receiv'd the Fifth Instant.

Die Luna 9^o Junii, 1701.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lord Committees (appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments) what was drawn by them, to be sent to the Commons, in Answer to their Message of the Fifth Instant; which was read, amended, and agreed to, as follows; viz.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others, (on the Tenth of June) to acquaint this House, That the Commons, in hopes of avoiding all Interruptions and Delays in proceeding against the Impeach'd Lords, and the many Inconveniences which might arise thereby, having proposed to your Lordships, at a Conference, that a Committee of both Houses might be nominated, to consider of the most proper Ways and Methods of Proceedings on Impeachments, think they might have justly expected your Lordships Compliance with their said Proposition, instead of your Lordships Answer to their Message of the Fourth Instant, which they Yesterday receiv'd: In which Answer of your Lordships, tho' many Matters of great Exception are contain'd, a suitable Reply whereunto would inevitably destroy all good Correspondence between the two Houses; yet the Commons, from an earnest Desire inviolably to preserve the same, as well as give the most convincing Proof of their Moderation, and to shew their Readiness to bring the Impeach'd Lords to speedy Justice, at present insist only on their Proposition, for a Committee of both Houses to settle and adjust the necessary Preliminaries to the Trials; particularly, Whether the Impeach'd Lords shall appear on their Trials at your Lordships Bar, as Criminals? Whether, being under Accusations of the same Crimes, they are to sit as Judges on each other's Trial for those Crimes, or can vote in their own Cases, as we find, from your Lordships Journals since their being impeach'd, they have been admitted so to do? Which Matters, and some others, being necessary to be adjusted, the Commons cannot but insist on a Committee of both Houses to be appointed for that Purpose; their departing from which would be giving up the Rights of the Commons of England, known by unquestionable Precedents, and the Usages of Parliaments, and making all Impeachments, the greatest Bulwark of the Laws and Liberties of England, impracticable for the future.

The Earl of Stamford also reported from the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, what Precedents they have found in pursuance of the Order of the Seventh Instant; which are as follow; viz.

‘ 21. May, 1614, A Message from the Commons, to desire a Conference upon the Point of Impositions.

‘ 24. May, the Question being proposed, Whether this House shall meet with the Lower House, and give them Hearing, touching the Point of Impositions: The greater Number of the Lords answered, Not Content.

‘ 26. May, a Message to the Commons, That the Lords are, and always will be, ready and willing to hold loving and mutual Correspondence with them; but their Lordships having entered into a grave and serious Consideration, as well of the Matter it self, as of divers incident and necessary Circumstances, do not think it convenient to enter into any Conference of this Cause, concerning the Point of Impositions, at this Time.

‘ 1. February, 1666, a Message from the Commons, to desire a Conference touching the Manner of Proceedings upon the Impeachment against the Lord Viscount Mordaunt.

‘ The Lords answer, That they will send Answer by Messengers of their own.

‘ Then a Committee was appointed to consider, whether ever the Commons desired any Conferences concerning the Manner of Proceedings upon Judicature before their Lordships.

‘ 4. February, 1666, after Report of the Conference so had, the Lords resolved to let the Commons know at a Conference, That they are resolved, that their former Answer given them the Eight and twentieth of January, and confirmed the One and thirtieth of the same Month, shall stand.

‘ 31. January, Which Answer was, That they judge it a Right inherent in every Court, to order and direct such Circumstances and Matters of Form, that can have no Influence to the Prejudice of Justice, in such Way as they shall judge fit, where the same are not settled otherwise by any positive Rule.

‘ 4. February, post Meridiem, A Conference was accordingly had at the Desire of the Lords.

‘ 5. February, A Message from the Commons to desire a Free Conference upon the Subject-matter of the last Conference.

‘ The Answer returned was, That the Lords have already stated the Manner of Proceedings in the Impeachment of the Lord Mordaunt, and have declared it in their last Conference; and in that Conference gave the House of Commons Notice, That they were ready to proceed this Morning in that Business.

‘ They adhere to their former Resolution, and are ready to proceed in the Trial.

‘ 6. February, A Message from the Commons, to desire a Conference upon the last-mentioned Answer.

‘ 7. February, The Lords gave the Conference desired; whereat the Commons acquainted their Lordships, That Conferences and Free Conferences, when desired, are essential to the Proceedings of Parliament, the only Means to preserve the good Correspondence between the Two ‘ Houses; and the Denial thereof, destructive to the Proceedings of Parliament, and unprecedented.

‘ Eodem Die, a Free Conference was had at the Desire of the Lords, concerning the Subject-matter of the last Conference; whereat the Managers were to let the Commons know, That their Lordships desire not this Conference in reference to the Free Conference lately desired by them, but in relation to the Assertion of the Commons in their last Conference, which their Lordships can no way allow; and therefore commanded the Lords that are to manage this Free Conference, as to justify the Proceedings of their Lordships, so to make it appear to the Commons, that what they have done is neither destructive to the Proceedings of Parliament, nor unprecedented.

‘ 27. May, 1694, The Lords did not agree to a Conference desired by the Commons on the One and twentieth, because it was desired upon the Answer sent by the Lords of the Seventeenth Instant, wherein the whole Matter concerns the Judicature of the Lords, on which they can admit no Debate, nor grant any Conference: But the Lords agree to a Conference desired concerning the Privileges of the Commons, always provided nothing be offered thereat that may concern their Lordships Judicature.

‘ 6. May, 1679, A Message to the Commons, to acquaint them, That the Lords have appointed to try the Five Lords on the Thirteenth Instant.

‘ 8. May, post Meridiem, A Message from the Commons, to desire a Conference concerning the Matter of their Lordships Message concerning the Trial of the Lords in the Tower; and a Conference was had thereupon.

‘ At the Conference the Commons proposed to have a Committee of both Houses nominated, to consider the proper Ways of Proceedings upon Impeachment; and, upon the Question, it was carried, Not to agree with the Commons in this Proposal.

‘ 9. May, A Message to the Commons for a Free Conference of the Subject-matter of the last Conference, which was had; and at the Conference the Lords told the Commons, That they did not agree to the nominating a Committee of both Houses, because they do not think it conformable to the Rules and Orders of Proceedings of this Court, which is, and must be, tender in Matters relating to Judicature.

‘ 10. May, A Message from the Commons for a Conference, &c. which was had; and the Commons told the Lords, That Things standing thus, they cannot proceed to the Trials of the Lords, before the Method of Proceedings be adjusted between the Two Houses.

‘ 11. May, A Message to the Commons for a Conference, &c. which was had; and the Lords also asked the Commons, What were the Methods of Proceedings they would confer about? The Commons answer, They had no Directions from their House concerning the same.

‘ A Message from the Commons for a Free Conference, which was had; and upon the Report of it, the Lords appointed a Committee to meet with a Committee of the House of Commons, to consider of Propositions and Circumstances, in reference to the Trials of the ‘ Five

Five Lords in the Tower; and a Message sent to the Commons to let them know it.

12 May, A Report from the Committee of both Houses, That (inter alia) the Commons propose a longer Day for the Trial of the Lords; whereupon the Lords order'd their Trials to be put off till further Order.

16 May, The Lords appointed a Day for the Trial of the Five Lords.

19 May, The Commons tell the Lords, That when the Methods of Proceedings are adjusted, their House will be ready to proceed upon the Trial of the Earl of Danby, against whom they already demanded Judgment, and afterwards to the Trial of the Five Lords; and proposed several Difficulties, in respect of the Bishops being present at the Trial of the Earl of Danby. They say further, that the Lords seem to lay the Stop at the Commons Door, by naming a Day; which they conceive ought not to have been appointed before the Methods be considered; that the Lords may as well make the Judges Part of their Court, as the Bishops, in this Point. The Commons will give no Disturbance to the ancient Judicature, and they conceive they have a Right to know before what Court they shall appear.

20 May, Upon Debate of the Report from the Committee of both Houses, the Lords appoint a Day for the Trial of the Five Lords.

22 May, The Lords sent a Message to the House of Commons to acquaint them, That the Lords have appointed a Day for the Trial of the Five Lords.

Then it being moved to have a Conference with the Commons, to let them know, That the Lords do not agree to a Committee of both Houses, in relation to the Trials of the Impeached Lords, and Debate thereupon. The Question was put, Whether a Committee of this House shall be appointed to meet with a Committee of the House of Commons, in relation to the Proceedings upon the Impeachments?

It was resolved in the Negative.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet To-morrow at ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, and draw Reasons to be given at a Conference with the House of Commons, Why their Lordships cannot agree, that a Committee of both Houses be nominated to consider of the Methods of Proceedings on Impeachments.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that Friday the Thirteenth Day of this Instant June, is hereby appointed for the Trial of John Lord Sommers in Westminster-Hall, upon the Articles brought up against him by the House of Commons, whereby he stands charged with several High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Gery, to let the Commons know, That the Lords have appointed Friday next for the Trial of John Lord Sommers, upon the Impeachment against him.

on Friday next, upon their Impeachment against him: In which they observe, your Lordships have not nominated any Place for his Trial, tho' your Lordships thought fit to make that Matter, on the last Impeachment for Misdemeanors, the Subject of a long Debate.

And they cannot but take Notice, That your Lordships have taken as long a Time to give your Answer to the common Desire of a Committee of both Houses delivered at a Conference on Friday last, as you are pleased to allow the Commons to have of a Day appointed by your Lordships for the said Trial.

Your Lordships appointing so short a Day, especially whilst the Proposition made to your Lordships for a Committee of both Houses was undetermin'd, the Commons take to be such a Hardship to them, and such an Indulgence to the Person accused, as is not to be parallel'd in any Parliamentary Proceeding.

The Commons must likewise acquaint your Lordships, that their Experience of the Interruption of a former Trial on an Impeachment for Misdemeanor, for want of settling the Preliminaries between the Two Houses, obliges them to insist on a Committee of both Houses, for preventing the like Interruption.

And they conceive, 'twould be very preposterous for them to enter upon the Trials of any of those Lords, till your Lordships discover some Inclination to make the Proceeding thereupon practicable; and therefore they think they have Reason to insist upon another Day to be appointed for the Trial of the Lord Sommers. And the Commons doubt not but to satisfy your Lordships, at a Free Conference, of the Necessity of having a Committee of both Houses, before they can proceed upon the said Trial.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Mr. Harcourt and others (the 11th of June) to acquaint this House, That the Commons on Monday last received a Message from your Lordships, that your Lordships had appointed the Trial of John Lord Sommers up-

Matter of the last Conference: Which Report was read, and agreed to, as follows; viz.

The Lords have desired this Conference, upon occasion of the last Conference, in order to preserve a good Correspondence with the House of Commons, which they shall always endeavour. As to the late Messages between the the Two Houses, their Lordships are well assured, that on their Part, nothing has passed, but what was agreeable to the Methods of Parliament, and proper to preserve that good Understanding between both Houses, which is necessary for the carrying on of the Publick Business.

As to the Proposal of the Commons, That a Committee of both Houses should be appointed, to consider of the Ways and Methods of Proceeding on Impeachments, their Lordships cannot agree to it:

I. Because they do not find that ever such a Committee was appointed, on occasion of Impeachments for Misdemeanors; and their Lordships think themselves obliged to be extremely cautious in admitting any thing new, in Matters relating to Judicature.

II. That although a Committee of this Nature was agreed to, upon the Impeachments of the Earl of Danby, and the five Popish Lords, for High-Treason, yet it was upon occasion of several considerable Questions and Difficulties which did then arise; and their Lordships do not find, that the Success in that Instance was such as should encourage the pursuing the same Methods again, though in the like Case; the Lords observing, that after much Time spent at that Committee, the Disputes were so far from being there adjusted, that they occasioned the abrupt Conclusion of a Session of Parliament.

III. Their Lordships are of Opinion, That the Methods of Proceedings on Impeachments for Misdemeanors, are so well settled by the Usage of Parliament, that they do not foresee any Difficulties likely to happen, at least none have been yet stated to them; and all the Preliminaries in the Case of Stephen Goudet, and others (which was the last Instance of Impeachments for Misdemeanors) were easily settled and agreed to, without any such Committee.

IV. The Lords cannot but observe, that this Proposal of the Commons comes so very late, that their Lordships can expect no other Fruit of such a Committee, but the preventing of the Trials during this Session.

The Lords assure the Commons, that in case any Difficulties shall arise in the Progress of these Trials (which their Lordships do not foresee) they will be ready to comply with the Commons in removing them, as far as Justice and the Usage of Parliament will admit.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Gery, to desire a present Conference in the Painted Chamber, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others. See Page 361.

Ordered, That the Message received this Day from the House of Commons, shall be considered To-morrow at twelve a-Clock.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons return Answer, That the Commons will give a Conference as desired.

Then the Commons being come to the Conference, the Managers Names of the last Conference were read, and the House adjourn'd during Pleasure, and the Lords went to the Conference; which being ended, the House was resumed, and the Lord Steward reported, that the Lords had been at the Conference, and delivered their Reasons as ordered.

Die Mercurii 11^o Junii.

The Message received Yesterday from the House of Commons was read; and after Debate of the several Particulars contained in it, this Question was proposed;

That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, shall, upon his Trial, be without the Bar?

Then the previous Question was put, Whether this Question shall be now put?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, can be precluded from Voting, on any Occasion, except in his own Trial?

Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, can be precluded from Voting, on any Occasion, except in his own Trial.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that the Committee appointed to consider of the Method of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet To-morrow at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, and do draw an Answer to the Message received Yesterday from the House of Commons upon the Resolutions of the House this Day; and that the Committee do assert in their Answer, That by the Journals of this House, it doth not appear the Lords Impeached have Voted, as is inserted in the Commons Message.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others. See Page 361.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Debate which hath arose upon the Common Message received this Day, be adjourned to To-morrow Eleven a-Clock, and no other Business to intervene, and all the Lords summoned to attend.

Die Jovis 12^o Junii, 1701.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, what was drawn by them in Answer to a Message from the House of Commons of the Tenth Instant; which was read and agreed unto, as follows :

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, That in Answer to the Message from the House of Commons of the Tenth Instant, the Lords say, That although they take it to be Unparliamentary in many Particulars, yet to shew their real Desire of avoiding Disputes, and removing all Pretence of delaying the Trials of the Impeached Lords, they will only take notice of that Part of their Message, wherein the Commons propose some Things as Difficulties, in respect of the Trials; which Matters relating wholly to their Judicature, and to their Rights and Privileges as Peers, they think fit to acquaint the Commons with the following Resolutions of the House of Lords :

I. That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, shall, upon his Trial, be without the Bar.

II. That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, can be precluded from Voting on any Occasion, except in his own Trial.

Their Lordships further take notice of a Mistake in point of Fact alledged in the Message of the Commons; it no way appearing upon their Journals, that the Lords Impeached have Voted in their Case.

The Lords being well assured, that all the Steps that have been taken by them, in relation to these Impeachments, are warranted by the Practice of their Ancestors, and the Usage of Parliament, have Reason to expect the Trials should proceed without Delay.

That there is a Mistake in Point of Fact, alledged by the Commons, this House may take Notice of the Caution used by your Lordships, in wording that Part of your Message; for they know your Lordships are too well acquainted with the Truth of the Fact, to affirm, that the Impeached Lords did not vote in their own Cases: And though the appearing or not appearing upon your Lordships Journal, does not make it more or less agreeable to the Rules of Justice, yet the Commons cannot but add this further Observation from your Lordships Journal, That the Impeached Lords Presence is not only recorded when those Votes passed, but they also find some of them appointed of Committees for preparing and drawing up the Messages and Answers to the House of Commons; which they do not think has been the best Expedient for preserving a good Correspondence between the Two Houses, or adjusting what will be necessary upon these Trials. And therefore the Commons cannot think it agreeable to the Rules of Parliament, for them to appear at a Trial, till all necessary Preliminaries are first settled with your Lordships.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Granvill and others, to desire a Free Conference with this House, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference.

The Commons were called in, and told, That the Lords will return an Answer by Messengers of their own.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That John Lord Sommers shall be tried in Westminster-Hall, upon the Articles of Impeachment against him, on Tuesday the 17th Day of this Instant June, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. St. John, and others (the 13th of June) to acquaint this House, That the House of Commons find greater Reasons to insist upon their Proposal of a Committee of both Houses, from the two Messages received Yesterday from your Lordships; for their Ambiguity and Uncertainty do shew the Methods of former Parliaments to be the most proper Way for Dispatch of Business.

The Commons have been obliged to employ that Time in considering and answering your Lordships Messages, which otherwise would have been spent in preparing for the Lord Sommers's Trial; so that the Delay must be charged where the Occasion ariseth. And the Commons having desired a Committee of both Houses, to adjust the Preliminaries of the Trials, cannot but think it strange your Lordships should come to Resolutions upon two of those Points, while the Proposal of the House of Commons is under Debate at Conferences between the Two Houses; the Commons having other Difficulties to propose, which concern them as Prosecutors, and all future Impeachments.

And though the Commons leave the Subject of your Lordships Resolutions, with other things, to be debated at a Committee of both Houses; yet they cannot but observe, that your Lordships Second Resolution is no direct Answer to the Commons Proposal, which was, Whether Peers Impeached of the same Crimes, shall Vote for each other upon their Trial for the same Crimes: And the Commons cannot believe that any such Rule can be laid down in plain Words, where there is a due Regard to Justice.

And as to what your Lordships observe, Ordered, That the Committee appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceeding upon Impeachments, do meet presently, and draw an Answer to the Message received Yesterday from the House of Commons.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees, appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, what is drawn by them to be sent to the House of Commons, in Answer to their Message of the Eleventh Instant; which was read and agreed to, as follows:

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, ' That in Answer to the Message of the House of Commons Yesterday, the Lords say, That they cannot give a greater Evidence of their sincere and hearty Desires of avoiding all Differences with the House of Commons, and proceeding on the Trials of the Impeachments, than by not taking Notice of the several just Exceptions to which that Message is liable, both as to the Matter and Expressions.

' The Lords have nothing further from their Thoughts, than the going about to do any thing which might have the least Appearance of Hardship in relation to the Commons.

' But the Answer of the Lord Sommers to the Articles exhibited against him, having been sent down to the Commons on the Four and twentieth of May last; and they having by their Message of the One and thirtieth of May, signify'd to their Lordships their Intention of beginning with the Trial of his Impeachment in the first place:

' The Lords considering how far the Session is advanced, thought it reasonable to appoint the Thirteenth Instant for the said Trials, their Lordships finding several Precedents of appointing Trials on Impeachments within a shorter Time.

' The Lords also think it incumbent upon them to endeavour to dispatch the Trials of all the Impeached Lords before the Rising of the Parliament. This is what Justice requires, and cannot be look'd upon as a Matter of Indulgence. Nevertheless, that the Commons may see how desirous their Lordships are to comply with them in any thing which may be consistent with Justice, they have appointed the Trial of Impeachment against John Lord Sommers, on Tuesday the Seventeenth Day of this Instant June, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, in the House of Lords, which will be then sitting in Westminster-Hall.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, That the Lords agree to a Free Conference, as desired, and appoint the same to be To-morrow at One a Clock in the Painted Chamber.

Die Veneris 13^o Junij, 1701.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. St. John and others. See Page 365.

The Messengers were called in, and told, That the Lords will send an Answer to the Commons Message, by Messengers of their own.

The Commons being come to the Free Conference, the Managers Names were read; then the House was adjourned during Pleasure, and the Lords went to the Free Conference: Which being ended, the House was resumed, and the Lord Steward reported, That the Lords had attended the Free Conference, as commanded; and that Mr. Harcourt opened the Free Conference, and argued against the Reasons given by this House why they could not agree to a Committee of both Houses; and that the Lord Haversham, in Answer to some Part of the Arguments of Mr. Harcourt and Sir Bartholomew Shower, used some Expressions, at which the Commons taking Exceptions, abruptly broke up the Conference.

After Debate thereupon, a Message was sent to the House of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, that the Lords having been informed by their Managers, that some Interruption happened at the Free Conference, which their Lordships are concerned at, because they wish that nothing should interrupt the publick Affairs, do desire the Commons would come again presently to the said Free Conference, which they do not doubt will prove the best Expedient to prevent the Inconvenience of a Misunderstanding upon what has pass'd.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons return Answer, that they have delivered their Message to the Commons, as ordered; and that the Commons say, they will return Answer by Messengers of their own.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Sir Christopher Musgrave and others, to acquaint this House, That the Commons desiring to keep up a good Correspondence with your Lordships, do think it necessary to acquaint your Lordships with what has happened at the Free Conference.

' One Thing there is, tho' I can't speak to it, because I am bound up by the Orders of the House; yet it must have some Answer: That is, as to the Lords voting in their own Case, it requires an Answer, tho' I can't go into the Debate of it. The Commons themselves have made this Precedent; for in these Impeachments they have allowed Men guilty of the same Crimes to Vote in their own House; and therefore we have not made any Distinction in our House, that some should Vote, and some not. The Lords have so high an Opinion of the Justice of the House of Commons, that they hope Justice shall never be made use of as a Mask for any Design: And therefore give me Leave to say, (tho' I am not to argue it) 'tis a plain Demonstration, that the Commons think these Lords innocent: And I think the Proposition is undeniable, for there are several Lords in the same Crimes, in the same Facts, there is no Distinction, and the Commons leave some of these Men at the Head of Affairs, near the King's Person, to do any Mischief, if their Persons were inclined to it, and Impeach others, when they are both alike guilty, and concerned in the same Facts. This was a Thing I was in hopes I should never have heard asserted, when the Beginning of it was from the House of Commons.

These were the Words spoken by John Lord Haversham; and the Commons have ordered me to communicate this Resolution to your Lordships.

Resolved, That John Lord Haversham be charged before the Lords, for the Words spoken by the said Lord this Day at the Free Conference; and that the Lords be desired to proceed in Justice against the said Lord Haversham, and to inflict such Punishment upon the said Lord, as so high an Offence against the House of Commons doth deserve.

Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lords, who were at the Free Conference, do meet presently at a Committee, and draw up what was offered at the Free Conference, and report to the House To-morrow at Eleven a-Clock.

Die

Die Sabbati 14^o Junii, 1701.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Bruges and others, with the Articles of Impeachment against Charles Lord Hallifax, and to acquaint this House, That the Matter of the Charge was contain'd in the Articles; and also, that he was commanded to pray and demand, That Charles Lord Hallifax do give sufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the House of Lords.

The Articles were read by the Clerk, as follows; viz.

ARTICLES exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against Charles Lord Hallifax, of High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

The ANSWER of Charles Lord Hallifax to the Articles exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against the said Lord Hallifax, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, suppos'd to be committed by him.

WHEREAS several Persons, contrary to their Duty and Allegiance to his Majesty and his late Royal Consort, of ever blessed Memory, traitorously adhering to their Majesties Enemies, did levy and maintain, within their Majesties Realm of Ireland, a desperate and bloody War and Rebellion against their Majesties; and were, by his Majesty's Conduct and Courage, at the great Expence of his English Subjects, reduced to their due Obedience to the Crown of England.

And whereas upon the Fourth Day of April, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred and Ninety, 'twas resolv'd by the Commons of England in Parliament assembled, That a Bill shou'd be brought in, to attain all Persons guilty of Rebellion in Ireland or elsewhere, against their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and to enact and declare their Estates to be Forfeited, and to be Sold for the reducing of that Kingdom.

And whereas his Majesty, in his gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, did, upon the Fifth Day of January One thousand Six hundred and Ninety, assure them, That he would not make any Grants of the Forfeited Lands in Ireland, till there should be another Opportunity of settling that Matter in Parliament, in such Manner as should be thought most expedient.

And whereas the Commons of England in Parliament assembled, by their humble Address to his Majesty, upon the Fourth Day of March, One thousand Six hundred Ninety-two, did humbly beseech his Majesty, That (according to the Assurance his Majesty had been pleas'd to give them) no Grant might be made of the Forfeited Estates in Ireland, till there should be an Opportunity of settling that Matter in Parliament, in such Manner as should be thought most expedient: To which his Majesty was pleas'd to give a most gracious Answer. Whereby, and by many other Endeavours of the Commons in the following Sessions of Parliament, it appears, That what has since been declar'd by Act of Parliament, was the continued Sense of the Commons of England; That it was highly reasonable, that the Forfeited Estates of Rebels and Traitors in Ireland, should be apply'd in Ease of his Majesty's faithful Subjects of the Kingdom of England.

And whereas 'twas the apparent Duty of every Officer or Minister of State, to have had so much Regard to the Resolutions and Address of the House of Commons, to the Publick Good, and

THE said Lord Hallifax, saving to himself all Advantages of Exceptions to the said Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words, or want of Form; and saving to himself all Privileges and Rights belonging to him, as One of the Peers of this Realm; for Answer to the said Articles, humbly saith,

I. To the First Article he saith, True it is, that several Persons did levy and maintain a desperate and bloody War and Rebellion in Ireland against their Majesties, and were by his Majesty's Courage and Conduct, at the great Expence of his English Subjects, suppress'd and reduced to their Obedience, as in this Article is alledg'd. And he further answereth and saith, He believes it to be true, that on the Fourth of April, 1690, such Vote or Resolve was made by the then House of Commons for that Purpose, and such Assurance was given by his Majesty, and such Addresses were made by the House of Commons in the Year 1690 and 1692, That no Grant should be made of the Forfeited Lands in Ireland till there should be another Opportunity of settling that Matter in Parliament, in such Manner as should be thought most expedient; and such Answers were given thereunto as in this Article is and are set forth, as by the said several Votes, Resolves, Speeches, Addresses and Answers, to which the said Lord craves Leave, for more Certainty, to refer himself, may appear.

That in the Years 1693, 1694, 1695, the Parliament of England did meet, and no Act was pass'd touching the Forfeited Estates, tho' by other Ways great Sums were rais'd for the carrying on and defraying the Charges of the War in those Years; and his Majesty did after, as Rewards to several Persons who had serv'd him in Ireland and elsewhere, grant to them some of the Forfeited Estates in Ireland, and the Grantees did enjoy the same.

And the said Lord Hallifax further saith, That his Majesty did never grant to him, or any in Trust for him, or to his Use, any of the said Forfeited Lands; but of his Grace and Favour, and as a Reward for his Faithful Services (which his Majesty was pleas'd to accept) did, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, bearing Date on or about the Eleventh Day of May, 1697, grant to Thomas Railton, Esq; in Trust for the said Lord Hallifax, (who was then One of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and One of the Members of the House of Commons, his Majesty's Honour, as to have dissuaded and prevented (as much as in them lay) the procuring or passing any Grant or Grants of the said Forfeited Estates in Ireland; yet Charles (now) Lord Hallifax, then the Honourable Charles Montagu, Esq; being a Member of the Honourable House of Commons, One of the Lords of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, hath, since the aforesaid Fourth Day of March, One thousand Six hundred Ninety-two, presumed to advise, pass, or direct the passing a Grant to Thomas Railton, Esq; in Trust for himself, of several Debts, Interests, Sum and Sums of Money, amounting in the whole to the Sum of Thirteen thousand Pounds, or thereabout, due, owing, and which ought to have accrued to his Majesty, by reason of Attainders, Outlawries, or other Forfeitures of the respective Persons for whom the same were enter'd on Record; whereby he hath much contributed to the contracting great Debts upon the Nation, the laying heavy Taxes upon the People, hath highly reflected on his Majesty's Honour, and fail'd in the Performance of his Trust and Duty.

II. Whereas by an Act of Parliament, made in the Eleventh and Twelfth Years of his Majesty's Reign, entituled, An Act for granting an Aid to his Majesty by Sale of the Forfeited and other Estates and Interests in Ireland, and by a Land-Tax in England, for the several Purposes therein mention'd, 'tis amongst other Things enacted, That all and every Person or Persons whatsoever, who had by Vertue of any Grant or Disposition from his Majesty, or from his Majesty and the late Queen, receiv'd for his or their own Use or Benefit, any Debt or Debts, or Sum or Sums whatsoever, due from any Debt or Debts of any Forfeiting Person, mention'd or describ'd in the said Act, or from any Person or Persons, subject or liable to the Payment of any Sum or Sums of Money whatsoever, to any of the said Forfeiting Persons, should be, and they are thereby declared to be respectively liable, and are required to repay every such Debt or Debts, Sum or Sums of Money whatsoever, so by him, her or them respectively received, into the Receipt of his Majesty's Exchequer in Ireland, on or before the Four and twentieth Day of August, One thousand Seven hundred.

And whereas the said Charles Lord Hallifax had, before the making of the aforesaid Act, procured for Thomas Railton, Esq; in Trust for himself, a Grant of several Debts by Judgments and otherwise, to several of the said Forfeiting Persons, amounting to the Sum of Thirteen thousand Pounds, or thereabouts, forfeited to his Majesty by the Attainder, Outlawries, or other Forfeitures of the respective Persons to whom such Debts were originally due; and, by Vertue of the said Grant, the said Lord Hallifax actually received to his own Use the Sum of One thousand Pounds, part of the before-mentioned Sum of Thirteen thousand Pounds; which said Sum of One thousand Pounds he the said Charles Lord Hallifax ought to have repaid before the said Four and twentieth Day of August, One thousand Seven hundred, into the Receipt of his Majesty's Exchequer in Ireland, as by as in this Article is set forth) several Debts, Interests, Sum or Sums of Money, amounting in the whole to the Sum of 11546 Pounds, 17 Shillings and 8 Pence, or thereabouts: Which Grant he conceives, and is advis'd, his Majesty might then lawfully make, and was lawful for him to accept, without Breach of his Duty, or the Trust reposed in him; and denies, That he did ask for, or procure the said Grant; but confesseth, He accepted the same as a Mark of his Majesty's Grace and Favour; and saith, The said Grant hath since been taken away by Act of Parliament; and saith, That the said Grant, made to Thomas Railton, is the same which was mention'd, or intended, by the said Article of Impeachment; and although the Debts, therein mention'd to be granted, amount to 11546 Pounds, 17 Shillings and 8 Pence, and no more, yet the said Grant it self, at the Time of making thereof, or at any Time afterwards, would not be valued at near the said Sums, because a great part of the said Debts were not recoverable; and he hath not made clear thereof, as yet, above 400*l.* and humbly hopes the said Grant hath very little, if at all, contributed to the contracting any Debts upon the Nation, or laying heavy Taxes upon the People, or any ways reflected upon his Majesty's Honour, or, that he hath failed in the Performance of his Trust or Duty, as in the Article is suggested.

II. To the Second Article the said Lord Hallifax saith, That he believes it to be true, that such Act was made, and such Clause therein as in this Article is mentioned; and also in the said Act there is a further Clause, That the Grantees from the King of any of the Forfeited Estates thereby refused, should not be accountable for the Rents, Issues, and Profits of the same, by them receiv'd before the Second Day of November, 1699, but might retain the same to their own Uses.

And the said Lord Hallifax doth acknowledge, That after the making the said Grant before-mentioned to the said Thomas Railton, the Agents of the said Lord Hallifax did receive some Monies, not exceeding One thousand Pounds (as he is informed) out of the Rents and Profits of the Forfeited Estate of the Earl of Clancarty, of which no more than the abovesaid Sum did come clear to him the said Lord Hallifax; and no more, to his Knowledge or Belief, hath been received or recovered upon the aforesaid Grant. That the said Lord Hallifax gave Direction, after the said Act pass'd, to his Agents in Ireland, to do, in relation to the Money received, as should be advis'd by Council there; by whom his Agents were advis'd (as they informed the said Lord, and which he believes to be true) that the said Monies, being received out of the Mean Profits which were remitted by that Act, were not within the first-mentioned Clause in the said Act: And therefore the said Lord does believe, and admit, the same were not paid into the Receipt of his Majesty's Exchequer in Ireland, nor ought to have been paid into the Exchequer, as he humbly insists, and is advis'd: And he doth deny, That the Non-payment of the said Money into the said Receipt is any Wrong to his Majesty or the Publick, or any Misapplication; and in case the said Money ought to have been paid into the said Receipt, there are proper Methods and Remedies in the said Act prescribed, to compel the Payment of the same.

by the said Act he was requir'd to have done; yet the said Charles Lord Hallifax did not repay the said Sum of One thousand Pounds, as by the said Act he was requir'd to do; but has hitherto, in contempt of the Act, refus'd or neglected to repay the same: Which Neglect or Refusal of him the said Charles, Lord Hallifax, to repay the said Sum of One thousand Pounds, is a manifest Wrong to his Majesty and the Publick, and a Misapplication of that Sum, to other Uses and Purposes than by the Act 'tis appropriated, and ought to have been apply'd.

III. That the said Charles, Lord Hallifax, being a Member of the Honourable House of Commons, One of the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord-Treasurer of England, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, not contented with the many Employments and Places of Honour bestow'd upon him by his Majesty, nor with the large and excessive Gains by him made, by the Incomes and Profits arising from such Offices and Preferments, did (in opposition to what he well knew to be the true Interest of England, and contrary to his Oath as a Privy-Counsellor, and his Duty as a Publick Minister, at a Time when the Nation was engag'd in a tedious and expensive War against France, for preserving the Ballance and Liberties of Europe, and under such heavy Debts as, without laying unsupportable Taxes on the People, were impossible to be satisfied) Advise, Procure, and Assent, not only to the passing of divers Grants to others in England and Ireland, but did obtain and accept of several beneficial ones to, or in Trust for himself: Which said Practices of him, the said Lord Hallifax, were a most notorious Abuse of his Majesty's Goodness, a great Breach of his Trust, and a very high Vexation and Oppression of his Majesty's other Subjects.

IV. Whereas by the Common-Law, and by many Statutes and Ordinances of this Realm, it appears to have been the great Care of our Ancestors, that the King's Forests should be preserv'd, and in particular the Timber therein growing, for the building and repairing of the Navy Royal, which has ever been accounted (as it undoubtedly is) the great Security of this Realm: And whereas Charles Lord Hallifax was, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred Ninety-seven, One of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and oblig'd, as well by repeated Oaths, as by the Duty he ow'd to his Majesty and his Country, to have advis'd, consult'd, and promoted such Matters and Things as should, or at least were most likely to, redound to his Majesty's Honour and the Nation's Safety; yet the said Charles Lord Hallifax, not regarding the Laws and Ordinances of this Realm, nor his said Duty to his Majesty and the Publick, but pursuing his private Interest, did, by Letters of Privy-Seal, bearing Date on or about the Sixth Day of May, which was in the Year of our Lord

III. To the Third Article he saith, He was a Member of the House of Commons, One of the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Privy-Counsellor, as in the Article is set forth; and serv'd his Majesty faithfully, as he hopes and believes, in those Stations, and was contented with the Employments and Places of Honour bestow'd upon him, and with the Incomes and Gains by him made by the just and lawful Fees and Profits of the same, and his Majesty graciously accepted of such his Services; and, as a Mark of his Royal Favour to him, did make, for his Benefit, the Grant in the Answer to the precedent Article, and the Grant in the Answer to the subsequent Article mention'd; which were all the profitable Grants he, or any in Trust for him, ever had from his Majesty: And the said Lord Hallifax says, He conceives, and is advis'd, that his accepting such Grants were not any Abuse of his Majesty's Goodness, nor Breach of the Trust reposed in him, nor were any of his Majesty's Subjects thereby oppress'd: And denies, that he ever did, in opposition to what he knew to be the true Interest of England, or contrary to his Oath or Duty, at any time Advise, Procure, or Assent to the passing of any Grant or Grants to himself, or to any Person in Trust for him, or to any other Person or Persons whatsoever; but saith, He, as One of the Commissioners of the Treasury, in conjunction with the other Commissioners, did sign several Warrants and Dockets for such Grants as his Majesty was pleas'd to direct to be pass'd by them; and which, he humbly conceives and is advis'd, he was, by the Duty of his Place, oblig'd to do.

IV. To the Fourth Article he saith, He believes it to be true, That our Ancestors did take great care to preserve the King's Forests, and the Timber therein growing, for the building and repairing the Navy Royal, which the said Lord doth own hath ever been accounted (and as he believes very rightly,) the great Security of the Realm: And saith, True it is, he was in the Year 1697 One of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and One of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and did from time to time advise and promote such Matters and Things as were most likely to redound to his Majesty's Honour, and the Nation's Safety; and denies, that he, at any time, prefer'd his Private Interest to that of the Publick: But doth confes and admit, that his Majesty, by his Letters of Privy-Seal, dated the Sixth of May, 1697, did, out of his Grace and Favour design'd to the said Lord Hallifax, grant unto Henry Segar, in the Article mention'd, and which was in Trust for the said Lord, the Sum of 2000 l. per Annum, to be rais'd by the Fall of scrubb'd Beech, Birch, Holly, Hazle, Thorns, and Orle, in the Forest of Dean, in the County of Gloucester.

One thousand Six hundred Ninety-seven, (the Kingdom being then engag'd in an expensive War, and the Debts of the Nation requiring the best and most frugal Management) procure from his Majesty a Grant to Henry Segar, Gent. in Trust for himself, of the Sum of Fourteen thousand Pounds, of so much scrubb'd Beech, Birch, Holly, Hazle, Thorns, and Orle, as should by Sale raise the said Sum of Fourteen thousand Pounds, to be fallen in his Majesty's Forest of Dean, in the County of Gloucester, within the space of Seven Years time, from the Five and twentieth Day of December, One thousand Six hundred Ninety-seven: Under colour of which Grant, Beech of a much greater Value, a great Number of Sapling-Oaks, which might and would have been serviceable to the Realm, and also many Tons of the well-grown Timber, fit for the present Use of the Navy, have been cut and fallen, and sold and disposed of for the Benefit of the said Lord Hallifax.

V. Whereas there is not any thing that so much conduceth to his Majesty's and the Nation's Honour and Safety, as the due Ordering and Managing of the King's Treasure, and the Publick Revenues; for the Receiving and Issuing forth of which, the Wisdom and Policy of this Nation has provided and appointed several and distinct Officers, with beneficial Salaries, in order that they may be a Check to each other, and that no Loss may accrue to his Majesty or the Publick, by the Corruption, Unskilfulness, or Negligence of any particular Officer: Yet he, the said Charles Lord Hallifax, being one of the Lords of the Treasury when by the Death of the Honourable Sir Robert Howard the Office of the Auditor of the Receipts, and Writer of the Tallies, became vacant, not regarding the ancient Constitution and approv'd Methods in ordering his Majesty's Treasury, and the publick Revenues, did grant, or procure to be granted, to Christopher Montagu, Esq; the Brother of him, the said Charles Lord Hallifax, and then One of the Commissioners of the Excise, the said Place and Office of Auditor of the Receipts, and Writer of the Tallies; which said Grant was so made and procur'd by the said Lord Hallifax in Trust, as to the Profits thereof, for himself: So that from and after the passing of the said Grant, he, the said Lord Hallifax, was in effect at the same Time one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Auditor of the Receipts, and Writer of the Tallies, and enjoy'd the Profits of the said several Offices; which, by the Constitution of the Treasury, are manifestly inconsistent, and never were, or ought to be, trusted in the same Person: The making and procuring of which said Grant by him, the said Charles Lord Hallifax, as aforesaid, was a manifest Violation of the establish'd Course and Constitution of the Exchequer, a Breach of his Trust, of evil Example, and tending very much to the great Loss and Prejudice of his Majesty and the Publick, by opening a Way to all manner of corrupt Practices in the future Management of the Revenues.

for the space of Seven Years, from the 25th of December, 1697, as by the said Letters of Privy-Seal, to which the said Lord, for more Certainty, referreth himself, may appear; which Grant was not, nor could be, prejudicial to any Timber growing in the said Forest; and believes no Sapling-Oaks, or Timber, or Trees likely to be Timber, were cut down by colour of the said Grant; and if any Abuse were in cutting the Wood, he conceives he is not answerable for the same, such cutting not having been by his Direction, nor he any ways concerning himself therein, the Setting-out and Cutting whereof did belong to his Majesty's Surveyor-General, and other his Majesty's Officers, who (as the said Lord hath been inform'd and believes) faithfully discharg'd their Trust in the Execution thereof, and took particular Care to preserve the Timber there.

V. To the Fifth Article the said Lord Hallifax answereth and saith, He believes it to be true, that the Ordering and Management of the King's Treasure and publick Revenues conduceth very much to the Honour and Safety of his Majesty and the Nation; and, that there are several distinct Officers with Salaries, for the better receiving and issuing forth of the same, and that are Checks upon each other, to prevent any Loss to his Majesty or the Publick: And the said Lord saith, True it is, he was One of the Commissioners of the Treasury, when, by the Death of Sir Robert Howard, his Office of Writer of the Tallies and Counter-Tallies, commonly call'd Auditor of the Receipt of Exchequer, became vacant; and thereupon the then Commissioners of the Treasury did grant the said Office to Christopher Montagu, then One of the Commissioners of Excise, and Brother to the said Lord; which the said Lord does own and admit was done at his Desire and Request; but humbly insisteth, the same was not granted contrary to the ancient Constitution, or approv'd Methods, in ordering his Majesty's Treasury, or Publick Revenue: And saith, He the said Lord did procure the said Office to be granted to his Brother, intending in a short time after, by his Majesty's Permission, when his Majesty's Affairs would permit thereof, to leave his, the said Lord's, Employments and Places in the Treasury, and to obtain a Surrender from his said Brother of the said Office, and procure a Grant thereof to himself; which he hopes, and humbly insists, was lawful for him to do: And saith, His said Brother duly executed the said Office till after the said Lord had left, or laid down by his Majesty's Leave, his Places in the Treasury; and then, and not before, his said Brother surrender'd the said Office, and he, the said Lord, obtain'd a Grant of the same, as he conceives was lawful for him to do. In all which Proceedings nothing was done by him, the said Lord, as he is advis'd, in violation of the establish'd Course and Constitution of the Exchequer, or to the Loss or Prejudice of his Majesty, or the Publick: And saith, He does not know, or believe, that the said several Offices, as they were executed, were in their Nature inconsistent with one another; and is very sure his Majesty, or the Publick, were no ways prejudic'd by the Execution of the same.

VI. Whereas a Treaty and Alliance between Leopold the Emperor of Germany, and the States-General of the United-Provinces, was made and concluded in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred Eighty-nine, upon the Consideration of the Greatness of the Common Danger, which then threaten'd all Christendom, from the Excessive Power of France, and the unconstant Faith of the French in the Observance of Treaties; whereby it was agreed, That there should be, and remain for ever, a Constant, Perpetual, and Inviolable Friendship and good Correspondence between his Imperial Majesty and the States-General, that each of them should be oblig'd to promote the other's Interest, and, as much as in them lay, prevent all Damages and Inconveniences to each other.

And whereas certain Separate Articles were also at or about that Time made and annex'd to the aforesaid Treaty, whereby the States-General, maturely considering that France had openly declar'd in several Courts, that (notwithstanding the most solemn Renunciation) they continued their Pretension by Force of Arms to assert for the Dauphin the Succession of the Spanish Monarchy, in case the King of Spain should die without Issue; and also considering what a Blow their State would receive, and what Prejudice might happen thereby to the Publick Affairs and Quiet, did promise, That in case his said Catholick Majesty should die without Issue, they would, with all their Force, assist his said Imperial Majesty, or his Heirs, in taking the Succession of the Spanish Monarchy, lawfully belonging to that House, together with its Kingdoms, Dominions, and Rights, and in their obtaining and securing the quiet Possession thereof, against the French and their Adherents, who should directly or indirectly oppose that Succession, and with Force repel that Force which should be brought against them.

That at the Instance of the States-General, in pursuance of the said Treaty and Separate Articles, our most Gracious Lord and Sovereign, his most Excellent Majesty King William the Third, was invited to enter into the Alliance of the aforesaid Treaty, and into the Agreement of the said Separate Articles; and thereupon, for restoring and preserving the Publick Peace and Quiet, did afterwards, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred Eighty-nine, enter into, and under the Great Seal of England accept, approve, and ratify, and in the most solemn manner engage and promise, Religiously and Inviolably to observe the same, without Violating the said Treaty or Separate Articles in any Article, or suffering the same, to the utmost of his Power, to be Violated.

That in the Year of our Lord One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight, a Treaty was projected and contriv'd in France, to be set on foot between his Majesty, the French King, and the States-General, for a Partition of the Spanish Monarchy, whereby many large Territories thereunto belonging, in case of the Decease of the King of Spain without Issue, were to be allotted and deliver'd up to France.

The Tenor and Design of which last-mentioned Treaty, whilst the same was in Negotiation, was communicated to the said Charles Lord Hallifax, then One of the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High-Treasurer, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and One of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council: That the said Charles Lord Hallifax, well knowing the most apparent evil Consequences, as well as the Injustice of the said Partition, did not, according to the Trust and Duty of his said several Offices, dissuade, or endeavour to obstruct its taking Effect; but, on the contrary, having neither Regard to his Majesty's Honour, engaged by the above-mentioned

VI. To the Sixth Article the said Lord Hallifax saith, That he believes, that in the Year 1689, such Treaty, and Alliance, and Separate Article were made between the Emperor of Germany and the States-General of the United-Provinces, (into which his Majesty and the late Queen entered) and such Ratifications thereof were made as in this Article is mention'd; and also saith, He hath heard, and believes, that in the Year of our Lord 1698 a Treaty was made to such Effect as in this Article is mention'd; and saith, He never saw the said Treaty, or heard the same read, or does as yet know the Articles or Agreement it contains; and denies, that he ever advis'd his Majesty to enter into or make the said Treaty, or was ever consulted upon any Clause or Article thereof, or ever encourag'd or promoted the same. And the said Lord saith, That, as he remembers, Mr. Secretary Vernon did at one time send for him, and discourse with him and others upon an Intimation that was given by a Letter from the Earl of Portland, as he remembers, that the French King was dispos'd to commence a Negotiation upon some general Terms, that were then mention'd, to prevent a War in case of the King of Spain's Death, who was then reported to be very ill; and afterwards the said Matter was discours'd between the Secretary, the then Lord-Chancellor, and the said Lord Hallifax, at Tunbridge-Wells, when and where the said Lord Hallifax made several Objections to the same; and denies, that he gave any Opinion to encourage or promote the said Treaty, or ever afterwards was inform'd of any one Particular relating to it, or was ever Consulted or Advised upon any Clause or Article of it, or was ever after told or inform'd, that the said Negotiation or Treaty did go on or proceed; and saith, That not being advis'd with, or any ways knowing of the said Treaty or Negotiation (except as aforesaid) he could not dissuade or obstruct its taking Effect; and saith, As he cannot tell what the Effects of the Treaty might have been, if the said Treaty had been observ'd, so he conceives and insisteth, that he is not, nor ought to be answerable for the same.

And having thus laid his Case before your Lordships, he humbly saith, and insisteth upon it, That he is Not Guilty of all or any the Matters by the said Articles charg'd, or in them specified, in Manner and Form, as the same are therein and thereby charg'd against him.

HALLIFAX.

Treaty with the Emperor, and the States-General, to the Trade and known Interest of these Kingdoms, or the Peace of Europe, did advise his Majesty to enter into the said Treaty; and did so far encourage and promote the same, that the said Treaty was concluded and ratified under the Great-Seal of England: Which said Treaty was evidently destructive of the Trade of this Realm, a Breach of the former Treaty made with the Emperor in One thousand Six hundred and Eighty-nine, dishonourable to his Majesty, highly injurious to the Interest of the Protestant Religion, and manifestly tended to disturb the general Peace of Europe, by altering the Ballance of Power therein, and strengthening France against the good Friends and ancient Allies of our Sovereign Lord the King.

And the said Knights, Citizens and Burgesses, by Protestation, saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter, any further Articles, or other Accusation or Impeachment against the said Lord Hallifax; and also of replying to his Answers which he shall make unto the said Articles, or any of them, and of offering Proofs to all and every the aforesaid Articles, and to all and every other Articles, Impeachment or Accusation, which shall be exhibited by them, as the Case shall, according to the Course of Parliament, require, do pray, That the said Charles Lord Hallifax may be put to answer the said Crimes and Misdemeanors, and that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments, may be thereupon had and given, as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

After reading this Day the Articles of Impeachment brought up from the House of Commons against Charles Lord Hallifax, and hearing his Lordship thereupon, who desired a Copy of the said Articles, and said he would put in his Answer so soon as possible he could: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lord Hallifax may have a Copy of the Articles against him.

Ordered, That the Lords Committees (appointed to draw what was offered at the Free Conference) do inspect the Journals, as to what hath happened upon any Occasion, in relation to what pass'd at a Free Conference Yesterday, and what hath been done thereupon, and Report to the House.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir John Hoskins and Dr. Newton, to acquaint them, "That upon the Occasion of their last Message Yesterday, in order to continue a good Correspondence between the Two Houses, their Lordships did immediately appoint a Committee to state the Matters of the Free Conference, and also to inspect Precedents of what has happened of the like Nature: And that the publick Business may receive no Interruption, the Time desired by their Lordships for renewing the Free Conference being elapsed, their Lordships desire a present Free Conference in the Painted-Chamber, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Free Conference.

The Lord-Steward reported from the Committee appointed to draw up what was offered at the Free Conference; viz.

That Mr. Harcourt opened the Conference, and argued first against the Reasons given by this House, why they could not agree to a Committee of both Houses; but afterwards entered into a Debate against the Two Resolutions of this House, relating to Impeachments depending; viz.

Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, Nemine Contradicente, That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, shall, upon his Trial, be without the Bar.

Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, can be precluded from Voting on any Occasion, except in his own Trial.

And in his Arguments he used this Expression, That he wished their Lordships had sent their Reasons, as well as their Resolutions.

Sir Bartholomew Shower spoke next, in Pursuance of the Argument begun by Mr. Harcourt,

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by my Lord Cbeney and others (Eodem Die) to acquaint this House, viz. "That the Commons are extremely desirous to preserve a good Correspondence between the Two Houses, and to expedite the Trials of the Impeached Lords; but conceive it is not consistent with the Honour of the House of Commons to renew the Free Conference, until they have received Reparation by your Lordships doing Justice upon John Lord Haversham, for the Indignity he Yesterday offered to the House of Commons.

against the aforesaid Resolutions; and in giving Reasons against the latter of the said Resolutions, amongst other Things did affirm, That such a Proceeding would be abhorrent from Justice.

In Answer to those Gentlemen, the Lord Haversham used some Arguments and Expressions, which the Managers for the House of Commons took Exceptions at; but what those were the Committee cannot so charge their Memories, as to give the House a particular Account of them: And the Lord Haversham being desired by the Committee to recollect what he had said, did inform their Lordships, That observing in the Free Conference several Things said by Mr. Harcourt and Sir Bartholomew Shower, that reflected on the Honour and Justice of this House, as he apprehended, and that he took to be foreign to the Subject-Matter of the Free Conference, he thought it his Duty to take notice thereof; but in what Expressions, he hoped their Lordships would excuse him from giving a particular Account; but denies, that he said several Things contained in the Paper sent up by the House of Commons: but says, That he desired to be heard heard out, and that the Words he had spoken might be writ down; but the Managers for the Commons broke up abruptly.

The Lord Haversham this Day moved, That he may have a Copy of the Commons Charge against him, and Time to answer. It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lord Haversham shall have a Copy of the Charge against him; and do Answer thereunto; and that he shall have Council allowed him, in order to Answer the Charge against him.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons, return Answer, That the Commons will send an Answer by Messengers of their own.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by the Lord Cheney, and others, to acquaint this House — See Page 372.

The House being moved, To insist not to have a Committee of both Houses, touching the Trial of the Impeached Lords; and Debate thereupon:

The Question was put, Whether this House shall insist upon their Resolutions, of not allowing a Committee of both Houses?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

A Message was sent by the House of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Dr. Newton, to acquaint them, “ That the Lord Sommers having informed “ this House, That Sir Stephen Fox, John Smith, “ Esq; William Lowndes, Esq; Stephen Harvey, “ Esq; and William Gulton, Esq; Members of “ their House, may be material Witnesses for “ him at his Trial on Tuesday next in Westminster-Hall, this House desires, That they may have “ Leave to attend, and give their Testimonies “ at the said Trial; and that a Letter which “ his Majesty was pleased to write to him in “ One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight, being now in their House, will be necessary for “ his Defence at his Trial; this House desires “ that the said Letter may be produced at the “ said Trial.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That an humble Address be made to his Majesty from this House, That he will be pleased to give Order, that the Original Treaties of Partition, of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight, and One thousand Six hundred Ninety-nine, and the Earl of Portland's and Mr. Secretary Vernin's Letters relating thereunto, or Authentick Copies of them, may be laid before this House on Monday next, at Eleven of the Clock; and that the Lords with White Staves attend his Majesty with this Address.

Die Lunæ 16^o Junii, 1701.

That being so met, they shall go to Prayers as a House, and after Prayers they shall adjourn into Westminster-Hall.

That from this House the Lords shall go in this Manner.

That the whole Impeachment is to be read, and then the Answer; which being done, the Lord-Keeper is to tell the Commons, That now they may go on with their Evidence.

Then the Lord-Keeper is to declare, That now the Court is proceeding to hear the Evidence, and desire the Peers to give Attention.

If any of the Peers, or the Members of the House of Commons, that manage the Evidence, or the Lord Impeached, do desire to have any Question asked, they must desire the Lord-Keeper to ask the same.

If

If any Doubt doth arise at the Trial, no Debate is to be in the Court, but the Question suspended to be debated in this House.

The Members of the House of Commons to be there before the Peers come.

None to be covered at the Trial but the Peers.

It is Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lords with White Staves do humbly move his Majesty, from this House, That he will be pleas'd to give Order, that such Guards do attend at the Trial of the Lord Sommers To-morrow in Westminster-Hall, as has been usual in such Cases.

Sir Christopher Wren being come, he was call'd in — says, The Court is made like this House, and a Place for the Commons. He was told, he must take away the lowest Form, and a Stool must be set within the Bar, for the Lord to be try'd.

It is Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Mr. Serjeant Pratt shall be, and he is hereby assign'd Council for the Lord Sommers, at his Trial upon the Articles of Impeachment against him.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by the Earl of Dyset and others, (the 17th of June) to acquaint this House, " That the Commons, in this whole Proceeding against the Impeached Lords, have acted with all imaginable Zeal to bring them to a speedy Trial; and they doubt not but 'twill appear, by comparing their Proceedings with all others upon the like Occasion, that the House of Commons have nothing to blame themselves for, but that they have not expressed the Resentment THEIR ANCESTORS have justly shewed upon much less Attempts, which have

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Sir John Talbot, Sir Edmund Harrison, Robert Yard, John Ellis, John Tucker, Leonard Hancock, Esqrs; John Tench, and William Popple jun. Gent. do, and they are hereby required to attend this House To-morrow at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, as Witnesses on the behalf of John Lord Sommers.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons, return Answer, That they have delivered their Message.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir John Francklyn and Sir Richard Holford, to acquaint them, That the Lords, in order to keep a good Correspondence between the Two Houses, and to put the Charge against John Lord Haversham in a Course of Justice, have ordered (at his Lordship's Motion) his Lordship a Copy of the Charge against him, and that he do put in his Answer thereunto, in order to bring that Matter to a speedy Judgment.

The Lord Hallifax delivered in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment of the House of Commons against him, which was read by the Clerk. See Page 367.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir John Francklyn and Sir Richard Holford, to carry down a Copy of the said Answer, and to acquaint them, That they having, on the First Day of April last, sent up to their Lordships an Impeachment against William Earl of Portland, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and there being as yet no particular Articles exhibited against him, their Lordships think themselves obliged to put them in mind thereof.

Die Martis 17^o Junii, 1701.

The Lord Wharton reported his Majesty's Answer to the Address, in relation to the Original Treaties; viz.

That his Majesty would do what he could towards it; and that He had not the Original Papers.

As to the Address for Guards, his Majesty hath complied with it, and given Order for them accordingly.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir John Francklyn and Sir Lacon-William Child, on the 20th Instant, to acquaint them, " That the Lords, in Answer to the Message of the Commons of the Seventeenth Instant, say, The only true Way of determining which of the Two Houses has acted with the greatest Sincerity, in order to bring the Impeached Lords to their Trials, is to look back upon the respective Proceedings.

" The Lords do not well understand what the Commons mean by that Resentment which they speak of in their Message. Their Lordships have been made their Power of Impeachments.

The Commons, on the 31st of May, acquainted your Lordships, That they thought it proper, from the Nature of the Evidence, to proceed in the first place upon the Trial of the Lord Sommers. Upon the first Intimation from your Lordships, some Days afterwards, That you would proceed to the Trial of any of the Impeached Lords whom the Commons should be first ready to begin with, notwithstanding your Lordships had before thought fit to appoint which Impeachment should be first tried, and affix a Day for such a Trial, without consulting the Commons, who are the Prosecutors.

The Commons determining to expedite the Trials to the utmost of their Power, in hopes of attaining that End, and for the more speedy and easy adjusting and preventing any Differences which had happened, or might arise, previous to or upon these Trials, proposed to your Lordships, at a Conference, the most Parliamentary and Effectual Method for that Purpose, and that which in no manner intrenched upon your Lordships Judicature; That a Conference of both Houses should be nominated, to consider of the most proper Ways and Methods of Proceedings upon Impeachments, according to the Usage of Parliament.

In the next Message to the Commons, upon Monday the 9th of June, your Lordships thought fit, without taking the least Notice of this Proposition, to appoint the Friday then following for the Trial of the said Lord Sommers; whereunto, as well as to many other Messages and Proceedings of your Lordships upon this Occasion, the House of Commons might have justly taken very great Exceptions; yet, as an Evidence of their Moderation, and to shew their Readiness to bring the Impeached Lords to speedy Justice, the Commons insisted only on their Proposition for a Committee of both Houses, to Settle and Adjust the necessary Preliminaries to the Trial; particularly, Whether the Impeached Lords should appear on their Trial at your Lordships Bar as Criminals: Whether being under Accusations of the same Crimes, they should sit as Judges on each other's Trial for those Crimes, or should Vote in their own Cases, as 'tis notorious they have been permitted by your Lordships to do in many Instances which might be given: To which Particulars your Lordships have not yet given a direct Answer, though put in mind thereof by the Commons.

Your Lordships, at a Conference, having offered some Reasons why you could not agree to a Committee of both Houses, to adjust the necessary Preliminaries, the Commons thereupon desired a Free Conference, and your Lordships agreed thereunto; at which 'tis well known to many of your Lordships, who were then present, what most scandalous Reproaches and false Expressions, highly reflecting upon the Honour and Justice of the House of Commons, were uttered by John Lord Haversham; whereby the Commons were under a Necessity of withdrawing from the said Free Conference: For which Offence the Commons have, with all due regard to your Lordships, prayed your Lordships Justice against the Lord Haversham, but have as yet received no manner of Satisfaction.

ships own, that the House of Commons have a Right of Impeaching: And the Lords have the undoubted Power of doing Justice upon those Impeachments, by bringing them to Trial, and condemning or acquitting the Parties in a reasonable Time. This Power is derived to them from their Ancestors; which they will not suffer to be wrested from them by any Pretences whatsoever.

Their Lordships cannot but wonder, that the Commons should not have proposed a Committee of both Houses much sooner, if they thought it so necessary for the beginning on the Trials; no mention being made of such a Committee from the First of April to the Sixth of June, although, during that Interval, their Delays were frequently complained of by the House of Lords.

The Manner in which the Commons demand this Committee, the Lords look upon as a direct invading of their Judicature; and therefore, as there never was a Committee of both Houses yielded to by the Lords, in case of any Impeachment for High Crimes and Misdemeanors; so their Lordships do insist, that they will make no new Precedent upon this Occasion. Many Impeachments for Misdemeanors have in all Times been determined without such a Committee: And if now the Commons think fit, by an unprecedented Demand, to form an Excuse for not prosecuting their Impeachments, it is demonstrable where the Obstruction lies.

As to the Preliminaries, which the Commons mention in particular, as proper to be settled at such a Committee, they have received the Resolutions of the House of Lords therein by their Message of the Twelfth Instant; from which (being Matters relating entirely to their Judicature) their Lordships cannot depart.

As to the last Pretence the Commons would make to shelter the delaying the Trials, from some Expressions which fell from the Lord Haversham at the Free Conference, at which Offence was taken; their Lordships will only observe,

First, That they have omitted nothing which might give the Commons all reasonable Satisfaction, of their Purpose to do them Justice in that Matter, so far as is consistent with doing Justice to that Lord; and also to preserve all good Correspondence with them, as appears by the several Steps they have taken.

Secondly, That this Business has no relation to the Trials of the Impeached Lords: And therefore their Lordships cannot imagine why the Commons should make Satisfaction and Reparation against the Lord Haversham a necessary Condition for the going on with the Trials, and at the same time find no Difficulty in proceeding on other Business.

* The Commons restrain themselves from enumerating your Lordships very many irregular and * unparliamentary Proceedings upon this Occasion, but think 'tis what they owe to Publick Justice * and all the Commons of England, whom they represent, to declare some few of those Reasons, * why they peremptorily refuse to proceed to the Trial of the Lord Sommers on the Seventeenth of * June.

* First, Because your Lordships have not yet agreed, That a Committee of both Houses should be * appointed for settling the necessary Preliminaries; a Method never, until this Time, deny'd by the * House of Lords, whensoever the Commons have thought it necessary to desire the same.

* Secondly, Should the Commons (which they never will do) be contented to give up those Rights * which have been transmitted to them from THEIR ANCESTORS, and are of absolute ne- * cessity to their Proceedings on Impeachments; yet, whilst they have any regard to Publick Justice, * they never can appear as Prosecutors before your Lordships, till your Lordships have first given * them Satisfaction, that Lords impeach'd of the same Crimes shall not sit as Judges on each other's * Trials for those Crimes.

* Thirdly, Because the Commons have, as yet, receiv'd no Reparation for the great Indignity * offer'd to them at the Free Conference by the Lord Haverham. The Commons are far from any * Inclination, and cannot be suppos'd to be under any Necessity of delaying the Trial of the Lord * Sommers: There is not any Article exhibited by them in maintenance of their Impeachment against * the Lord Sommers; for the Proof whereof they have got full and undeniable Evidence, which they * will be ready to produce as soon as your Lordships shall have done Justice upon the Lord Haverham, * and the necessary Preliminaries, in order to the said Trial, shall be settled by a Committee of both * Houses.

* The Commons think it unnecessary to observe to your Lordships, That most of the Articles * whereof the Lord Sommers stands impeach'd, will appear to your Lordships to be undoubtedly true, * from Matters of Record, as well as by the Confession of the said Lord Sommers, in his Answer to * the said Articles, to which the Commons doubt not but your Lordships will have a due regard, * when his Trial shall regularly proceed.

The House being mov'd to go into Westminster-Hall, in order to the Trial of the Lord Sommers:

After Debate, this Question was put, Whether this House shall go this Day into the Court in Westminster-Hall, in order to proceed upon the Trial of the Lord Sommers, according to the Order of the Day?

It was Resolv'd in the Affirmative.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Baron Tracey and Mr. Baron Berry, to acquaint them, That the Lords intend presently to proceed to the Trial of John Lord Sommers in Westminster-Hall.

The Messengers being return'd, acquainted the House, That the Commons were adjourn'd.

Then this Question was propos'd, Whether the Earl of Orford, and Lord Hallifax, may withdraw at the Trial of the Lord Sommers?

Then this previous Question was put, Whether this Question shall be now put?

It was Resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Then the main Question was put, Whether the Earl of Orford, and Lord Hallifax, shall have Leave to withdraw at the Trial of the Lord Sommers?

It was Resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Then the Lord-Keeper desir'd, That some further Directions be given to him, in order to the Trial in the Hall; and thereupon it was propos'd, that this Proclamation be made in the Hall, viz.

Whereas a Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors has been exhibited by the House of Commons, in the Name of Themselves and all the Commons of England, against John Lord Sommers, all Persons concern'd are to take Notice, that he now stands upon his Trial, and they may now come forth, in order to make good the said Charge.

After Debate, the Question was put, Whether this Proclamation shall be made?

It was Resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Order'd, That the said Proclamation be made in the Hall before the reading the Articles of Impeachment, and the Lord Sommers's Answer, and also after they are read.

Order'd, That the Court in Westminster-Hall be clear'd for the Lords.

Then the House adjourn'd to Westminster-Hall, and the Lords were call'd by the Herald, and went as order'd; and, being seated in the Hall, the House was resumed.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, as follows:

Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly Charges and Commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord-Keeper ask'd Leave for the Judges to be cover'd: Which was agreed to.

Then Proclamation, as order'd, was made.

After which, the Articles against John Lord Sommers were read, and also his Lordship's Answer to them.

After which the same Proclamation was again made.

Then the Lord-Keeper declar'd, the House was ready to hear the Evidence against John Lord Sommers, and therefore desir'd the Lords to give Attention.

The Lord Sommers mov'd to have his Council heard.

Whereupon the House adjourn'd to the House above, and went back in the same Manner as they came down; and being there, the House was resumed.

The House being mov'd to acquit the Lord Sommers; and after long Debate, and hearing the Judges to several Questions ask'd them by the Lords, this Question was propos'd:

That John Lord Sommers be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment against him exhibited by the House of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd; and, that the said Impeachment be dismiss'd.

Then

Then this Question was put, Whether the Question now stated shall be put in the Court below?

It was Resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Then it was agreed and order'd, That in Westminster-Hall the Lord-Keeper shall read the Question, and then call the junior Baron present first, and ask every Lord, Whether Content? or Not Content? and, That every Lord stand up when call'd to, and give his Vote Content, or Not Content; and that the Lord-Keeper, having taken their Votes, declare the Majority; and if the Majority be for Acquitting the Lord Sommers, the Lord-Keeper is to declare it so, and particularly to the Lord Sommers.

Then the House adjourn'd again to Westminster-Hall, and the Lords went in the same Manner as before: And being come there, the House was resumed, and Proclamation was made for Silence.

The Lord-Keeper put the Question as follows:

That John Lord Sommers be Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment against him, exhibited by the House of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd, and that the said Impeachment be dismiss'd.

Then the Lord-Keeper ask'd every Lord, Whether Content, or Not?

The Lord-Keeper declar'd, the Majority was for Acquitting; and then declar'd,

That John Lord Sommers was Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment against him exhibited by the House of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd; and, That the said Impeachment was dismiss'd.

And also declar'd to the Lord Sommers, That he was Acquitted.

Then the House adjourn'd to the House above; and being come thither, the House was resumed, and the following Order made.

It is Consider'd, Order'd, and Adjudg'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That John Lord Sommers shall be, and he is hereby Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment against him exhibited by the House of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd; and, That the said Impeachment shall be, and is hereby dismiss'd.

It is Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Proceedings in this House upon the Impeachments be printed; and, That the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceeding on Impeachments, do meet To-morrow at Ten a-Clock, and inspect the Journals, and draw up the Matter relating thereunto, in order to be printed, and report to the House.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir John Francklyn and Dr. Edisbury, to acquaint them, That this House hath appointed Monday, the Three and twentieth Day of this Instant June, for the Trial of Edward Earl of Orford, in Westminster-Hall, at Ten a-Clock.

Die Mercurii 18^o Junii, 1701.

It is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That this House will proceed to the Trial of Edward Earl of Orford on Monday the Three and twentieth Day of this Instant June, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, in Westminster-Hall.

A Message from the House of Commons by the Lord Mordaunt and others (on June the 20th) to acquaint this House, That in Answer to the Message of the Lords, appointing Monday next for the Trial of the Earl of Orford; That the Lords have been acquainted, that the Commons would proceed, in the first place, against the Lord Sommers; and they are ready to go to that Lord's Trial, as soon as ever the Commons have receiv'd Satisfaction for the Affront offer'd to the House of Commons by the Lord Haversham at the Free Conference, and that the necessary Preliminaries are adjust'd by a Committee of both Houses.

Die Jovis 19^o Junii, 1701.

The House being mov'd, That an Answer be drawn to the Message receiv'd from the House of Commons the Seventeenth Instant, it is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Committee appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceeding on Impeachments, do withdraw presently, to draw an Answer to the said Message.

Then the House was adjourn'd during Pleasure, and the Lords went to the Committee; which being ended,

The House was resumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported what they had drawn in Answer to the Message receiv'd from the House of Commons the Seventeenth Instant; which was read, and agreed to.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Sir John Francklyn and Sir Lacon-William Child. See Page 374.

This Day John Lord Haversham delivered his Answer to the Charge of the House of Commons exhibited against him the Thirteenth Instant; which was read by the Clerk, as follows; viz.

The ANSWER of John Lord Haversham, to the Charge exhibited against him by the Commons, for Words spoken at a Free Conference, on the Thirteenth Day of this Instant June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and One.

THE said Lord Haversham saying to himself all Advantages of Exception to the said Charge, and of not being prejudic'd by any want of Form in this his Answer; and also saving to himself all Rights and Privileges belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm; for Answer to the said Charge, saith, That on the Sixth Day of June, One thousand Seven hundred and One, the Commons, by a Message sent to the Lords, desir'd a Conference upon their Message to the Commons of the Fourth of June; in which Conference they propos'd to the Lords, That a Committee of both Houses should be nominated, to consider of the most proper Ways and Methods of proceeding on the Impeachments of the Lords, according to the Usage of Parliament. That on the Tenth of June the Lords desir'd another Conference with the Commons; in which they deliver'd them their Reasons why they could not agree to the appointing such Committee; viz. First, That they could not find that ever such a Committee was appointed on Occasion of Impeachments for Misdemeanors; and their Obligation to be cautious in admitting any thing new in Matters relating to Judicature. Secondly, That altho' a Committee of this nature was agreed to, upon the Impeachments of the Earl of Danby and the five Popish Lords for High-Treason; yet the Success, in that Instance, was not such as should encourage the pursuing the same Method, tho' in the like Case: And, that after much Time spent in that Committee, the Disputes were so far from being adjust'd, that they occasion'd the abrupt Conclusion of a Session of Parliament. Thirdly, That the Method of Proceedings on Impeachments for Misdemeanors are so well settled by the Usage of Parliament, that no Difficulties were likely to happen, nor none had been stated to them: And, that all the Preliminaries in the Case of Stephen Goudett, and others, (which was the last Instance of Impeachments for Misdemeanors) were easily settled and agreed to, without any such Committee. Fourthly, That the Proposal of the Commons came so very late, that no other Fruit could be expected of such a Committee, but the preventing of the Trials during this Session. Whereupon the Commons, on the Twelfth of June, desir'd of the Lords a Free Conference on the Subject-Matter of the last Conference. That the Lords, on the said Twelfth of June, came to Two Resolutions in relation to the Lords impeach'd: "First, That no Lord of Parliament, impeach'd of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, shall, upon his Trial, be without the Bar. Secondly, That no Lord of Parliament, impeach'd of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, can be precluded from Voting on any Occasion, except in his own Trial." And by Messengers of their own the Lords acquainted the Commons with the said two Resolutions, and also, that they agreed to a Free Conference with the Commons, and appointed the next Day. That upon the Thirteenth of June

Mr. Harcourt, one of the Managers, began the Free Conference on the Part of the Commons, and argued upon the Four Reasons given by the Lords, why they could not agree to the appointing a Committee of both Houses; and principally relied upon the Instance in the Case of the Popish Lords; and insisted upon the Delay, that the not agreeing to the Nomination of such a Committee would necessarily occasion, whereby the Lords Trials, and the Justice due to the Nation would be retarded. And departing from the Subject-Matter of the said Conference, (which was, Whether it was requisite to appoint or not appoint such a Committee?) the said Manager discoursed upon the latter of the Two Resolutions of the Lords communicated to the Commons, and said, That he wished the Lords had sent down their Reasons, as well as their Resolutions: Which Words seemed to the Lord Haversham, to carry therein an Implication, as if the said Resolution could have no Reason to justify it. That Sir Bartholomew Shower, another Manager for the Commons, observed the same Method of Discourse: And having argued upon the Lords Reasons, departed from the Subject-Matter of the Free Conference: And inveighing against the Manner of the Lords Judicature, asserted by their Resolutions, said, That it was abhorrent to Justice. Which Expression being foreign (as the said Lord Haversham apprehended) to the Subject-Matter of the said Free Conference, which was, Whether such Committee of both Houses should be appointed or not? the said Lord being appointed by the Lords for One of the Managers of the said Free Conference on their Behalf, in Vindication of the Honour and Justice of the House of Peers, and of their Judicature and Resolutions, in Answer to what has been said by the Managers for the Commons, he spoke to the Effect following:

"Gentlemen, I shall begin what I have to say, as that worthy Member who opened this Conference, That there is nothing the Lords more desire, than to keep a good Correspondence, which is so necessary to the Safety of the Nation, and the Dispatch of the publick Business; and nothing they have more carefully avoided, than what may create a Misunderstanding between the Two Houses. A greater Instance of which could not be given, than the Messages my Lords returned to some the Commons had sent them up; in which they took care to express themselves so curiously, that no Heat might arise from any Expression of theirs. And as to what the worthy Members mentioned, in relation to Delay, the repeated Remembrances sent the Commons, with relation to the sending up the Articles against the Impeached Lords, are a sufficient Instance how desirous they are that these Matters should proceed. And the Lords have this Satisfaction, that it is not on their Part that the Trials are not in a greater Forwardness; they cannot but look upon it as a great Hardship, that any should lie under long Delays of Impeachment: Persons may be incapable; Facts may be forgotten; Evidences may be laid out of the way; Witnesses may die; and many the like Accidents may happen. The Instance the worthy Members give of the Popish Lords, as it is a Crime of another Nature, and not fully to the Point, so it seems to make against what it was brought for: For the worthy Members say, There was but One of the Lords brought to Justice, though Four more (as I take it) were accused. And can any Man believe, that the Commons have a mind to bring only One of these Lords to Trial? It is inconsistent with the Opinion that every body must have of their Justice. And as to the Point of Judicature, it were very hard upon the Lords, that no Person should be brought to Trial, till the Judicature of the House be so first. The Judicature of the Lords is their Peculiar, and hath in former Ages been Sacred with the Commons themselves. And this House perhaps hath as much Reason to be jealous and careful of it, as any other House ever had, especially when one single Precedent is so urged and insisted upon. One Thing there is, which a worthy Member mentioned, though I cannot speak to it at large, because I think my self bound up by the Resolutions of the House; yet it must have some Answer, (this is) As to the Lords voting in their own Case: It requires an Answer, though I cannot enter into the Debate of it. The Commons themselves have made this Precedent; for in these Impeachments they have allowed Men, equally concerned in the same Facts, to vote in their House: And we have not made the Distinction in ours, that some should vote, and some not. The Lords have so high an Opinion of the Justice of the House of Commons, that they believe Justice shall never be made use of as a Mask for any Design. And therefore give me leave to say, though I am not to argue it, 'Tis to me a plain Demonstration, that the Commons think these Lords innocent; and I think the Proposition is undeniable: For when there are several Lords in the same Circumstances, in the same Facts, there is no Distinction; and the Commons leave some of these Men, at the Head of Affairs, near the King's Persons, to do any Mischief, if they were inclinable to it; it looks as if they thought them all innocent. This is a Thing I was in hopes I should never have heard asserted, when the Beginning of it was from the House of Commons."

The said Lord being here interrupted, he desired to be heard out, and that his Words might be taken down in Writing. But the Managers for the Conference broke up, and departed, refusing to hear any Explanation. Now the said Lord, as to any implicit Charge of a Design to reflect on, or dishonour the House of Commons, denies any such Design or Intention, having for many Years had the Honour to sit in the House of Commons, and having ever had an honourable and respectful Sense thereof: But the said Lord was led to express himself in the manner aforesaid, for the Reasons aforesaid, and takes himself to be justified therein, by the Facts and Reasons following.

That the Nature of that Conference was, That it should be Free: The Occasion of it, because either House apprehended the other to be in an Error: And the End of it, That each Side may urge such Facts as are true, and such Reasons are as forcible to convince. That one Article of Impeachment against John Lord Sommers was, That the Treaty of Partition, of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-nine, was ratified under the Great-Seal, which then was in the Custody of the same Lord, then Lord Chancellor of England. That the Commons, on the First of April, One thousand Seven hundred and One, resolved, That the Earl of Portland, by negotiating and concluding the Treaty of Partition, was guilty of a High Crime and Misdemeanor; and pursuant thereto, lodged an Impeachment against him in the House of Peers. Which Vote and Impeachment could not have Reference to any Treaty, other than the Treaty of Partition of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-nine, the Treaty of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight not being before the House of Commons till after the Time of that Vote and Impeachment; and yet the Earl of Jersey, who then was Secretary of State, and Privy-Counsellor, and actually signed the said Treaty of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-nine, as a Plenipotentiary with the Lord Portland, stands Unimpeached, and continues at the Head of Affairs, being Lord Chamberlain, near his Majesty's Person, and in his Presence and Councils (without Complaint.) That the Earl of Orford, and the Lord Sommers and Hallifax are severally Impeached for advising the Treaty of Partition of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight; and yet Mr. Secretary Vernon, who then was Secretary of State, and a Privy-Counsellor, and acted in the promoting of the Treaty of Partition of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight, stands Unimpeached, and still continues one of the Principal Secretaries of State: And Sir Joseph Williamson, who then was a Privy Counsellor, and transacted and signed the Treaty of Partition of One thousand Six hundred Ninety-eight, as a Plenipotentiary, stands Unimpeached. That the Lord Hallifax is Impeached, for that he, being a Commissioner of the Treasury, assented to the passing of divers Grants from the Crown, to several Persons, of Lands in Ireland; and yet Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, who being severally Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, did severally assent to the passing of divers like Grants from his Majesty of Lands in Ireland, stand Unimpeached. That in the Impeachments against the Earl of Orford and Lord Sommers, one of the Articles against them is for procuring a Commission to Capt. William Kidd; and likewise a Grant under the Great-Seal, of the Ships and Goods of certain Persons therein named, to certain Persons in Trust for them; and yet other Lords, equally concerned in procuring the said Commission and Grant, stand Unimpeached. That the said Mr. Secretary Vernon, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, notwithstanding their being Parties in the same Facts charged in the same respective Impeachments, have been permitted to sit and vote in the House of Commons touching the said Impeachments, and the Matters thereof. That these Facts being true, and publickly known, the Consequences resulting therefrom (as the Lord Haversham apprehended) are undeniable; viz. That the doing of the same Thing by Two Persons in equal Circumstances, cannot be a Crime in one, and not in the other. That the Commons had no Reason to insist, That the Lords should not permit that in their Members, which the Commons had first permitted, and continued to permit; and so begun the first Precedent in their own Members. That it must be thought, that the Impeached Lords (notwithstanding the Facts alledged in the Impeachments) are innocent of Danger to the King, when the Lord Jersey and Mr. Secretary Vernon, who are respectively concerned in the Partition Treaties, are permitted, without Complaint, to be at the Head of Affairs, and in the King's Presence, and of his Councils, as not dangerous. That the Word Innocent, used in the Words spoken by the said Lord Haversham, can extend no farther than to such Matters as were done by the Impeached Lords, of the same Nature with what was done by those Unimpeached. All which Facts being true, and the Consequences obvious, the said Lord being ready to prove the same; he insists, That the Words spoken by him at the said free Conference, were not scandalous or reproachful, nor false or reflecting on the Honour or Justice of the House of Commons; but were spoken upon a just Occasion given, in Answer to several Expressions that fell from the Managers for the Commons, remote (as he conceives) from the Matter in question, and reflecting on the Honour and Justice of the House of Peers, and in Maintenance and Defence of the Lords Resolution and Judicature, and conformable to the Duty he owes to the said House. And the said Lord humbly demands the Judgment of this Honourable House therein. And the said Lord Haversham denies, That he spoke the Words specified in the said Charge, in such Manner and Form as the same are therein set down. And having thus given a true Account of this Matter; and it being true and indisputable, That some Lords in this House, equally concerned in Facts, for which other Lords are Impeached by the House of Commons, are still near the King's Person, in the greatest Places of Trust and Honour, and Unimpeached; and also, That several Members of the House of Commons, equally concerned in the same Facts, for which some of the Lords are Impeached, do however remain Unimpeached; the said Lord thinks, such a Truth could never have been more properly spoken, in the Maintenance and Defence of your Lordships Judicature and Resolutions: And insisteth, That what he had said at the Free Conference was not any scandalous Reproach, or false Expression, or any ways tended to make a Breach in the good Correspondence between the Lords and Commons, or to the interrupting the Publick Justice of the Nation, by delaying the Proceedings on the Impeachments, as in the said Charge alledged; but agreeable to Truth, in Discharge of his Duty, and in the Defence of the undoubted Right and Judicature of this House.

H A V E R S H A M.

Ordered, That a Copy of the Lord Haversham's Answer be sent to the House of Commons.

Then a Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Sir John Francklyn, and Sir Lacoe William Child, to carry down a Copy of the above said Answer.

Die

Die Veneris 20^o Junii, 1701.

A Message from the House of Commons by the Lord Mordaunt, and others. See Page 378.

Order'd, That the Committee appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet presently, and draw an Answer to this Message.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees, appointed to consider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, the Answer drawn by them, in answer to the Commons Message this Day: Which was read, and agreed to, as follows:

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Grey and Dr. Newton, to acquaint them, "That in Answer to the Message of the House of Commons this Day, the Lords do acquaint the Commons, That they might have known, by the Records of the House of Lords, that the Lords have proceeded to the Trial of the Lord Sommers, on Tuesday last, being the Day appointed; and the Commons not appearing to maintain their Articles against the said Lord, the Lords have, by Judgment of their House, acquainted him of the Articles of Impeachment against him, exhibited by the House of Commons, and all things therein contain'd, and have dismiss'd the said Impeachment.

"And the Lords have appointed Monday next for the Trial of the Earl of Orford; on which Day they will proceed on the said Trial.

"The Commons still pressing for a Committee of both Houses (which the Lords never can consent to, for the Reasons already given) their Lordships can infer nothing from their persisting in that Demand, than that they never design'd to bring any of their Impeachments to a Trial.

"As to the Lord Haversham, his Answer is now before the House of Commons, and the Lords resolve to do Justice in the Matter.

Die Sabbati 21^o Junii, 1701.

The House being mov'd to consider what is fit to be done in relation to the Charge of the House of Commons against John Lord Haversham; and after due Consideration thereof, and the Lord Haversham desiring to be prosecuted, it was proposed as follows:

That the Answer of John Lord Haversham to the Charge sent up against him by the House of Commons, having been sent down to that House; It is resolv'd, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That unless the said Charge shall be prosecuted against the said Lord Haversham with Effect by the Commons, before the End of this Session of Parliament, the Lords will declare and adjudge him wholly Innocent of the said Charge.

Then this Question was put, Whether this Resolution shall be agreed to?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

It is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Sir David Mitchell, Sir Edmund Harrison, George Dorrington, Esq; Joseph Burchet, Esq; Capt. George Bynns, Brooke Bridges, Esq; George Cornwall, Esq; Capt. —

Griffith, — Holmes, Edmund Hayman, and — Traverse, Esq; his Majesty's Surveyor-General, do, and they are hereby requir'd to attend this House on Monday next, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, as Witnesses on the behalf of Edward Earl of Orford.

A Complaint being this Day made of certain printed Votes of the House of Commons, dated the 20th Instant, wherein there are several Things highly reflecting on the House of Peers; It is Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Consideration thereof shall be adjourn'd to Monday next, and all the Lords summon'd to attend with Special Notice of this Order.

Die Lunæ 23^o Junii, 1701.

The Earl of Stamford acquainted the House, from the Lords Committees appointed to draw, or extract out of the Books, what is to be printed in relation to the Lords Impeach'd, and the Proceedings thereupon, what was transcrib'd in order thereunto; and, that there was more to be extracted, which as yet was not transcrib'd: Whereupon it was ordered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That any Three of the Lords of the said Committee do meet when they please, after the House is up, and give Order to the Clerk for what shall be further transcrib'd out of the Journals, in order to the printing thereof.

The House resumed the adjourn'd Debate upon the printed Votes of the House of Commons of the Twentieth Instant. After Debate, it was proposed to declare, That the Resolutions of the House of Commons, in their Votes of the Twentieth Instant, contain most unjust Reflections on the Honour and Justice of the House of Peers, and are contriv'd to cover their affected and unreasonable Delays in prosecuting the Impeach'd Lords.

The Question was put, Whether this shall be the Resolution of the House?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

I. It is resolv'd, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Resolutions of the House of Commons, in their Votes of the Twentieth Instant, contain most unjust Reflections on the Honour and Justice of the House of Peers, and are contriv'd to cover their affected and unreasonable Delays in prosecuting the Impeach'd Lords.

It being also proposed to declare, That the said Resolutions do manifestly tend to the Destruction of the Judicature of the Lords, to the rendering Trials on Impeachments impracticable for the future, and to the subverting the Constitution of the English Government.

The Question was put, Whether this shall be the Resolution of the House?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

II. It is resolv'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the said Resolutions do manifestly tend to the Destruction of the Judicature of the Lords, to the rendering Trials on Impeachments impracticable for the future, and to the subverting the Constitution of the English Government.

It being also proposed to declare, That whatever ill Consequences may arise from the so long deferdeferring the Supplies for this Year's Service, are to be attributed to the fatal Counsel of putting off the Meeting of a Parliament so long, and to the unnecessary Delays of the House of Commons.

After Debate, the Question was put, Whether the last Words shall stand Part of the Resolution?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Then the whole Resolution was read, and the Question was put, Whether these Words shall be the Resolution of the House?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

III. It is resolv'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That whatever ill Consequences may arise from the so long deferring the Supplies for this Year's Service, are to be attributed to the fatal Counsel of putting off the Meeting of a Parliament so long, and to the unnecessary Delays of the House of Commons.

It is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the several Resolutions made this Day be printed, with what was formerly order'd to be printed out of the Journals relating to the Lords that were Impeach'd.

Then the House was adjourn'd during Pleasure to Robe.

Then the House was resumed.

The House was call'd over by the Clerk, and the Names of the Lords present set down by the Heralds.

Then the House was adjourn'd to Westminster-Hall, and the Lords went in the same Order as they did to the Lord Sommers's Trial: And being come to the Hall, and seated, the House was resumed.

Leave was given to the Judges to be cover'd.

Proclamation being made for Silence, the following Proclamation was made for Prosecution; viz.

Whereas a Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors has been exhibited by the House of Commons, in the Name of Themselves and all the Commons of England, against Edward Earl of Orford; all Persons concern'd are to take Notice, that he now stands upon his Trial, and that they may now come forth, in order to make good the said Charge.

Then the Articles of Impeachment against Edward Earl of Orford were read, and also his Lordship's Answer to the said Articles.

Then the same Proclamation as before was made for Prosecution; and the Lord-Keeper declar'd, That the Court is now ready to proceed upon the Trial of Edward Earl of Orford, and therefore their Lordships are to give Attention.

The Earl of Orford said, His Council were ready to be heard, if the House pleas'd.

Then the House was mov'd, and did adjourn to the House above, and return'd in the same Manner as they went down.

Then the House was resumed, and order'd, That the same Method be observ'd, in giving Judgment in the Hall, as was at the Lord Sommers's Trial, and the like Question put in the Hall.

The House being call'd over, and the Name of every Lord present writ down for the Lord-Keeper.

The House was again adjourn'd to Westminster-Hall, where the House was resumed, and Proclamation made for Silence.

Then the Lord-Keeper put this Question,

That Edward Earl of Orford be Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd; and, That the said Impeachment be dismiss'd.

The Lord-Keeper ask'd every Lord present, Whether Content, or Not Content, beginning at the lowest Baron.

CLXXI.

The Trial of PATRICK HURLY, of Moughna, in the County of Clare, Gent. at the King's-Bench in Ireland, upon Two (several) Indictments, the one for Perjury, and the other for Conspiring with Daniel Hicky, &c. to Cheat the Popish Inhabitants of the County of Clare, &c. May 31, 1701. Pasche 13 Will. III.

HE Prisoner being brought from the Marshalsea to the Bar, and a Full Jury appearing, the Clerk of the Crown bid him look to his Challengers: And after some Challenged by him, the Jury Sworn, were

Edmund Perry,	}	John Drew,
James Mac Donnel,		Hugh Brady,
John Brady,		Edward Mealing,
Dennis Mac Mabone,		Austin Bennis,
Richard Hen,		Joseph Cecil,
Thomas Brown,		Patrick Connel.

Clerk of the Crown. Gentlemen of the Jury, you are to understand, That Patrick Hurly stands indicted of Perjury, for Swearing before Neptune Blood, Dean of Kilsenora, One of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Clare, That he was Robbed of Three Hundred Pistoles in Gold, and several other Things, by four Persons altogether unknown to him, but whom, by the Tone of their Voice, he believed to be Irishmen and Papists; whereas, in Truth and Fact, he well knew them by their Names and Persons, being set on by himself, and did not take any thing at all from him.

Mr. Attorn. General. Clerk of the Crown, You have another Indictment against the Prisoner at the Bar; pray charge him with it.

Cl. of the Crown. Gentlemen of the Jury, you shall likewise understand, That the same Patrick Hurly stands here indicted, for that he did falsely and deceitfully conspire with one Daniel Hicky and several other Malefactors, unjustly to oppress the Popish Inhabitants of the County of Clare, and cheat them of a great Sum of Money, by colour of the Rapparee Act.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, Patrick Hurly, is here indicted for Perjury; and the Perjury is this, That the Sixth of March, 1699, he came before Dean Neptune Blood, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Clare, and made Oath before him, pursuant to the late Statute for suppressing Tories, Robbers and Rapparees, That being at his Father's House in the aforesaid County of Clare, several Persons, with their Faces masked, came unto the said House in the Night-time, and forced into his Chamber, made a shot at him, and tied him and another Man with Cords fast to a Bedstead; that by the Tone of their Speech they seemed to be Irishmen, and that he believed them to be Papists; that he knew not one of them either by their Names or Persons; that immediately they broke open several Trunks, and took out of one of them a Bag, wherein were 374 Guineas, and 345 Pistoles; a Gold Cross set with Diamonds, and several other Diamonds to a great Value; and a great Number of Holland Sheets and Holland Shirts, all to the Value of about 1300 Pounds; all which he swore they took away from him; and this he swore, in order that he might (according to the late Act, called the Rapparee Act) make the Country re-imburse this 1300 Pounds to him. Gentlemen, this was all false, and nothing at all in it but a Mock-Robbery, acted by Persons employed and set on by himself, whom he very well knew, and who took nothing at all from him, but it was only designed to Cheat the Country; and in truth he was not robbed at all, not of the Value of a Farthing. The Second Indictment is for a Cheat, in Conspiring with the Malefactors to wrong the said Country, and deceitfully and unjustly to raise Money upon the Country, under Colour of the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Attorney General has given you an Account of the Indictments: The Second is the Consequence of the First. If Mr. Hurly was really and truly Robbed, then he did not design to cheat the Country: But if he was not really and truly robbed, but that his Examinations be all false, then he was not only perjured, but did likewise conspire to Cheat the Country. We will begin with our Evi-

Evidence of the Perjury, and the Force of our Evidence is this: Mr. Hurly pretends to be robbed of about Thirteen Hundred Pounds, in March 1699. We will shew you, That Mr. Hurly, instead of being a Man of so much Cash at that Time, was the contrary, to an extream Degree: That to prevent Arrests, he had several Protections; and he told a Gentleman, there could not be a readier Way to get Money, than by the Act of Parliament; if he could fix a Robbery on the Country, he could Tax what Sum he pleased. We shall shew you with whom he concerted this pretended Robbery, and by whom 'twas acted, and that Mr. Hurly himself contrived the whole Matter, and the several Goods, that he pretended to lose, he had back again, and they were sent another Way afterwards by Mr. Hurly; and that the Gold he pretended to lose, was but Counters. We will trace you the whole Drift and Contrivance of the Matter. My Lord, we shall first produce the Information of Mr. Hurly, sworn before Dean Blood.

[Dean Neptune Blood sworn.]

Court. Look on that Paper: Was that Examination sworn before you, Sir?

D. Blood. Please your Lordship to give me leave to read it.

Court. Do so, Sir; take your own Time — You have read that Paper?

D. Blood. Yes.

Court. Was that Examination taken before you upon Oath?

D. Blood. Yes, my Lord.

Court. Who was the Person that swore it?

D. Blood. Patrick Hurly.

Court. Is that the Man, that stands there?

D. Blood. Yes, that is he.

[Clerk reads the Examination.]

Com. Clare. The Information of Patrick Hurly of Moughna, in the said County, Gent. taken before Neptune Blood, Dean of Killsemera, One of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said County.

THE said Informant being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists, and examined, saith, That on Sunday, the Third of March, One thousand Six hundred and Ninety-nine, about Eleven of the Clock at Night, being then at his Father's House at Moughna aforesaid, and in his Chamber, he saw three Men armed burst in an Out-door of the said House, which opened into a Garden, threw down Mr. Ronane, who was near the said Door, in a rude manner, with Swords and Pistols in their Hands, entered into the said Chamber, dragging the said Mr. Ronane with them: Instantly there appeared a fourth Person armed, and with their Faces masked; and making a Shot at the Informant, they immediately tied him and the said Mr. Ronane with Cords fast to a Bedstead, calling the Informant Rogue, Rascal, Son of a Whore, Treacherous Villain to his Country, and many absurd Words to that Effect. The said Informant further saith, That the said Persons, by the Tone of their Speech, seemed to be Irishmen, and believes them to be Papists, but knows not any one of them by their Names or Persons. That immediately they broke open three large Trunks, and took out of one of the said Trunks a Bag, wherein were Three hundred Seventy and Four Guineas, and Three hundred Forty and Five Pistoles, amounting in all to the Sum of Eight hundred Forty and Eight Pounds, Nine Shillings Sterling, or thereabouts, together with a Gold Crois set with Diamonds, and several other Diamonds, to the Value of Two hundred Twenty and Five Pounds Sterling; and also the Number of Twenty-four large Holland Sheets, each of them containing Ten Yards, or thereabouts, Price Seventy and Two Pounds Sterling, and Thirty-five Holland Shirts, amounting to the Value of One hundred Fifty and Seven Pounds Ten Shillings Sterling. The said Informant further saith, He heard a great Bustle and Noise, and Shots made in the other Parts of the said House at the same Time, which he understands was done by others of the said Robbers. And further saith, That the said Robbers took away all the aforesaid Gold, Diamonds, Sheets and Shirts, and left the said Informant and Mr. Ronane tied as aforesaid, and locked the said Door on the outside. He further saith, That he never got any of the said Gold or Goods since the said Robbery. And further saith, That when he perceived the said Robbers were gone away, he, this Informant, sent some of his Servants out through a Window about Four of the Clock next Morning, to make a Hue and Cry, and to raise the Country, to pursue after the Robbers. The said Informant being asked, Whether the said Robbery was committed by any Contrivance of his own, or any Friend of his, with Expectation to get Money raised on the Country, or for any other Self end? Declares, That it was not, nor does know of any such Contrivance or Design, by any Person whatsoever, either directly or indirectly. The said Informant further saith, That two of the said Robbers, which came into his Chamber, had red Cloaths, and understands that there were in and about the said House the Number of seven more of the said Robbers, besides the aforesaid four that entered into the said Chamber. He further saith, That he cannot give any Description of any of the said Persons, more than is herein set forth. And being examined, Whether any of his Servants or Family were from home at the same Time when the said Robbery was committed? he said, That he sent one Calaghan Carty, a Servant of his, that same Day to Mr. John Forster, at Rathorpa in the County of Gallway, for a Suit of Mourning Cloaths, which the said Mr. Forster brought from Dublin for the said Informant; and the said Calaghan returned the next Day, being Monday the Fourth of March Instant, with a Letter from the said Mr. Forster, and that the said Informant's Wife and her Brother, Mr. Edward Tirrey, and Mr. Ulick Bourk, who is married to her Sister, were the same Night when the said Robbery was committed at Captain Christopher O'Brien's House at Imishiman in the said County of Clare. The said Informant further saith, That Moughna aforesaid, where the

VOL. V.

" said Robbery was committed, is in the Barony
 " of Corcumoroe, and County aforesaid. He fur" ther saith, That he had about Four Hundred " Pounds of the aforesaid Gold from Alderman
 " Walton in Dublin, and had the rest sometime
 " before from Mr. Christopher Fitz-Symonds, Mer" chant in Dublin. The said Informant further " saith, That he knows not who any of the afore" said seven Persons were, that were in and about
 " the said House, nor yet any of the Four Per" sons as aforesaid, nor from whence any of them " came, nor whither they went, and further " saith not.

GUL. TISDAL.

Court. Mr. Dean Blood, Is this the very Examination that Mr. Hurly gave in upon his Oath before you?

D. Blood. Yes, Sir.

K. Council. Did he swear it all?

D. Blood. Yes, he swore all the Contents of this Examination to be true.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Scope of the Evidence against the Gentleman at the Bar is thus: We will shew you the great Necessity he was under, and the pressing Occasions he had for Money; and that being in great Straits, he was contriving how to stave off his Creditors, and save his Reputation. We will produce the Persons that he had Discourse with about the probable Way of getting Money; and some of the very Persons that were to act in order to it; and that when Mr. Ronane was in the House, these Actors were to rush in, and to tie him and Mr. Patrick Hurly together; and then to look in such a Trunk, and there they should find something like Gold. That the Actors did lurk in and about the House by Mr. Hurly's Appointment; and came into the Dwelling-house, as was contrived between them, rushing in with the said Mr. Ro-nane, who went out into the Garden after Supper, as was contrived beforehand. When Mr.
Hurly was giving in his Information, Mr. Blood asked him, What Witnesses he had besides himself? He said, a Servant of his, one Calaghan Carty. We will produce that same Calaghan
Carty, who will give a full Relation of the Matter.

Calaghan Carty call'd.

Mr. Bernard. My Lord, one Word for the Traverser. My Lord, this Calaghan Carty and others were the Persons taken up for this Robbery, and actually in Goal for it; they were the Persons that did actually rob us. My Lord, they were put into Irons, and threatened to be hang'd unless they would swear it was a Sham-Robbery; and thereupon were discharged; and after came to this Town, and went before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, and they swore, That their Examination was forced from them. It is here in Court.

Calaghan Carty sworn.

Court. Do yo know Patrick Hurly?

Carty. Yes, my Lord.

Court. How long have you been acquainted with him?

Carty. Since he came into this Kingdom from England.

Court. How long was he come before he was prosecuted?

Court. 'Twas about two Years.

K. Council. Will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know concerning this Robbery? Tell the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Carty. My Lord, I was one of his Servants.
 He came to me, and called me out to his Stable, and drew out a Purse of Gold, and shewed it me, and told me, he was to pay one Mr. Arthur some Money, who was to come such a Day to compound with him for the Money; and if he did give him that Money, he would be ruin'd for ever; but that if I would do as the rest would, I would do him a Kindness: And says, That when Mr. Arthur should hear the Money was robbed, he would compound with him: And he told me where the Money was to be, and the Trunk he would put it into.

Court. Did you, according to his Desire, take away the Gold and the Linnen?

Carty. Yes, my Lord.

Court. Was there any others to do it besides your self?

Carty. Yes, Four more, Donagh O-Brien Andrews, Daniel Hicky, Daniel Carty, and Teigue Carty.

Court. What did you do with the Linnen?

Carty. It was Daniel Hicky took it out, and, he said, he gave it all back again to his Master.

Court. Were you disguised?

Carty. Yes, we had some of us Blue Coats, and some of us Red Coats and Vizards.

Court. Where had you the Coats?

Carty. Mr. Hurly's Man threw them into the Barn to us.

Court. Had you any Arms?

Carty. Yes, my Lord, we had Swords.

Court. Who gave the Arms to you?

Carty. Daniel Mac-Cay, Mr. Hurly's Footman.

Court. Whose were the Swords?

Carty. I was told they were brought from Dublin by Mr. Hurly.

Court. Was there any Fire-Arms?

Carty. Yes, there was Fire-Arms left on a Table by the Door, and charged with Powder.

Court. Had you any Directions about them?

Carty. Yes, my Lord, they were laid there on purpose for the Men.

Court. Who gave those Directions about the Fire-Arms?

Carty. It was Daniel Mac-Cay.

Court. Were they charg'd?

Carty. Yes, with Powder only.

Court. Was any of 'em fired off then?

Carty. Yes, there was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, though they were fired off, there was no Ball in them: It was not to do Harm, but only to frighten those who were not in the Secret.

Court. Did you take the Gold in the Purse, or whatever it was?

Car. My Lord, we were directed by Mr. Hurly to pour it on the Table, that Mr. Ronane might see it.

Court. How long had Mr. Ronane been there?

Car. Two Nights.

Sir J. Mead. Was there any particular Time appointed when you was to do this Fact?

Car. There was, my Lord; when Mr. Ronane should come out of the Back-door.

Court. Had you any Directions in particular what to do with the Servants?

Car. Yes; we had Directions to tie Mr. Hurly and Ronane together, and there was a Bed-cord laid in the Room ready for the Purpose.

Mr. Recorder. Who gave you the Directions to tie them?

Car. Mr. Hurly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know one Walter Neylar?

Car. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was he?

Car. He was in Goal at Ennis, for Mr. Hurly's Debt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You were Mr. Hurly's Servant.—Pray, did he appear publickly about that Time? or, Was he on his Keeping?

Car. He was on his Keeping.

Court. Explain you self — What was that Keeping?

Car. My Lord, he was on his Keeping, for fear of being taken upon Writs and Executions: He had Servants in his House, and he kept one watching constantly, for fear of being taken.

Court. At whose Suit?

Car. At Mr. Arthur's Suit.

Mr. Atto. Gen. My Lord, I am told his House was a sort of a Garrison, and there were regular Works about it.

Court. You say, there were Scouts abroad, and some Wall: Pray give an Account what Works there were about the House.

Car. Yes; there was a Brick-Wall about one Side of the House.

Court. Do you imagine it was to prevent his being arrested, that he built that Wall?

Car. Yes, it was, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. What sort of Money was there when you open'd the Bag? — What did appear to be?

Car. It was yellow Pieces; and Mr. Hurly gave his Seal, to seal the Bag up again.

Court. Was Mr. Ronane there at that Time?

Car. The Seal was given before, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He says, It was not he that pour'd the Money out. — Did you judge the Money to be Gold or Counters?

Car. That, my Lord, I did not know.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Hurly pretends, that this Man gave an Examination contrary to this. Now we will shew you, That that was done by another Person, employ'd by Mr. Hurly to perfonate this Man. But, before that, please to ask him as to the Linnen that was carried away, what became of it, and who disposed of it.

Court. You say, there was Linnen taken away, — What Linnen?

Car. There was Holland Sheets, and they were put into a Chest in the Barn; and we brought them in again.

Court. Who brought them in?

Car. Daniel Hicky, and I my self.

Court. Who did you deliver them to?

Car. To Mr. Hurly's Wife.

Court. Was he privy to it?

Car. Yes, he was.

Court. Did you ever make Mr. Hurly acquainted, that you had restor'd the Linnen?

Car. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, was there any Jewels or Diamonds taken away?

Car. My Lord, he said there was some in a little Bag, some Jewels and Diamonds; and he bid us not to open it, and we did not.

Court. Was that Bag in the same Drawer with the other Money?

Car. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Sir J. Mead. Pray, my Lord, I desire to know, whether he was ever tamper'd with by any body, and who it was.

Court. Was you ever tamper'd with, to take off your Evidence?

Car. Yes, my Lord, I was — by Daniel Carty, and I refus'd it.

Court. Was you by Mr. Hurly?

Car. No, — but he sent his Brother to me.

Mr. Forster. Pray, my Lord, let us see that Examination: He, after that Examination, gave Evidence contrary to what he has now given.

Court. Do you admit, that there was an Examination?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That there was an Examination sworn before my Lord Chief-Justice — But that this was not the Man.

Mr. Recorder. Was you sworn before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne?

Car. Never in my Life.

Court. Look on it; Is that your Hand?

Car. It's none of my Hand?

Mr. Recorder. Pray look upon it.

Car. It's none of my Hand.

Mr. Forster. (Produces another Paper.) — Pray look on that Paper, and see if that be your Hand or not.

Car. I don't know whether it be or no; I believe it may.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray mind which he owns to be his Hand, and which not.

Recorder. We have to deal with a nimble Person.

Court. What will you have next?

Mr. Bernard. The next Thing is, What Time of the Day or Night the Robbery was committed.

Car. My Lord, it was about Ten a-Clock at Night, before the People went to Bed.

Court. What Month?

Car. The Month of March.

Court. What Day of the Month?

Car. As I understand, the Third of March.

Court. What Day of the Week?

Car. Sunday.

Mr. Bernard. Where was you on Monday Morning?

Car. I was at Corrofin.

Mr. Bernard. How far is that from Mr. Hurly's?

Car. It is five Miles.

Court. How long did you stay at Corrofin?

Car. I stay'd there till News came, that the Robbery was committed; I stay'd till Night.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, was Mr. Ronane privy at all to this Robbery?

Car. I don't know; I believe he may, for I know no other Business he had there, nor I saw no other Business he did there.

Court. Mr. Bernard, he says this, — As Mr. Ronane was to go out of the Back-door, then at that very Time they came thro' the Garden.

Car. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Hurly's Man came to give us a Call.

Court. He says, Hurly's Man did give them Notice when Mr. Ronane did go abroad.

Mr. Bernard. Do you believe that Mr. Ronane went abroad?

Court. He says, it was usual for Mr. Ronane to go abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the next Witness we shall produce is another Servant, that was in the House with Mr. Hurly the same Time.

Margaret Conneene.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Lady goes in the Family by the Name of Peggy Rabbet; Margaret is Peggy, and Conneene, Rabbet.

[An Interpreter sworn, because she could not speak English, — Then she was sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ask her, whether she knew Patrick Hurly, and let her point at him.

Con. There he is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What does she know of this Robbery, this pretended Robbery?

Court. Pray ask her, how long she has been acquainted with Mr. Hurly.

Interp. This Year and a half.

Court. Was she a Servant, or no?

Interp. Yes, a Servant in the House for a Year and half.

Court. Does she know of any Robbery, or pretended Robbery, committed on Mr. Hurly?

Interp. She knows there was a Robbery.

Court. Was she a Servant in his House at that Time?

Interp. Yes, my Lord, she was.

Court. Let her tell what she knows of it from the Beginning to the End.

Mr. Record. The whole Story, the whole Intrigue.

Interp. She says, one Hicky, and Calaghan Carty, Donogh O'Brien Andrews, came into the House at Night, and Teigue Carty and Daniel Carty.

Court. Were they disfigur'd?

Interp. Yes, she says, they were.

Court. How did she know them?

Interp. As Calaghan Carty told her.

Court. When was that?

Interp. After he came out of Goal.

Court. Did she know any of them when their Disguise was on?

Interp. No, she did not.

Court. Did she know of any Contrivance of a Robbery?

Interp. No, she did not.

Court. What Time of the Day or Night was this Robbery committed?

Interp. She says, my Lord, about Ten of the Clock at Night.

Court. What Month? or, What Time of the Month?

Interp. She does not know; but it was about Ten of the Clock at Night, as she believes.

Court. Pray, in what Manner was it that they came into the House?

Interp. She says, my Lord, that about that Hour of the Night she came in before Mr. Ronane went out at the Back-door; and, That these Five Persons came in at that Time into the House.

Court. What Part of the House was she in then, when these five Persons came in?

Interp. She was in the Kitchen.

Court. Ask her, How could she see these Persons, when they came into the House, from the Kitchen?

Interp. She says, she could not.

Court. How soon after they got in had she Notice the Robbers were got into the House?

Interp. She says, that as soon as they came in, one Mac Caie cry'd Murder, and said, his Master was kill'd.

Court. Where were the Robbers then?

Interp. In the Parlour, near her Master's Chamber.

Court. What Arms had they that Time there?

Interp. She says, that they had Fire-Arms and a Sword; and, that they shot at them.

Court. Which of them had Arms?

Interp. She says, All that she saw had Arms.

Court. Was there any Body wounded? or, Was there any Opposition given by any Servants, that occasion'd them to fire?

Interp. There was no Body to oppose them.

Court. What made 'em fire off the Gun then?

Interp. She does not know, unless 'twas to keep them in, and frighten 'em.

Court. How far was this House where Mr. Hurly liv'd from any Neighbours?

Interp. She believes there were some Neighbours half a Mile off.

Court. Was she in the Parlour? or, Did she see any Arms in the House before the Robbers came in? or, Did they bring the Arms with 'em?

Interp. She says, there were Arms in the Parlour when they came in.

Court. Were these Arms she saw with them the same that she saw in the Parlour before they came in?

Interp. They were the same Arms?

Court. Did she see those Arms? — How long did she see 'em there before the Robbers came in?

Interp. She says, that the Arms lay there all the Evening before.

Court. Was it usual for the Arms to lie there before?

Interp. 'Twas so sometimes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was Mr. Hurly's Motive for keeping Arms always ready at the Door? What Occasion had he for them?

Interp. She does not know any other, than that her Master was in Debt, and apprehensive of Trouble; and, that he kept those Arms for his Defence.

Court. Pray, does she know what was taken away from her Master at that Time?

Interp. She knows that they took twelve Pair of Holland Sheets.

Court. Did she ever see any of the Linnen that was taken away from her Master with him afterwards?

Interp.

Interp. There were Sheets in the House after the Robbery, and she believes they were the same Sheets.

Mr. Butler. The Sheets in the Robbery were large, double Holland Sheets.—Pray, what Sheets were they she saw afterwards in the House?

Interp. Large Holland Sheets.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many Pair of Holland Sheets did she see in the House after the Robbery?

Interp. She saw four or five Pair of Holland Sheets in the House after the Robbery.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, how soon after the Robbery did she see those Sheets in the House?

Interp. After the Affizes.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray ask her, whether any Goods were sent out to any Neighbour's House, and what Neighbour's, and what Goods.

Interp. She believes 'twas usual, when William Haloway came to the House, that was a Person who prosecuted Mr. Hurly for Debt, to send away the Goods, to secure them.

Mr. Attor. Gen. As I understand this Woman, when these Robbers had come into the Parlour, Daniel Mac Caie ran into the Kitchen, and cry'd Murder! Murder! I would fain know, since Daniel Mac Caie was not tied, and that the Robbers did not tie her, why they did not go out to make Hue and Cry, and raise the Country.

Interp. She says, my Lord, that there was none of them tied; but they did not go out.

Court. Pray, how came it about, that after the Shots went off, no Neighbours came in?

Interp. She says, she believes they could not hear.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray, when they fired off the Fire-Arms, did they present them at her, or at Daniel Mac Caie? or, Did they find any Holes the Shots had made in the Cieling, or Marks of the Bullets in the Wall, or in any other Place?

Interp. She says, they hurt no Body, and they saw no Holes or Marks of Shot or Bullets.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Ask her, whether the Arms that were in the Parlour did not usually hang on Racks or Hooks; and where were they a little before the Robbers came into the Parlour.

Interp. They were upon the Table, my Lord, near the Door.

Court. Where did these Arms use to be at other times?

Interp. She says, at the same Place, near the Door.

Mr. Foster. What number of Arms did Mr. Hurly use to have in the House? and, Of what Sort?

Interp. A couple of Fuzees, a Blunderbuss, a couple of Carbines, and Pistols.

Mr. Bernard. Pray how many Swords were there usually?

Interp. She did not know of any but her Master's Sword; she saw but Two.

Mr. Bernard. How does she know that the Shots were made out of these Arms that were Mr. Hurly's?

Interp. She says, that she was shot at twice.

Mr. Bernard. And was it out of these Arms that used to be in the Parlour?

Interp. She was shot at with a Pistol.

Mr. Bernard. Was it with Mr. Hurly's Pistol?

Interp. She believes it was.

Court. Whether these Arms, that were fired off, were the Arms that lay on the Table?

Interp. She was told afterwards, by the Person that did it, that they were her Master's Arms.

Court. Who told her of it?

Interp. Calaghan Carty.

Mr. Bernard. She has no other Knowledge of this but as Calaghan Carty told her?—When was it he told you this?

Interp. After he came out of Gaol.

Mr. Bernard. How long was that after the Robbery?

Interp. They were long in Goal—she does not know.

Mr. Bernard. Tho' she was our Servant then, we shall shew whose Servant she is now, and how she has been promis'd to be Portion'd and Petticoated; ——— Does she know Teigue Carty?

Interp. Yes, she does.

Mr. Bernard. Does she know Daniel Hicky?

Interp. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Bernard. Does she know Donogh O'Brien?

Interp. Yes, she does.

Mr. Bernard. Had she this Account from any of those Persons?

Interp. She did not ask them.

Sir John Mead. Whether the Arms Mr. Hurly had, were carried away by these Persons, or left there?

Interp. She says, they took 'em out, and lock'd the Door, and left 'em without the House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon my Word, a Man that had robb'd Thirteen hundred Pounds, would hardly have parted with his Arms till he was safe lodg'd. —What becaitie of the Arms? Who had 'em afterwards?

Interp. She saw the Arms in the House again.

Court. Were the Arms abused any ways?

Interp. She heard they were stuff'd with Gravel, but she does not know whether it was so or no.

Court. Who did she hear say so?

Interp. She heard the Family say so.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, when did she see that Calaghan Carty? How long was it from the Time of the Robbery to the Time he told her this?

Interp. Next Day in the Evening she saw him after the Robbery.

Mr. Bernard. About what Time?

Interp. She does not know certainly what Time of the Day.—It was afternoon, pretty late, after the Cows were milk'd.

Mr. Hurly. She says, the next Day this Man came back.—The Man says, he was at Corrofin till Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He says, That after the Robbery was committed, he went that Night as far as Corrofin; and, that being weary himself, he sent his Father with the Letter to Mr. Foster's, and afterwards came back again in the same Evening.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are inform'd, that this Woman can give direct Proof, that some of the Goods, and particularly the Linnen, came back to the House; and that, being dirty, she wash'd them.

Court. What Goods were taken away, does she know, the Night Mr. Hurly was robb'd?

Interp.

Interp. She says, they took Twelve Pair of Holland Sheets, and about Three and Thirty Shirts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire to know, Did she afterwards wash any Linnen, Sheets or Shirts, and how they were dirty'd with ordinary wearing, as by going abroad?

Interp. She says, there was at least four or five Pair of Holland Sheets that were soil'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did she wash any Linnen?

Interp. She was at the Washing of 'em.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did she observe after what manner they were dirtied, by People lying in them, or otherwise?

Interp. She does not know.

Mr. Butler. Does she know of any Holland Sheets sent to any Gentleman in the Country from Mr. Hurly?

Interp. She knows that some of his Linnen was sent to Mr. O'Brien's.

Mr. Dean. How came she to stay in the Room after Shots made at her? How came she to be so stout?

Interp. She says, she durst not stir: One had a Pistol in one Hand, and a Sword in the other, and she durst not stir.

Mr. Dean. How long before the Robbery did she see Calaghan Carty?

Interp. That Day the Robbery was committed, which was Sunday, he dined there.

Mr. Bernard. My Lord, I desire to know whether she did not see Calaghan Carty very often after the Time the Robbery was committed, and how often.

Interp. My Lord, she says, that after the Robbery was committed, Calaghan Carty was in the House after his Return from his Errand: He continued in the House until such time as he was taken.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, who took him?

Interp. One Haloway, she says, one Buck, and some Dragoons.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, did Calaghan Carty tell her any thing of this Robbery during the Time he was in Prison?

Interp. She says, he did not.

Mr. Bernard. Whether she did not believe this to be a real Robbery, until he told her after he came out of Prison?

Interp. She did then believe it was a real Robbery.

Mr. Bernard. Does she believe now, in her Conscience, it was a real Robbery?

Interp. She does not.

Mr. Bernard. What is the Cause she does not believe it now?

Interp. She says, that she found it out since to be otherwise.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ask her again, — What is the Reason that she does not believe it to be a real Robbery, as well now as at the Time it was committed?

Interp. She says, my Lord, the Reason for believing that it was not a real Robbery, is, That she found it out to be otherwise, not only by the Actors, but by the Servants and the Neighbours.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ask her again.

Interp. She believes it was not, for she found it out, and they confess'd it: And a Portmanteau with some Linnen, that was sent away to

Mr. O'Brien's, being afterwards come back from Mr. O'Brien's, when the Linnen was taken out of it, she saw there the Table-Cloth that was taken away by the Robbers that Night.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray, was that Table-Cloth used that Night of the Robbery at Mr. Hurly's Table?

Interp. She says it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. She was ask'd, Whether or no she believes it was a real Robbery? and she says, It was not a real Robbery; and her Reason was, That in a Portmanteau that came from Mr. O'Brien's House there came back a Table-Cloth that was used and taken away that very Night of the Robbery at Mr. Hurly's House.

Court. Ask her, whether she took Notice of any Table Cloth that was in Mr. Hurly's House the Night of the Robbery, that afterwards came back from Mr. O'Brien's.

Interp. She says, they had that Table Cloth in the House that Night of the Robbery.

Court. Was it taken away by the Robbers?

Interp. They did take it away that Night: It was upon the Table in the Parlour, and they took it away.

Court. She says, the Table-Cloth was in the Parlour, on the Table, the same Night the Robbery was committed: Pray ask her, Was it on the same Table where the Arms were?

Interp. It was upon a Side-board, my Lord.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, when did she leave Mr. Hurly's Service?

Interp. She says, that she left his Service, and continued in his Father's House, till about Christmas.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, whose Service did she go to afterwards?

Interp. She went to Service to one Mr. Wogan.

Mr. Bernard. Was she at Sir Donogh O'Brien's House after that Time? — Whether she was sent for by Sir Donogh O'Brien — and for what?

Interp. She was there after she left her Service.

Mr. Bernard. How long after she left her Service?

Interp. She believes, within two or three Days after.

Mr. Bernard. Did she go of herself, or was she sent for?

Interp. One Constance Davoir brought her there.

Mr. Bernard. Is he a Servant?

Interp. No.

Mr. Butler. He is a Man that keeps an Ale-house in Corrofin. — Did he tell her Sir Donogh O'Brien sent for her?

Interp. No, he did not.

Mr. Bernard. What Business had she there?

Interp. He did not tell her what Business.

Mr. Bernard. To what End or Purpose did she go there?

Interp. She said, that he was her Friend, and she went along with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did she go thither for?

Interp. To give an Account of what she knew, concerning this Robbery.

Mr. Bernard. Mr. Hurly was very severe on Sir Donogh O'Brien. — Did she see Sir Donogh O'Brien?

Interp.

Interp. She did.

Mr. Bernard. Had he any Discourse with her?

Interp. She said nothing to Sir Donogh, nor Sir Donogh to her — but she was carried before a Justice of Peace.

Mr. Bernard. What Justice of Peace?

Interp. She does not know that.

Mr. Bernard. Whether Sir Donogh O'Brien was there? — Whether she did not hear the Country, and all the Neighbourhood, say, That if they did not make this no Robbery, Sir Donogh would be ruin'd?

Interp. She says, she heard no such thing; but was desir'd to say nothing but Truth.

Mr. Bernard. Was there any Promise made you of a Portion?

Interp. No, there was not.

Mr. Bernard. Was he tamper'd with by any?

Interp. She says, No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Don't ask her if she has been tamper'd with, for she does not understand it; but, whether she was offer'd any thing at all for Swearing in this Cause?

Interp. She says, No; she was offer'd nothing at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we will call Walter Neylan, who will give an Account of this Matter out of Mr. Hurly's own Mouth.

Walter Neylan sworn.

Court. Give an Account to the Jury what you know in this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let him tell if he was in Prison in Ennis Goal, and on what Account, and what pass'd there between him and Hurly.

Neylan. My Lord, the same Time that Mr. Hurly was committed upon Suspicion of the Robbery, I was in Prison my self.

Court. On what Occasion was you there then?

Neylan. I was bound for Mr. Hurly, and was confined for his Debt. I was in Conversation with him during his Confinement.

Court. Was he confined in the same Goal?

Neylan. Ay, and in the same Room.

Court. Who was in the Goal with you? Was there one Donogh O'Brien Andrews there?

Neylan. There was four Servants of Mr. Hurly's, Donogh O'Brien Andrews, Daniel Hicky, Calaghan Carty, and, I think, Daniel Carty.

Court. What pass'd between you and Mr. Hurly?

Neylan. My Lord, Three of them discover'd the Robbery, and the other held out for two or three Days. But, as I was coming out of the Room where I was confined, this Man, Donogh O'Brien Andrews, said to me, Do you know whether my Master is working any thing for my Liberty? No, says I, I do not. Pray, says he, tell him out of Charity, that he take Care for my Release, or else I must discover as well as the rest.

Jury. We do not hear him.

Court. He says, he was in Prison at the same Time with Mr. Hurly and four of his Men at Ennis: That he was conversant with Hurly, being Chamber-fellows: That Three of the Persons, that were thus confined, confess'd the Robbery; but there was Donogh O'Brien Andrews, he stood out, and disown'd it for some Time; and afterwards this Donogh O'Brien Andrews came, and said to him, Pray, do you know whether my Master is doing any thing for my Release? and he said, No, he did not. Pray tell my Master out of Charity, that if he does not soon work out my Liberty, I must discover, as well as the rest of my Fellow-servants.

Neylan. My Lord, upon this I came to Mr. Hurly, and told him the whole Matter. Says Mr. Hurly, If that Man does own it, I am undone, for he is the Man that knows most of it; and call'd me aside, gave me a Piece of Money, and desired me to give it to him, that he might not discover; and to tell him, that he would send for Security, and get him discharg'd, tho' it were from the County of Galloway. I went down accordingly with the Piece of Money into the Goal; and because I was unwilling to hold any Discourse with the said Donogh O'Brien Andrews alone, I gave the Piece of Money to Calaghan Carty to give him, and told him what Mr. Hurly said. Says Donogh O'Brien Andrews, This will not do, for I love Liberty better than my Life, and I will discover. At the Time of this Man's saying he would discover, Mr. Hickman, a Justice of Peace, came into the Goal; whereupon Mr. Hurly desired me to speak to Mr. Hickman, and pray him to speak to the Goaler, that this same Donogh O'Brien Andrews may have more Liberty than he had, and desired me to be Security for him, and that he would give me Counter-Security. I told him, I would not speak to him: Says Mr. Hurly, You ought to do it, if not in point of Friendship, yet in point of Gratitude; for it's through your Means I was forced to take those Measures.

Court. Mr. Neylan, Pray, Sir, what did Mr. Hurly say to you when you came to him, and told him what Donogh O'Brien said to you?

Neylan. He said, That was the First Man to whom he communicated the Contrivance of the Robbery; and, That it was most dangerous if he should discover it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who said so?

Neylan. Mr. Hurly said, That this Man was the First Man that he spake to of the Contrivance; and he said, He was the Principal of the Four that contriv'd it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you give this Information to?

Neylan. I gave it to Mr. Butler; and there was present three or four Justices of Peace more.

Court. At the Time he was examined before the Justices of the Peace, he did not give the latter Part of the Evidence: I ask'd him why he did not? he says, Because he did not recollect himself. The first Part he did not give, concerning the Piece of Money.

Mr. Forster. The Prisoner desires to know after what distance of Time he recollected himself?

Court. After he had given his Examination in to the Justices of Peace.

Neylan. A Month or Six Weeks, I think, my Lord — But I told several People of it before.

Mr. Forster. How came he to send for a Justice of Peace to take his Examination at first, and not to do so afterwards, when the latter Part of it came to his Memory ?

Neyland. Because Mr. Hurly was in Goal at the first Time, and I thought he might have come to a Trial ; but after he was remov'd up here, I despair'd of his coming to a Trial, and so did not think it material.

Mr. Hurly. My Lord, this is a Man that was in Trouble for me, and bound to Thomas Artbur on my Account: He had a Pique to me, and I to him ; he lampoon'd me, and I him. I appeal to the Gentlemen of the Jury, whether I, that had my Wife and Sister with me, whether they don't think I should rather have trusted them with such a Thing ? All that he here says is out of Pique and Malice, which the Gentlemen of the Country do know.

Court. Mr. Hurly, you are a Man of Parts, and you know what is us'd to be done in this kind : If you please, you may have Pen, Ink, and Paper to take Notes ; and, when it comes to your Turn, you shall ask what Questions you please.

Mr. Hurly. My Lord, 'tis all Malice.

Neyland. My Lord, I did contrive to make him pay the Debt of Two hundred Pounds (for which I was bound for him) ; but I suffer'd Damage above Threescore Pounds more—— I did indeed get an Execution against his Goods.

Court. He says, he was mightily damnified by being bound for you ; and that, having Counter-Security, he did order Judgment to be enter'd up against you ; knowing that you had valuable Goods in the Goal, he order'd them to be taken.

Mr. Hurly. He says, my Lord, that he was so much damag'd : I'll prove, my Lord, that his Debt was satisfied, and over and over.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, we will produce a Witness, that saw this Rapparee Act perus'd in Mr. Hurly's House at Moughna ; and we will shew you what pass'd at reading the Act.

Capt. Charles Mac-Donagh sworn.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, Captain Mac-Donogh will give your Lordships and the Jury an Account of the Necessity the Prisoner was under ; and, that the Rapparee Act being read on some certain Occasion at a certain Place, what happen'd thereupon.

Court. Pray, Sir, give an Account to the Jury what you know of Mr. Hurly, and his Circumstances.

Capt. Mac-Donogh. My Lord, I was very well acquainted with Mr. Hurly since the Time he came out of England ; I receiv'd Letters from him, and I was employ'd by him in negotiating several Affairs in the Country, and particularly against his Brother, that ow'd him some Money. I thought he was very severe against his Brother, and I charg'd him for being so unkind to him : He said, He was in want of Money, and so could not help it. And I was with him when he was reading the late Act of Parliament relating to the Article-men, and he said, He would pass his Adjudication according to the Articles of Galloway. I said, I thought he was in France, and not in Galloway. Said he, It's no matter, I will prove it. And he came after to Dublin, and pass'd his Adjudication. And after he came down again from Dublin I was with him ; and he brought with him the Act of Parliament, commonly call'd The Rapparee Act ; and he said, That Rapparee Act was a cleaver Way to recover Money from the Country.

Court. When was this ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. The latter end of Christmas, before the Robbery.

Court. Pray, what Year ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. My Lord, it was Christmas 1699.

Mr. Butler. Have you any of those Letters of Mr. Hurly, that shews he was in great Want of Money ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. Yes, I have.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, in what Circumstances was he at Christmas 1699 ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. He was poor and indigent ; and he said, He was so great a Friend to his Brother, and lov'd him so well, that he would not have prosecuted him, if he had not wanted Money.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Hurly after the Robbery ? Pray, what was it ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. My Lord, Capt. O'Brien writ me a Letter after he came to the Place, and was perswaded by him, that it was a real Robbery, and desir'd me to come, that we might consult the Matter : And knowing, that he had no such Money, I wrote him a Drolling Letter, That I believ'd it was some Papists robb'd him ; and, that he would recover his Money of the County. I came to Ennis, and he told me, He had lost all that he had in his House to pay his Debts ; which I smil'd at, because I was before in his House when he came from Dublin ; and I said to him, I hope you have brought Money, for otherwise the Country will be too hot for you now, because Mr. Neylan lies in Goal for you ; and this Sheriff is not your Friend. And he did not pretend that he had Money ; but, said he, never matter that, for Sir Toby Butler and Colonel John Macnamarra will make my Interest good with the Sheriff. And so the Letter coming after from Capt. O'Brien to me, that Mr. Hurly had lost such a Sum of Money, I laugh'd at it, because I knew that he had no such Sum. And when he told me, at the Assizes at Ennis, how that he was robb'd, he said, He would give me Two hundred Guineas if I manag'd the Business for him, to get the Money from the County.

Mr. Att. Gen. You had several Letters from Mr. Hurly : Pray, let us see 'em.

[Shews a Letter.]

Mr. Recorder. Did you receive this Letter from Mr. Hurly ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. Yes, 'tis his Hand-writing—— There has pass'd many Letters between him and I.

Mr. Recorder. Did you ever discourse with him since you receiv'd this Letter about the Subject and Matter of it ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. Yes, I did.

Court. Did you ever answer it ?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. Yes, I did.

[The Letter read.]

Thursday, August 17. 1699.

Dear Cousin,

*J*UST now I received the enclosed from our never-failing little Agent. What we have hitherto done, is but very insignificant to the main Matter. If this be not duly executed, and without Loss of Time, there is no other Way on Earth to do it, but that we thought of and proposed; that is, When the Colonel comes in Person, immediately after the Assizes, to execute the Surplus of the Fier. Fac. The Gentleman will, no doubt on't, send to him (as he did before) to know if he has any against his Person? When he sends him Word he has not, he will come to him; and when they are together, you must get some Clever Fellow, that will put it into his Hands. Spare no Cost to do this, my Dear Friend: You possess the Matter fully, and I have several convincing Proofs of the Sincerity of your Intentions towards me; therefore will say no more, but refer it wholly and solely to your Self; and desire once more, you will spare no Cost to compass it. The great Friend arrived in Dublin, and he expects our Cousin there Wednesday next: He goes away Saturday Night to Solomon his Brother-in-Law's House, where it would be a vast Comfort for him, towards his Journey, and the carrying on the Clever Touch, to receive a Box of Pills from you, which will be very much wanting. If not, and that you could get a Bill for't from Pierce Verrony, who will be there to meet my Brother John, it shall be highly serviceable; make it payable to our Agent, at Mr. Thomas Hewlet's House in Smithfield, and she will pay it to Mr. Baldwin. Let not our generous Friend's Good-Nature be prevail'd upon to give any Time or Forbearance; for, I do assure you, that and more must be laid out to carry on the Clever Touch; which I have the greater Hope will not fail taking the good Effect, since you are so positive in it. I hope you have a Will. Do your Business with Sir Theo — and send his Opinion about the Elegit. Our Cousin will write to you from Dublin, directed as you shall appoint in the Answer to this. I will take Leave, begging the Favour you will remember me most thankfully to our worthy Friend, whose Services I shall find a Way to return as he deserves. The longer he stays after the Assizes, the worse 'twill be for us. Dispatch me back the Bearer as soon as you can, and pay an Express, if you do not come your self, of Saturday Night to Solomon's: Our Cousin will go from thence on Sunday before Day. My Service to Mr. Conner, and know whether he delivered and seconded the Letter to my Lord C. J. Put this Letter and the enclosed into your Fob, lest you should drop it. As you have appeared all along a true Friend for me, my Dear Kinsman, go through with it, and assure your self, your Pains shall not be ill bestowed. The executing this is the Clever Touch indeed; and I am sure it will succeed, since you undertake it. My most kind Service to my worthy Friend; I hope he hunted well.

VOL. V.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray give me that Letter — My Lord, I shall take leave to read it, and ask some Questions out of it. — Sir, by the Oath you have taken, pray what does he mean by Our never-failing little Agent?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. That was his Wife, that was here in Dublin — There was a Fieri Facias against the Goods of his Brother John; but that would not do, so he desired his Wife to send an Execution against his Body.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Our great Friend is arrived at Dublin — Who does he mean by that?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. Really, Sir, by what I understand, it was the Attorney-General.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who was his Cousin here, Solomon?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. He is one Donogh O-Dea, married to his Sister, whom he thought an insignificant Man; and therefore he called him Solomon, by way of Ridicule.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Clever Touch, and the Box of Pills?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. The Clever Touch, was the Adjucation; and the Box of Pills, was the Money to be sent to Dublin, to pass the Adjucation.

Mr. Butler Have you any other Letters?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. Yes, I have.

Moughna, October the 5th, 1699.

I Have Advice from a very sure Hand, Dear Sir, that I am liked to be Blocked up very soon, or rather regularly Besieged by the formidable Captain Thomas Bourk, and a select Party he brags to have hired of the Enniskillin Dragoons for that Purpose. He received Fifty Pounds Sterling for that generous Undertaking, and entered into Bonds of Two Hundred Pounds Penalty, to have me in Salv. Custod. before the First Day of next Term. And, as I am resolved to keep my Ground, and maintain this Post to the last Extremity, I have detached Corporal Malone for Ammunition to put my self in a Condition to receive the Thrice-worthy Captain; for this is no Time of Day for me, (post varios Casus) to give my Head for the Washing. The Corporal is but very lately arrived into my Service, and consequently has but young Skill in Powder and Ball: Therefore must entreat you to chuse and send me a Pound of the best Powder, and three Dozen of Carbine, Musket, and Pistol-Ball.

Poor

Poor Tom is very much in the right on't, to revenge his Quarrel with a Party, since his Courage never inspired him to do it single Hand: And his select Party (as he calls them) are resolved to follow the Col. General of the French Dragoons (Mareschal de Boufflers) Maxim: For he was of Opinion, No Man was fit for a Dragoon, that in Time of War out-liv'd two Campaigns; or in Peace, did not once at least in every fifteen Days, seek Adventures for a broken Head. Pray dispatch me back the Corporal; and though the Enemies Lines of Circumvallation should be perfect, nay, their very Batteries be rais'd and fix'd, if you let me know the Day precisely that you intend to call this Way, I will make a Sortie to facilitate your Entrance. I have not one Word from our Friend since I saw you. If your Leisure will permit it, pray let me know what Progress you have made in the last Affair that was communicated and recommended to you by, Dear Sir,

Your affectionate Kinsman, and very humble Servant,

Patrick Hurly.

For Capt. Charles Mac-Donagh, at Ennis.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You see that the Gentleman was very apprehensive of Debt, and guarding himself against it at this Time.

Mr. Attor. Gen. I desire to know, in this first Letter, who it was that was his good Friend?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. He told me, Sir, he look'd upon you to be his great Friend?

Court. Had you any Communication or Discourse with Mr. Hurly about this Robbery? Did he confess it?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. I did not put it to him: But I told him he would be Indicted for Perjury, and lose his Ears. He said, twenty Pounds would save them.

Mr. Hurly. He said, I must not stay in the Country, if I did not pay Mr. Arthur. I desire to know, Whether I did not tell him I was to meet Mr. Arthur?

Capt. Mac-Donagh. You told me you would make an end with Mr. Arthur: And you said at the same Time, that you had Sir Toby Butler and Mr. Macnamarra to make the Sheriff your Friend: And that did imply to me, that you had no Money.

Mr. Hurly. I came to Dublin in August, and they arrested me. I went to perfect Bonds to Mr. Arthur for the Debt, which was 723 Pounds.

He exacted upon me, and I was forced to consent to him a Bond for the whole Demand. I sent for Sir Toby Butler, and we made up the Account; and Mr. Arthur made it up near 1000 Pounds, for which I gave him my Bond. Mr. Butler told me, you will be reliev'd, by preferring a Bill in Chancery against Arthur. I did not serve him with a Subpoena, but he absconded, and so I got no Remedy to this Day. And the Reason why I paid him not, was to make him come to Terms, that I might retrench the extravagant Charge.

Court. Did he give that as a Cause why he would not pay Arthur, because he had exacted upon him?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. He did not tell me so.

Court. Was this the Reason, as you apprehended, why Mr. Hurly absconded, that he was on his keeping for fear of Arthur?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. For ought I know, it was for fear of others as well as Mr. Arthur. I remember the Night he came home from Dublin, some few Days before the Robbery, that he was barricading his Door, and telling me of making the Sheriff his Friend; whereby I concluded, that he could not have that Money that he afterwards pretended he had lost.

Court. How came you, Mr. Hurly, to barricade that House, when Mr. Arthur had promised not to disturb you at the Assizes of Ennis? He swears the very Night you came from Dublin you were barricading that House.

Mr. Attor. Gen. I desire to know, whether he believes that he had Money in his House the Night he was robbed?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. He did tell me so; but I did not believe him.

Court. Do you know any thing of those Counters?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. My Lord, about February last, the Wife of Daniel Hicky, who was suspected to be in the Robbery, came to me and said, that her Husband was like to be undone for passing some Counters: That if he could get his Liberty, he would go to Dublin, and swear the Cheat of the Robbery; and, says she, we have some of the Counters, that they said was Gold, in our keeping, and we will produce them.

Court. Did you see any of those Counters at any Time?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. Yes, I did, when the Constable took them out of Hicky's House.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It seems that Daniel Hicky's Wife told him, that she could produce the Counters. We shall shew you, that there was search for them accordingly. To whom did you make a Discovery of this of Hicky's Wife?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. I told it to Mr. Butler, who is a Justice of the Peace in the County of Clare, and to Capt. Bindon: The Woman was taken and Indicted for passing these Counters.

Mr. Foster. How came she to be discharged after she was taken?

Capt. Mac-Donogh. She was bail'd at the Quarter-Sessions.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we shall shew you where the Counters were found, and who found them.

Mr. Bernard.

Mr. Bernard. And we shew, that the Man that found them hid them.

The high Constable Walter Huonin sworn.

Court. Had you any Warrant, and from whom, to search for Counters or Counterfeit Money?

Huonin. Yes, my Lord, I had a Warrant from Dean Blood, to search for Goods that were pretended to be robb'd from Patrick Hurly. I came to the Town of Moughna, and brought with me five Men and a Petty Constable; and I went to the House of John Hurly, Patrick Hurly's Father, who was Bed-ridden, and removed him out of his Bed: And I went to Carty's House, and dug there, and found none; and I came to Daniel Hicky's, and digged about; and there was a Bed of Dung by the side of the House, where they fodder their Cattle, and it was a Foot above the Floor of the House; and after searching the rest of the House, I ordered the Dung to be removed out of the Place; and I bid the Fellows come and dig there, and they did; and Hicky's Wife held the Candle her self; and one of the Men that was next the Wall hit a Stone in the Ground, and it was a Slate over a hole in the Floor, and the next of them threw it out, and along with it a Suggane and a Purse; and when I saw the Purse, I would not let him handle it. I opened it, and found it full of yellow Counters, and took an handful of them out, and called the People of the Town, and reckon'd them all before their Faces.

Court. What did you find in the Purse?

Huonin. My Lord, nothing but Counters.

Court. Have you them?

Huonin. Yes, I have all that was found—I came to the Assizes at Ennis, and my Lord Chief-Justice Haly ordered me to keep them till I should appear at the Trial.

[Shows the Suggane and Purse with the Counters, which was opened, and were 121 in Number.]

The reason why I was so careful to search there, was because Hicky's Wife was pressing for my not touching the Dung; and after they were found, when she saw the Counters, she dropt the Candle, and went away: Says I, good Woman, you must go along with me. I brought the Woman to Ennis; and I was brought before my Lord Chief-Justice, who desired me to keep the Counters against the Trial.

Mr. Hurly. Whether it be likely, that this Woman, that was indicted for these Counters, would not have removed them, and thrown them into a by-hole; and if they were in the Ground, whether the Purse would not be rotten.

Court. He says, when it was taken up, the Suggane that was about it was mouldy and wet, for the Purse it self is dammified.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray what is the Name of the Village where the House stands?

Huonin. It is Moughna, where the Father of Mr. Hurly lives.

Mr. Bernard. How long after the Robbery was this found?

Huonin. It was a whole twelve Month.

Mr. Bernard. Was you directed to search that

VOL. V.

Dunghill before you went to the House?

Huonin. No; I was not; only a Fellow told me that he suspected that Place.

Mr. Recorder. Was it in the first Place, or in the last Place; you search'd, that you found these Counters?

Huonin. It was in the last Place.

Mr. Recorder. How near is this Hicky's House to Mr. Hurly's?

Huonin. About a quarter of a Mile; or less.

Alderman Walton sworn.

Mr. Forster. Sir, Mr. Hurly calls you, to know what Money you paid him?

Ald. Walton. My Lord, I came over with Mr. Hurly in October, 1697. And some time after he was here, he came to me and told me, he had some Money to receive, and ask'd me if I would receive it for him? I told him it was Mr. Burton's business; but he said he was a Stranger to him, and so let my Servant receive 400 Pounds from Mr. Arthur, and 100 Pounds from Mr. Fitz-Symons.

Mr. Bernard. I desire Ald. Walton to tell, when they came over in the War-time, whether he saw any Jewels with Mr. Hurly?

Ald. Walton. We did see a Ship, that we thought was a Privateer, but it prov'd a Friend: He then told me, he had some things of great Value, which he was going to secure; but I did not see them.

Sir John Mead. How long was the Money in your Hands?

Ald. Walton. It was all drawn out in three or four Months time.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray was it all drawn out of your Hands before 99?

Ald. Walton. Yes, yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The next thing that was drawn out was Writs and Proviso's, to force Mr. Hurly to pay back the Money to Mr. Fisher. My Lord, we will call two that were by when these Counters were found by the Constable.

Thomas Edwards sworn.

Court. Do you know of any Search made in any Body's House concerning Gold or Money?

Edwards. My Lord, I was commanded by the High-Constable, Walton Huonin, to the House of Daniel Hicky; and when I came, I found a Youth on his Knees making up the Dung: I asked him, what he was doing there? The Woman said, He was endeavouring to hide some Potatoes. I told her, there was no body would take them away. Now, my Lord, there was no Potatoes there; but we found the Counters under the Dung, about eight Inches deep in the Ground; they were in a Leather Wallet, whip'd about with a Thumb-Rope of Hay.

Court. How did the Woman behave her self?

Edwards. When the High-Constable told her, You must go along with me, she said, Now these are found, I believe I must.

Mr. Foster. Did you see the Counters when they were taken?

Edwards. Yes, I did.

Mr. Foster. Did they look fresh?

Edwards. Yes, they did.

E c c 2

Mr. Soll.

Mr. Solk Gen. My Lord, before we go any further, the Gentlemen that are Council for the Traveller, would fain insinuate, that the Counters were laid there, — that They that hide can find. Now therefore, to shew that to be impossible, we shall prove to you, that this Woman, the Wife of Daniel Hicky, did offer some of these Counters for a Cow, before this Discovery.

Mortogh Mac-Colloghy sworn.
(Per Interpreter.)

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Does he know one Daniel Hicky?

Interp. He does.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Does he know his Wife?

Interp. Yes.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Had he any Dealing with any of them?

Interp. He says, he had a Cow, and it was stray'd, and he found her, and was hurrying her home by Hicky's House; — he rested there, being weary, and was taking a Pipe of Tobacco, and they ask'd him, if he would sell the Cow? He said, he would: And she went into a Back-room, and brought two yellow Pieces, — he says, he has the two Pieces here to shew.

[Produces the Pieces, being two yellow Counters, the same with those that Huonin produced in the Purse.]

Court. Are those the Pieces Hicky's Wife offer'd him for this Cow?

Interp. He says, they are. When he was receiving the two Pieces the Woman gave him, he ask'd her what they were? She said, Two Guineas: He said, He believ'd they were some of Patrick Hurly's Gold.

Court. Why did he say so?

Interp. Because he imagin'd he had some Gold Counters.

Court. Did he sell his Cow for the Money then?

Interp. No.

Court. How came he to keep the Money then?

Interp. He told her, he did not like the Coin, and he would not sell his Cow for them, because they were some of Patrick Hurly's Gold; and he said, What will you take for 'em? I have Three-pence Half-penny, and some Tobacco, and if you will take them, I'll give 'em you for the Pieces: Yes, said she, I will; and I wish I had so much for every one I have.

Court. He says, he was after this examin'd by a Justice of Peace concerning these Things; How came he to be examin'd?

Interp. He went himself, and shew'd 'em to Mr. Bindon.

Court. Did he go of himself? or, Was he sent?

Interp. He says, he told Sir Donogh O'Brien what had happen'd, and he directed him to go to the Justice.

Court. Pray, how long was it after he had these Counters?

Interp. He says, Nine or Ten Days.

Court. Did he go to Sir Donogh of his own accord? or, Did any one bid him go?

Interp. He went freely of himself.

Court. When was it that he receiv'd those Counters he speaks of?

Interp. About Christmas last.

Court. When was it he bought the Cow?

Interp. He says, he bought her at Clare Fair, about Allbolland-tide before.

Court. What Time was it that the Woman would have bought it of him?

Interp. It was a good while after.

Court. Was it before or after Christmas he was selling the Cow to this Woman?

Interp. After Christmas, my Lord.

Court. How long after?

Interp. He does not exactly remember the Time.

Court. Now, pray Gentlemen, we must do right to every body. — When he comes to receive the Counters, he said, it was about Christmas; — and when he comes to tell you when he bought the Cow, it was all at the same Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, no; the Matter of the Counters was at the Time when she cheapen'd the Cow; but he bought the Cow at All-Saints before, and he was about selling her at Christmas.

Mr. Recorder. About nine Days after he was in possession of the Gold, he came to Sir Donogh O'Brien, of his own accord, and he bid him go to a Justice of Peace.

Mr. Bernard. Pray, why did he not go to Sir Donogh O'Brien sooner? — And, what made him go then?

Interp. He waited for the Quarter-Sessions.

Mr. Bernard. Who is the nearest Justice of Peace living next his House?

Interp. Mr. Bindon.

Court. How came he not to go before Mr. Bindon immediately when he got the Counters?

Interp. He says, he waited for the Quarter-Sessions.

Court. Pray, how came he not to go immediately to Mr. Bindon, being the next Justice of Peace, rather than to Sir Donogh O'Brien?

Interp. He expected all the Justices would be together at the Quarter-Sessions.

Mr. Forster. Mr. Hurly desires to ask that Man some Questions. — How came the Cow to go out of the Barony after he had bought her? How came the Cow there?

Interp. The Man that sold him the Cow in Clare Fair liv'd there, and she stray'd back again.

Mr. Hurly. How came the Cow to go astray?

Mr. Soll. Gen. We cannot tell you; you may examine the Cow, the Cow knows best.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. We will not shew, that when Hurly came from Dublin he lodg'd at Capt. Jobe Lynch's House, and he pull'd out of his Portmantau a large Bag, that look'd as if it were full of Gold; and Capt. Lynch handling of it, and finding it light, he open'd it, and found it to be Counters. This Capt Lynch is Landlord of Moughna, and they were intimate together.

Capt. Lynch sworn.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Pray, do you know Mr. Patrick Hurly, now at the Bar?

Capt. Lynch. I have known him these Thirty Years.

Court. Have you intimate acquaintance with him?

Capt. Lynch. He cannot deny but I have.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray give an Account of his coming to your House.

Capt. Lynch. I met Mr. Hurly at Loughbrea, at one Harry Bargery's House, in the Year 1699, either a little before or after Christmas.

Court. Where was he going?

Capt. Lynch. He was going to the County of Clare, from Dublin; and as we were drinking a Bottle of Wine, — he went to a Portmanteau that lay on a Table, and taking out Linnen, he pull'd out a Bag that held about a Quart; said I, Mr. Hurly, you are well stock'd with Money coming from Dublin. — And I clapp'd my Hand into the Bag, took out an handful, and they were Counters, my Lord, of several sizes, like single and double Louis d'Ors.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Shew him some of the Counters.

[He looks on them.]

Capt. Lynch. This is like them.

Hurly. When was it?

Capt. Lynch. It was a little before Christmas, or soon after. — I wonder, Mr. Hurly, that you should deny it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Upon the Oath you have taken, Had you any Discourse at this Meeting about any Acts of Parliament?

Capt. Lynch. I'll tell you, my Lord: He ask'd how Mr. Banks's Money went? (Mr. Banks was one that was robb'd of the Value of Two hundred and fifty Pounds, and the Grand-Jury, at the Assizes, allow'd him the Money, when he petition'd for it.) A while after, in our Journey, says he, Cousin, I have a great deal of Confidence in you, and if you'll assist me to get Money — I told him, in any just Way I would, but not otherwise.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Had you any Discourse about the Rapparee Act?

Capt. Lynch. He told me plainly, that if I would but assist him, — and then brought down the Statute, and ask'd me again, how Mr. Banks's Money went in our County? I told him, he recover'd his Money from the County. Says he, Cousin, I really want Money; and if you'll assist me in such a Matter, and come to me, I will deliver you your Lease. I told him, I would assist him in any just Way, but no further.

Mr. Recorder. You said just now, that he spoke of the Act.

Capt. Lynch. He told me, That the Act was a very good Way for a Man to get Money that wanted it.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Are you a Relation to Mr. Hurly?

Capt. Lynch. I have a Friendship for him; and if I had known I was to be summon'd, I would not have been within forty Miles of this Place this Day.

Court. Pray, what Relation are you to him?

Capt. Lynch. His Brother was married to my Sister, and he and his Father was Tenants to me and my Father these forty Years.

Court. Had you any Linnen sent to your House? And by whom?

Capt. Lynch. My Lord, I cannot tell was it Linnen or no, but there came a Trunk, and I had a Letter beforehand (it was in April or May 1700) informing me, that the Trunk would be with me that Night, and desiring me, that I would not let the Men that brought it see it afterwards.

Court. Did the Trunk come?

Capt. Lynch. Yes.

Court. Was it weighty?

Capt. Lynch. It was as much as any Two could carry. — The Servants told me, they were coming all Night, that they did not sleep.

Court. How far is your House from Mr. Hurly's?

Capt. Lynch. Seventeen Miles.

Court. Had you any Discourse with him in the Goal of Ennis?

Capt. Lynch. Yes; I went to see him at the Goal of Ennis, and Mr. Butler met me: I told him, I was going to see Hurly. And as we were taking a Bottle of Wine together, I said, Cousin, it is not fit for any Gentlemen to visit you, for the Pranks you play'd in France, and now this Robbery. — He said, Sir Donogh O'Brien was the greatest Enemy he had against him, — but he would lose his Blood, or he should lose his.

Court. Did the Servants that brought the Trunk tell you what was in the Trunk?

Capt. Lynch. They told me, that it was really full of Linnen. — And Ulick Bourk came, and expected Mrs. Hurly that Night. — My Wife was like to die. — The Servants that brought me the Trunk brought me a private Token, not to let any body have it, — not Capt. Bourk himself. — But I suspected there was no good in it, and I let them take it away; so the Trunk was taken away from my House that Night, and brought to a Neighbour's about a Mile off.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Relation is Ulick Bourk to Mr. Hurly?

Capt. Lynch. They are married to two Sisters.

Mr. Bernard. My Lord, this Gentleman hath sworn very materially, and I desire he may fix a Time, and tell us within a Fortnight: Was it before or after Christmas?

Capt. Lynch. I am not positive, but it was in the Year 1699.

Mr. Attor. Gen. What House was it at Loughbrea?

Capt. Lynch. It was at Harry Bargery's House.

Mr. Hurly. What Time was it?

Capt. Lynch. I cannot be positive to Time, but it was before the Robbery.

Court. Pray recollect, as near as you can, what Time it was you were together at Loughbrea.

Capt. Lynch. I can't be positive.

Mr. Bernard. Was it in the Time of Lent, or not? It is strange!

Capt. Lynch. If I did know to a Day, I would tell it.

Mr. Recorder. You say, it is strange; he says, that Mr. Hurly's Denial to him is more strange! He is particular as to the Time of the Trunk, and yet he can't be so as to the other Time.

Court.

Court. Mr. Hurly, you shall make the best Use of it you can; when the Man tells you on his Oath, that he cannot tell; and we can't make a Man swear more than he can swear: He says, it was in 99, and before the Robbery. Was it in Winter, or Summer?

Capt. Lynch. In the Winter, as I do really remember it.

Mr. Hurly. My Lord, I humbly offer this: This Gentleman says, he met me at Harry Barger's House in Loughbrea; and, that I open'd my Portmanteau for him to take out a Bag.

Court. No, he says you open'd the Portmanteau to take out some Linnen; and you took out a Bag, and you look'd into it.

Mr. Hurly. Was this half a Year before the Robbery?

Capt. Lynch. I do not know.

Mr. Hurly. My Lord, I will prove I was not there, at Loughbrea, the last time I went home. And, my Lord, my Father held some Land from him: There came some Difference, and he told his Brother, that if I did not give up the Land, he would give me a Lift.

Mr. Bernard. Was there any one in the Room then with you?

Capt. Lynch. No body but Mr. Hurly and I.

Mr. Hurly. Pray, Sir, what sort of Portmanteau was it?

Capt. Lynch. It was a Cloth Wallet, blue and red.

Mr. Attor. Gen. The next Evidence we produce, is one Charles Cassidy; he was thought a fit Man for the Service, and was solicited to be Commander in chief of this Robbery.

Charles Cassidy sworn.

Court. Give an Account what you know of any Robbery of Mr. Hurly.

Cassidy. My Lord, I was a Practitioner in Surgery; and Mr. Hurly's Father fell sick, and I was sent for to attend him three Weeks or a Month; and then one Dr. Brady, a Relation of Mr. Hurly's was sent for: And as we were going up to see other Patients, the said Dr. Brady and I, says the Doctor, If you will take upon you a Business, you shall have Twenty Guineas. What is it to do, says I? It is to head a Party, says he, to rob Hurly, and then he will raise Money on the County. And after this, when he came back, the Doctor told him what he had offer'd me. Hurly said, I will give him Forty Guineas; and said, he would get People himself: And he said, I have four Persons, that I will trust with you, &c. but I went away, and never came near him since.

Court. When was this?

Cassidy. It was thirteen or fourteen Months before he was robb'd. — I serv'd in the House from before Christmas to Easter.

Court. Mr. Hurly, he swears thus; That he was employ'd to attend your Father, that was sick at that time; and, that after some Attendance you took Occasion to send for Dr. Brady, a Relation of yours: And going with the Doctor abroad to visit other Patients, he told him, You get little Fees from Mr. Hurly; but, says he, if you will head a Party for a pretended Robbery on Mr. Hurly, he will get Money of the County, and you shall have Twenty Guineas. He said, he did not care to meddle with it, for his Relations would suffer by it; but he said, It would be but little that every one would pay: Then, said he, I don't care if I do. And when he came home, the Doctor told before your Face what he had done. You said, What! give him Twenty Guineas! I'll give him Forty Guineas. And after, when he went home, he thought not fit to do it; for he told you, his Face was very remarkable, and known in the County, and, that he should be discover'd. Oh! Sir, said you, I'll help you to another Face. You told him, he should have one Donogh O'Brien, Daniel Hicky, and Calaban Carty to assist him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Has not Donogh O'Brien another Name?

Cassidy. I know, my Lord, it is Donogh O'Brien Andrews's Son.

Court. You have been acquainted since Christmas was two Years; When was it that this was said to you by Dr. Brady?

Cassidy. It was the February after.

Mr. Robbins. How long after this Discourse of Dr. Brady and Mr. Hurly did you speak of it?

Cassidy. My Lord, I did not speak of it; and the Night it was to be transacted I ran away from my own House, for fear of being suspected.

Mr. Robbins. Did you go before a Justice of Peace voluntarily? or, Were you call'd to give that Examination?

Cassidy. I kept it to my self till last Sunday; being at Church, and after dining at Mr. Hickman's, they were talking of Hurly's Business. I said, There is a Man in this Country that can do Mr. Hurly more Mischief, in relation to this Robbery, than any other. Who is that? said he. I, being afraid to bring my self into Trouble, said no more. Says the Minister, You ought to be punish'd, if you don't do your best for to save your Country from Ruin. And, upon this, after I came home, I recollected my self, and I went to a Justice of Peace, and swore it; and after I had given my Testimony, he bound me over to prosecute.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He has done like an honest Man.

Mr. Foster. How came you to conceal it for Two Years past? Did you never tell it to any Man before?

Cassidy. But to one young Man, that I thought would joyn with me.

Court. What young Man is that?

Cassidy. 'Tis one Conner. When I was at Mr. Hurly's House, I often play'd a Game at Tables with him: When he had not then Money to send for a Bottle of Wine, he got me to send my Note for twelve Bottles of Wine at Ennis.

Mr. Attor. Gen. The Persons concern'd in the Robbery had Vizards: We shall shew you, that when Mr. Hurly was in Dublin last, what Shop he was at, and what sort of Commodities he bought. There was a Masque to be acted.

Daniel Kiefe sworn.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray, where do you live?

Kiefe.

Kiefe. In Town, my Lord, with Counsellor Turner.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordships please to ask him, Whether he knows Mr. Hurly?

Kiefe. I knew Mr. Hurly these many Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account what you observed when Mr. Hurly was going into the Country; what Shops you met him in, and what Commodities he was buying.

Kiefe. In February, 1699, he came into Mr. Bently's Shop, and asked for Masks to wear at a Masquerade: He told him he sold none, but there were some in Christ's Church-Yard; and he went in at the Gate towards the Yard; and when he was gone, I said, Mr. Bently, I wonder what he designs to do with them, I fear 'tis for no good Design.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray where did he go when Mr. Bently told him they were to be had in Christ's Church-Yard?

Kiefe. He went streight into the Yard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was it?

Kiefe. It was in February, 99, the latter End of the Term.

Joseph Bently sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, that Mr. Bently may give an Account whether he knows Hurly.

Bently. Yes, my Lord, I do — And I remember he came into our Shop to ask for Masquerading Masks or Vizards. — And I think it was about January or February — I told him we had none. Pray, says he, can you tell me where I can get any? — I said, I cannot tell, unless you get them in the Yard: And he went thro' the Shop into the Yard.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Bently. It was January or February, 99.

Mr. Foster. Did you ever see him before that Time?

Bently. Yes, several times — He bought several Things in our Shop.

Mr. Foster. But no Masks?

Bently. No, but asked for Masquerading Masks or Vizards.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Reason why we have been the more particular in this, is, that it has made a great Rumour and Noise, that it would be of great Disadvantage to Mr. Hurly; and therefore we go to these Particulars, that no Man may pretend but the Matter is made plain against him. We shall produce some few Evidences more.

Mr. Recorder. Hurly has lately published a Libel against the Gentlemen of the County.

Mr. Geary sworn.

Mr. Butler. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Hurly? And what?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give the Court and Jury an Account, Whether you know Mr. Hurly, and his Circumstances, and any great Quantity of Money that he had?

Mr. Geary. Mr. Hurly, in February last was Twelve-month, told me his Protection was out; and he desired me to get a Lodging for him. I desired him to come to my own Lodging in Capel-street. When he went out of Town I went with him as far as Island-Bridge: He said, he had no Money: And a Day or two after he writ me a Letter, and desired me to raise his Wife some Money on a Bond of Capt. Mac-Donnel's. I sent to Mr. Connor, and got him to endorse a Bill to Mr. Lum, and the Money was supplied: And after he came to Town again, I went to his Lodging, to Mr. Rascow's in Capel-street; there were two Soldiers that would not let me in: I spoke to the Sheriff, Mr. Cusack; so I went into him, and told him, I was sorry for him. He said, it was for prosecuting Sir Donat O'Brien. Says he, you know Sir Richard Nagle's Hand, and Sir Donat O'Brien's; there are Letters to King James; and, said he, you and I must live, and we may get Money by it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we call this Gentleman to shew, that at the Time of his sending this Money, Mr. Hurly was in an indigent Condition. When was it?

Mr. Geary. It was in Michaelmas Term, 1699.

Mr. Hurly. By Virtue of your Oath, Have you no Gratification for coming here?

Mr. Geary. No, by Virtue of my Oath, I have not.

Thomas Connor sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of Mr. Hurly, about Money?

Thomas Connor. That Gentleman, Mr. Geary, came to me, and told me, it would be an Obligation on him to get twenty Pounds for Mr. Hurly's Lady: Upon that I drew a Bill of Exchange; so they had the Money, but what they did with it, I do not know.

Mr. Hurly. Was not the Money paid again?

Connor. Yes, it was paid.

Mr. Hurly. Then did I want Money, when you drew the Bill, and the Money was paid?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Hurly was not able to pay this Bill; and we shall give you an Account who paid it.

Capt. Mac-Donnel sworn.

Mr. Butler. You heard the Evidence of Mr. Geary?

Capt. Mac-Donnel. Yes.

Mr. Butler. What do you know of the Matter?

Capt. Mac-Donnel. I did owe some Money by Bond to Mr. Hurly, and he writ to me to pay thirty Pounds: I don't know what the Sum was that Mr. Geary had advanced; but I writ him word, I would not pay him any such Sum; but I bid him send my Bond to Capt. Gardiner's in Limerick, and the Money should be paid there; and it was sent accordingly, and the Money was paid: It was something less than 50*l*.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, when this Robbery was talked of, did any body apply to you to take you off, that you should not oppose the Presentment, but suffer it to go on.

Capt. Mac-Donnel. Mr. Hurly spoke to me to be his Friend. I was always his Friend: And Capt. Bourk spoke to me to speak to a Gentleman of the Grand-Jury, that lay with me, (that was much against him) to desire him, that he would not appear against him; and that he and his Tenants should be freed from paying any Part of the Money.

Mr. Ber-

Mr. Bernard. My Lord, I am Council for the Traverfer. The Question is, Whether he be Guilty of Perjury in an Information, sworn before Mr. Blood. — If your Lordships will hear the Proofs, we shall turn the Table, and prove Mr. Hurly was a Man that came with a good Fund of Money into this Kingdom, and left a good Fund in France, and that he drew Bills of Exchange upon his Correspondent in France; that his Correspondent gave him an Account, that Mr. Arthur discovered where all his Effects lay, and all was seized; and the Bills came back protested. Then he comes and advises with Sir William Hardcock, who advised to an Accommodation with Mr. Arthur: And so we did, and agreed to give him what he demanded; and accordingly, we gave him Bonds. And in 1699, we brought a Bill in Chancery. We met Mr. Arthur's Brother in Dublin; he said, we should not be disturbed at the Assizes at Ennis. We went down accordingly, and carried our Money along with us, and we did go another Way, and not by Loughbrea. And we shall shew your Lordships further, that there was a Quarrel between Mr. Hurly and Sir Donagh O'Brien: Sir Donagh had such great Interest in the Country, prevailed with the Jury, for some Reasons, that the Presentment was not found for us at the Assizes; but four Men were taken up for the Robbery, and laid in Irons; and they were told, there was a Commission of Oyer and Terminer coming down, and that they should be Arraigned — Here is Life or Death proposed: If you confess the Matter, and place it upon Hurly, you shall have your Lives; but, if you do not, as soon as the Commission comes down, you shall stretch for it. The Persons were sensible, that those who threatened them could effect it, and they were kept close from all others but these Persons, and they solicited them, until they got them to give in Examinations against Mr. Hurly. But they came afterwards to Mr. Hurly, and told him, it was the Threats and Dangers they were in, made them do what they had done, and that they were troubled for it. And after that, they went before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, and they forswore all. After this the Contrivance of the Counters, that must be managed; and a Bag of Counters is brought down to Hicky's Wife, and she must hide it where it may be found by this Huoxin. My Lord, we shall shew your Lordship all these Matters. I apprehend they are Men of Credit that will swear the Matters in my Brief, that Mr. Hurly was really and truly Robb'd, and that these Prosecutions have been carried on by Bribery, and such-like Practices in the Country.

Mr. Foster. We'll shew you, that Mr. Hurly had 2000 l. and that he carried a Part of it into the Country to pay off Arthur. We shall shew where we had the Money, and that he brought it down.

Charles Fitz-Symmons, Merchant, called, did not appear.

John Hurly sworn.

Mr. Foster. Pray give an Account to the Court and the Jury, whether you were employ'd to receive Money for Mr. Hurly, and of whom?

John Hurly. I was employed in 1696, and I received of Mr. Jeremiah Donovan, 200 l. and Col. Lovet paid me 490 l. for 500 Louis d'Ors.

Court. In what Year did you receive it from Col. Lovet?

John Hurly. It was in 96 or 97.

Mr. Foster. And how much more?

John Hurly. From Mr. Fitz-Symmons, 306 l. 10 s. in 1697. — And I received a Bill in Limerick, of 200 l.

Mr. Foster. What did he bid you do with the Money?

John Hurly. He sent me this Money out of Holland, and bid me secure it for him.

Mr. Foster. Did your Brother lay out any Money for a Mortgage.

John Hurly. Not any at all.

Mr. Hurly. I appeal to the Gentlemen of the Country, whether I did purchase any Thing.

Mr. Recorder. You are not accused for a Purchaser, Sir.

Court. Did you pay him that Money again?

John Hurly. Yes, my Lord.

Court. Was it before he was Robb'd?

John Hurly. Yes, it was.

Court. Pray what Discourse had your Brother with you concerning any Money he had by him?

John Hurly. He told me all along, that he could pay Arthur, and that he had a Fund to pay it. And I tell you, Sir, before this Robbery, I came to his House, and his Wife told me, My Brother will do very well, for that he has brought Money to pay off Arthur. — How do you know that, said I? — Says she, I saw a Bag of Gold with him.

Court. Were you there after the Robbery?

John Hurly. I came next Morning, and I found the Trunks broken open, and all the House in Disorder.

Mr. Foster. Do you know Capt. Lynch?

John Hurly. Yes.

Court. Do you take this Lynch to be a fair honest Man?

John Hurly. I will tell you what I know. About Christmas last, I came to the County of Gallway to Mr. Lynch. — There were some Land that my Father held from him; and he set the Reversion of the Land. I told him, that it was ill done, that we should not have the Preference of the Land; and I told him, my Brother would keep him out two Years. — The Servant that was with me, told me, that he proffer'd him Twenty Pounds to swear the Robbery upon my Brother. — When he came back, I asked him about it, and he said, he feared he would prove him not to be within the Articles of Gallway; and, said he, if he will give me quiet Possession of my Lands, 'tis well; if not, I'll give him a Lift.

Mr. Foster. Do you know of any Jewels that belong to Mr. Hurly, besides the Money.

John Hurly. He gave me a Diamond Ring for my Wife, and shewed me a Ring he said was worth 100 l.

Mr. Foster. Do you know of any Rewards proffered to swear against Hurly?

John Hurly. One Hicky shewed me a Note under Mr. Hickman's Hand, and Mr. Cusack's Hand. That

That Hickman and Cusack promised to intercede with the Government for Pardon for him and others, if they proved the Robbery on Patrick Hurly. — And that they should be found with good Meat, Drink, Washing and Lodging, and discharged without Fees. — He shewed me this Note within a Week or some short Time after he was discharged.

Court. You say, That this Note was no more, than that Mr. Hickman and Mr. Cusack promised they would intercede to the Government, if so be he would tell the Truth?

John Hurly. Yes. — In proving a Robbery upon Patrick Hurly.

Mr. Foster. Were you at Ennis?

John Hurly. Yes, I was.

Mr. Foster. Who was there examined on Oath to prove this Robbery?

John Hurly. There was Dorothy Kemp, and Jane Hurly, and this Margaret Conneene, and she was examined at Home.

Mr. Foster. Was Mr. Ronane examined?

John Hurly. Yes, and his Man too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, Sir, I'll ask the Witnesses a Question. — Pray what Credit did the Jury give to it? Was you desired by your Brother, before the Robbery, or at the Time of the Robbery, to join with one Cassey, to be bound with him for the Money?

John Hurly. I was desired to join with Cassey. My Brother pretended I owed him Money. I told him it was an unreasonable Thing, for I had my Rent to pay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you pass a Bond to Cassey, Mr. Hurly?

John Hurly. I did, Sir; I told you before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was bound in that Bond?

John Hurly. None but my self.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you give the Bond to?

John Hurly. I gave it to Cassey.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, about Christmas last was Twelve-month, he comes to this Gentleman, his Brother, and desired he would get him Fifty Pounds, and he told him, he craved yet the Money, if he would pass his Bond for it to one Cassey, which he accordingly did: This Bond comes into Patrick Hurly's Hand, and he enters up the Judgment, and an Execution upon it, against his Brother's Goods, for his own Use. Sir, had you any Money from Cassey?

John Hurly. No, I had none.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who took the Execution out, and who took your Goods upon that Execution?

John Hurly. Charles Mac-Donogh did it; I paid him the Money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had the Money for Charles Mac-Donogh?

John Hurly. I had it, Sir. — I will unriddle this Matter. — I was very unwilling to go to Law. — I came to Cassey, and desired him to pretend to lend me 50*l.* and my Brother would give him his Bond for it. — He will pay you, said I, but will not pay it me.

Court. Did you owe your Brother 50*l.*

John Hurly. I did owe him near it, only he took some Cattle of mine.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, are you in Custody of the Marshalsea, at your Brother's Suit?

John Hurly. Yes, I am; and likewise at Mr. O'Brien's and Mr. Fitz-Simon's Suit. The Money that I received from Mr. Fitz-Simons, and paid my Brother the same Day, I am now in Custody for it since April last.

Mr. Recorder. You say, that you received several Sums of Money for your Brother, and you said, there was a Balance between you and your Brother: How much was that Balance? And what became of it? How much Money had your Brother in 97, 98, and 99?

John Hurly. When my Brother went into the Country, I discounted with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, you received several Sums; that you paid 200*l.* to Mr. Gardner, and some other Sums: How much did you pay back in Specie to your Brother?

John Hurly. The Money Mr. Fitz-Simons gave me, I came to my Brother's Lodging, and paid it him.

Court. This is a Matter that has been transacted within the Compass of three or four Years, and this cannot slip out of your Memory. You say, all the Money you received of Fitz-Simons you paid your Brother again. — What more did you pay him?

Hurly. I paid him the 200*l.* in Limerick. — I paid him 190*l.* or thereabouts, more.

Court. When was that?

Hurly. I paid it him in the Year 1697, in the beginning of 98.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say, you paid Mr. Burton 200*l.* — Did you pay any others?

Hurly. I paid him no more, but what I paid him for the Farm — I gave him Bullocks, 20 old Bullocks, at 46*s.* a-piece, and the rest came to 30*l.* more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There was a Sum of 200*l.* paid, and the rest drawn out in small Sums from Time to Time, as he had Occasion to call for't: How much was Brien's Money?

Hurly. It was about 40*l.* and I gave him a Bond of Capt. Lynch's, of about 6*l.* 10*s.* and I gave him a Bond on a Brother-in-Law of mine, and a Bond on Lynch.

Mr. Att. Gen. How much of the Money that you received for Patrick Hurly, did you lend out, and to whom? — Did it amount to 200*l.*?

Hurly. Yes, it did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did it amount to 300*l.*?

Hurly. No, it did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this Money paid back again to Mr. Fitz-Simons?

Hurly. I have a Bill in Chancery against him.

Mr. Recorder. I desire to know, whether Mr. Fitz-Simons had the 300*l.* back again?

Hurly. My Brother told me he paid him every Farthing, and said, he had a Discharge from him.

Mr. Recorder. Pray how much of this Money had Mr. Arthur?

Hurly. I don't know of any Dealing with Mr. Arthur.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did hear, that he assigned a Bond of Capt. Christopher O'Brien's to him.

Hurly. That 300*l.* my Brother owed me; and the Bond my Brother gave for it, I gave Mr. Fitz-Simons the Bond, and he arrested him on it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, did you send any Holland Sheets, after this pretended Robbery, to any Place?

Hurly. Yes, I did, to Capt. O'Brien's.

F f f

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you find them?

Hurly. I will tell you, my Lord. — We were told, that one Halloway was coming to my Father's, at the Suit of one Neylan, to take all away. — My Father sent for me, and desired me to come to him, for Halloway was coming to ransack the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was this after the Robbery?

Hurly. It was a Month afterwards. — I came there, and one of the Maids told me there was a Portmanteau in the Turf-stack. — I took it Home that Night, and I was order'd by her to deliver it to Capt. Christopher O'Brien. I sent for him to a Friend's House, and opened it before Capt. O'Brien, and took an Inventory of what was in it. — There were five or six Pair of Holland Sheets. — This was a Month or two after the Robbery.

Mr. Recorder. Another Man swore, it was the beginning of May, or the latter end of April.

Mr. Foster. We had this Money, and will shew you how we lost this Money, and shall prove the Robbery.

Dorothy Kemp sworn.

Mr. Foster. Pray Mrs. Kemp, where did you dwell in 99?

Mrs. Kemp. I dwelt in Moughna in the County of Clare, within a quarter of a Mile where Mr. Hurly lived.

Court. Where did you live at the Time that he was robbed? Were you in the House when the Robbery was committed?

Mrs. Kemp. Yes, I was.

Court. Pray give an Account what you know of that Robbery.

Mrs. Kemp. My Lord, There was Counsellor Ronane three Days waiting for Mr. Arthur to pay him some Money. My Mistress went out of Town upon Saturday before, and took some Gold out of her Chest, and shew'd some of it, and put it in again; and she did not come Home till Monday Morning after the Robbery was committed. I went to the Trunk, to get some Table-Linnen, and I laid my Hand on the Bag were the Gold was. My Master came in the mean time, and said, What do you do there? I said, I wanted some Table-Linnen; and my Master took away the Bag, and put it into the Closet.

Court. And so you concluded, that was the Bag of Gold?

Mrs. Kemp. Yes, I did.

Court. Did you know any of the People that were at the Robbery?

Mrs. Kemp. No, my Lord, I did not.

Court. How many Robbers were there?

Mrs. Kemp. As I understand, there were seven of them.

Court. Did you see them all?

Mrs. Kemp. Just after Supper, Counsellor Ronane got up to go to Bed, and went out of the Door, and then the Robbers got in. We went up to lay down the Bed, and my Master's Man came running and crying, my Master is murdered; so we got open the Door, and there was five came up with Swords and Pistols.

Court. Had they any Masks or Vizards?

Mrs. Kemp. I cannot tell. They commanded us into the Room, where my Master's Father lay Bed-ridden these three Years past.

Court. How many did you see there at that Time?

Mrs. Kemp. I saw five come up, and there was two more in the Parlour.

Court. Pray Mistress, by Virtue of your Oath, what Arms was there?

Mrs. Kemp. My Lord, we kept Arms just by the Door, a Carbine and Fuzee, because he was something in Debt.

Court. Were those the same Arms your Master had before?

Mrs. Kemp. I cannot tell; but they took his Pistols, and put Gravel into them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who put the Gravel into the Pistols?

Mrs. Kemp. The Tories.

Mr. Bernard. Was there any Offers made to her to put Counters into Hicky's House?

Mrs. Kemp. My Lord, I was promised Ten Pounds, to put Counters into my Master's House.

Court. She says, she was desired by one Murrough O'Brien, to lay Counters in her Master's House, or Hicky's House; a Bribe of Ten Pounds was offered her, and she refused it. But that he sent to Daniel Hicky's Wife twenty times; and she has some of the Letters he writ.

Court. By whom were these Letters written?

Mrs. Kemp. By Murrough O'Brien, for his Man brought them.

Court. Pray when was this, that you were offered Ten Pounds to hide Counters in your Master's House, or Hicky's?

Mrs. Kemp. It was before the Assizes a pretty while.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, here is Donogh O'Brien.

Court. Where was it he offered you this Money.

Mrs. Kemp. It was at Shenoge, a quarter of a Mile from where he lives.

Mr. Recorder. And he was to give you Ten Pounds to bury Counters in Hicky's House.

Mr. Butler. When the Rogues came in, how did they use your Master?

Mrs. Kemp. They ty'd him, and Counsellor Ronane.

Mr. Foster. You know Murrough O'Brien; Pray how often did you see him with Mrs. Hicky?

Mrs. Kemp. I saw him often with her. Said he, Mrs. Hicky, Mr. Hicky is cast down, and he is not worth a Farthing, he is ty'd Neck and Heels.

Court. Did you hear this?

Mrs. Kemp. She told me so.

Mr. Foster. We only offer it as far as it will go.

Mr. Att. Gen. It will not go at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am told, that Murrough O'Brien is in Court; she speaks of some Words and Letters between her and him and Mrs. Hicky.

Mr. Foster. What Linnen was taken away by the Robbers?

Mrs. Kemp.

Mrs. Kemp. My Lord, I partly can swear, that I wash'd twenty Pair of Holland Sheets; there was thirty Pair, I wash'd twenty Pair my self.

Court. How many was left?

Mrs. Kemp. There was but five Pair.

Court. How came they to leave them behind?

Mrs. Kemp. They did not stay to take them away.

Murough O-Brien sworn.

Court. Pray had you any Discourse with this Woman concerning Counters?

O-Brien. By Virtue of the Oath I have taken, I never had.

Court. Did you never offer her 10 l. to lay Counters in Mrs. Hicky's House?

O-Brien. By Virtue of my Oath, I did not.

Mrs. Kemp. By Virtue of my Oath, you did.

Court. Did you send any Letters to Hicky or his Wife?

O-Brien. Yes, I did write to Hicky, and to his Wife.

Court. Upon what Occasion did you write?

O-Brien. Hicky's Wife came to me, and told me, that if I could get a Protection for her Husband, from Sir Donough O-Brien, he would make it plain, that this was a Sham-Robbery: And Hicky's Wife said, she could produce those very Counters. Charles Mac-Donogh was by when she said, If we would procure a Pardon for her Husband, they would produce the Counters, and and make the Matter plain.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This Woman says, that Murough O-Brien came to Hicky's Wife, and said so and so, and writ Letters to Hicky's Wife. Murough O-Brien comes now and says, that Hicky's Wife came to him, and told him, that her Husband could make out the Sham-Robbery, if he could get a Protection for him. Mr. O-Brien, this Woman says, that you did send to Hicky's Wife, and that you did tamper with her.

O-Brien. It's a very improbable Thing, if I had a mind to tamper with her, that I would tamper with Hurly's Whore — My Lord, if I would have come on such a Business, would any one believe that I should employ this Woman, that has had a Bastard or two by Mr. Hurly?

Murough O-Brien's Letter to Hicky read.

Mrs. Hicky,

"I pray do me the Favour to come hither as soon as possible; for I have some Business to talk with you, which chiefly concerns yourself: And least you may apprehend any evil Design against you, I do here promise you, that you shall be as safe as your Heart can wish, whilst you are in the Company of"

Murough O-Brien.

A Second Letter read.

Mrs. Hicky,

"When I sent for you on Saturday was Seven-night, I thought I should see you at Mass, but I missed that Opportunity: I desire you

VOL. V.

"will step hither To-morrow, and meet me in some convenient Place, where we may talk without Censure or Suspicion: I have no other Design, but to serve you and your Husband. Be sure you don't fail to come to me, if you ever expect any Friendship from"

Mac-B.

Daniel Mac-Cay sworn.

Mr. Foster. Where did you live in March, 99?

Mac-Cay. I lived with Patrick Hurly.

Court. Where were you the Time of the Robbery?

Mac-Cay. I was in his House, my Lord; I was there on Sunday the 3d of March, and there was John Ronane and himself, and they were just going to Bed, and John Ronane was going out of the Door, and there came five Persons with naked Swords, and rushed in; they were disguised and disfigured: My Lord, when they came in, they fell'd him down on his Face, and gave him some Strokes; and I was there, and they pursued me and Gillian Hurly, and we ran up, and they locked the Door after us; they made a Shot below; then I was assured it was some Bailiffs that came to take my Master; some of the Family was in Bed, and some up.

Mr. Recorder. Your Master was upon his keeping then?

Mac-Cay. And when we heard the Noise below, we got some Sticks, and broke open the Door, and perceived two Fellows at the Door; they made a couple of Shots at us, but did us no Harm; and then came three or four, and one of them pursued me, and made a Shot after me, but did me no Harm. We did not go out till these Fellows went out, and then we broke open the Door, and we found my Master tied fast to his own Bed-side, and Counsellor Ronane; and all the Trunks were broke. My Master bid me go to the next Village, and raise the Neighbourhood; so I did.

Court. Pray, Friend, How many did you see of the Robbers?

Mac-Cay. I saw five, my Lord, and two without at the Window.

Court. The Woman said there were five in her Master's Parlour, and two at the Door. Sir, did you know any of the Parties that robbed him, upon your Oath? What Disguises had they? Were they black, or had they Vizards?

Mac-Cay. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Court. Did you take any Notice of any of the Arms, whether those Arms belonged to your Master? Take Care, upon your Oath, you speak nothing but Truth.

Mac-Cay. My Lord, we had Arms of my Master, which they seized on, and we found them abroad next Morning.

Court. Did the Bullets hit any Part of the House?

Mac-Cay. No, my Lord, I did not observe that.

Court. Pray, Friend, was there any more than one Shot made?

Mac-Cay. There was, my Lord.

Court. Was there any Mark of any Bullet to be seen?

F f f 2

Mac-Cay.

Mac-Cay. I did not see any.

Mr. Forster. You say, they came in with Fire-Arms and Swords; Had your Master any Swords?

Mac-Cay. There was none but one; and they had five naked Swords.

Mr. Forster. They had no Fire-Arms but your Master's?

Mac-Cay. We found them abroad next Morning in the Street.

Mr. Foster. What Road did your Master Hurly travel when he went from this Town, the last Time he was in Dublin before the Robbery?

Mac-Cay. He went through the County of Gallway, through Mount-Talbot.

Mr. Foster. Do you know Capt. Lynch?

Mac-Cay. Yes, he lives in Capperquin.

Mr. Foster. Were you with your Master all the Way home?

Mac-Cay. Yes, I was.

Court. Mr. Lynch said (I must do him right) that he did not remember what Company was with him, but that he drank a Bottle of Wine with him at Loughbrea, and there saw the Counters; and it is much about the Time this Man swears.

Mr. Recorder. Exactly, my Lord.

Mr. Foster. Were you with your Master when he was in Dublin? Did you see any Quantity of Money with him?

Mac-Cay. Yes, I did.

Court. Pray, did you see any Counters with him?

Mac-Cay. No, my Lord: I was offer'd to have my Fortune raised for ever if I would swear, that he bought the Counters, and brought them to the County of Clare.

Court. You saw Money with your Master: Where was it he receiv'd the Money?

Mac-Cay. I do not know; but he shew'd it me, and said, It was a sad Thing to pay away so much Money: And he put his Hand in his Pocket and pull'd out some Gold, some Broad-Pieces and a Gold Cob; and he said, he would keep the Purse, and not take any Thing out until he got home to pay Mr. Arthur off.

Carty. Was it in the Portmanteau?

Mac-Cay. Yes, it was.

Mr. Recorder. Was this the Time that your Master was in Loughbrea?

Mac-Cay. No, this was in February, and it was before Christmas he was at Loughbrea.

Court. Upon what Occasion was it that your Master shew'd you the Gold?

Mac-Cay. He told me, at his own Lodging in Warbur-street, Is it not a sad Thing to pay so much Money to that Rogue Arthur, that had serv'd him such a Trick?

Court. Did you take notice of it your self?

Mac-Cay. Yes: It was not Counters; no, I know Gold from Counters.

Court. Were they Guineas or Louis d'Ors?

Mac-Cay. They were Louis d'Ors.

Mr. Butler. Pray, when you went the last time with your Master from Dublin; what Way did you go to Mount-Talbot? At what Place did you cross the Shannon?

Mac-Cay. I do not know the Place; I do not know the Name of the Place at all.

Mr. Butler. Did you swim over, or go over a Bridge?

Mac-Cay. I think we went over a Bridge.

Mr. Butler. What Bridge?

Mac-Cay. I do not know the Name of it.

Court. Did you go thro' Atblone?

Mac-Cay. Yes, we went thro' Atblone.

Court. If I had said Laneborough, he would have said so too.

Mr. Butler. You are positive, that in the last Journey before the Robbery, you nor your Master were not at Loughbrea?

Mac-Cay. I am positive.

Mr. Butler. Where did your Master lie the Night before you came to Tiaquin?

Mac-Cay. It was at Balliboy.

Mr. Butler. Pray, Sir, what Way did you go from Atblone to Eyres-Court or Balliboy?

Mac-Cay. I do not know the Names of the Towns.

Mr. Butler. Pray how far is it from Tiaquin to Eyres-Court?

Mac-Cay. I do not know.

Mr. Butler. What Way did you come to Balliboy back again, for that is on this side the Shannon, and many Miles on this side of Atblone?

Mac-Cay. My Master had his Brother-in-Law, Mr. Terry, along with him, and when he came to Balliboy he would see his Sister, and so he went to Tiaquin.

Court. How could you go from Atblone to Balliboy? Did you lie at Atblone that Night?

Mac-Cay. No, my Lord, we did lie beyond it, at a Place where there is a Bridge.

Court. Where is that Bridge?

Mac-Cay. It is on the Shannon, on this side Aghrim.

Mr. Butler. If you please, Sir, did you carry the Portmanteau to Tiaquin?

Mac-Cay. Yes, I did.

Mr. Butler. And was it not left at any other Place behind you?

Mac-Cay. No, it was not.

Mr. Butler. You are positive you carried it to Tiaquin?

Mac-Cay. Yes, I did carry it to Tiaquin.

Mr. Butler. Was it left at Gort-Insbigory before you went to Tiaquin, or after?

Mac-Cay. My Master hired a Horse, and he was lame; and he desir'd me to go on Saturday, before he came himself, or Capt. Bourk, and his Father-in-Law kept him.

Mr. Butler. Was the Gold in the Portmanteau at that Time?

Mac-Cay. Yes, it was.

Court. And you carried the Portmanteau to Gort from Tiaquin?

Mac-Cay. Yes; I came from my Master from Tiaquin to Gort; he sent me on Saturday, and he came on Sunday Night.

Mr. Butler. My Lord, I will make it appear, by three or four Men of undoubted Credit, that Mr. Hurly did swear, at the Assizes of Ennis, that he was at Loughbrea before he went to Tiaquin, and, that he left the Portmanteau there, and did not carry it to a Tiaquin.

Mr. Butler. Did your Master pay for the Horse he hired? or, Did you hear he gave a Bond for it?

Mac-Cay. I do not know.

Court. Do you know of any Bond given by Mr.

Mr. Hurly, to pay the Hire of the Horse?

Mac-Cay. I do not know indeed, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. He said, his Master shew'd him the Money in Town, and said it was a Shame to pay it to Arthur. Now, did your Master pay the Money?

Mac-Cay. He told me, that Arthur promis'd to come to his House in the County of Clare; and, that he would make him take it on easier Terms than if he should pay it in Dublin.

Court. If he had the Money, why did he not pay it him?

Mac-Cay. He said, he hoped to compound with Arthur easier than to give him all that he demanded.

Mr. Bernard. My Client tells me, that this Mac-Cay is a material Witness, as to Calagban Carty: Do you know Calagban Carty?

Mac-Cay. Yes, very well.

Court. How long have you known him?

Mac-Cay. These two Years.

Court. Were you with him before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne?

Mac-Cay. Yes, I was; he made an Affidavit, and swore before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne.

Court. What was the Substance of it?

Mac-Cay. That he knew nothing of the Robbery; and, that he was much concern'd he had sworn against Mr. Hurly. They lodg'd at the Black-Bull in Church-Street.

Court. Are you confident, that this Calagban Carty swore before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne?

Mac-Cay. Yes, he did.

Mr. Butler. Where did you lie the Night before you went thro' Athlone?

Mac-Cay. I am not sure of the Name of any Place where we did lie since we left Dublin.

Mr. Butler. You are positive you did lie in a Place that had a Bridge upon a River?

Mac-Cay. Yes, I am.

Court. Pray, one Question more: You say, you have gone with Mr. Hurly several times to the Country; How often did he go Conaught Way?

Mac-Cay. He went always Conaught Way.

Court. How often has he gone, that you can recollect your self?

Mac-Cay. We came from the County of Clare the Summer after I came to him, to Loughbrea, and Eyres-Court, and over Banagher-Bridge, and so to Munster-Evin.

Court. Which is the Way you used always to go?

Mac-Cay. That Way; but that Time he went to Athlone.

Christopher O'Brien sworn.

Mr. Butler. Pray, Sir, by Virtue of your Oath, did you offer any Money to that Man?

O'Brien. No, upon my Oath.

Mr. Butler. Did you offer him Money, or promise to raise his Fortune, if he would give Evidence about Counters?

O'Brien. Never, my Lord; he came to me and told me, there was some came to his Master, and would swear, that ——— were come from France.

Court. Did you ever make him any Promise, or any Offer at all?

O'Brien. Never in my Life, my Lord.

Mac-Cay. Did not you, at the Swan-Tavern, when I carried a Letter to Capt. Bourk?

Court. How long ago was this?

Mac-Cay. Before the Term, I think.

Court. Was it before Christmas?

Mac-Cay. No, my Lord, it was after Christmas.

Court. Mr. Hurly, you know the Contrary to this your self: If you'll have me, I'll send for the Examination sworn by your self concerning this Matter.

Pat. Hurly. He speaks to him more than once.

Mr. Recorder. Had you any Discourse with Mr. O'Brien about the Counters?

Mac-Cay. Yes, once or twice.

Mr. Recorder. Had you any Discourse about them more than once?

Mac-Cay. He never spoke to me about the Counters, but once at the Swan-Tavern.

Court. That of Mr. O'Brien's tampering with this Man; Mr. Hurly, you are complain'd of before Christmas last. He said, he was once with a Letter at the Swan-Tavern; and, that Mr. O'Brien did there talk to him about tampering with other Witnesses; but it was before that, that you said Mr. O'Brien tamper'd with himself about the Counters.

Court. Where was it?

Mac-Cay. At the Tavern.

Court. At what Tavern?

Mac-Cay. The Swan.

Court. When was this?

Mac-Cay. Before Christmas, or a little before the last Term.

Court. He says, it was the Time of his delivering of a Letter.

Mac-Cay. My Lord, I deliver'd a Letter to Capt. Bourk at the Swan-Tavern, and, I think, it was before Christmas.

Court. So that you deliver'd more Letters than one?

Mac-Cay. I deliver'd several to him.

Court. This Gentleman is accus'd by this Mac-Cay; and how far that will weigh with any Man, must be left to the Jury.

Mr. Butler. This Mr. Mac-Cay was very positive, that the Portmanteau was carried to Tiaquin, and, that it was not left behind. I am ready to prove, by two or three credible Evidences, that Mr. Hurly did swear at the Affizes, that it was left behind at Loughbrea, and, that it was not carried to Tiaquin.

Mr. Bernard. My Lord, I desire we may first produce another Witness to the Subornation; John Crips, a Person suborn'd to swear against my Client.

John Crips sworn.
(Per Interpreter.)

Court. Where does he live? and, With whom?

Interp. He lives at Moughna, in the County of Clare.

Court. Ask him, what he can say of any tampering with him to swear against Mr. Hurly.

Interp. He says, one Halloway and Walter Neylan tamper'd with him: That Halloway sent for him three Weeks after Mr. Hurly was taken to Ennis, and he ran into a Rabbit-hole, for he was afraid of him, and sent his Wife to know what he would have of him.

Interp. And, my Lord, he is telling a long Story of this Halloway being a troublesome Man; and, that the whole Country would joyn with him, to give an ill Character of him, if it were not for the Persons he appears against. — And, he says, he was always inclin'd to do Evil, and every body was afraid of him.

Court. Ask him, Was there any Offer made to him?

Interp. He says, that Neylan and Halloway offered him Fifty Pounds to swear against Mr. Hurly, that he contriv'd the Robbery against himself.

Court. Were they both together? or, Did they speak to him severally?

Interp. They spoke to him severally.

Court. Ask him, Where was it that Halloway propos'd this to him?

Interp. About three Weeks after Mr. Hurly was put into Goal, he says, Halloway first spoke to him Court. Did Halloway speak to him any more than once?

Interp. He says, He desir'd him to go with him before Mr. O'Brien; and he offer'd him Six Guineas to go and prove the Matter, and, that he would give him the rest afterwards.

Court. Was any body by?

Interp. He says, No body.

Court. Where was it that Neylan offer'd him the Money?

Interp. He says, my Lord, that Halloway used several threatening Words, if he did not comply with what he desir'd him to do; and, that he would send him to Goal at Ennis, where he should not see the Light any more.

Court. Can he remember the Day that this was?

Interp. About Six Weeks after Hurly was taken.

Court. Where was it that Neylan proffer'd him any Reward, and what it was he offer'd him?

[At this the Fellow splutter'd, and made a terrible Noise in Irish.]

Interp. My Lord, he will not answer to the direct Question. He says, my Lord, that Halloway threaten'd him, and broke open his Doors, and came there with Arms, and brought a disbanded Soldier, and took him by the Hair of the Head, and threaten'd him, because he did not come to him at the Time appointed.

Court. Did he complain to any Justice?

Interp. He says, He complain'd to Mr. Fitz-Gerald.

Court. Pray ask him, what Neylan said to him.

Interp. He says, He offer'd him the grazing of Six Collops free, and an House and Garden during his Life, to swear against Patrick Hurly.

Mr. Butler. What Time was it that Neylan made him this Offer? and, in what Place?

Interp. My Lord, the Answer he made to that is, That Halloway, after he had taken him out of his Bed, and dragg'd him by the Hair of the Head, that then they and Neylan met.

Court. Where was it he met Neylan?

Interp. At Bally-Ryan, in a House there.

Court. What Time?

Interp. About a Month before Michaelmas last.

Court. Pray ask him, where it was that Mr. Neylan did tell him he would give him the Six Collops grazing, to swear against Patrick Hurly?

Interp. He says, he will recollect it: He says, last Summer.

Mr. Recorder. I am inform'd, my Lord, that while this Man was ask'd the Question, Hurly said, last Michaelmas. — Mr. Hurly. I never saw any Man, so far presum'd to be a Criminal, behave himself with so much Impudence before.

Court. Mr. Hurly, if you don't give over throwing out Words to your Witnesses, we must put you into the Dock. Ask him Interpreter, Does he know Calaghan Carty, that was Witness here to day?

Interp. He has known him since he was a little Boy, and his Father, Mother, and Family.

Court. What does he know of that Carty's Swearing before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne?

Interp. He says, my Lord, that he did Swear before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, and there was a great Lady and a young Man by.

Mr. Bernard. Now, as to Mr. Lynch, whether he made any Proposal or Offer, or had any Discourse with him on May-Day last?

Interp. He says, He saw him the Day before May-Day; and, that he was very civil to him: There was some Controversy between him and Mr. Hurly, about the Land of Moughna; and he said to me, Now Patrick Hurly is gone to Goal, and so is John too, and they are both in Irons, and they will never retrieve it, and you had best come and live with me in Conaught. He told him, That neither his Wife, nor his Mother-in-Law, would consent to go to Conaught. Says he, I have set the Land from the Hurly's to the Bloods, and Hurly shall never have any thing to say to it more.

Court. Did he ever persuade him to take a false Oath against Mr. Hurly?

Interp. He said, That in his Agreement with the Bloods, he reserv'd the Grazing of four Collops, which he should have, if he would swear, that he was one of the Robbers himself, and prove the Robbery upon Hurly: And he made answer to Lynch, Why should I do that, that will hang me? And then Lynch seem'd sorry that he had propos'd it to him.

Mr. Recorder. Ask him, Who was with him when Calaghan Carty swore an Examination before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne?

Interp. Daniel Hicky, Daniel Mac-Carty, Donogh O'Brien Andrews, and himself.

Mr. Recorder. How came he to go along with these Persons?

Interp. He says, That he came there to prevent being persuaded to take a false Oath.

Mr. Recorder. Does he know what Calaghan Carty swore?

Interp. He does not know.

Mr. Recorder. Who writ the Examination of Calaghan Carty?

Interp. He does not know.

Mr.

Mr. Butler. Was it written at my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne's? or, Had he it written before?

Interp. He brought it written to my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne.

Mr. Butler. My Lord, this Man does not seem to be a Man of any Credit. Neylan and Lynch are sworn, pray let them attend.

Court. If two Witnesses speak directly contrary one to the other, must not it be left to the Jury which they will believe? What does the Witness Crips say?

Interp. He desires a Guard, for the Safety of his Person.

Mr. Lynch stands up again.

Court. Mr. Lynch, had you ever any Discourse with this Man concerning Mr. Patrick Hurly and Mr. John Hurly's being in Goal?

Lynch. Yes, I had, my Lord: I said to him, that I heard he has been lately in Dublin, and, that he has been an Evidence for Hurly. No really, says he, I was not; I am weary of him, and if I could get these People, that you set the Land to, to let me be here a Year, I would not live any longer with him.

Court. Did you offer him the grazing of four Collops?

Lynch. I never did, my Lord.

Mr. Butler. The Credit of this Gentleman, and of that Fellow, is left to the Jury.

Lynch. This Discourse was about this Time Twelvemonth, at the Fair of Moughna, and Richard Hurly, Patrick's Uncle, declar'd to me, that it was a Sham-Robbery.

Walter Neylan stands up again.

Court. Mr. Neylan, had you any Discourse with this Man about Mr. Hurly?

Neylan. I never had any Discourse with him, or saw the Man, till this Day, never since he was born.

Court. What Time was it, he says, that he had this Discourse with Neylan?

Mr. Butler. In the Place where he says he had the Discourse with Neylan in a House; there never was a House, nor so much as a Hut there.

Neylan. No, my Lord, there never was a House there in my Memory.

Court. Mr. Neylan, how far is this Moughna from you?

Neylan. Three Miles.

Mr. Bernard. And you not know this Man!

Mr. Wakeham, my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne's Clerk, sworn.

Court. Mr. Wakeham, Sir, pray do you know any Person that came to swear Examinations before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, concerning the Robbery of Mr. Hurly in the County of Clare?

Mr. Wakeham. My Lord, there came four Men, but I was busy; the Gentleman read the Examinations.

Court. Do you know the Persons?

Mr. Wakeham. I do not know 'em; they were ordinarily clad; there was a Gentleman, one Mr. Terry, that brought 'em.

Daniel Hicky sworn.

Mr. Bernard. Pray give my Lord an Account of any Offers that were made you, or Threats used to you, to make you swear against Mr. Hurly?

Daniel Hicky. I told it twice before, my Lord, in August last. My Lord, I was taken by William Holloway and Thomas Bourk; they took me to Goal, and they bolted me; and there was Mr. Neylan in the Goal, and he spoke to me about the Robbery that was committed on Mr. Hurly. I said, I knew nothing of it at all: And he told me, I would be hang'd, for it was sworn against me: And I was brought before Mr. Hickman and Cusack, and they told me, That there was one Carty had sworn that I was at the robbing of Mr. Hurly, by his own Consent; and, that if I did not declare it, I should be hang'd; and said, That Mr. Hurly will hang us if we say we robb'd him. Never heed him, said they, it will be no Harm to any Man that swears against him.

Court. How long did you remain in Goal?

Hicky. I was kept in Goal till August, from the 26th of March.

Court. Was any body with you?

Hicky. Calaghan Carty and Daniel Carty.

Court. What had you a Day?

Hicky. We had Twelve Pence a Day; and Mr. Neylan brought red Coats, and would have us swear we had those Coats on when we robb'd Mr. Hurly. And they carried us before Mr. Butler, and we would not swear; and then we got but Nine Pence a Day.

Court. Did you swear, that Mr. Hurly was not robb'd?

Hicky. I did swear, that I was not at the robbing of him my self.

Court. But were you examin'd about this Robbery before Mr. Hickman and Mr. Cusack?

Hicky. They desir'd me to swear, that I was at the robbing of Mr. Hurly with Daniel Carty; and they told me, I should be hang'd if I did not swear it.

Court. Did you swear it?

Hicky. Yes, I did.

Mr. Bernard. After you satisfied these Gentlemen's Importunity, how long was it before you were discharg'd out of Prison?

Hicky. I was kept in Prison till after the Assizes.

Court. Who did you swear was with you at the Robbery?

Hicky. Calaghan Carty, Donogh O'Brien, and Daniel Carty.

Court. Has he any other Name but Donogh O'Brien?

Hicky. Yes, he generally goes by the Name of Donogh O'Brien Andrews; some call him so: His Name is Donogh O'Brien.

Court. How came you to get your Discharge out of Prison?

Hicky. My Lord, when my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne came, we were carried to the Bar. When I was at the Bar, I was told I must take the Affidavit against Mr. Hurly, and if I would not, I should should return to Goal again. — The Goaler would let no body come near the Bar; for we said, We will tell the Truth, and would not tell a Lye against Mr. Hurly. And he went out, and came in again, and took us back to the Goal.

Mr. Bernard. How long after this were you discharg'd?

Hicky. We petition'd my Lord Chief-Justice, and sent after him to Limerick, but got no Answer; and then they sent a Mittimus to keep us in Goal. They said, If we got Bail, they would enlarge us: So Donogh O-Brien's Friends were bound for him, and I got a Friend to be bound for me; and I was bound for another of the Prisoners.

Court. Did you ever make an Affidavit before my Lord Chief-Justice?

Hicky. Yes, we came to Town, and made an Affidavit before him.

Court. Who was with you?

Hicky. Calaghan Carty, Donogh O-Brien, Daniel Carty, and Crips.

Mr. Foster. After you gave in that Affidavit, and went home, what did you do then?

Hicky. We went home then; and we heard that they had a Warrant against us.

Court. You say, you swore before the Lord Chief-Justice, and, that Calaghan Carty, Crips, and Donogh O-Brien were there: And you are very sure that Calaghan Carty was one?

Hicky. Yes, he knows me, and I know him; he is my Relation.

Court. Mr. Neylan, you are upon your Oath: Did you see this Person in the Goal at Ennis? Pray give an Account of what pass'd there, and what Fine was put upon him, to make him discover.

Neylan. My Lord, when he came to Goal, he fought for me, and I told him that one had discover'd: And he ask'd me, what I would advise him to do? and I said, I'd advise him to discharge a good Conscience.

Mr. Justice Coote. I am not a Judge of the Fact, but the Jury is. Hicky, you were brought before me; and when I examin'd you, you went backward and forward, and I committed you that Night to the Goaler's Care; and when you were brought into the Court, you said, You would stand by the Examination you swore before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did Mr. Hickman persuade you to do when, he tamper'd with you?

Hicky. When Walter Neylan went from me, I was brought to Mr. Hickman and Cusack; and they told me, there was an Examination of Mr. Daniel Carty. It is in vain for you, said they, to deny the Fact; but you must say what we will have you to say, or else you shall be hang'd; for Carty has sworn, That you and he were at the robbing of Hurly; That you left all the Gold and Linnen in his Barn for him.

Mr. Attor. Gen. And did Mr. Cusack say so too?

Hicky. Yes, he did say so.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What should be the Seducement of Mr. Hickman, or Cusack, to have you forswear your self?

Hicky. There was a Contrivance between Halloway, Hickman, and Carty, to swear.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But why should Mr. Hickman do this? What End could he have in it?

Hicky. I cannot tell.

Mr. Attor. Gen. You Hicky, is Mr. Hickman a Papist, or Mr. Cusack?

Hicky. No, Sir.

Mr. Attor. Gen. For what Purpose should they come to you, to have you forswear your self?

Hicky. They did do it.

Mr. Dean. What became of that Note Mr. Hickman and Cusack gave you?

Hicky. Calaghan had it, and brought it to Town.

Mr. Butler. Hicky, you were examin'd at this Bar before: Did not you swear the same Thing against Mr. Cusack? And after, when he came into Court, and you saw him, did not you retract in open Court what you swore before? Did you? or, Did you not?

Hicky. I cannot tell what I did: I told him that he gave me the Note.

Mr. J. Coote. Then I'll tell you what you did. Mr. Cusack, to the best of my remembrance, came to the Side-Bar there. Mr. Hurly, you were there; and after Mr. Cusack came in, this Person was asked the Question, Whether that Mr. Cusack tamper'd with him? And he said, No, that he only desired him to swear nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Huish sworn.

Mr. J. Coote. I'll ask Mr. Huish a Question or two; for such a Fellow as this is not to be endured. Mr. Huish, was not you present when this Man was brought before me?

Mr. Huish. I was, my Lord.

Court. I only ask, what happened in my House, as to the Behaviour of this Man?

Mr. Huish. When I came first, the Book was put into his Hand, and he was sworn: But, on Examination, he seemed to be fullen, and would not answer: But he owned, that the Examination he gave in the Goal was false, and the Examination he gave before my Lord Chief-Justice was true. And when you sat down to reduce what he said into Writing, he began to retract. When it was written, that he said, that before my Lord Chief-Justice was true, and the other false, he began to fall off and falter, and said, Did I say so? You examined him alone that time, and gave him Encouragement to speak the Truth. And after it was asked, Had you rather be examined before the Judge alone, or before all the People here? Then he was for being examined before the Judge alone. So I went out, and left him and this Daniel Hicky together for near three Quarters of an Hour: Then your Lordship called us in, and said, this Fellow is fullen, and will not give any Account.

Mr. J. Coote. I did press this Man to tell the Truth; did Hickman or any of those People entice him to swear any false Oath? and one Time he said, They did not; and another Time he said, They did.

Mr. Foster.

Mr. Foster. Did he at any Time desire that his Examination should be deferr'd, until he came to Court the next Day?

Mr. Huish. Truly, I don't remember that Particular.

Mr. Foster. Hicky, What was the Meaning, that when you were examined before Mr. Justice Coot, that you said, Did I say it? or did I not say it?

Hicky. I was afraid some of them would swear against me: They were following me all Day—Mr. O'Brien's Man was after me: And Mr. Huonin came and told me, I should be hang'd if I did it not.

Donogh O'Brien Andrews sworn.

Mr. Foster. My Lord, if it please your Lordship, I desire he may give an Account of this Matter.

O'Brien.—My Lord, I was then Prisoner by Thomas Bourk, and they would shew no Warrant, till they had ty'd me with a Cord, carried me to Emis, and bolted me; and afterwards brought me before Mr. Hickman—And they told me, that Daniel Carty had given an Examination against me, that I was one of the Persons employed to rob Hurly; and that if I did swear as Carty did, I should have the same Reward Carty had; and that it was not for me to pretend to live in the County of Clare, if I did not swear as Carty did.

Court. And did you swear then?

O'Brien. If your Lordship pleases, I'll declare the Matter.—Tom Hickman and John Cusack told me, that I had Reason to curse the Time that I did not swear as Daniel Carty did.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long is it since Mr. Hickman and you were so familiar, that you call him Tom?

O'Brien. They said, I should be hang'd for it, if there were no more Men in the Kingdom; and I was accordingly sent into the Dungeon, and hand-cuff'd, and they came and ty'd me, and told me, that Calaghan Carty and Daniel Carty had sworn; and they would put a Lump of Gold in my Wife's Lap, if I would swear I was employed to rob Mr. Hurly: And Halloway came to me, and said, Declare the Truth of the Matter, and swear as the rest did, and I'll go and speak to the Goaler, and get you eased as well as Carty. Every Day Halloway came to me and said, I should want for nothing, if I would swear as they did. So on Sunday Morning a Yoke was brought to me, and they were going to yoke me, but they did not do it; and after Service, that Sunday, Tom Buck came to me, and told me, they came from Tom Hickman, and if I did not say as the rest had said, I should be hanged; but I was weary of the Bolt and Hand-cuff, and I had not my Friends to come near me, nor my Wife, so I resolved I would do any thing, rather than lie in the Condition I was in, and I said, I would swear what they pleased.

Court. And did you swear?

O'Brien. My Lord, upon this Answer my Bolts were taken off, and the Hand-cuff; and I was carried abroad to William Butler, and he asked me, when I came before him, Why I was so obstinate against the County, as I had been? But if you resolve to do it now, says he, it will do as well; and if you swear as the rest did, you shall have as good a Reward as Daniel Carty, and twelve Pence a Day, during the Time you was confined.

Court. Did you not repeat the Words he had then written down?—Did not you speak the Words he had written?

O'Brien. No, I did not.

Court. But you swore to them afterwards—Did he read the Examination to you?

O'Brien. Yes, he did.

Court. Did you swear to it?

O'Brien. Yes, I did it to ease my self.

Mr. Recorder. Is the Examination true, at this Day?

O'Brien. No, it is not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire that Examination may be read, and he may tell us, what part of it is true, and what not.

O'Brien. My Lord, I after went to Goal, and received the Allowance Mr. Butler ordered me, twelve Pence a Day—And, my Lord, some time in Summer before the Assizes, Walter Neylan, that was now in Court, brought down one of Mr. Hurly's Coats, and asked us, Whether we knew these Coats that we wore in the Robbery?—He told us, Mr. Butler desired us to swear to the Coats; but we refused to do it; and then we were turned into the Goal, and 6d. of the 1 s. taken from us.

Mr. Robbins. Were you sworn last August, and before whom?

O'Brien. Before the Lord Chief-Justice Pyne.

Mr. Robbins. Did Calaghan Carty make an Affidavit at the same time?

O'Brien. Yes, he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who writ your Examination?

O'Brien. I writ it my self.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who writ Calaghan Carty's Examination?

O'Brien. I do not know; I was by at the swearing of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who writ Hicky's Examination?

O'Brien. He writ it himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long were you in Town before you gave in your Examination?

O'Brien. It was not passing three or four Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who came into your Company?

O'Brien. No body, until I came to Kiltartan, and that Night Madam Hurly came into the House, and lay in the House that Night, she and her Brother.—She ask'd me where I was going? I told her, I was coming to Town to declare the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And did you come to Town in their Company?

O'Brien. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And what other Company came along with you and Mrs. Hurly?

O'Brien. There was no body but Terry and Crips.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And within three or four Days after you came, you swore the Examination?

O'Brien. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long after you came to Town, did you see Calaghan Carty?

O'Brien. I saw him at Kilcock, before I came to Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And where did you meet Daniel Hicky?

O'Brien. Coming towards Kilcock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was remarkable, that he should accidentally meet Mrs. Hurly and her Brother at Kiltartan, and Calaghan Carty and Hicky and she should meet on the Road and Way together, to clear their Consciences! — Did Hicky, Carty and you lie in one Lodging?

O'Brien. I lay in Church-street.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And Calaghan Carty and Hicky lay there too?

O'Brien. Yes, they did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you examin'd in Irons?

O'Brien. No, I was not: I had them taken off me, and was carry'd abroad; and I was told, That if I did not swear as the rest did, I should be hang'd in eight Days time.

Mr. Recorder. Would Mr. Butler make you forswear your self?

O'Brien. He would make me swear as the rest did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Distance from the Goal was you examin'd?

O'Brien. Near the Goal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Hand-cuffs, or Irons, when examined.

O'Brien. No, I had not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I must ask this Man, whether his Father be in Town, and whether he had any Discourse with his Father — Do you know your Father?

O'Brien. I know my reputed Father.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. By Virtue of your Oath, Did you see your Father since you came to Town?

O'Brien. No, I did not.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Had you any Discourse with your Father concerning this pretended Robbery? — And did you say any thing to him about it, and what was't?

O'Brien. I saw him at Home; I never acknowledged to him I was concern'd in this Robbery.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, my Lord, did he declare to his Father, that he was concern'd in this Sham-Robbery?

O'Brien. No, I did not.

Mr. Recorder. Did you tell your Father any thing of the Contrivance; or would your Father have prevail'd with you to own you were in the Robbery?

O'Brien. Yes, he would.

Mr. Recorder. Did you ever tell your Father, that you used Mr. Hurly's own Arms in the Robbery?

O'Brien. No, I did not.

Mr. Recorder. Well, now we'll call your Father.

Donogh O'Brien Andrews senior sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, upon the Oath you have taken, give an Account of what Discourse pass'd between your Son and you about this Robbery?

Donogh O'Brien Andrews senior. My Lord, this will be look'd upon to be very strange, and very unnatural, for a Father to appear against his Son; yet I must have regard to my Oath, and shall not be backward to declare the Truth — When this Robbery happen'd, some time pass'd, before the Contrivance of it was fully discovered, and when my Son was taken and carry'd to Goal about it, I did not go near him for three Weeks. When I went to him, I was passionately concern'd for him, and I ask'd him, What should make him so wicked, as to be concern'd in such a Fact, as he and the other Rogues were accused of? And I asked him with Vehemence, Did you do it? He said, Yes, I did do it; and he never deny'd it, nor no one doubted of it until such time as he went afterwards to Dublin. The Particulars I was not curious in asking him, because I had an Account of them from others; and all Men allowed them to be true, because they own'd it themselves. After the Assizes, and that they came out of Goal, I took Opportunity to discourse my Son; but found by him, that he had no mind to discourse me — But then, my Lord, I asked him one Day, Whose Arms he had; were they Patrick Hurly's? Says he, Where else should I get Arms.

Court. Had you all this Discourse with your Son Donogh O'Brien, that young Man there?

Old Donogh. Yes, I had.

Young Donogh O'Brien. When he taxed me with this, I was indifferent in the matter; and when he asked me about the Arms, Whether they were Patrick Hurly's Arms? What else, said I.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is the rest that your Father said true or not? You have heard what your Father said, That you confessed to him you were concern'd in the Robbery?

Young Donogh. I said what I told you of the Arms; but as to the other part, I do not remember that ever I said it to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Old Man, Do you remember?

Old Donogh. Aye very well, too well, to my Sorrow.

Mr. Recorder. Young Man, Do you believe that he is relating Truth or not?

Young Donogh. I do not know whether he is or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you a married Man?

Young Donogh. Yes, I am.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who are you married to? What Relation is your Wife to Mr. Hurly?

Young Donogh. Mr. Hurly is her Uncle.

Mr. Foster. Old Man, What Relation are you to Sir Donogh O'Brien?

Old Donogh. I know no Consanguinity between Sir Donogh O'Brien and me: But Sir Donogh purchased the Reversion of my Farm, and I live in it, paying him Rent.

Patrick Hurly. Pray whose Horse, and whose Expence brought him here?

Old Donogh. The Horse belongs to one Mr. Everbing.

Patrick Hurly. At whose Charge?

Old Donogh. At the County's Charge, who prosecuted you for Perjury.

Court.

Court. Do you expect any Abatement of your Rent?

O. Donogh. I am so far from it, that I am raised 50 l. this Year more than ever.

Court. By whom?

O. Donogh. By my Landlord, Sir Donogh O'Brien.

Court. Are you to have an Abatement from Sir Donogh O'Brien, after this Year?

O. Donogh. I am not to have any. I have not any Trick or Quillet in any way: I do not expect any thing of that sort.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is another Part of this Young O'Brien Andrews's Evidence, that relates to the Justice of the Peace, Mr. Butler, and he is here in Court.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Your Lordship has heard the Evidence of this young Donogh O'Brien Andrews, wherein he has been flinging against a whole Court and County.

Court. It was never otherwise; tho' a Justice of Peace be in the just Execution of his Office, yet when Criminals come to be charged, they'll recriminate those that appear against them.

William Butler sworn.

William Butler. My Lord, I had an Account, that this Sham-Robbery, that Mr. Hurly set up, as I do believe, was discovered by Carty; and I had an Account that Donogh O'Brien, that young Man, was in Goal, and was willing to make an ample Discovery too; and I rid to Ennis, and went to my Quarters where I generally lodge, and sent to the Goaler for him, who brought him to me; and then I told him, my Business to Town was to examine him, if he were willing to give a true Account of the Matter. He went then about proposing to make Bargains with me, but I told him I had no more to say; but if he would give a true Account of the Robbery of Mr. Hurly, any Kindness I could do for him, it should be done. He said, he was afraid of the Gallows; and, sitting down, gave me that Examination which he has given me, and I have writ it down faithfully, as distinctly and truly, as if it was for Life and Death; and I promised him nothing, nor threatened him. He seemed to be so penitent for being concerned in the Action, and was so much troubled that it was discovered against Mr. Hurly, that he wept a great deal in my Company, and did declare, That if others had not discovered against Mr. Hurly, he never would. And I parted with him, and bid the Goaler be civil to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Butler, Did you tell him, that he should be hanged, if he did not swear?

Butler. By Virtue of my Oath, I did not.

Y. Donogh. Did not you tell me, the Quarter-Sessions was adjourned for a Week longer, on account of this Commission of Oyer and Terminer?

Butler. No, by Virtue of my Oath, I did not — I sent for Mr. Hickman, and he was with me by the time I went midway thro' this his Examination; and when I had finish'd it, it was read to him distinctly, and he swore to it.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship be pleased, the Examination that was taken by Mr. Butler, I desire it may be read Paragraph by Paragraph.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this Information written by Mr. Butler out of his own Head; or did you give him that Account as it is down there, or is it a Story framed by him?

Y. Donogh. Mr. Butler writ it. I told him several Things, but he framed them as he pleased himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Information did you give then to Mr. Butler?

Y. Donogh. I don't remember.

M. Sol. Gen. 'Tis impossible for any Man to frame such a Thing out of his own Head

Mr. Foster. Whether there was not a Report, that there was a Commission to come down of Oyer and Terminer?

Mr. Butler. They did talk so, but I had no Discourse of it; I used him mildly, and only desired him to tell the Truth.

The Examination read.

Mr. Recorder. Did you lie at Daniel O'Keane's House that Night after the Robbery?

William Butler. Yes, I did.

Mr. Recorder. Who told Mr. Butler that?

Y. Donogh. I told him it.

Donogh O'Brien's Second Examination, taken before Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, read; where he answers what he swore in the former.

Mr. Foster. I desire, my Lord, the Examination before Baron Ecklin may be read.

[Clerk reads Calagan Carty's Examination before Baron Ecklin.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I desire the same Method may be observ'd in this, as in other Cases; for Hands may be alike, and not the same.

Mr. Robbins. Here has been two Examinations of Calagan Carty; one he owns, the other he denies. Now, my Lord, we have produc'd three or four Witnesses, that he was never before my Lord Chief-Justice, and there swore, that what he had formerly swore in the Country was false, that Patrick Hurly did contrive a Robbery against himself.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Robbins (with submission, my Lord,) is mightily mistaken; they said, there was an Examination taken before my Lord Chief-Justice, but not that this was it.

Mr. Butler. You cannot here read an Affidavit sworn before a Baron of the Exchequer; there is no Colour for it.

Court. Calagan Carty, Pray, were you examin'd before any of the Judges as to that Matter?

Carty. No, my Lord, never in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Never in his Life. — There is no proving it but by my Lord Chief-Justice, and to prove that this is the Man; for a Man may come in the Name of another Person and swear, and the Man he personates know nothing of the Matter. — Who drew your Examination, Donogh O'Brien?

G g g 2

Carty.

Carty. I did it my self.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And who drew Hicky's?

Carty. Himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And who drew Calaghan Carty's?

— I can't tell.

Court. I never knew an Examination, but where the Person was examin'd, whether it was true or not; otherwise it goes for nothing; and if the Person does not own it now, it must be prov'd upon him.

Mr. Foster. My Lord, an Examination given in before the Court, and upon Record, we come and desire it may be read, to confront an Evidence; for this Man is forsworn.

Court. I had the Curiosity my self, for the Satisfaction of Justice, to send for my Lord Chief-Justice's Clerk, Mr. Wakebam, and examin'd him here in open Court. Being examin'd, I remember, said he, there did come such four Men, and they were sworn before my Lord Chief-Justice; but, that this is one of the Men, I cannot swear.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I have no such Examination at all. If you please, read the Affidavit before Baron Ecklin.

Mr. Recorder. [Comparing the Affidavits.] These are both the same, Word for Word, drawn both by Mr. Terry; they are both his Hand-writing.

Mr. Butler. I desire Mr. William Butler may give an Account (he is sworn) about the Portmanteau; Whether Mr. Hurly did not swear, that he left the Portmanteau at Loughbrea, at Bargery's House, whilst he went to see his Brother at Tiaquin?

Christopher O'Brien. My Lord, I ask'd Patrick Hurly, what Care he took of his Money at his coming to the Country? he said, He left it at Loughbrea, and would not carry it to Tiaquin, for that was a loose Family. — This he told at his own House, after he had sworn it in the Court.

Mr. Taylor sworn.

Mr. Butler. Mr. Taylor, declare what you know of Mr. Hurly's swearing at the Assizes, about the Portmanteau.

Mr. Taylor. I was at the Assizes at Ennis, and Mr. Hurly swore, that he left his Portmanteau at Loughbrea when he went to Tiaquin; and, that he told Mr. Bargery there was Matters of great Consequence in the Portmanteau, and desir'd him to take care of it; and, that Bargery did so, and deliver'd it safe to him at his Return.

Mr. Hurly. Mr. Butler knows the County of Galloway: I desire to know, whether it is likely for me, going to the County of Clare, that I should leave my Portmanteau at Loughbrea, and come back again?

Mr. Butler. I don't know that; but you did swear it.

Mr. Recorder. And his Man swore he carried it with him to Tiaquin. So 'tis — Trim Tram, like Master like Man, both forsworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, the Persons produc'd by Mr. Hurly are Men, by their own Confession, who at some Time or other were forsworn; and they are such Men as have nothing between them and the Gallows but this Shifting: They are sensible no Jury can believe them.

Mr. Robbins. My Lord, we are charg'd but with one Indictment; there is but one Venire, I think.

Mr. Butler. There are two.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Mr. Robbins, if your Client be guilty of the Perjury, clear him of the Cheat if you can.

Court. The constant Practice of this Court is, That if there goes a Venire between the King and a Party indicted, and that there be several Indictments against the same Party, the Court will charge the Jury with 'em all, unless he comes in by Council, and shew some good Cause why you cannot go on with some of 'em.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, I think that the Contrivance is made out so fully to the Satisfaction of every Man present, that there never was stronger Evidence than of both these Villainies, the Perjury, and Conspiracy to Cheat. When a Man has liv'd extravagantly, and then goes about all manner of Ways to retrieve himself, if Perjury goes unpunish'd, it shall lie at the Door of those Gentlemen that have heard this Matter so fully prov'd to day; and this poor Country must suffer by Perjury, if Care be not taken to suppress it. 'Tis now growing late, and I will not take up more Time in summing up this long Evidence to the Jury, but leave it to the Court.

Mr. Justice Coote. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long Evidence; and I will repeat the Heads of it to you as well as I can, that you may discharge your selves with Honour and Conscience. You have taken an Oath, and I hope you will not be led to the preventing of Justice, one way or the other. Mr. Hurly stands indicted here of Perjury, for making a false corrupt Oath before a Justice of Peace, Mr. Blood; before whom he swore, in an Examination, that was read in Evidence, That he was robb'd of so many Guineas, Pistoles, and other Goods, at his Father's House in Moughna, in the County of Clare: That he was robb'd by four Persons, whose Names he knows not, but by their Tone they seem'd to be Irishmen; and, that the same was not done by any Contrivance of his. After which, he did exhibit a Petition to the Judges of Assize, and did endeavour to recover from the County the Value of what he was so robb'd of.

Gentlemen, Mr. Dean Blood prov'd to you, That the Prisoner at the Bar did take his Oath, that the Contents of the said Examination was true, and, that he sign'd it in his Presence.

Gentlemen, the first Witness that was produc'd unto you to prove the Perjury, and that Mr. Hurly was not robb'd, but had sworn falsely in that Information, was one Calaghan Carty: And he being sworn, tells you, That at the Time that this Robbery was committed he was in Mr. Hurly's Service; and, that Mr. Hurly came to him, and made Moan to him, that he did owe Money; and, that he could pay his Debts if this same Calaghan Carty would observe his Directions, and do what he would have him to do; and, that thereupon this Calaghan Carty did tell him, he would; and the Direction was, That he should joyn other Persons, he nam'd, and put on a Disguise, and take an Opportunity when Mr. Ronane was at the House, and personate themselves selves to be Robbers, and take away the Goods and Money out of the House, and when they should have so done, to return them again. And this Calaghan Carty was to go to one Mr. Foster's for a Suit of black Clothes, and he was to come back again. These were the Orders he receiv'd, by the Direction of Mr. Hurly. He tells you, That he did accordingly join the rest; that they had Coats, Disguises, and Swords left for 'em in the Barn, which they took and put on; that they did actually bolt into the House at Mr. Ronane's coming out of the Door, and took those Fire-Arms that were laid for 'em; and, that they had their Intelligence from Mr. Hurly, the better to personate their being Robbers. And he tells you, That part of them went up to Mr. Hurly's Chamber, and there took the Bag; and, that they were directed by Mr. Hurly to pour it out before Mr. Ronane (the better to make the Pretence out against the County) and likewise, when they should get in, tie Mr. Hurly and Mr. Ronane; and, that a Bed-cord was laid in the Window for that Purpose: And he tells you, that they had fir'd off the Fire-Arms, and, that there was nothing in them but Powder. And, Gentlemen, you will see anon how far this Man swears the Truth, out of the Mouths of Mr. Hurly's own Evidence.

Mr. Hurly, to lessen this Man's Credit, has produc'd to you several Witnesses, who swear, That he swore an Examination before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, or Baron Ecklin; wherein he pretends, that this Calaghan Carty swears directly contrary to what he swore in his Information before a Justice of the Peace in the Country, and to what he pleads now. To this Calaghan Carty says, He never swore any Examination before any Judge; and if any was sworn in his Name, it was done by some other, that did personate him. That Examination was produc'd here; but there was no Evidence, that this Calaghan Carty was the Person that swore it, and he deny'd that the Name to it was his Hand-writing; and he seems to be too ignorant a Person to contrive such an Examination. Now, whether you credited him, or those Persons that swore against him, is left to you.

The next Witness in behalf of the King is Margaret Conneene: She tells you, That she was a Servant in the House, and, that these Persons did come into the House; and she hearing Murder cry'd out by Mr. Hurly's Servant, she came out of the Kitchen: She tells you, that they made several Shots, particularly at her, and, that there was no Hurt done, nor any Marks of the Shot or Bullets in the Wall. She tells you, That at first she was of Opinion, that it was a real Robbery; but afterwards, discoursing with Calaghan Carty, he told her how it was: And besides, that she was of another Opinion upon the account of a Table-cloth taken away at the Time of the Robbery, which she saw afterwards come back in a Trunk or Portmanteau that was sent to Mr. O'Brien after the Robbery.

Walter Neylan was likewise sworn; who gives you an Account, that he was in Prison at Ennis for Hurly's Debt, being bound for him to one Thomas Arthur, and that he was in the Prison when Hurly was brought thither; that they were Chamber-fellows: That Mr. Hurly did go so far in the Confession of this Fact to him, that when Daniel Carty became a Discoverer, and began to accuse Mr. Hurly of this Matter, Donogh O'Brien Andrews junior, who was then likewise in the same Goal, did desire to know of him, what Method Mr. Hurly would take to get him discharg'd; and, that if he could not do it soon, that he must be forc'd to confess the whole Truth: And he swears, That he did acquaint Hurly therewith; who said, that he should be undone if the said O'Brien Andrews should confess it; and gave him a Piece of Money to give to the said O'Brien, and bid him tell him, that he would soon get him discharg'd. Neylan was so cautious of this, that he would not do it himself; but one Daniel Carty being present, he gave him the Money, and he gave it to O'Brien: That O'Brien said, This will not do, I must and will tell the Truth. He says, Mr. Hurly went so far, that he told him he would give any Gratification in the World to prevent Donogh O'Brien's coming in against him; for, if he did, he should be ruin'd entirely. Against this, Mr. Hurly says, that Neylan was exasperated for being in Prison thro' his Means, so that he tamper'd with Witnesses, and became his inveterate Enemy; and not only swore falsely himself, but tamper'd with others to swear falsely too; of which he has offer'd such Evidence, as I shall observe to you hereafter.

The next Evidence, Gentlemen, that was produc'd to you, was one Charles Mac-Donogh. He tells you, That he was employ'd as a Solicitor to Mr. Hurly; and, that he was intimately acquainted with Mr. Hurly, and knew a great deal of his Concerns; and, that one Night, being come back from Dublin, the very Time before he was robbed, he talk'd with him, and said, He was a strange Man to come to the Country without Money; and, that it would be too hot for him; that the present Sheriff was Mr. Arthur's Friend; and says, that Hurly did even then fortify his House, because he look'd upon himself to be in no condition to pay his Debts; that he was so extremely poor, that he durst not appear. He tells you, that Mr. Hurly did tell him, that he brought down Money; and tho' he did tell him so, that yet he did not believe it; because when he told him of the Sheriff, Hurly said, that Sir Toby Butler and Colonel Macnamarra had a great Influence upon the Sheriff, and would make Interest with him, so that he will do me no Harm.

He tells you, That much about this Time Mr. Hurly employ'd himself in reading Acts of Parliament, and one of 'em was the Act relating to the Articles of Limerick and Gallway; and, that he had some Discourse of being comprehended within the Articles of Gallway. That Mr. Mac-Donogh told him, he thought he was then in France, and that he was not there; and he said, He would prove that he was then in Gallway: And reading the Rapparee Act, he said, That it was a very pretty Way for Persons to recover Money from the County. He tells you, Gentlemen, that after this he left Mr. Hurly, and Capt. O'Brien writ him word that he was robb'd, and desir'd that he would come and sollicite at the Assizes of Ennis on his behalf: But he was so far from believing that he was robb'd, or yielding to that Design, Design, that he writ back a Drolling Letter, as he calls it himself, and he did not think it proper to be concern'd for him. He further tells you, That there were some Persons that gave an Account to him of certain Counters, one Hicky's Wife, and, that if her Husband might be produced, he and she might make great Discoveries relating to these Counters.

This took Wind, and the Justices of the Peace gave a Warrant to the High-Constable, Walter Huonin, to search for those Counters. They came to the Place where this Hurly liv'd; the first Time he miss'd, but the second Time he sent one before, to take care that nothing might be remov'd: And when he came there, he observ'd there was a Dunghil; and, by the Behaviour of Hicky's Wife, he had reason to suspect that Place. He tells you, That the Woman held the Candle, and in digging the Place where the Dunghil lay, at length the Spade hit upon a Slate where the Counters lay: That he took up a Bag wrapp'd about with Hay, he call'd it a Suggane; and, that there those Counters, which he has here produced, were taken up. He told you, That the Woman was under so much Consternation, that she dropt the Candle; and when she was told she must go along with him, she said, Now that was found, she believ'd she must.

The next Person examin'd was Thomas Edwards. He swears, He was employ'd to go along with Walter Huonin; That he saw a Youth on his Knees by the Dunghil: He ask'd him what he was doing? he said, He was hiding his Potatoes; but he saw no Potatoes, which made him suspect that Dunghil; and, that digging there, they found the Counters, as Huonin has given an Account.

The next Man that was sworn was Mortagh Mac-Carty. He tells you, He had bought a Cow, and that she had stray'd away from him, and finding of her, and bringing her home, he call'd at this Place, where Hicky's Wife was, and she agreed to buy his Cow, and she brought out two Pieces of Gold, which she call'd Guineas: Says he, These are not Guineas; I believe this is some of Patrick Hurly's Gold. He ask'd her what she would take for them? and he said, I have Three Pence Half-penny, and a Quarter of Tobacco, which I'll give you for them; and she took it, and wish'd that the rest were sold so too. He says, He acquainted Sir Donogh O-Brien of this, and he directed him to Mr. Bindon, a Justice of the Peace, where he gave in the Examination; He produced to you these two Pieces, which you have here compar'd with the rest of the Counters.

Gentlemen, the next Person that was sworn was one Joseph Lynch. He tells you, That he was very well acquainted with Mr. Patrick Hurly, and, that John Hurly was married to his Sister; and, that Mr. Hurly, before or about Christmas, came to Loughbrea; and, that at one Mr. Henry Bargery's House they were both together a drinking; and, that Mr. Hurly taking out some Linnen out of his Portmanteau, he saw a Bag that held about a Quart; and taking it to be Money, he look'd into it, and found in it all Counters; and he ask'd him what he did with them? he said, He intended to make use of them for his Diversion. He tells you after this, That he walk'd with Mr. Hurly part of the Way, and, that Hurly discours'd him about Mr. Banks's Robbery. Mr. Lynch told him, that the Country had found for Banks, and, that he propos'd something in relation to his own Robbery, if Mr. Lynch would assist him; what a pretty Way it was to get Money! Lynch told him, in what was honest and just he would assist him, but in nothing else. Mr. Hurly then fell into Discourse with him about his Farm, and said, he would give up his Farm too, if he would come into the Design he had to get Money. Mr. Lynch answer'd as before, If it be honest and just, I will; if not, I will not; and for the Farm, said he, I'll force you to do that without it.

He tells you, That Mr. Hurly sent a Trunk of Linnen to his House after the Robbery was committed; and, that Mr. Hurly did desire no Body should see the Trunk with him; that he heard his Brother Bourk say, That it was Linnen, but he did not mind it, his Wife being then sick; and says, they took away the Trunk that same Night after Mr. Hurly was in Goal. He tells you, he had the Curiosity to go and see him in the Goal of Ennis, and after discoursing with him, he said, He had done something very irregular in France, and now to come into the Country and charge it with a Robbery, was very ill.

The next Evidence is Charles Cassidy, Surgeon; and he gives an Account, That this Hurly's Father being sick, his Sister sent for him to come there; and after he came, they sent for one Dr. Brodin, a Relation of Mr. Hurly's; and, that this Brodin and he, some Time after, went to visit some other Patients; and being abroad, Brodin propos'd to him, says he, Mr. Hurly gives you small Fees, I can put you in a Way to get 20 Guineas; and told him of the Design, and how he might be a Party concern'd in the pretended Robbery; and he answer'd, He was a Man too well known; but he persuaded him to accept of the Employ. When they came home to Hurly, the Doctor told him, he had offer'd him 20 Guineas; and Hurly was so far from denying it, that he chid Dr. Brodin, and said, he would give him 40 Guineas; and then Cassidy said, he was afraid of being known: Hereupon Hurly told him he had provided Vizards, to prevent his being known; and after going home, his Heart fail'd him, and he would not be concern'd. He told you, he heard of this Robbery; but this Thing was not discover'd by him till last Sunday, where being at Church, he went with Mr. Fitz-Gerald to Dinner; and Fitz-Gerald talking of this Business of Hurly, Cassidy said, He knew a Person in the County, that could do him more Harm than any Man living: Says a Clergyman, there present, You ought to do the County that Right, as to find out that Person, that the County may not be so oppress'd, but Justice done to the Criminal. And, that he went home, and considering it, he went and gave in his Examination to a Justice of the Peace, who bound him over to prosecute, and accordingly he attended here.

The next Witness is Daniel Kiese. He tells you, That he was very well acquainted with Mr. Hurly, and, that Mr. Hurly, some Time before this Robbery was committed, came to Mr. Bentley's Shop, and enquir'd there for Masks, or Vizards, such as they use for Masquerades; and Bentley made answer, That they had none, but they might be had in Christ-Church-Yard. He tells you, that thereupon Hurly went into the Yard. He tells you, that at that Time, hearing Hurly enquire for Masks, he was apprehensive that he had some evil Design in hand, and told Bently so; and Bently agrees in what Keefe swears, that he did enquire for Masks, and went into Christ-Church-Yard for them.

Mr. Gray (the next) tells you of the Poverty of Mr. Hurly; and that he could not have any such Sum of Money; that he desired him to raise some Money for him, and for better Security he lodged in his Hand a Bond of Captain Mac-Donnell's; and, accordingly, that he got Mr. Connor to indorse a Bill to Mr. Lumm; and Mr. Hurly afterwards paid the Money.

The next that was produced for the King was Captain Mac-Donnell; and he tells you, That he had given such a Bond to Mr. Hurly, upon Account of a Farm they had purchased jointly, and that he ordered him to pay this Fifty Pound that was borrowed; that he would not be concerned in paying part, unless he paid it all; that the Money was paid.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Cassidy tells you, That he had used to play at Tables with Hurly at his House; and that Hurly got him to send for a Dozen of Bottles of Wine to Ennis, to drink with Hurly, because Hurly had no Money.

Mr. J. Cote. I will give you an Account now as faithfully as I can, of what is sworn for the Traverfer.

But I should have told you first, That Captain Mac-Donogh gave you an Account of the greatest Severity used by Patrick Hurly towards his Brother John, which, he said himself, he would not have done, but that he was forced to do it, by reason of his own necessitous Condition.

Now Mr. John Hurly he tells you of considerable Sums of Money he received from Holland, viz. 490*l.* from Colonel Lovet, and 200*l.* from Jeremiah Donavon; and in 97 from Mr. Fitz-Symons 300*l.* 10*s.* and 200*l.* more in Limerick. He tells you, that of those Sums received, he paid again in Cash to Mr. Hurly, all but a little that is received from Mr. Fitz-Symons: He paid him in Cash but a little; and he had Forty Bullocks, and some Sheep, towards the Balance of what remained unpaid. That there was some Money paid to Mr. Arthur, and some to Mr. Burton, and more laid out other ways. He tells you, that he saw with Daniel Hicky a Note that was given him by Mr. Hickman, a Justice of Peace of the County, and by Mr. Cusack, then Sheriff, whereby they promised, that if he would make a true Discovery of the Robbery of Hurly, that they would intercede to the Government for a Pardon for him. This is the Substance of what John Hurly has sworn.

The Witness for the Traverfer was Dorothy Kemp, who was a Servant, she tells you, to Mr. Hurly, when this Robbery was committed. She tells you, That Seven Persons came into the House; that Five of them went up into her Master's Chamber, and Two staid in the Parlour: That there were several Shots made, and that there was no Harm done, nor no Marks or Prints of Bullets or Shot in the Wall or Ceiling: That there were Two Men without at the Window, and being called Rapparees, they thrust their Swords through the Window: And that Mr. Ronane was going out, when they rushed in, and that they threw him down, and that they tied Ronane and Hurly; and to shew you there was Money, she tells you, that the Wife of Mr. Hurly took out of a Trunk a great Bag of Gold, and shewed it to her; and then took part of it, and put it into her Pocket: And after that, this Dorothy Kemp going to the Trunk for Linnen, she was strangely surprized to find the Bag there; that Mr. Hurly came in at the Time, and was inquisitive to know what she did there; she told him, she was looking for Linnen: That then he took the Bag out himself, and convey'd it to his Closet.

She tells you likewise, That there was one Murough O'Brien did endeavour to tamper with her, to persuade her to swear about the Counters, that they were to be lodged with her, or with Daniel Hicky's Wife; and this Murough promised her a great Reward, if she would let this Trick be put upon her Master; but she would not. She tells you, that this Murough O'Brien not only tamper'd with her, but also with Hicky's Wife; and that he sent Letters by his Servant to Hicky's Wife, and that they were delivered; and that the Contents of the Letters was, desiring her, that she would suffer those Counters to be lodged in Hicky's House. She tells you, that Mr. Hurly had a considerable Quantity of Linnen taken away from him; that she had washed Twenty Pair of Sheets her self, and that there was Ten Pair more, and that all was taken away except Five Pair; which is the Substance of what she swore.

But Murough O'Brien was sworn, and he deposed, That he was so far from tampering with Dorothy Kemp, that he did not think it safe to converse with her, because she was kind and civil to Mr. Hurly, and bore a Child or two by him; and to the contrary he swore he had no Communication at all with her: But as for Hicky's Wife, he says, she told him she would discover all, if he would bring her Husband home again; and, in pursuance of that, he writ Letters to Hicky, and that the Purport of them was only to satisfy him, that he might come with Safety, and treat with him. The Letters being read, they import no more.

Gentlemen, the next Witness, Daniel Mac-Cay, says, That he was a Servant to Mr. Hurly a considerable Time; that he was in the House when the Robbery was committed; and that there was only Five of the Robbers that he saw; that some of them put the Family in Terror, and others made it their Business to fall on the Master: He at first thought they were only Bailiffs come to arrest his Master; but when they came and broke open the Door that they had lock'd upon his Master, he found they were Tories: That there were several Shots made. I asked him, Was there any Hurt made by the Shots? and he said, No. Was there any Marks of the Bullets? he said, No. He said, there was some at the Window, that did thrust in their Swords. He tells you, there was one Christopher O'Brien, who did endeavour to tamper with him to take off the Evidence, to whom he went with a Letter to the Swan-Tavern, and that Mr. O'Brien discoursed with him about the Counters.

He tells you, That his Master had a great deal of Money; and that when he was to go down into the Country with his Master, they were so great together, that his Master acquainted him with a great Sum of Money he had, and that he told him he intended to pay Mr. Arthur with it; but that Arthur did exact a great Sum for Exchange, and therefore he did not pay the Money in Town, but expected to get easy Terms from him in the Country; and it was because he feared to be robbed, that he did shew his Servant a great Sum of Money he had to carry down into the Country: And then he was examined by Mr. Butler, as Council for the King, by what Road they went at that Time to the Country, and at what Place they went over the Shannon? He said, it was over a Bridge, but he did not know what Bridge. And being asked, Whether they went through Athlone? it being a casual Question, he said, They did go through Athlone. And being asked, Where he lay that Night? he said, At Balliboy, or Eyres-Court. And being urged to be exact, he said, He thought it was Balliboy; and then he said, they laid at Killigby.

Gentlemen, you know the Country, and that Balliboy and Killigby are near the King's County on that side the Shannon; and Eyres-Court on the other side, in the County of Gallway.

Now, Gentlemen, because Mr. Patrick Hurly, in the Course of the King's Evidence, denied positively that he was at any Time about Christmas at Loughbrea; I asked this Mac-Cay, if his Master went down any other Time? he said, He did a little before Christmas: And then I asked, if he was at Mr. Bargery's House in Loughbrea? he said, He was; but he could not tell whether Mr. Joseph Lynch was there or not. And being asked, Whether he carried his Master's Portmantau to Tiaquin? he said, He did; and that his Master hired a Horse at Tiaquin, and sent him before him to Gort. I asked him, Whether he were sure the Money his Master produced to him in Dublin was Gold, or no? He said, He was sure it was Gold, it was Louis d'Ors, though, by Mr. Hurly's Information, there was more Guineas than Louis d'Ors. He tells you likewise, Gentlemen, that this Calaghan Carty had discovered upon his Oath, before my Lord Chief-Justice, what he had formerly sworn before a Justice of the Peace concerning this Robbery: And being asked, Who were present? he said, My Lord Chief-Justice's Clerk was there; which gave Occasion to the Court to send for the Clerk.

The next Man examined was one Crips. He says, That one Halloway did beat him, and take him by the Hair of the Head, because he would not swear against Patrick Hurly; and that Neylan offered him Six Collops grazing, if he would swear that Hurly contrived this Robbery himself, and that he was by when Calaghan Carty was sworn before my Lord Chief-Justice, Pyne; but he cannot tell what it was he swore, and he does not seem to be capable of knowing it, for he does not speak Englifo. And then he says, Mr. Lynch offered him considerably to come and swear against Hurly; and bid him come to Cannaught and live with him, for John and Patrick Hurly were both ruined. Mr. Lynch has been examined; and he swears, he had no other Discourse with this Man, but about the Farm at Mougna, that the Hurly's held from him; that they were in ill Circumstances, and that he would be rid of the whole Family. Neylan tells you, That, to his Knowledge, he never saw this Man 'till this Day. Crips said, upon his Oath, That it was at a House, in such a Place, that Neylan tampered with him: And Neylan tells you, upon his Oath, That there was not any House at all, within his Memory, in that Place; and that he never had any Communication with this Crips, directly or indirectly. So when Persons swear directly one against another, You, Gentlemen of the Jury, must weigh the Evidence, and the Arguments they offer to induce your Belief.

The next Witness is Daniel Hicky; who tells you, He was sent to Goal and bolted there; and after he was told, that one Daniel Carty confessed the whole Matter, he was forced before a Justice of Peace, and there was forced to swear, by the Management of Mr. Hickman and Mr. Cusack, who told him, That if he did not swear, he must be hanged: And that, through Fear, he was compelled to give that Information, wherein he proves the Robbery was contrived by Mr. Hurly, and that he was one of the Actors in it: And when he was told, that he should be called before my Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, and he was brought into the Bar, he said, he would swear nothing but Truth before my Lord Chief-Justice: That hereupon the Goaler carried him back, and he never after could get Opportunity of giving my Lord Chief-Justice an Account of the Matter, though he sent Petitions after him. He says, That before he discovered, he was treated barbarously; but afterwards he was treated very well, and had Twelve Pence a Day; but that after they were in the Court, and said they would say nothing but the Truth before my Lord Chief-Justice, they were allowed but Nine Pence, and there was a Mittimus sent to confine them closer. He says, Daniel Carty procured Bail, and he was bail'd by some Friend of Mr. Hurly's. He tells you, he came to Town, and that he went to the Lord Chief-Justice Pyne, and there swore an Examination contrary to what he swore before, and says, that he was conscious of the Injury he had done Mr. Hurly; that he writ his sole Examination himself; and says, he had been tampered with, and nothing would do. That he was afterwards brought into this Court, and there did own his Examination before my Lord Chief-Justice to be Truth; but after he charged Mr. Cusack, the Sheriff, with having tampered with him, when Mr. Cusack appeared here and confronted him, he went back from what he said.

The next is Donogh O'Brien Andrews junior: He tells you, he was manacled and fettered in the Goal, till such time as by the Persuasion of Mr. Neylan, and the Threats of the Goaler and of Mr. Cusack, That if he did not swear, he should be severely neck-yoked; he went before a Justice of the Peace with Mr. Butler, who used several Insinuations to him, as he says, to procure him to swear the Robbery was contrived by Hurly; which, through Fear, he consented to; and says, That Mr. Butler put his Information into Writing; Part, says he, I told him, and Part, he says, Mr. Butler put down as he pleased: I did swear to it, says he, but it was against my Conscience, for I was forced to it. He says, That Mr. Neylan brought Coats to him in the Goal, and they would have him swear they were the Coats they robbed in, but he would not swear by any means. He says, That after they were discharged, he was so conscious to himself of the Injury done Mr. Hurly, that he came towards Dublin, that he lay in the same House with Mrs. Hurly and her Brother at Kiltartan, and, that coming nearer to Town about Kilcock, he met with Crips and Carty, that they lodged together in one House; and being asked, Whether he spoke any thing to his Father about this Robbery? he said, He never did.

The Father is there produced; and he tells you, though it would reflect upon his Son, yet he would perform Truth, being upon his Oath; and so swears, That hearing how his Son had been concerned in the Contrivance of this Robbery, after he had been three Weeks in Goal he went to see him, and when he came to him, check'd him; and his Son told him, as he understood him, that the Robbery was only a Contrivance of Mr. Hurly's. That after he was out of Goal, he spoke to him concerning the Arms, where they had them, and whether they were Patrick Hurly's Arms? to which he answered, Where else should he get Arms. And this Donogh O'Brien Andrews junior, being asked again, Whether it was so as his Father deposed? he said, It was not so. Now the Father and the Son swearing one against the other in this Matter, you must be Judges who has sworn true.

The next is Mr. Butler, who tells you, That in taking the Examination, he was so far from using any Threats to this Donogh O'Brien Andrews junior, that as soon as he came to Ennis, hearing he was willing to make a Discovery of the Matter, he sent for him to his Lodging; that he caused him to sit down; and that he writ every Word as he spoke; it and that there was not a Word but what came from his own Mouth: And the Examination was here read; and if you observe it, there are several Things in the Examination, that the Party owns came from himself, and several Things which could not possibly come within the Knowledge of Mr. Butler; so that it is impossible to be contrived by Mr. Butler, because they were Things wholly in the Informer's own Cognizance.

There is one Thing offered in the Close of the Evidence in behalf of the King, which does not only relate to Mac-Cay, but to all the rest. Mr. Butler and Mr. Foster upon their Oaths tell you, That Mr. Hurly, when he preferred his Petition concerning this Robbery before the Judges of the Assizes, and he did also swear, That when he went to Tiaquin, he left his Portmanteau with Mr. Bargery at Loughbrea, with a strict Charge to take special Care of it, for that there was something of great Consequence in it; and Christopher O'Brien swears, That Mr. Hurly told him likewise, that he left the Portmanteau at Mr. Bargery's when he went to Tiaquin, and said, He would not carry it to Tiaquin, because that was a loose Family; so that Mr. Hurly swore fully against what Mac-Cay swears now.

Hurly swore he was robbed but by Four Persons, and that agrees with what Calaghan Carty swears. One Woman swears there was Seven, another swears Nine; so that out of the Mouth of Mr. Hurly himself his own Witnesses are contradicted. But Mr. Hurly would take off the Probability of his saying thus (for he denies the saying of it). Is it likely, says he, that I should come back from Tiaquin to Loughbrea, and so go on again to Gornishigory? But Mac-Cay, his Boy, tells you, that his Master hired a Horse for him to carry the Portmanteau before him to Gornishigory on Saturday, and that his Master followed him on Sunday: Now, if the Portmanteau had been at Tiaquin, why should he send it by Mac-Cay before-hand to Gort on Saturday, that he was following thither on Sunday? And when Mr. Hurly was going down to the Country, what can be imagined, why he should make a Boy acquainted with his carrying so much Money with him? And that Mr. Hurly should leave the Key of the Trunk with Mrs. Kemp to take out Linnen, and so great a Sum of Money there? I do but lay the Facts before you as they stand upon the Evidence, as well for as against the Prisoner; and I hope you will do Justice both to the Prisoner and to the King. Gentlemen, if you are satisfied upon the whole Matter, that Mr. Hurly is guilty of the Perjury, you will find him Guilty; if not, you will acquit him.

If you think him Guilty of the Contrivance to Cheat the County, you will find him Guilty; if not, you will acquit him.

The Jury went out, and returned in Half an Hour; and brought in their Verdict, Guilty on both Indictments.

Mr. Attorney-General. May it please your Lordship, Patrick Hurly has been indicted for Perjury and a Cheat, and is found Guilty of both Indictments, I humbly pray your Lordships Judgments.

Court. How have you laid your Indictment?

Mr. Sol. Gen. At Common Law.

Court. In what Circumstance is Mr. Hurly?

Mr. Butler. I hope, my Lord, if it is only a Fine, it can't be less than the Sum he designed to get from the County by the Perjury.

Court. As to the Perjury, the Judgment of the Court upon that Conviction is, That Mr. Hurly be Fined for the Perjury 100 l. and be Imprisoned till he pay it to the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will move the Court next Monday for your Judgment upon the other Indictment.

Mr. Butler. My Lord, we insist upon it, That the Pillory is the Punishment for the Cheat.

Court. We know, if Mr. Hurly be not able to pay the Fine, he ought to suffer Corporal Punishment.

CLXXII.

The TRIAL of
Colonel NICHOLAS BAYARD,
in the Province of New-York, for High-Treason, Febr. the 19th, 1701-2, 14 Will. III.

On the Sixteenth of January, 1701, Captain John Nanfan, Lieutenant-Governor, and the Council, made the following Order.

At a Council held at Fort William-Henry this 16th of January, 1701, Present the Honourable John Nanfan, Esq; &c.

IT is hereby order'd, That Alderman John Hutchins do appear before this Board To-morrow Morning, and then and there produce to the Board the Address to his Majesty, the Address to the Parliament, and the Address to the Lord Cornbury, which was signed by several of the Inhabitants of this City, and Soldiers of the Garrison, in this House, about three Weeks since, on the Penalty that shall thereon ensue.

By Order of the Council,

B. COZENS.

Whereupon Mr. Hutchins appear'd; and for neglecting or refusing to deliver up the said Addresses, on the Nineteenth of January was committed to the common Goal of the City of New-York, for the signing of Libels, said to be against the Administration of the Government.

On the 20th Col. Bayard, Mr. Rip van Dam, Mr. Philip French, and Mr. Thomas Wenham address'd the Lieutenant-Governor and Council, as followeth; viz.

VOL. V.

To the Honourable John Nanfan, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor, and the Honourable Council of the Province of New-York.

The Humble Address of Nicholas Bayard, Rip van Dam, Philip French, and Thomas Wenham, on behalf of themselves, and some of the rest of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Province of New-York.

Humbly sheweth,

THAT whereas by a Mittimus, bearing Date the Nineteenth of January, 1701, Alderman Hutchins stands committed for signing Libels, said to be against the Administration of the Government; which pretended Libels we understand to be an Address to his Majesty, another to the Parliament, and another to my Lord Cornbury, whom we understand, by certain Advice we have received from England, to be nominated by his Majesty to succeed the late Earl of Bellamont as our Governor; Copies of which (by the said Mittimus) we find are expected from the said Hutchins, and is Part of his Charge in the Commitment, the Copies of which Originals (being in our Hands or Custodies) he cannot deliver. If there be no further Crime to be alledg'd against him, we hope to make the Legality of the said Addresses, and pray, That the said Hutchins may be releas'd from his Imprisonment, or be admitted to Bail: And your Petitioner shall ever pray.

N. B. R. v. D. P. F. T. W.

Colonel Bayard, and the other three Gentlemen, having personally deliver'd this Writing, and refusing to surrender the Copies of the said Addresses, had Time given them, on their Parole, to appear next Day. And afterwards, the same same Day, the Lieutenant-Governor did deliver the above Address to his Majesty's Attorney-General of this Province, for his Opinion in Law therein, which the said Attorney-General gave in Writing; and on the Twenty-first Day came into the Council-Chamber, and there deliver'd it to the Lieutenant-Governor; which was read, and order'd to be enter'd in the Council-Book, in hæc Verba.

May it please your Honour,

I Have well consider'd the humble Address of Nicholas Bayard, Rip van Dam, Philip French, and Thomas Wenham, for the Release of Alderman Hutchins from his Imprisonment, sent me by your Honour yesterday; and have also weigh'd the several Matters sworn, and otherwise taken in Council before your Honour, which do in any respect relate thereto; and, upon the whole, in Obedience to your Honour's Commands, I humbly present you with my Judgment and Opinion in Law, as follows:

First, That neither the Address or Petition it self, or any Matter therein contained, is Criminal and Illegal.

Secondly, That the Refusal of the Petitioners, at the Council-board, to produce the Copies (of certain Original Addresses mention'd in their Petition) own'd by them to be in their Custody, and by their Petition also, is not such a Contempt to the Council, or other Offence against the Law, for which the Petitioners may legally be committed.

Sa. Sh. Broughton.

And afterwards the said Persons appear'd, and continuing their Refusal to surrender, the said Copies, notwithstanding the Opinion of the Attorney-General, the said Lieutenant-Governor and Council issued the following Warrant.

By the Honourable John Nanfan, Esq; his Majesty's Governor and Commander in Chief of the Province of New-York, and Territories depending thereon in America, &c. and his Majesty's Honourable Council for this Province, To Isaac d'Reymer, Esq; High-Sheriff of the City and County of New-York, Greeting.

Whereas by an Act of General-Assembly of this Province, made in the Year 1691, Entituled, An Act for the quieting and settling the Disorders that have lately happen'd within this Province, and for establishing and securing their Majesties present Government against the like Disorders for the future; It is among other Things enacted, That whatsoever Person or Persons shall, by any manner of Way, or upon any Pretence whatsoever, endeavour by Force of Arms, or other Ways, to disturb the Peace, Good, and Quiet of this their Majesties Government, as it is now establish'd, shall be deem'd and esteem'd as Rebels and Traytors unto their Majesties, and incur the Pains, Penalties and Forfeitures as the Laws of England have for such Offences made and provided: Notwithstanding which, Colonel Nicholas Bayard, as has appear'd by the Oaths of several Persons examin'd before Us in Council, by Conspiracy and Combination with John Hutchins, Esq; lately committed by Us, together with several other Persons disaffected to this his Majesty's Government, to the manifest Disturbance of the Peace of the same, by divers indirect Practices both drawn in Soldiers, and others, to sign scandalous Libels, whereby they have endeavour'd to render the past and present Administration vile and cheap in the Eyes of the People: And the said Colonel Nicholas Bayard hath incited the People to disown the present Authority, and cast off his Majesty's Government, as it is now establish'd: The Council have unanimously thought fit, and do resolve, That the said, Nicholas Bayard be committed for High-Treason. These are therefore, in his Majesty's Name, to require and command you, immediately on your receipt hereof, to take into your Custody the Body of the said Col. Nicholas Bayard, and him in the common Goal of this City in close Custody to keep and secure, until he shall be from thence delivered by due Course of Law; and for your so doing, this shall be your sufficient Warrant. Given under Our Hands and Seals at Fort William-Henry in New-York, in Council this Twenty-first of January, Anno Domini 1701, and in the Thirteenth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord William III. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith.

John Nanfan,
A. D. Peyster,
S. Staats,
R. Walters,
T. Weaver,
W. Atwood.

True Copy, examin'd by me, I. D. Reimer, Sheriff.

Which Act of Assembly, mention'd in the Warrant of Commitment, followeth in these Words, viz.

As

An Act for the quieting and settling the Disorders that have lately happen'd in this Province, and for the establishing and securing their Majesties present Government against the like Disorders for the future.

“ FOrasmuch as the Good and Quiet, Ease, Profit, Benefit, and Advantage of the Inhabitants within this Province doth chiefly consist in, and altogether rely and depend upon their bearing true Faith and Allegiance unto Their Majesties Crown of England, which is, and can only be, the Support and Defence of this Province. And whereas the late hasty and inconsiderate Violation of the same, by the setting up a Power over their Majesties Subjects, without Authority from the Crown of England, hath vitiated and debauch'd the Minds of many People, &c. and hath also brought great Waste, Trouble, and Destruction upon the good People of this Province, their Majesties Loyal Subjects: For the Prevention whereof in Time to come, Be it therefore Enacted and Ordain'd by the Governor, and Council, and Representatives met in General-Assembly, and it is hereby Published, Declar'd, Enacted, and Ordain'd by the Authority of the same, That there can be no Power and Authority held and exercis'd over their Majesties Subjects in this their Province and Dominion, but what must be deriv'd from their Majesties, their Heirs and Successors. And We do hereby recognize and acknowledge, That their Majesties William and Mary are, and as of Right they ought to be by the Laws of the Realm of England, our Liege Lord and Lady, King and Queen of England, France and Ireland, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, &c. That thereby their Princely Persons are only invested with the Right to rule this their Dominion and Province; and that none ought or can have Power, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to use or exercise any Power over their Subjects in this Province, but by their immediate Authority under their Broad-Seal of their Realm of England, as now establish'd.

“ And be it further Enacted, by the Authority aforesaid, That whatsoever Person or Persons shall, by any manner of Way, or upon any Pretence whatsoever, endeavour, by Force of Arms or otherwise, to disturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of this their Majesties Government, as it is now establish'd, shall be deem'd and esteem'd as Rebels and Traytors unto their Majesties, and incur the Pains, Penalties and Forfeitures as the Laws of England have, for such Offences, made and provided.

Upon Colonel Bayard's Commitment, the City Militia were, by Beat of Drum, call'd to Arms, and a whole Company daily appointed to guard the Prison, for about a Week following, and Defaulters strictly punish'd; which was burdensome to the People, and occasion'd great Clamour; whereupon it was taken off.

The Prisoner being inform'd, That a Special Commission was order'd for their speedy Trial, petition'd the Lieutenant-Governor and Council, on the Sixth of February, in these Words:

To the Honourable John Nanfan, Esq; Governor, &c. and the Honourable Council, &c.

The Humble Petition of Nicholas Bayard and John Hutchins,

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioners are very sensible of the Favour intended them by your Honours, in appointing a Special Court for their Trial; that, in consideration of their Age, they might not be confin'd in a Prison till the ordinary Time for meeting of the Supreme Court: But the Papers being at present out of their Hands, which they shall have Occasion for, in order to make their Innocency appear, and not being likely to get them in so short a Time as is prefix'd for the said Trial; your Petitioners humbly pray, That they may not be oblig'd to come to Trial before the usual Sitting of the Supreme Court. And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

To which a Verbal Answer was given to Colonel Bayard's Son, That out of meer Grace the Court should be deferr'd for Five Days.

On the Nineteenth of February the Commissioners sat, and publish'd their Commission in these Words; viz.

“ WILLIAM the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, &c. To Our loving Subjects William Atwood, Esq; Abraham d'Peyster, Esq; and Robert Walters, Esq; sendeth Greeting. Know Ye, That We have assign'd you, or any Two or more of you, whereof you the said William Atwood We will to be One, our Justices, to enquire by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of the City of New-York, and by such other Means, Ways and Methods which to you shall be the better known, by whom the Truth of the Matter may be the better known, on the 19th Day of this Instant February, of whatsoever Treasons, Misprisions of Treasons, Insurrections, Rebellions, Murders, Felonies, Manslaughters, Homicides, Rapes, Burglaries, Misprisions, Confederacies, False Reports, Trefpasses, Riots, Routs, Unlawful Assemblies, Contempts, Faults, Negligences, Concealments, Oppressions, Champarties, Deceits, Misdemeanors, and other Misdeeds, Offences, and Injuries whatsoever, committed by Nicholas Bayard and John Hutchins, and also the Accessories of them, in the Province of New-York aforesaid; and by who or by whom, to who or to whom, how, when, and in what Manner, and of other Articles and Circumstances in the Premises, either or any of them concerning; and the same Treasons, Offences, and other the Premises for this Time, to hear and determine according to the Laws and Customs of England, and of this our Province

" of New-York in America. And we command, " That on the said Day, at the City-Hall of " the said City, you, or any Two or more of " you, as is aforesaid, diligently make Enquiry
 " upon the Premises, and all and singular the " Premises hear and determine, and do accom" plish these Things in Form aforesaid, which " unto Justice appertains to be done thereupon,
 " according to the Laws and Customs of our " Kingdom of England, and of our said Pro" vince; saving unto Us our Amerciaments, and " other Things thereof unto Us belonging. Also
 " we command Our Sheriff of Our said City,
 " That on the said Day, on the said Place, he " cause to come before you, or any such Two
 " of you, as aforesaid, or more, such and so " many good and lawful Men of his Bailiwick,
 " by whom the Truth of the Matter may be the " better enquir'd into. In Testimony whereof,
 " We have caused the Great-Seal of Our Pro" vince to be hereunto affix'd. Witness John
 " Nanfan, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor and Com" mander in Chief of the Province of New- " York, &c. in Council at Fort William-Henry,
 " the 12th Day of February, in the 13th Year
 " of our Reign, Anno 1701.

And Proclamation being made in the usual Manner, the Pannel of the Grand-Jury was call'd over: Those who appear'd and were sworn, were

Joban. d' Peyster , Foreman,	Aryen Hogelant ,
David Provoost ,	William Jackson ,
Martin Clock ,	John Corbitt ,
Leendert Huygen ,	Joban. van Cortland ,
Barent Reynders ,	Caleb Cooper ,
Jobannis vander Spiegel ,	John van Hoorn ,
Jobannis Outman ,	Burger Myndero ,
Hendrick Gillisen ,	Gerret van Hoorn ,
Peter van Tillburgh ,	Jacobus d' Key ,
Jobannis van Giesen ,	Abraham Kipp ,
Abraham Keteltas ,	Jobannis van Santa .

Jacob Boelen and Jobannis Hardenbroek did not then appear.

Before the Jurors were sworn, the Council for the Prisoner objected against some of them, for declaring before several Witnesses, then ready to be produc'd in Court, That if Bayard's Neck was made of Gold, he should be hang'd; at the same time boasting, that they were of the Jury; and pray'd, That since that Jury was summon'd upon that Special Matter, such might not be sworn. Which the Court over-ruled.

Mr. Atwood, the First Commissioner, gave a long Charge to the Jury, aggravating the Facts suppos'd against the Prisoner, and positively asserting, That those Facts were Treason, not only within the Words of this Act of Assembly, but also by the Common Law before the Statute of the 25th of Edw. III.

The Jurors having receiv'd the Charge, the Court adjourn'd till next Day.

The Court being met the 20th, the Indictment against Colonel Bayard was deliver'd by the Court to the Grand-Jury; and Mr. Weaver (appointed Solicitor-General for this Service) attended them with the Proofs, and insisted to be present with the Grand-Jury, and that no Person should be sent for, but whom he should name; and, that no Question should be ask'd them, but such as he should approve of. On the other hand, John Corbitt, Caleb Cooper, John Cortland, and Jacob d'Key insisted, That the King's Council ought not to be present with them at their private Debates; and, that they had a Right to send for what Persons, and ask what Questions for their Information they should think needful. Whereupon Mr. Weaver did threaten them, and (to use his own Expression) would cause them to be troune'd, taking down their Names. And the Grand-Jury broke up without acting.

The Court, in the Afternoon, met according to Adjournment; and the Grand-Jury being sent for, Mr. Weaver made Complaint, That he was obstructed by some of the Grand-Jury, who would not acquiesce to his being present at the Examination of the King's Evidence, and would have other Evidences sent for, than what were by him produced. And thereupon Mr. Atwood did discharge the aforesaid Four Persons from their further Service, and caus'd Jacob Boelen, who was absent when the others were sworn, to be sent for from his House, sworn, and added to the Grand-Jury; and the Court adjourn'd till Seven a-Clock that Evening, but did not meet till about Midnight; when sending to know if the Jury had found the Bill, and being inform'd they were separated, he adjourn'd the Court till next Morning at Eight a Clock; and in the Way from the Court, in Passion said, If the Grand- Jury will not find a Bill against Col. Bayard, I will bring an Information against him of High-Treason, and try him upon that.

February 21. The Court met, and the Grand-Jury appearing in Court, the Indictment was brought in by the Foreman, endorsed Billa Vera, and signed with his Name. Upon which Mr.
Atwood immediately discharged the Jury.

Whereupon the Counsel for the Prisoner informed the Court, That the Bill was not found by Twelve Jurors. And upon Examination it appeared to the Commissioners, that of such of the Jurors who remained in Court, Eight of the Nineteen were against finding the Bill; as appears by the Minutes of the Court entered by Order; viz.

Jacob Boelen ,	Jobannis van Santa ,
Abraham Kipp ,	William Jackson ,
John van Hoorn ,	Burger Myndero ,
Gerret van Hoorn ,	Joban. vander Spiegel .

Which Eight importuned the Court, That the Foreman might be brought upon his Oath, and the rest sent for to witness the Truth, that they only Found the Signing the Addreses, and not the Treason. To which Mr. Atwood made Answer, They were no longer Jurors; they had presented the Bill, and the Court was possess'd of it; it was now a Record, and there is no
 Averment against a Record.

Ordered, The Prisoner come to Trial on Mon- day next come Sevensnight; to which Day the Court adjourned accordingly.

On Monday the 2d of March, the Commissioners met according to Adjournment.

Mr.

Mr. Nicboll. (Counfel assigned for Col. Bayard) moved, that the Indictment might be quashed, not being found by Twelve Men: And to prove the Matter of Law, offered to produce Authorities; and to prove the Matter of Fact, offered to produce Evidences in Court, if either were insisted on, the Grand-Jury being then by Subpœna in Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is moved in behalf of the Prisoner, is most improper; forasmuch as the Indictment is found, and signed by the Foreman Billa Vera, there can be no Averment allowed against a Record brought in by the Body of a Grand-Jury; and therefore I desire the Prisoner may be sent for, and arraigned.

Mr. Nicboll. This is a Matter of great Weight and Moment; and concerns not only the Life and Fortune of the Prisoner and his Posterity, but the Right of every Englishman in the Province: It is not only lawful, but highly reasonable, that an Indictment for High-Treason should be found by Twelve Men at least. By the Statute 13 E. 1 W. 2. c. 13. reciting, That Sheriffs feigning many times certain Persons to be indicted of Felonies and other Trespasses, take Men not culpable nor lawfully indicted, and imprison them.

"Whereas they were not lawfully indicted by Twelve Jurors, it is ordained, That Sheriffs, where they have Power to enquire of Trespases by the King's Precept, or by Office, shall cause Inquests, &c. to be taken by lawful Men, and by Twelve at least, which shall put their Seals to such Inquisitions." [Here it is observable, that there is twice legitimo modo in a few Lines.]

Coke Inst. 2. Part 387. says, Two Things are provided, or rather declared, by this Act:

1. Per legales homines ad minus duodecim faciant Inquisitiones.

Coke Inst. 1. fol 126. The Indictment is defin'd an Accusation found by an Inquest of Twelve or more upon their Oath.

Poulton de Pace, &c. An Indictment of Treason, Felony, Trespas, or any other Offence, is an Inquisition taken and made by Twelve Men at least.

Coke Inst. 3. fol. 30. No Peer of the Realm, or other Subject, shall be convicted by Verdict; but the said Offence must be found by above Four and Twenty, that is, by Twelve or above, at his Indictment, &c.

11 H. 4. 9. Inquests had been taken of Persons named to the Justices, without due Return of the Sheriff; of which some outlaw'd before the said Justices of Record, some fled to Sanctuary, &c. for Treason, some for Felony: Granted, That henceforth no Indictment be made by such Persons, but by Inquests of the King's lawful Liege People, in such Manner as was used in the Time of his Noble Progenitors; and if any Indictment be made hereafter in any Point to the contrary, that the same Indictment be also void, revoked, and for ever holden for none.

Crook Eliz. 654. Clyncard was indicted on the 8th of H. 6. The Record was ad Sessionem Patris, &c. per Sacramentum A. B. C. D. & aliorum legalium hominum in Comitatu prædicto presentatus existit, &c. And it appeareth not that it was per Sacramentum duodecim; for it was presented by a lesser Number; it was clearly ill, therefore it was revers'd.

Mr. Atwood. There can be no Averment against a Record. If you can produce any Authority, that it was ever allowed to make an Averment against a Record; and speak to that Head, you shall be heard; but to go upon this Head, Whether or no the Grand-Jurors are or can be brought to reveal the Counfel which they are sworn to keep secret, cannot be allowed.

Mr. Nicboll. The Grand-Jury consisteth of Nineteen Persons, whereof Eight have openly in Court protested, that they found no Treason.

Mr. Atwood. I have by me the Oaths of Two Men, That the Bills were found by Fourteen Billa Vera; they are so endors'd, have been publickly read in Court, and are of Record; for which Reason I nor no Body else can enquire further of it.

Mr. Nicboll. This concerns the Subject's Life, and your Honour ought to be Counfel for the Prisoner; and if a Misunderstanding happens by the Ignorance of the Jurors, so that the Bill is returned contrary to their Intendment, the Prisoner ought to be assistid.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray shew us any Authority, where an Averment has been offered against a Record.

Mr. Emot. May it please your Honour, I am joined with Mr. Nicboll as Counfel for the Prisoner. The Question that now seems to lie before your Honour is, Whether there can be any Averment offered against a Record? There is an Act of Parliament of the 11th of H. 4. wherein it is enacted, That a Grand-Jury shall consist de bonis & legalibus hominibus: And so likewise runs the Tenor of the Writ of Venire; for want of such Persons, the same Statute does declare the Indictment void. So that it is a good Exception to an Indictment, to aver, that any one of the Grand-Jury was an Alien; which is Matter of Fact. How shall this Averment be made, if so be there be no Averment against a Record? And what Benefit has the Prisoner of this Act, unless an Averment be allowed against the Record of this Indictment, if it should so happen, that some of the Grand-Jury are not so qualified as the Act requires? Which seems to me sufficient Reason, that an Averment in the Case at the Bar, is good against a Record.

Mr. Atwood. The Statute gives the Particulars that may be averred, and no others can be allowed.

Mr. Emot. 'Tis very hard upon the Subject: The Court appoints the Foreman of the Grand-Jury, and he may chance to be a Person prejudiced against the Prisoner, who may sign and return the Bill Billa Vera, without the Consent of his Fellows, or a sufficient Number: And because it's Matter of Record, shall no Averment be allowed against the Bill!

Mr. Atwood. A Grand-Jury in a certain Case, on an Indictment for Words spoken, found Billa Vera; but as to the malitiose Ignoramus; which made the Bill void. So in this Case, if the Jury, as to the Fact in the Indictment, had found Billa Vera, and as to Treason Ignoramus, the Bill had been void, and the Court must have taken Notice

Notice of it. But to this Bill there is no Endorsement but Billa Vera: The Court has received and published the Verdict, and therefore will proceed.

Mr. Emot. But the Matter of Fact only appeared to the Jury; and when they understood the Bill to be laid treasonable, they immediately objected against it.

Mr. Atwood. The Bill is found, and appears to the Court, Matter of Record; so that you need not insist any further upon that Head. A Grand-Jury is an Inquest of Office; and an Inquest of Office may be found by a less Number than Twelve. Mr. Sheriff, bring your Prisoner to the Bar.

Mr. Nicoll. I have something else to offer.

Mr. Atwood. Sheriff, stay a little.

Mr. Nicoll. I have a Second Objection in Behalf of the Prisoner; and it is, That the Juries should have been returned by Precepts under the Hands and Seals of the Commissioners; which we understand was not.

This appears in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, Pag. 134. Sir Edw. Coke's 4th Page of the Institutes, Title Oyer and Terminer, says the same. There is a special Clause in the Writ of Oyer and Terminer, which says, We have commanded our Sheriff to summons, at such Days and Places as you shall appoint, such good and lawful Men, by whom the Truth may be the better known. How shall the Sheriff know those Days and Places, but by the Commissioners Precept? And how shall the Truth be known, if the Grand-Jury are permitted to have no other Evidence but what are brought ex parte Regis?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Grand-Jury are only to enquire for the King, and to receive or send for no other Evidence than what are brought for the King.

Mr. Nicoll. You may tell that to somebody else, not to me; that is contrary to their Oath, which is, That they shall diligently enquire, and true Presentment make.

Mr. Atwood. All the Books speak of the King's Evidence only, and agree, that the Grand-Jury may and ought to Find upon probable Evidence, as appears in Babbington.

Mr. Emot. Sir Edw. Coke says, Part 4. of the Institutes, Title Oyer and Terminer, That the Juries ought to be returned by Precepts under the Hands and Seals of the Commissioners. There is no Distinction made between the Grand-Jury and the Petty-Jury; so that the Venires, as well for one as the other, ought to have been under the Hands and Seals of the Commissioners.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you had the Government, Dr. Staats had a Bill found against him by Eight Men of a Jury of Fifteen.

N.B. A private Person opposed the Assertion; but he was commanded Silence.

Mr. Nicoll. I never heard of it, nor believe it to be true; but that is not to be taken for a Precedent, were it true.

Mr. Atwood. Gentlemen, you seem to mistake the Lord Chief-Justice Coke, where he says, There shall be 24 Peers upon the Arraignment of a Peer, &c. for if there be but 13 Peers, and the Majority agree to it, it is understood to be found by 12 of them.

There is something in that which you offer, of the Precept being under the Hands and Seals of the Commissioners in the Return of the Petty-Jury; but this does not at all affect the Grand-Jury: For which Reason, if you see Cause to move it, Time may be granted to mend that Mistake. Is there nothing else you have to offer?

Mr. Nicoll. Nothing at present.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Sheriff, bring the Prisoner to the Bar.

Which was done accordingly.

Clerk of the Crown. Nicholas Bayard, Hold up thy Hand. You stand indicted, &c.

City and County of New-York, in the Province of New-York in America, Anno Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii, nunc Angliæ, &c. Decimo Quarto.

“THE Jurors sworn, and charg’d to enquire for our Sovereign Lord the King upon our Oaths, do Present Nicholas Bayard, of the City of New-York in America, Esq; for that he the said Nicholas Bayard, the Fear of God in his Heart not having, nor the Duty of his Allegiance weighing, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a Rebel and Traytor against the most Serene, most Illustrious, most Clement, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland; and of this Province of New-York, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Clerk. What say you, Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty of the Indictment?

Prisoner. Not Guilty: And puts himself upon God and the Country, &c.

Prisoner. I desire I may be allowed two Clerks to take the Minutes of the Trial.

Mr. Atwood. No: You have a Solicitor allowed, he may take Notes; any other will not be suffered to do it.

Prisoner. I find it was allowed my Lord Russel, and others, to employ Clerks to take their Trials: I pray the same Liberty.

Mr. Atwood. It was allowed my Lord Russel; but you would not be willing to meet with the Hardships of his Trial.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Perhaps the Counsel will not insist upon the Mistake of the Venire.

Mr. Nicholl. We shall not insist on that.

Mr. Atwood. But we will have it mended; and thereupon order'd a Precept to be directed to the Sheriff, under the Hands and Seals of the Commissioners, to return a Petty-Jury the Sixth Instant; to which Day the Court adjourn'd.

March 6th. The Commissioners met. The Prisoner was brought to the Bar, and the Petty-Jury being call'd, consisting of Eighty, some of them did not appear: Whereupon it was order'd, that the Defaulters of the Petty-Jury be amerced Ten Pounds each, if they did not appear in the Afternoon, or shew a reasonable Cause; and the Court adjourn'd till Three in the Afternoon, when they met again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. mov'd, That the Court might be adjourn'd till To-morrow Morning, the King's Evidence being disguis'd with Drink; which was granted.

Mr. Nicholl mov'd, That it would be a Favour to the Prisoner, to put off the Trial till Monday.

Mr. Atwood. No: I will take care to do my Duty, whatever other People do. We shall not give Mr. Veasy the Opportunity of another Sermon against us.

Mr. Veasy was then Minister at New-York.

Mr. Atwood. I observe Mr. Jamison to have Pen and Ink: Mr. Jamison, you are not permitted to write.

Jamison. I only take Minutes for my private Satisfaction.

Mr. Atwood. 'Tis true, an Attorney or Practitioner of the Court may take Notes for his private Use; but you are no longer an Attorney of this Court, nor shall you be permitted to practise, until you purge your self of having sign'd the Addresses. Put up your Pen and Ink.

March 7th. The Commissioners met, and the Attorney-General was call'd, but did not appear.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Secretary, let a Minute be made, That it appears to this Court, That the Attorney-General hath neglected his Majesty's Service. 'Tis no Wonder the People here condemn his Majesty's Authority, since the Attorney-General, tho' commanded to prosecute by the Government, hath neglected to do the same, and hath given a Judgment and Opinion directly contrary to the Lieutenant-Governor and Council.

Mr. Atwood. Sheriff, fetch the Prisoner. Which was done.

Mr. Secretary. Before we proceed, read the Petition, which was given me this Morning by Colonel Bayard's Son. Which was read in hac Verba.

To the Honourable William Atwood, Esq;
Abraham d'Peyster, Esq; and Robert Wal- ters, Esq; Judges of this Special Court.

The Humble Petition of Nicholas Bayard;

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner's Council have in-form'd him, That on Yesterday they pray'd in the Petitioner's Behalf, the Favour of this Court, to prove before your Honours, by the Oaths of the major Part of the Grand-Jury, there also subpana'd in Court, that the Indictment brought in for High-Treason against your Petitioner by Capt. Johannes d'Peyster (as being Foreman of the said Grand-Jury) was not Found, nor Agreed to, by any Twelve of that Jury, tho' the most Part of them (as is evidently known) are your Petitioner's mortal Enemies, for no other Cause, but on account of the unhappy Divisions within this Province.
Which said Prayer of your Petitioner's Council (as he is also inform'd) your Honours have been pleas'd to over-rule, as not being practicable by the common Form of the Court's Proceedings. But, may it please your Honours, this being a Matter of that moment, whereof hardly a Precedent is to be found, as that a Foreman shall so far impose upon a whole Grand-Jury, as to bring in an Indictment Billa Vera, which the said Inquest did not Find nor Agree unto, neither in Matter nor Form: Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays, That your Honours will be pleas'd to take the Premises into your Honours serious Consideration, and to grant your Petitioner that Favour, as to have all the said Nineteen of that Grand-Inquest sworn before your Honours to discover the Truth, and to afford your Petitioner such Relief therein, as to your Honours shall seem most just and expedient. But if it should so happen (as your Petitioner does not hope) that your Honours do not think fit to grant this your Petitioner's most humble Request, your Petitioner further prays leave to acquaint your Honours with the excessive and almost unparallel'd Hardships your Petitioner, in this very Trial, labours under.
In the first place, for that the Grand-Jury, altho' your Petitioner had often pray'd Mr. Sherriff, that he might have the Favour and Justice of being try'd by English Men, and of English Extraction, of the best Character for Knowledge, Integrity, Justice, Conscience, and Estates; yet notwithstanding your Petitioner had not one allow'd him of English, but all of 'em of Dutch Extraction and Education, and several of 'em ignorant to that degree, that they can neither write nor read, nor so much as understand the English Language, tho' sufficient Numbers of English Men of very good Ability, Understanding, Integrity, Conscience, and Estate, were to be had in the Bailiwick.

And, for a second Instance of your Petitioner's Hardships, he finds now also a Petty-Jury impanel'd to serve upon his Trial, all of 'em, except Five or Six, in like manner of Dutch

Extraction and Education, most of 'em Handicraft and Labouring Men; very few that ever were of any Juries whatsoever, and extream ignorant in the English Language.'

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays,
That your Honours will be pleas'd to take the Premises into your Honours favourable and serious Consideration, and to afford your Petitioner such Relief therein as to your Honours in Justice and Equity shall seem fit.
And, as in Duty bound, &c.

N. BAYARD.

Mr. Atwood. Let a Minute be enter'd, That the Petition was read; and, that it does appear to the Court, that the Bill was found by more than Twelve of the Grand-Jury.

Mr. Atwood. Colonel Bayard, the Laws do indulge you with Counsel; Did you advise with them concerning this Petition?

Bayard. No, I did not.

Mr. Atwood. 'Twere better you had; for you have acted very indiscreetly in this Matter, to arraign the Justice of the Grand-Jury.

The Jury being call'd, appear'd.

Timon van Burser. Prisoner accepts.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Mr. Emot. You are not to challenge, Mr. Sollicitor, without Cause, by the Statute 23 Edw. I.

Mr. Soll. By the Common-Law the King could challenge without Cause, but, by the Statute, that was taken away; and in the late Trial of Peter Cook, it is said by Lord Chief-Justice Treby, That the King should shew Cause, if not enough on the Pannel to serve, but not else.

Mr. Atwood. It is a Thing so plain, I wonder you will insist on it.

Mr. Nicboll. We say the King should shew
Cause, but do not say when.

Gysber van Inbrough. Prisoner accepts.

Mr. Soll. challenges for the King.

Gerryt Unkle. Prisoner accepts.

Mr. Soll. challenges, &c.

William Janeway. Prisoner accepts.

Mr. Soll. challenges, &c.

Isaac Stoutenburgh. Prisoner accepts.

Mr. Soll. I don't challenge him, but desire he may be sworn on a Voire dire, whether any Person hath been with him on behalf of the Prisoner, to desire him to be favourable to the Prisoner on this Trial.

[Who was sworn upon a Voire dire, and afterwards for the Trial.]

Richard Saftet. Prisoner. I make no Challenge.

Mr. Soll. I desire to know whether I may not first have him sworn upon a Voire dire, and afterwards challenge him.

Mr. Atwood. No; you must challenge peremptorily first.

Prisoner. I pray the Solicitor may first make all his Challenges, and only leave me a Pannel of Forty-eight Jurors.

Mr. Atwood. No, that must not be.

[Memor-

[Memorandum. The rest of the Eighty Jurors in the Pannel were in like manner challeng'd by the Prisoner or Solicitor, till the Number of Twelve were sworn, viz. one of them an Alien, two no Freeholders, and all the rest Dutchmen, or of Dutch Extrañtion, born here, very ignorant of the English Language, and of mean Capacities to an extream Degree.]

The Names of the Petty Jurors were as follows; viz.

Isaac Stoutenburgh,
Jacob vander Spieghel,
Andries Marjbalk,
Gerret Viele,
Thomas-Saunders,

Mr. Solicitor made an Introductory Discourse and Harangue of about an Hour long, and had some Sheets of Paper in his Hand, out of which he read several scurrilous and false Reflections on the English Inhabitants of this Colony, with the French, and principal Dutch, having Retrospection for many Years past, only design'd to incense and enflame the Jury, charging the Prisoner to be the Head of a Faction, a malignant Party, who had endeavour'd to introduce Popery and Slavery, Disturbers of our Israel, as they had been that of Capt. Leyster's Government, which (he said) was now justified at Home to be Legal: That the said Party was a Nest of Pirates, Betrayers of our Prince and his Laws, a Parcel of Banditti's, who offer'd the late Earl of Bellamont a Reward of Ten Thousand Pounds to connive at Piracies, and One Thousand Pounds to himself to sollicite it: That some mean and broken Merchants in London had made Complaints in their behalf to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, and to the Parliament, against the said Earl; but that the said Earl's Proceedings were approv'd of; and used scandalous Reflections on Mr. Veasy, Minister of Trinity Church, and against Col. Smith, the first Member of Council, tho' nothing relating to this Trial, and own'd himself of the Leysterian Party, and that he would stand and fall by it, &c.

Then call'd his Witnesses; who gave their Evidences in the following Words, as they were taken in open Court, and since agreed unto by all of them respectively, as followeth.

Samuel Clows sworn, saith:

Gentlemen, when I come to speak of the Addressees, I must pray you to take notice, that I can speak positively to but very few Things that is in them: What I say is to the best of my Remembrance and Understanding, for I may be mistaken in both.

'Twas about a Fortnight or Three Weeks before Colonel Bayard's Commitment, that I happen'd to come to his House about some Business, not at all relating to this Matter; concerning which, as we were talking, Colonel Bayard ask'd me, if I had seen the Addressees? I answer'd, No. He then shew'd me three Addressees; the first was to my Lord Cornbury; the Persons addressing in it call'd themselves Inhabitants of New-York, and others distant from it: And because some of them could not perhaps be present at his Lordship's Arrival here, did, by way of Address, congratulate his Lordship into this Government, wishing him all Health and Prosperity here, and that the Name of Party might be banish'd from among us. After I had read it, Colonel Bayard ask'd me, if I had any thing to say against it? I answer'd, No, and then sign'd it. The other two Addressees were, one to the King, and the other to the House of Commons, or to the Parliament (I am not positive which): As I had read them, I remember I made this Observation in my self, That they contain'd nearly both the same Things; and in them, or one of them, to the best of my Remembrance, were contain'd these Things, The Persons addressing, call'd themselves Englishmen and others, who, tho' Foreigners, were entituled to the Privileges of Englishmen here. It speaks concerning the late Revolution here, of which I have but a confused Idea, and can remember nothing particular: Afterwards it speaks concerning my Lord Bellamont's Administration; in several Articles, of which I can remember but one, which is, That the Hottest and Ignorantest of the People were put into Places of Trust. Then it speaks concerning the late Assembly here, and tells you, That after this Assembly had chose a Speaker, some of the Representatives were inform'd that he was an Alien; upon which they made a Motion to the House, that that Matter might be enquir'd into; but that Motion being refused, one half of the Representatives, or Ten of 'em, left the House; notwithstanding which, the remaining Part of the Representatives, with some others they took in, did proceed to make Acts: In one of which Acts they gave a Sum of Money to the Lieutenant-Governor, to tempt him to pass these Acts; and likewise a Sum to the Chief-Justice of this Province, to find Law and Form for their Proceedings; and, that these Things tended to the rendering the Government vile and cheap in the Eyes of the People.

Mr. Soll. What Names do you remember you saw to the Addressees?

Clows. I saw several Names there; but whether to all Three, or Two of 'em, or only to that of my Lord Cornbury, I cannot say; but I did, to the best of my Remembrance, see the Names of Rip van Dam, Matthew Ling, Charles Wooley, Robert Livingstone, and Mr. Anderson; but I am not certain whether I saw Mr. Jamison's Name there or no. When I had read them, I told Colonel Bayard, they contain'd Things done before my Time, and I did not therefore think it proper for me to sign 'em; upon which he reply'd, Then don't sign 'em.

Mr. Soll. I shall read what you said before the Council.

Clows. Do so, if you please.

Mr. Soll. Don't you remember that it was said, that my Lord Bellamont had put the most ingenious and honestest Men of the Province out of all Places of Trust?

Clows. No, I can't remember that.

Mr. Soll. I think you said so before the Council.

Clows.

Clows. Perhaps I might say something like it when I was before the Council, tho' I don't believe there is any essential Difference between what I now say, and what I said to the Council; yet if there be, I hope what I then said will not be taken to my Prejudice: I was then sent for by the Governor's Letters, which seem'd to import, that he had Business with me of a far different Nature than to examine me about this Matter; so that I was then in a Surprise.

Mr. Soll. But you believe what you then spoke was true?

Clows. Without doubt; and I hope Mr. Cofens took care truly to write down what I then deliver'd; but, whether he did express my Meaning right or no, I know not; for I did not look over his Notes till the Day I saw them at your Chamber.

Mr. Soll. Was not the Assembly call'd an Illegal Assembly; and, that they had made Acts prejudicial to the Country?

Clows. No, I do not remember that.

Mr. Soll. Was it not said, That the Scum of the People were put into all Places of Trust?

Clows. Perhaps I might before the Council use the Word Scum; but I now think it was, That the Hottest and Ignorantist were put into Places of Trust.

Mr. Soll. Mr. Clows, pray tell us, What was the Reason you did not sign the other two Addresses?

Clows. I think I am not at this time oblig'd to tell that, being it does not at all affect the Matter.

Mr. Atwood. Yes, but it does; you must tell us.

Clows. One of the chief Reasons was, because I then thought, that the saying the Assembly had given a Gift to the Lieutenant-Governor, to tempt him to pass their Acts, was a Reflection upon the Lieutenant-Governor; but it is my Judgment now, that it was no Reflection at all upon him.

Mr. Soll. How! and don't you think so now?

Mr. Atwood. He only speaks it as his Judgment.

Mr. Soll. Don't you remember, that the Assembly was call'd The Pretended Assembly?

Clows. No.

Mr. Soll. Don't you remember 'twas said, their Illegal Proceedings? Don't you remember the Word Illegal?

Clows. No, I cannot remember that; and I did desire you, at your Chamber, to put that Word out of the Clerk's Notes.

Col. Bayard. Did I ever ask you to sign them?

Clows. No, you did not; you was so far from doing that, that you rather persuaded me not to sign 'em; and so did Madam Bayard, who was then in the Room.

Mr. Nicholl. Do you remember any thing of the Word Oppression in the Address?

Clows. No, I do not remember that Word.

Mr. Soll. That the King's Subjects were oppress'd here?

Mr. Nicholl. Was the Assembly call'd an Unlawful Assembly?

Clows. No, Gentlemen; I can speak positively to but few of these Things; what I say is, to the best of my Remembrance and Understanding.

Peter Odyre, a Frenchman, sworn; and for that he could speak no English, Mr. Briesack, Chaplain to the Garrison, was sworn to be his Interpreter.

Mr. Soll. What do you know of the Papers that were at Col. Bayard's? and, Did you sign them? or, Who desir'd you so to do?

Odyre. Going by Colonel Bayard's House, one Mr. Bodinot told me, I must step in to Col. Bayard's, and sign an Address to the King; and as I was a going in, I met Col. Bayard coming forth of his House; and going in, I saw the Addresses lying on the Table.

Mr. Soll. Did Colonel Bayard then persuade you to sign them? or, Did he tell you it was for your Good to sign them?

Odyre. Colonel Bayard then told me, I might sign if I would, or that I might not; and the Colonel also told me, it was for the Good of the Country, and, that if I was willing I might sign them; if not, I might let them alone; and then went away.

Mr. Soll. I will now prove the Addresses sign'd at the Coffee-house, and that Colonel Bayard attended there for that Purpose.

W. Richardson, Inhabitant and Housekeeper in the City, sworn.

Mr. Soll. What do you know, Mr. Richardson, concerning the signing the Papers at the Coffee-house?

Richardson. One Day drinking at one Spencer's, I was desir'd to go to the Coffee-house, which I did; and, when there, I saw a great many People, I believe near an Hundred; and coming above Stairs, I saw Papers on the Table, which were call'd Addresses, which I sign'd with others; and I saw, among others, Colonel Bayard there; but he seem'd to be no more acting or concern'd than any other.

Mr. Atwood. You are very forgetful of what you swore before the Governor and Council; but, to put you in mind of somewhat of it, Did no body tell you what Papers were to be sign'd?

Richardson. No body at all.

Mr. Soll. How many Papers did you sign?

Richardson. I sign'd three, but did not know what they were, but was told they were Addresses to the King, and my Lord Cornbury, and the Parliament, but did not read any of them; but, I think, one of them complain'd, that the People lay under some Hardships here.

Mr. Soll. You declar'd much more before the Council.

Richardson. I was then call'd suddenly before the Council, and was surpriz'd.

John Bashford sworn.

Mr. Soll. Mr. Bashford, tell the Court and Jury what you know concerning the Papers at the Coffee-house.

Bashford. I was at the Coffee-house, where I saw the Papers, or Addresses, but don't know what they were or contain'd; and I sign'd four or five Papers there, but did not stay half a Quarter of an Hour. When I was there, I saw Colonel Bayard amongst many others in the Room, but did not see his Name, as I remember, to any of the Papers.

N.B. These five Papers were the three Addresses and the two Duplicates.

Mr. Atwood. These Witnesses are very unwilling, or very forgetful, having given a much different Account of Things upon their Oaths before the Governor and Council.

Balsford. I have now had Time to recollect myself, but was then under a Surprise, not knowing what I was sent to for.

Mr. Michael Christian sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Christian, What do you know concerning the Papers, or Addresses, sign'd at the Coffee-house?

Christian. I remember, some Time since, about Christmas I believe, I was at the Coffee-house, where I saw the Addresses with many other People, but can't tell how many.

Mr. Atwood. Do you believe there were more than Twenty?

Christian. No, I believe there were not. I found three Addresses there, and sign'd 'em all, but the Substance thereof I cannot now remember; 'tis a good while since, and therefore I cannot speak positively to it. I remember, a Question was ask'd me at the Council, Whether there was any Complaints in the Addresses that the Soldiers wanted their Pay? I believe I might then answer something about it, but I do not know any such thing in the Addresses, either of the Soldiers or their Pay. I remember, that Colonel Bayard was then at the Coffee-house when I sign'd the Addresses, but don't remember that any body desir'd me to sign.

Mr. Atwood. How many Hands, Mr. Christian, did you see to the Addresses?

Christian. I cannot tell how many, but remember Colonel Bayard amongst others was there; but he never ask'd me to sign either of the Addresses; nor can I remember, that there was any Thing concerning either the Soldiers or their Pay in the Addresses.

Mr. Atwood. Certainly these Gentlemen are very unwilling Evidences: Mr. Christian is a Gentleman of good Learning, and it's strange that he should be so forgetful, that he cannot remember what was given in on his Oath before the Governor and Council: He has either a weak or treacherous Memory.

Mr. Hugh Gray sworn.

Mr. Sol. Mr. Gray, What do you know concerning the signing of those Papers at the Coffee-house?

Gray. About December last, being at the Coffee-house, I met there one Mr. Scot, who ask'd me to go up into the Upper-Room, which I accordingly did; and when there, I saw on a Table some Papers, which afterwards I understood were Addresses to the King, Parliament, and Lord Corn-bury. Some body ask'd me to sign 'em, which I did accordingly, but don't know who it was. I remember Col. Bayard was there amongst others, smoking a Pipe of Tobacco: I believe there might then be about ten Hands to the Papers, and about five in the Room; that I read all the Addresses, but cannot now remember the Contents of 'em.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Gray, Do you remember there was any Complaints against the Government in those Addresses?

Gray. No.

Mrs. Hannah Hutchins sworn.

Mr. Sol. Now, may it please your Honours, I will prove the Papers sign'd at another Place.

Mr. Atwood. Mrs. Hutchins, What do you know concerning these Papers brought to your House?

Mrs. Hutchins. About Christmas last Col. Bayard brought some Papers to my House, and left 'em with me, but did not stay at all, but bid me shew them to my Husband, who was then at Church. These Papers remain'd at my House about three Days, and then I deliver'd 'em to a Negro, who was sent for them, but do not remember whose Negro it was: Col. Bayard was not at our House while the Papers lay there.

Mr. Sol. Now I shall proceed to prove what sort of People were drawn in to sign these Papers.

John Read sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you remember concerning any Addresses or Papers at the House of Alderman Hutchins?

Read. Being on the 26th of December at Mr. Hutchins's House, I there saw some Papers, which one Mr. Burroughs, then present, ask'd me to sign, telling me, they were Addresses to the King, Parliament, and Lord Cornbury, made for the good of the Country, and which were lying on the Bed there; and thereupon I sign'd them, but did not read 'em: I did not see Col. Bayard there, but believe I saw his Name to the Papers. I saw a great number of Names subscrib'd to the Papers, as near as I can judge, about Two hundred.

Mr. Sol. Of what Age are you?

Read. About Seventeen Years of Age.

Edward Marshal sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Where did you see these Papers? and, What do you know of them?

Marshal. Going one Day, about Christmas, to the House of Mr. Hutchins, to get a Witness to a Letter of Attorney, I saw there five Addresses, which I sign'd; one was to the King, another to the Parliament, and another to the Lord Cornbury, congratulating his Arrival: I read some of them, but found nothing in any of 'em that reflected upon the Governor: There was some Complaint of the Speaker of the Assembly being an Alien. Looking on the Names of the Subscribers, I saw the Name of Edward Marshal before I had sign'd, but I don't know but there may be more Edward Marshals than one in the Province. I did not see Col. Bayard at the House, nor his Name to the Papers.

John

John Buckley sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know concerning any Papers at the House of Mr. Hutchins?

Buckly. Coming home from the Fort, and passing by Mr. Hutchins's House, I was ask'd to walk in by Mr. Hutchins, which I did; and being come into the Upper-Room, I saw some Papers there, which were call'd Addresses; but I did not read any of 'em, but that to my Lord Cornbury, which, as I understood, was a Compliment and Congratulation to him at his Arrival here. Mr. Hutchins then ask'd me to sign it, but I refused, because being a Lieutenant in the Garrison, I was unwilling to do any such thing before any of my elder Officers had done it. But I did not see Col. Bayard, nor his Name there.

Francis Cherman sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Give an Account what you know concerning any Papers or Addresses at the House of Alderman Hutchins.

Cherman. Coming a while ago to Mr. Hutchins's House, and going up Stairs, I saw certain Papers there, and some People: Mr. Hutchins ask'd me to sign those Papers, telling me they were Addresses to the King and my Lord Cornbury; that they were for the good of the Country and the English; and I expected by it to be made Free of the City, and sign'd therefore; but did not see Col. Bayard there, nor don't remember the Contents of the Papers.

One Button sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know concerning the Papers, &c.?

Button. Hearing by some of my Fellow-Soldiers that there were some Papers or Addresses at Capt. Hutchins's, I was willing to go and see what they were; and coming to the House, there I found Five Papers, and sign'd them all Five, but do not remember to whom they were directed. Capt. Hutchins was there, but said nothing at all to me about the Papers, or signing them; nor can I remember whether they were in Paper or Parchment. I believe there were then about thirty Names subscrib'd, but saw neither Colonel Bayard nor his Name there.

Robert Crannel sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.?

Crannel. Some Time since I came to Mr. Hutchins's, and there found Five Addresses: I read that to my Lord Cornbury, and some of the two others to the King and Parliament: In one of 'em, to the best of my Remembrance, was contained a Complaint, That the People of this Province lay under more Hardships than formerly, and that the Speaker of the Assembly of this Province was an Alien. I saw Col. Bayard's Name to that to my Lord Cornbury, but am not acquainted with his Hand-writing at all. After I had read some Part, and been told what the rest of the Papers were, I signed them all Five, but no body desired or persuaded me to do it.

Mr. Atwood. Your Evidence is not so full as when you gave in your Information on Oath before the Council.

Crannel. But it is, and I know nothing more.

One Griggs sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.

Griggs. I was desired by one Bovell, a Soldier in the Garrison, to go to Mr. Hutchins's House, and sign some Papers: I was told, and believed, it was to make me Free of the City: Thereupon I went to Mr. Hutchins's, and there signed them, but did not see Col. Bayard there.

One Garnet sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Tell the Court what you know, &c.

Garnet. A great many of the Soldiers of the Garrison signed, and they expected thereby to be made Free of the City, many of them being Tradesmen.

One Fleming sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.?

Fleming. Coming some time since to the House of Mr. Hutchins's, I there saw some Rolls opened, with a great many Names thereto, but did not see any other Writing: To this I put my Name, and also then put down two or three Names for others, at their Request, they having first put their Marks. I and the others expected by this to be made Free of the City. I believe out of 160 Men now belonging to the Fort, or thereabouts, there may be about 30 that signed.

After the Addresses were full, they signed on the Backside.

One Bovell sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.?

Bovell. Coming to Capt. Hutchins's, I was shewn some Papers, which I was told were Addresses, to which I put my Mark, without being desired by any body; I cannot write nor read. When I had set my Mark, Mr. Hutchins told me, That if any of my Fellow-Soldiers would come and sign also, they might; if not, they might let it alone. By this signing I expected to be made Free of the City, but not from being a Soldier; but never heard Capt. Hutchins say so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I have now no more Witnesses against the Prisoner. Here is a Paper signed by him; I desire the Clerk of the Council may be sworn to prove the same.

Mr. Cofens, the Clerk of the Council, sworn.

Col. Bayard. I own that Paper: It is a Petition to the Lieut. Governor and Council in Behalf of Ald. Hutchins then in Prison; owning, with Mr. French, Mr. Wenham, and Mr. Van Dam, that the Copies of three Addresses to the King, the Parliament, and the Lord Cornbury, were in our Hands.

Then the Petition was read, and was the same as is entered in Pag. 419.

After this, the Act of Assembly, on which the Mittimus is grounded, was read; and after that, the Commission to the Lord Bellamont at large, and the Lieut. Governor's Commission.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire Mr. Emot may be sworn, Whether he did not give Advice to a certain Person about that Clause in the Address to the Lieut. Governor in Favour of Ald. Hutchins; viz. That the Lord Cornbury succeeded the Earl of Bellamont as Governor in New-York?

Mr. Emot was commanded by Mr. Atwood to be sworn; and being sworn, said, I told Mr. French these Words in the said Address did not run current, and might give ground of Exception to some who would be apt to strain every Word to the Prisoner's Disadvantage. To which Mr. French replied, They had drawn the Addressees themselves, and believed it was well enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I have now prov'd by the Witnesses those false and scandalous Libels set forth in the Indictment, whereby the Good, Peace and Quiet of the Government has been disturbed, which by this Act of Assembly is High-Treason. I have likewise proved, that the Soldiers were drawn in to sign those scandalous Libels, and that some did sign blank Rolls, which was lifting of Soldiers, and is Treason. By these Words in the Petition to Lieut. Governor and Council, viz. [Who we understand, by certain Advice we have received from England, to be nominated by his Majesty to succeed the late Earl of Bellamont as our Governor] is a disowning and casting off the present Authority, and his Majesty's Government.

Mr. Nicholl. Your Honour and the Jury will please to take Notice, that the Indictment consists of divers Heads; as, That the Prisoner did compass, imagine, contrive, propose and design to defame, subvert, &c. the Peace, Good and Quiet of this his Majesty's Government.

That he used divers indirect Practices and Endeavours to procure Mutiny and Sedition amongst the Soldiers.

That he drew in Numbers of them, the said Soldiers and others, to sign false and scandalous Libels; and that he had signed them himself.

That in these Libels it is declared, That the Subjects in this Province are and have been for many Years last past, by those entrusted in the Administration of the Government, oppress'd; and that the Government hath been, and is rendered cheap and vile in the Eyes of the People; as also, that the General Assembly of this Province is not a lawful Assembly: By which means, &c. he hath incited his Majesty's Subjects to cast off their Obedience to his Majesty's said Government.

The Prisoner is not directly charged here with any Fact, except his own signing the said Libels, but for Endeavours; the rest are forc'd Conclusions and strain'd Inferences drawn from thence. It is not alledg'd, that the Peace of the Government hath been disturb'd, or that any Mutiny or Sedition hath been amongst the Soldiers, or that any one of his Majesty's Subjects hath cast off his Obedience to his Majesty's said Government. By the Course of the Evidence, it appears there was an Address to the King, an Address to the House of Commons, and an Address to my Lord Cornbury, and a Petition or Address to the Lieut. Governor and Council; but all the Evidence is very lame and weak, as to the three first, if we should admit the making or signing of them to be any Fault or Crime, more especially if the same should amount to Treason: For by none of the Evidence it does appear, that those Addressees signed at the Coffee-house were the same Addressees which were at Col. Bayard's, or that the Addressees at Ald. Hutchins's were the same which were at the Coffee-house, or the same which were at Col. Bayard's: There is no Proof that the Prisoner signed these Addressees: Here is not so much as the Likeness or Comparison of Hands produced, alledged, or proved; tho' if it were, that would not do. In the great Trial of the Bishops, Mr. Pollexfen there affirms, p. 60. That Comparison of Hands is not good in a criminal Case; and offers the Lady Car's Case in Siderfin's Reports, p. 418, 419. where it is so adjudged.

But I shall not dwell upon the Evidence; it is certainly the Right of the Subject to petition the King, whenever he conceives himself aggrieved. In the Bishops Trial, p. 160. Mr. Pollexfen says, I never thought it, nor hath it since been thought by any body else, to be a Crime to petition the King. Pag. 121. Serj. Levinz affirms, The Subjects have a Right of petitioning the King in all their Grievances. So say all our Books of Law; so says the Statute of the 13th of Charles II. They may petition. P. 126. Sir Thomas Powys, then Attorney-General, acknowledges Access to the King by Petition is open to every body; the most Inferior Person is allowed to petition the King. Pag. 135. Mr. Justice Holloway says, It's the Birthright of the Subject to petition the King. If it's the Birthright of the Subject to petition the King, to procure or draw in Men to do what it's their Birthright to do, can never amount to a Crime.

Mr. Atwood, I do not say petitioning the King is a Crime, but it may be to petition the House of Commons in the Plantations, where the King governs by Prerogative.

Mr. Nicholl. I cannot think it is a Crime for the Subjects of the Plantations to petition the House of Commons; it's every Day's Practice: Consult the Votes in every Sessions, you'll find many Addressees, Petitions, and Complaints from the Subjects of the Plantations: It seems to be the Right of the Subjects to petition the House of Commons. The Statute of the 13th of Charles the II. c. 5. restrains the Common-Law; by that it plainly appears to be the Right of the Subject to petition the House of Commons, or the King. The Proviso in that Act says, That neither that Act, nor any thing therein contained, shall be construed to extend or binder any Person or Persons, not exceeding the Number of Ten, to present any publick or private Grievance or Complaint to any Member of the House of Commons after his Election, or to the King's Majesty. The Act of Recognition of primo William and Mary, declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects, and settling the Succession of the Crown, thereby it is enacted amongst other Things, That it is the Right of the Subject to petition the King; and all Commitments and Prosecutions for such Petitioning are illegal. And they do claim, demand, and insist upon all and singular the Premises, as their undoubted Rights and Liberties; and that no Declaration, Judgment, Doings or Proceedings to the Prejudice of the People, in any the said Premises, ought in any wise wife hereafter to be drawn into Consequence or Example. Here is no Grant of any new Privilege, but a Claim and Acknowledgment of an Ancient Right; and Petitions to the Parliament are as ancient as Parliaments themselves. If the Subjects of the Plantations may not petition and complain to their Prince, they are in a worse Condition than Slaves. The Cries of the Oppressions in the Plantations have gone up to Heaven, and are again come down upon the Earth, and have inspired and moved the King and Parliament of England, to make a Law to check the exorbitant Actions of Governors in the Plantations, and make them accountable in England for their Miscarriages abroad; which can never be discovered to the King but by Petition. The Statute is in these Words.

An Act to punish Governors of Plantations in this Kingdom, for Crimes by them committed in the Plantations.

‘WHEREAS a due Punishment is not provided for several Crimes and Offences committed out of this his Majesty’s Realm of England, whereof divers Governors, Lieutenant-Governors, Deputy-Governors, or Commanders in Chief of Plantations, and Colonels within his Majesty’s Dominions beyond the Seas, have taken Advantage, and have not been deterred from oppressing his Majesty’s Subjects within their respective Governments and Commands, nor from committing several other great Crimes and Offences, not deeming themselves punishable for the same here, nor accountable for such their Crimes and Offences, to any Person within their respective Governments and Commands: For Remedy whereof, Be it enacted by the King’s most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, and by Authority of the same, That if any Governor or Commander in Chief of any Plantation or Colony within his Majesty’s Dominions beyond the Seas, shall, after the First Day of August, 1700, be guilty of oppressing any of his Majesty’s Subjects beyond the Seas, within their respective Governments or Commands, or shall be guilty of any other Crime or Offence, contrary to the Laws of this Realm, or in force within their respective Governments and Commands, shall be enquired of, heard and determined in his Majesty’s Court of King’s-Bench here in England, or before such Commissioners, and in such County of this Realm, as shall be assigned by his Majesty’s Commission, and by Good and Lawful Men of the same County; and that such Punishments shall be inflicted on such Offenders, as are usually inflicted for Offences of the like Nature committed here in England.

This Prosecution seems to be made to frustrate and evade this Act of Parliament. The Subject is oppress’d, or conceives himself to be so, and complains of this Oppression; this Complaining is made TREASON! Here is a strange and fatal Dilemma on the Subjects of the Plantations; They must either suffer their Oppressions, or be hang’d for Traitors if they complain!

What relates to the Act of Assembly of this Country, it can by no natural or legal Construction be extended to make the Prisoner culpable. It is plain by the whole Purport of the Act, that it has made no new Treason; it only recognizes the King and Queen; and enacts, That those who shall do any thing destructive to that Establishment, by Force of Arms or otherwise, shall be Rebels and Traitors; which they would be without this Act. If this Address and Petition had been to the French King, the Thing had been of another Nature. By the same Construction, every petty Battery, or other little Trespas, may be a Treason.

The Petition of Col. Bayard, and the other three, is so far from disowning the Government, that it is a direct Acknowledging of the same. The Direction of the Petition is, To the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Council: The Expression [That they have Advice that the Lord Cornbury is to succeed the Earl of Bellamont] can with no Justice or common Sense be construed to be a disowning and casting off of the Government. I think it will hardly be affirmed, That the Council succeeded the Earl of Bellamont, and Capt. Nansan the Council; if so, after the Earl of Bellamont, who was Captain-General? We had Seven Captains-General; which is an Absurdity, I suppose, none will alledge.

Some time after the Earl of Bellamont’s Death, Capt. Nansan, the Lieut. Governor, was at Barbados.

A familiar Example will demonstrate the Weakness and Falsity of this Construction. If a Captain of a Company be killed or absent, the Lieutenant or next Officer has the full Command of the Company, as the Captain had, or could have; but I think no Man will say he succeeds the Captain, or that when another Captain is appointed, he succeeds that Lieutenant or other Officer. So that I cannot think there is any Fact or Crime alledged or proved against the Prisoner, to charge him with this high Crime of Treason, or indeed with any other Crime whatsoever.

Mr. Enot. By your Honours Permission, I am of Council for Col. Bayard the Prisoner at the Bar: But by reason I am unwilling to spend too much of your Time, this Trial already having been very long; and Mr. Nicoll, who is also of Council of the same Side, having amongst other things made it very evident, that for the Subject to petition his Majesty, is their ancient and undubitable Right; I shall therefore make it my Business only, as near as I can, to demonstrate to this Court and Jury, That had the King’s Council made ample Proof of all the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment, as the signing the Addresses, and other Things therein contained, to have been true; yet, in point of Law, they cannot amount to that grand Crime of High-Treason.

In order to this, I shall, with as much Brevity as I can, examine into, and put your Honours in mind, and withal inform the Gentlemen of the Jury, what the Law of England (by which we are or ought to be govern’d here) hath been, for near the Space of Four hundred Years last past, relating to this grand Crime of High-Treason; whereby it will manifestly appear, how cautious the Parliaments of England have been in making and increasing the Laws to take away Mens Lives, and particularly for High-Treason. And I shall begin with the Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3. a Statute to which the greatest regard has been paid of any Act of Parliament whatsoever, unless Magna Charta, as hereafter I shall briefly shew.

I must also observe to your Honours, That before the making of this Act of Parliament of the 25th of Edw. III. which was in Anno 1350, and which was the very first Act relating to Treasons; so many Things were charged as High-Treason by the Common-Law, and there were so many Ambiguities and Diversities of Opinions, that both History and our Books of the Law sufficiently inform us, scarce any Man knew how to behave himself. But now, by this Statute, the Particulars and Species of this grand Crime are reckon'd up, and all others excluded, till declared by Parliament. For tho' nothing can concern the King, his Crown and Dignity, more immediately than High-Treason, which our Law calls Crimen læsæ Majestatis, a Crime wronging Majesty; yet this good King Edward III. at the Request of the Lords and Commons of England, in a Parliamentary Way, and to make all After-ages happy, makes a plain Declaration of such Offences as should for the future be deem'd for High-Treason, and none other, unless declared by Parliament.

This Act of Parliament is branch'd out by Sir Edward Coke, in the Third Part of his Institutes, into Six Classes or Heads; which I shall the rather take notice of, for that Trials of this nature are very rare in the Plantations; and they are these:

1. The Compassing or Imagining the Death of the King, Queen or Prince, and declaring the same by some Overt-Act.

The Killing or Murdering of the Chancellor, Treasurer, Justices, &c. in their Place doing their Office, &c.

2. To violate, or carnally to know the King's Consort or Queen, the King's Eldest Daughter unmarried, or Prince's Wife.

3. Levying of War against the King.

4. Adhering to the King's Enemies, and declaring the same by some Overt-Act; and this must not be Inimicus, sed Hostis.

5. Counterfeiting of the Great-Seal, Privy-Seal, or King's Coin, &c.

6. And lastly, Bringing into the Realm, Counterfeit-Money, to the Likeness of the King's Coin, &c.

Now, if there is any other Offence which was not comprehended within one of these Classes, the same was thereby declared to be no Treason.

In a Clause of which Act of Parliament we find these Words; which I shall rather read, because I apprehend it will very much concern this ensuing Trial.

"And because that many other like Cases may happen in Time to come, which a Man cannot think or declare at this present Time, it is ordained, That if any other Case; supposed Treason, which is not above specify'd, do happen before any Justices, the Justices shall tarry, without any going to Judgment of the Treason, till the Cause be shewed and declared, before the King and his Parliament, whether it be judged Treason or other Felony."

By this we may easily perceive, and it's very obvious, that this Clause was made to prevent the Judges from taking upon them to declare any things to be High-Treason, but such as are particularly express'd by this Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. or by some other subsequent Act.

Again, in the Reign of Richard II. we find sundry other Things were declared by Parliament to be High-Treason, which were not comprehended within the Statute of 25th Edw. III. But yet upon the coming in of Hen. IV. it was again enacted and declared, That nothing should for the future be adjudged High-Treason, but what was so ordained by the aforesaid Statute 25 Edw. III. The Words are these:

1 H. IV. c. 10. "That whereas in Parliament, in the 21st Year of the late King Richard, divers Pains of Treason were ordained by Statute, inasmuch as there was no Man who knew how he ought to behave himself, to do, speak or say, for doubt of such Pains; it's accorded and assented by the King, Lords and Commons, That in no Time to come, any Treason be adjudged otherwise than it was ordained by the Statute, in the Time of his Noble Grandfather King Edw. III.

Now this Statute, I am humbly of Opinion, is directly in the Negative, which says, That for the future nothing shall be adjudged Treason, otherwise than it was ordained by the aforesaid Statute of the 25th of Edw. III.

Yet, nevertheless, this Indictment is grounded upon an Act of Assembly of this Province; which is, I am humbly of Opinion, not only contrary, but directly repugnant to the aforesaid Statute (which appeareth to me to limit all new Species of Treason to be declared by Parliament, and not elsewhere) which, if it should admit of such a Construction as is now intended, I think I may modestly say, it will introduce Five Hundred several new Species of Treason: So that his Majesty's good Subjects of this Province would fall under much greater Hardships than whatever the People of England were sensible of before the making of this Act (which I cannot too often mention) of the 25th of Edw. III.

If we look further downward, upon the coming in of Edw. VI. which was in the Year 1546, sundry new Species of Treason having been again introduced by Act of Parliament, it was in the very First Year of his Reign enacted, That no Offence, made Treason by any Statute, should be so deemed and adjudged for the future, but such as were made Treason by the aforesaid Statute of 25 Edw. III. other than such as were by that present Statute ordained and declared.

But yet in Queen Mary's Time, in the 1st Year of her Reign, this grand Crime was brought to its ancient Standard; and it was then declared in Parliament, That no Act or Offence whatsoever should be deemed Treason or Misprision of Treason, but such as were declared by the Statute 25 Edw. III. And the Substance of the Preamble is this, That the State and Safety of the King standeth more assuredly by the Love of his Subjects, than Fear of his Laws.

So that upon Examination, we find how careful and cautious the People and Parliament of England have been in introducing and increasing of Sanguinary Laws, and that thro' the Revolution of many Ages. And hereby it's very remarkable, what a great regard has been in all Ages paid to this venerable Statute of 25 Edw. III. which with great Care has been continued down to us to this very Time, and is now in its full Force. Sir Edward Coke, treating thereof, tells us, That the Parliament, in which this Act was made, for many Years after was called, Benedictum Parliamentum, the Blessed Parliament.

If we look but into the Bill of Attainder of Thomas Earl of Strafford, in the Year 1640 and 41, even in those Times, what regard was paid to this Statute, which I have so often mentioned, wherein it was provided, That the Judgment against the said Earl should never be drawn into Precedent: And the Words are these, "Provided, That no Judge or Judges, Justice or Justices whatsoever, shall adjudge or interpret any Act or Thing to be Treason, nor hear or determine any Treason in any other Manner, than he or they should or ought to have done before the making of this Act."

Now, if we do but reflect upon the great Concern and Care that has been taken thro' all Ages, by the wise People of England, in preventing the Judges from interpreting any Act or Thing whatsoever to be Treason, but such only as are enumerated in the Statute of Edw. 3.

And at the same time give our selves leave to think, how industriously we labour to introduce an Act of Assembly of this Province, to make, as I said before, even Five hundred new and never heard of Species of Treason: I say, if we do but consider this, 'tis Matter of great Amazement, and more especially in such an Age as this, and in so happy a Reign, where no Man ever questioned, or at least doubted of the true Enjoyment of our Laws and Liberties, tho' never so remote from the Fountain Head.

I am afraid, I have already trespassed upon your Honours Patience: I shall therefore conclude with some Observations upon the Act of Assembly, upon which this Indictment is laid.

Now both the Title, Preamble and Words of this Act of Assembly, and the Cause of making thereof, is very obvious (however the same may be now interpreted) which were these Two:

1st, For the future, to prevent the setting up a Power over his Majesty's Subjects in this Province, without Authority from the Crown of England; which was found to be of fatal Consequence in the late unhappy Disorders in this Province.

2^{dly}, To express the Love, Loyalty and hearty Affection of the People to their Majesties King William and Queen Mary; and, as far as in them lay, to recognize them their Sovereign Leige Lord and Lady. I doubt not but your Honours will see Cause to recommend the same to the Jury, in delivering the Charge: And that no strain'd Construction of this Act of Assembly can ever affect the Prisoner, Col. Bayard, or in the least blast his long-experienc'd Loyalty to the Crown of England, and in a special manner to his present Majesty King William.

I had almost forgot to beg Leave of the Court to apply my self to the Gentlemen of the Jury, to obviate some Objections, or rather a vulgar Error, that usually hath crept in amongst them upon Trials, and particularly upon Indictments; which is, they do believe,

That if the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment be but proved, they are to have no regard to Matter of Law: Which I take to be a very great and dangerous Error in them.

For tho' it be true, and must be granted, that Matters of Fact are the most common and proper Objects of a Jury's Determination, and Matters of Law that of the Judges; yet as Law ariseth out of, and is interwoven and complicated with Fact, it cannot but fall under the Jury's Consideration: For, should it be otherwise, if a Person should be indicted for doing any common, innocent or lawful Act, if it be but cloathed and disguised in the Indictment with the Name of Treason, or some other high Crime, and proved by Witnesses to be done, then the Jury would lie under a Necessity of finding the Prisoner Guilty. No:

Do we not find in most general Issues, upon Not Guilty pleaded, as upon Indictments of Trespasses, Breach of the Peace, Felony, and even in Cases of High-Treason; yet the Jury do not find the Fact of the Case by it self, leaving the Law to the Court, but find the Party Guilty, or Not Guilty.

And this will more evidently appear upon Indictments of Murder, that the Jury are Judges as well of Matter of Law as of Fact. For is it not every Day's Practice, where Persons are indicted of Murder; the Jury doth not only find them Guilty or Not Guilty, but many times, upon hearing and weighing of Circumstances, the Jury brings in the Prisoner not only Guilty or Not Guilty in general, but brings them in either Guilty of Murder or Manslaughter, by Misadventure or Se Defendendo? &c.

So the Jury being well apprized of the true Matter of Fact, of which they are sole Judges, can better apply the Matter of Law; for, says my Lord Coke, It's by fitly applying Matters of Fact and Law together, that the Jury brings forth their Verdict; which, I hope, you Gentlemen of the Jury will carefully do.

Prisoner. I desire some of my Evidences may be called, to give an Account of my Life and Conversation. Which was granted.

Mr. Veasy, Minister of Trinity Church, being sworn, said, I have been for Six Years personally acquainted with Col. Bayard; during which Time his Life and Conversation recommended him in the World as an Exemplary Christian: And the frequent Expressions of his Zeal and Affection to his Majesty's Person and Government, convinced me, that he was a good Subject.

Pris. Call Capt. John Kipp. Who being called, was absent.

Call Capt. Tudor.

Tudor sworn, said, I have known Col. Bayard 26 Years, a moderate, civil, good Man, has been employed in almost all Offices of the greatest Trust in the Government, never disaffected, but stood up for the Protestant Religion and King William.

Pris. To prove that I have upon sundry Emergencies, during the late War, advanced of my private Fortune upon Loan without Interest, several considerable Sums of Money, for the Preservation of his Majesty's Interest and Government in New-York, of which upwards of 200*l.* Money in Specie lent, is still unpaid; I desire Mr. Jamison, who was then Clerk of the Council, may be sworn.

Jamison being called, appeared.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Jamison has refused to purge himself of signing those Addresses, and is Particeps Criminis, for which Reason he cannot be allowed to be an Evidence.

The Evidence being sworn and examined, the Solicitor-General, without answering the Authorities offered by the Prisoner's Council, relating to the Treason, summ'd up the Evidence, as to Matter of Fact.

Mr. Atwood gave the Charge to the Jury, in a long Discourse; and among other Things insisted, That the Indictment was not laid upon the Act of 25 E. 3. nor any Act of Parliament, but upon an Act of Assembly of this Province, confirmed by by his Majesty, which had Power to make Acts for High-Treason, as well as the Parliaments of England; and that the said Statute was confined to England, because by the same Statute it is enacted, That if any Doubt should arise, the same be adjourned unto Parliament; which must be understood of the Parliament of England.

That it is High-Treason, by the Act of Assembly, by any Manner of Ways, or upon any Pretence whatsoever, by Force of Arms, or otherwise, to disturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of the Government, as it is now established; which he said was proved by Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; which were, by signing of Libels against the Government, and thereby enticing the People to cast off and disown the same; and chiefly, by the Soldiers signing Complaints against their chief Officers; which tended to Mutiny, and was Treason by the Common-Law.

That by bringing the Papers to Hutchins's House, the Prisoner had made himself guilty of all that was done there, by the Soldiers and others signing those Papers.

That the Right of petitioning the King was not in Dispute, but the Manner of doing it made it criminal.

That it was plain the Address of the Prisoner and his Three Fellows, was a disowning of the present Authority, and casting off his Majesty's Government as it was then establish'd; for Capt. Nanfan succeeded the Lord Bellamont (as by the Commission appeared) and not my Lord Cornbury; which was a plain Overt-Act of Treason, by the Meaning and Words of the Act of Assembly.

That it appeared undeniable, that the Prisoner and his Son were always by the Papers, and that it was done with a great Number of People to affront the Government.

That the drawing in Soldiers to sign Petitions, is Mutiny and Sedition by the Law; and drawing of them in, on false Pretences, in hopes of Freedom in the City, and subscribing their Names on blank Lists, is lifting of Soldiers, and may be applied to invite in any Foreign Power: And thereupon strenuously insisted on the Validity of the Evidence, That the Facts laid in the Indictment were undeniably proved, and that those Facts did amount to High-Treason, within the Words and Meaning of this Act of Assembly; and that therefore the Jury could not do otherwise than bring in the Prisoner Guilty.

The Constable being sworn to keep the Jury, the Court adjourned till Nine a-Clock at Night: And the Jury then not being agreed, the Court did adjourn till Monday Nine a Clock, the 9th of March.

On Monday the 9th, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar, and the Jury sent for: They were asked, If they were agreed in their Verdict? They answered, they were not agreed, but desired some Direction of the Court. Jacob Goelet appeared as Foreman of the Jury, and read some Notes of what he said the Witnesses had sworn: Which were denied to have been sworn by the Council for the Prisoner, who prayed Mr. Atwood to satisfy the Jury of the Truth of the Evidence.

To this he answered, That he could not do it after the Charge given; but affirmed, it was no new Thing (as some pretended) after Charge given, to satisfy the Jury in some Matters of Law; and told, that he had received Letters from the Jury, and answered them; which Answers were only his private Opinion. That if they were under any Difficulty, whether the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment, and which were proved to them, were Treason or no, they might find the Prisoner Guilty; who had his Advantage in moving in Arrest of Judgment, and might be relieved as to Matter of Law.

Mr. Emot. This is not fair, to give the Jury a Handle to find the Prisoner Guilty in Expectation of Relief in Arrest of Judgment; for they are Judges both of Law and Fact, as the Case is now circumstanced: If they will enslave themselves and their Posterity, and debar themselves of all Access to their Prince, they will be worse than Negroes.

Mr. Atwood. This is not to be suffered, to offer these Things to the Jury after they have received their Charge; therefore be silent. Then proceeding, he renewed his Charge to the Jury, aggravating the supposed Crimes for the Space of about half an Hour.

Mr. Emot. I pray your Honour to be heard one Word. (Which he often repeated, and at last was granted him.) The Facts laid in the Indictment were not proved, as to the disowning and casting off the Government, encouraging of Mutiny in the Soldiers, or disquieting the Peace of the Government. Addressing the King is the undoubted Right of the Subject, both by Common-Law and Acts of Parliament. If the Subject for Complaints of Grievances, set forth by Petition, shall be attainted of High-Treason, we are in a worse Condition than Slaves.

Mr. Atwood check'd him, and commanded Silence.

Mr. Nicholl. The Act of Parliament to punish Governors in the Plantations for oppressing the Subject, is rendered useless and of no Effect, if the Subjects are depriv'd of this Liberty to complain, and set forth their Grievances, by Petition to their King.

Prisoner. I crave that Jacobus Goelet may read over his Paper concerning the Evidence given, and Liberty to controul the Mistakes. This was denied.

Pris. I crave that Col. DePeyster and Capt. Walters, who are joined in the Commission, will declare their Opinions singly, if they have agreed that to be Treason which Mr. Atwood has declared to be so, either by the Common-Law, or Act of Assembly, if the Facts laid in the Indictment should be admitted to be proved, as indeed they are not.

To this he received no Answer.

After this the Jury were sent out, and the Court adjourned till Three a-Clock in the Afternoon.

At which Time the Commissioners meeting, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar; the Jury were sent for: And being come, were asked, If they were agreed of their Verdict? Which they answered in the Affirmative, and that they found the Prisoner Guilty.

Council. We pray Time to offer Reasons in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Atwood. Let these Reasons be offered Tomorrow Morning.

Court adjourned till Eleven a-Clock next Morning.

March 10th. The Commissioners met, and the Prisoner being brought to the Bar, he offered the following Reasons in Arrest of Judgment, in these Words, viz.

Bayard. That no Overt-Act, alledged in the Indictment, is prov'd by the Oaths and Testimonies of Two lawful Witnesses, as by the Statute of 7 W. 3. is directed

That if the Overt-Act, as alledged in the Indictment, should be admitted to be so proved, yet neither by the Law of England, or by any legal genuine Construction of the Act of Assembly of this Country, on which the Indictment is grounded, any of the said Overt-Acts can amount to High-Treason.

Mr. Atwood. Tho' the Reasons offered by the Prisoner's Council, are properly and learnedly offered, I could off-hand answer and controul them all; yet I will not do it; let them be left with the Solicitor-General. And adjourn'd the Court until Ten a-Clock the next Morning; which accordingly was done.

March 11. The Commissioners met, and the Prisoner brought to the Bar.

Mr. Nicholl. It does not appear, that any one Overt-Act, alledged in the Indictment, has been proved by the Oaths of Two lawful Witnesses, as by the Statute of 7 W. 3. ought to be done.

Mr. Atwood. The Jury are the sole Judges of the Evidence; and if there has been any Omission in that, it is now help'd by the Verdict.

Mr. Nicholl. 'Tho' 'tis very plain to me, and I suppose to the Court, that what I have affirmed in this Matter is Truth, yet I shall not much insist upon it, because if the Acts themselves should be admitted to be true, they do not fall under any of the Heads or Species of Treason so made by the English Laws, or by any natural and reasonable Construction of the Act of Assembly of this Government; which being wholly Matter of Law, I shall leave to your Honours Consideration.

Mr. Emot. I very well remember, that the Court was pleased to tell the Jury, after they had been together some Days, and not being agreed upon the Verdict, That if they were under any Difficulty, whether the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, if proved, were Treason; if they found the Prisoner guilty, he had his Remedy, by moving the Matter of Law in Arrest of Judgment.

I therefore humbly offer in Arrest of Judgment, That if the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment were admitted to be proved, yet in Point of Law they cannot amount to High-Treason, within the Meaning of the Act of Assembly upon which the Indictment was laid.

For I take it, that all Acts of Parliament, and consequently Acts of Assembly, are to be understood and taken by reasonable Construction, to be gathered and collected out of the Words of the Act only, and that according to the natural, grammatical, plain and legal Sense thereof, without any forced Interpretation.

Then if so, this Act of Assembly, both by the Title, Preamble, and the enacting Part thereof, plainly demonstrates the Meaning of the Law-makers, and what was thereby designed for the future to prevent. The Title of this Act is in these Words: An Act for the quieting and settling the Disorders that have lately happened within this Province, and for establishing and securing their Majesty's present Government against the like Disorders for the future. Now what these Disorders were, we have great cause to remember; and they are very well known to this Court to have been occasioned by some Persons setting up an Arbitrary Power over the King's Subjects without Authority from the Crown of England, as appears from the Preamble of the said Act, Part whereof is in these Words: And whereas the late and inconsiderate Violation of the Good and Quiet of this Province, by the setting up a Power over their Majesties Subjects, without Authority from the Crown of England, hath vitiated and debauched the Minds of many People, &c. For the Prevention whereof in Time to come, be it enacted, &c. That whatsoever Person or Persons shall by any manner of Ways, or upon any Pretence whatsoever, endeavour, by Force of Arms, or otherwise, to disturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of this their Majesties Government, as it is now established, shall be deemed and esteemed as Rebels and Traitors, &c.

From hence it plainly appears, that the Intention of the Law-makers was only to declare such Person or Persons Rebels and Traytors, as should for the future set up a Power over his Majesty's Subjects in this Province, without Authority from the Crown of England; which undoubtedly is Treason within the Statute of 25 E. 3.

But it can never be understood (without offering the greatest Violence to the reasonable Construction of the said Act of Assembly, and the plain Intention of the Makers thereof) to be construed to extend to the signing the Addresses mentioned in the Indictment, which is the only Thing the Prisoner is positively charged withal; for all the rest are only presumptive, constructive, and accumulative Crimes, drawn from thence.

But, says Mr. Solicitor, the Words of this Act of Assembly are in Generals; That if any Persons shall endeavour, by Force of Arms, or otherwise, to disturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of the Government, shall be deemed and esteemed Rebels and Traitors.

Now from the Word [Otherwise] Mr. Solicitor would fain insinuate, that the Prisoner is within the Meaning of the Act of Assembly: A very fine Explanation! For by such a Construction as this, every Breach of the Peace, sudden Quarrel, or small Battery, shall be deemed Treason. I shall not further add upon this Head, but only offer my humble Opinion, That here, in the Plantations, we are not capable in our Assemblies to make and declare any new Species of Treason, but such as are comprehended in the Statute of 25 E. 3. or some other subsequent Statute.

Tho' what already has been offered, I hope will be sufficient to stay and arrest Judgment, yet I have several other Things in behalf of the Prisoner (by your Honours Permission) to move in Arrest of Judgment, and which are not mentioned in the Reasons which were assigned in Writing; and I pray Liberty to offer them Ore Tenus.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Emot, you have Liberty granted you: Go on.

Mr. Emot. I thank your Honour. And the Reasons that I shall now further assign, why Judgment ought not to pass against the Prisoner, according to the Verdict of the Jury, are these Three:

1st. That Andries Marjbank, one of the Petty-Jury, is an Alien, and of foreign Birth, born in Zealand, and came over into this Province in the Year 1684; and that Jacobus Goellet, the Foreman of the Jury, is also an Alien, and hath lately sent to England, for to procure a Denization.

2^{dly}. That the Vifne, or Venire, in the Precept to summon the Petty-Jury, under the Hands of the Commissioners, is wrong awarded, or rather not awarded at all.

3^{dly}. That the said Precept is not returned by the Sheriff, or any Endorsement thereupon, and signed by him, against the known Laws of England, and more particularly the Statute of 12 E. 2. Cap. V. called, The Statute of York.

Mr. Atwood

Mr. Atwood in a long Speech said, What the Solicitor has offer'd, is sufficient to over-rule the Reasons exhibited in Arrest of Judgment; for 'tis evidently proved, that the Prisoner has disturbed the Peace, Good and Quiet of the Government, as it is now established; viz.

1st. By enticing the People to sign scandalous Libels against the Government, at the Coffee-House, and at his own House, by the Oath of Peter Odyre, telling him, it was for the Good of the Country; and his bringing them to Alderman Hutchins's, makes him equally guilty to the Soldiers signing Complaints against their chief Officers, thereby enticing them for Mutiny; which Soldiers are part of the Seven thousand Men raised by Act of Parliament for the Defence of the Kingdom; which is High-Treason by the Common-Law, as well as by Act of Assembly.

2^{dly}. By the Prisoner's disowning the Assembly to be lawful.

3^{dly}. By charging the Lieut. Governor to be brib'd to pass their Acts of Assembly.

4^{bly}. By charging the Government to be in the Hands of hot and ignorant Men.

5^{bly}. By the Address to the Lieut. Governor, disowning and casting off the present Authority, declaring the Lord Cornbury to succeed the late Earl of Bellamont in the Government.

I hope the Prisoner by this Time is convinc'd of his Crime, as well as that Clergy-man who spoke so much in his Vindication; and that the Prisoner will now be duly penitent, and make a true Confession of it.

Col. Bayard. May it please your Honour, I ever abhor'd that heinous and abominable Crime of High-Treason, as much as Death it self. I call God and my own Conscience to witness, That I am as innocent of it as the Child unborn: I never spoke to any of the Soldiers to make any Complaint, or sign any Addressees, or other Paper whatsoever. I own I was present at the Coffee-House, at the signing of an Address to the King, another to the Parliament, and another to the Lord Cornbury; and I own the Two first contained some Complaints of Grievances we supposed to lie under, and the latter a Congratulation.

I had the best Council I could get for so doing, and that it was the Subjects Right to Petition the King, by the Act of the First of W & M. and I think the Subjects should be worse than Slaves, if they shall be arraigned for High-Treason for complaining to their Prince.

I must further beg leave to say, Your Honour was much mistaken in summing up just now what the Witnesses had sworn; and the Jury (by that Paper the Foreman read in Court) had likewise a wrong Notion of it; which I desired then I might controul; but your Honour over-ruled, as not to be allowed after the Charge was given. It was not proved by any of the Witnesses, that the Peace of the Government had been disturbed; none of 'em said I had enticed any Person whatsoever to sign the Addressees; nor that I was present at the Soldiers signing at Hutchins's, much less that I enticed them to Mutiny. I knew nothing of their signing; I was not at the House all that Time. Mr. Solicitor had Mrs. Hutchins sworn, who said the same. None of 'em say, that in the said Address the Assembly was called Unlawful, but only, that the Speaker was an Alien; nor that the Lieut. Governor was bribed, but tempted; nor that the Government was in the Hands of hot and ignorant Men, but that hot and ignorant Men were put in Offices; and that thereby the Government was like to be rendred Cheap and Vile. And as for the Address to the Lieut. Governor, it was only said, We had received Advice from England, that the Lord Cornbury was to succeed the Earl of Bellamont as our Governor; which by no Colour can be construed to be a casting off, or disowning of, the present Authority. And tho' all had been proved, as it is not, what your Honour, as above, has been pleas'd to say, I humbly conceive it cannot amount to a Misdemeanor, and much less to that heinous Crime of High-Treason.

Mr. Atwood. The Right of Petitioning the King is not in Dispute, but the Manner of doing it makes it Criminal; neither does that Liberty extend to the Parliament.

Mr. Emot. I humbly move, that we may have Liberty to offer other Reasons Ore Tenus. (Which the Court granted.)

Mr. Atwood. Adjourn the Court till Friday Morning, the 13th Instant. (Adjourned accordingly.)

On the 12th in the Morning, the Prisoner wrote a Letter to Col. De Peyster; some of the Contents whereof were by Mr. Atwood retorted upon the Prisoner in open Court, at the Time he pass'd Sentence against him; for which Reason the Prisoner has permitted it to be published; and it is as followeth:

Col. De Peyster; Sir,

I Take leave to acquaint you, That tho' it has pleas'd God to suffer your self, and some of your Relations to be the likely chief Instruments of the total Destruction both of my self and all my Family and Posterity; that yet, notwithstanding I have that Peace with my self (and I can but only thank God for his all-sufficient Grace in strengthening me in it) that I am reconciled to all Mankind whatsoever, and that I hope one of my last Prayers will be, That God, out of his infinite Mercy, will graciously pardon all those who have had a Hand to cut me off. Sir, Believe me, as you may give Credit to the Words of a dying Man (since I find the Jobb is to be done, and that it is now past your Power to stop the Current) that I shall also die with a clear and good Conscience, and as free of that horrid Crime laid to my Charge, as the Child yet unborn. And therefore hope God's merciful Hand, who has never left nor forsaken me, will continue to support me to the very last, and that I may look Death in the Face, as a good Christian ought to do; humbly submitting my All to his most Wise, most Just, and most Merciful Dispensations: For I am sensible there is no more than one Death for me, and that, in all Probability, considering my Age, it might have been very soon, tho' this Tribulation had not befallen me. I shall only add, That I hope in God's Mercy for the Pardon of all my manifold Sins and Transgressions, thro' the only Merits of my Saviour Jesus Christ; and that when I shall be no more, he will continue his Grace to my dear Wife, and my Posterity. And, lastly, That my Blood, which is struck at (by your Brother's own Expressions to my self, and your Brother-in-Law's to others, both not long since) may be the last to be spilt on Account of our dismal and unhappy Divisions; tho' I fear out of my Alms such further Calamities may arise to this poor bleeding Province, that Posterity will have Cause long to lament: For it is not to be expected expected, that all the Plots, Contrivances and Intrigues used in this Matter (many of which I assure you are already discovered) will have their Exit with my self: It had been more pardonable to have stabb'd me in my Sleep, or with Joab's Hand, under a Pretence of Friendship, than to do it with Abab, under a Colour and Cloak of Justice; and of the Two, I leave others to consider, if this latter exceeds not the former; since it's not to be suppos'd, that Abab's was so much out of Malice; but the Vineyard being denied him on his offering the Worth of it in Money, occasioned the Innocent to be arraigned and slain for a pretended Crime of Blasphemy and Higb-Treason.

Sir, These above Lines are the Sincerity of my Thoughts this Morning; assuring you, that I never had a Thought before late last Night to write to your self one Word about this Subject, so altogether unknown to all Mankind whatsoever, nor don't intend them any further; wherefore I desire you'll make such Use of them, for your own Consideration, as God may direct you. I am, Sir,

Your humble Servant,

N. BAYARD.

March 13. The Court being met according to Adjournment, the Prisoner being brought up, moved, That forasmuch as Mr. Nicholl was out of Town, by reason of the Indisposition of his Family, another Council might be assigned in his stead. Which was granted, and the Court adjourned till Monday the 16th Instant, at Nine a-Clock.

March 16. Before the sitting of the Court, the Prisoner sent a Petition to Mr. Atwood, and the rest of the Commissioners; viz.

To the Honourable William Atwood, Esq;
Abraham De Peyser, Esq; and Robert Walters, Esq; Judges of this Special Court.

The Humble Petition of Nicholas Bayard, sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner being altogether unacquainted what is practicable and allowable in Law to be offered in Arrest of Judgment; yet since your Petitioner's Life, and all what is near and dear unto him is concerned, he humbly craves Leave (besides the Reasons already offer'd by your Petitioner's Council in Arrest of Judgment) to lay before your Honours, and to pray your Honours favourable Consideration thereupon.

First, That the Verdict of the Grand-Inquest was not sufficiently found by any Twelve of that Inquest, as in his former Petition is set forth.

Secondly, That the Petty-Jury (in a manner forc'd upon your Petitioner) were all of them Parties concerned against your Petitioner in the very Matter he was tried for, on Account of the unhappy Divisions within this Province; all of 'em extream ignorant of the English Language, to that degree, that scarcely one of them is able to say the Lord's Prayer in the English Tongue, and much less to comprehend the Matters of Law, and what has been offered in behalf of your Petitioner at his Trial.

Thirdly, That all what has been sworn against your Petitioner, was, First, That the Petitioner's Name was seen to the Addresse to the Lord

Cornbury, but that they knew not whether it was his Hand-Writing. Secondly, That the Petitioner had been present at the Coffee-House, and at his own House, when the Addresses to the King, another to the Parliament, and another to the Lord Cornbury, were signed by several of the Freeholders, Freemen, and Inhabitants of this City; but that he had desired none of them to sign the same. Thirdly, That the Petitioner had brought some Papers, supposed to be the said Addresses, to the House of Alderman Hutchins. Fourthly, That the Addresses to the Lord Cornbury contain'd only a Congratulation at his safe Arrival, and a hearty Desire, that with it all our Divisions might be healed, and that the very Name of Party and Faction might vanish, and be extinguish'd; and that in the two former, or in one of them, either to the King or Parliament, some Complaints were made of Grievances, without remembering the Particulars: Only Mr. Cloves swore, That to his best Remembrance, in both, or in one, of the Addresses to the King or the Parliament, mention was made, That some of the hottest and ignorantest of the People were put in Offices: That the Speaker of the Assembly was challenged to be an Alien: That the said Assembly had given a Gift to the Lieutenant-Governor, to tempt him to pass their Acts, and another to the Judge; and that thereby his Majesty's Government was like to be render'd Vile and Cheap in the Eyes of the People: And swore further, That in none of them any Reflections were made (as he conceived) to the Prejudice of the Lieutenant-Governor; and that in none of them, the Words Unlawful or Oppression were mentioned.

Fourthly, That all the rest of the Evidences swore nothing, against your Petitioner, but that they had signed the Addresses at Alderman Hutchins's; that two or three of the Soldiers had a Glass of Wine given them, but not for signing, it being Christmas-Time; and that some of them expected to be made Free of the City, but not of the Garrison.

May it please your Honours, Your Petitioner finds, by the Notes himself has taken at his Trial, that nothing more has been sworn against him: Whereupon the Jury, being ignorant People, found him guilty, because some Part of the Indictment was proved, as to the signing of the said Addresses, and what the Contents of them were, only by the Oath of one Witness.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays, That your Honours will be pleased to take the Premises into your serious Consideration, Whether by the Laws of England, or this Province, it can amount to the Crime of Higb-Treason, what has been sworn against him, as above expressed? And if not, that your Honours will favourably order an Arrest of Judgment for the Reasons above-mentioned, &c. and what has been already offered to your Honour by the Petitioner's Council. And as in Duty bound, &c.

N. BAYARD.

The Court being met, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar, and the Petition last mentioned read.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Emot, we are ready to hear the Arguments you have to offer, for the last three Reasons you have assigned in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Emot. I am ready; 1st, Andries Marshall, one of the Petty-Jury, is an Alien; we have two Evidences to prove the same. And—

Mr. Atwood.

Mr. Atwood. We cannot admit you any such Proof; for tho' this might have been a good Exception for Cause before he or they had been sworn, but now it's too late; therefore go on to the next.

Mr. Emot. This seems very hard; for we ought to have been tried by the King's lawful Liege People, and we apprehend these are not such; but we came not to the Knowledge of this till after the Trial.

Mr. Atwood. Pray, Mr. Emot, delay the Court no longer; but proceed to the second Reason assigned.

Mr. Emot. The 2d Reason is, That the Vifne, or Venue, in the Precept to summon the Petty-Jury, is wrong awarded, or rather not awarded at all. Our happy Constitution of Government is, That all Trials of this Nature must be by the Verdict of Twelve Men, and that, as near as may be, of the Neighbourhood where the Fact ariseth, or is alledg'd to arise in the Indictment. Yet, nevertheless, the Precept to summon the Jury, we find is directed to the Sheriff, to return Eighty Men of his Bailiwick; whereas he is Sheriff as well of the County of New-York, as of the City; and at the same time, the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment are said to be committed in the Dock, and Eastward of this City. So that this is a Mis-Trial, upon which no Judgment can be given: And of this we have a multitude of Authorities in our Books: And first, in Arundel's Case, Coke's Rep. Part 6. fol. 14. b. It was for the Murder of one Parker; and the Case was thus: The Murder was alledged to be done at the City of Westminster, in a certain Street there, called King-street, in the Parish of St. Margaret's. For the Trial of the Issue a Jury was return'd, De vicinitate Civitatis Westm. Arundel being found guilty, moves in Arrest of Judgment; assigning for Cause, That the Jury ought to have been out of the Parish of St. Margaret's, and not in general out of the Neighbourhood of the City of Westminster; and it was adjudged a Mis-Trial, and the Verdict was set aside: And this I find was done upon a Special Consult of the Judges at Serjeants-Inn.

So that we see how cautious the Laws of England are, and the Judges thereof, that all Trials of this Nature shall follow the Venue, and that the Jury shall be summoned from the Neighbourhood where the Fact ariseth. And the Reason thereof is grounded upon this Supposition and Presumption, That the Neighbourhood are the best and most proper Judges of Matters of Fact; for indeed it's the Rule in the Law, That Vicinus facta vicini presumitur scire.

But let me observe to your Honours, That our Case at the Bar is much more uncertain, as to the awarding of the Venire facias, or Precept to summon the Jury; for the Fact is alledged to be done at the Dock, and Eastward of this City, and Issue joined thereupon: Yet the Precept is directed to the Sheriff, to summon the Jury of his Bailiwick, which, as I said before, contains both the City and County of New-York, and without mentioning any Neighbourhood, and therefore may come out of the County, as well as from the City; and therefore of Necessity must be esteemed a Mis-Trial.

To this it may be objected by such as are ignorant of our Laws, That notwithstanding the Jury was summoned from the Neighbourhood of the City of New-York, and not from the County, for that they know the Persons to be such. But this not appearing to be so upon Record, avails nothing; for the Rule of the Law is, What appears not, is not: Existens & non apparentibus eadem est ratio.

Crook's Rep. In London, the Parish and Ward is mentioned; and therefore it was adjudged, That it was not good to alledge any thing done generally in London; but it must be laid to be done in some Parish, from which a Venue may be awarded.

In Crook's Jac. p. 399. Tycos against Westcome. In this Case, a Venire fac was awarded from T. and not de Viceneto de T. Resolved to be ill, and not amendable: Yet in this Precept the Vifne is not so much as of a Ward of the City of New-York, nor of any other Neighbourhood whatsoever, but in general from his Bailiwick. So that I humbly pray, that for this Reason the Jury's Verdict may be set aside, this being a Mis-Trial, upon which no Judgment can be entered: And shall proceed to the Third Reason assigned.

3. That the Precept to summon the Jury is not returned by the Sheriff, or any Endorsement thereupon, and signed by him, against the known Laws of England, and more particularly the Stat. of 12 Edw. II. c. 5. This Statute enjoins, That the Sheriff shall put his Name to every Return made by him, so that the Court may know of whom they took such Return, if need be: And I shall endeavour to prove, from sundry adjudged Cases since the making of this Statute, that this Precept to summons the Jury not being endorsed by the Sheriff, the Trial is ill, and not amendable.

The Case of Holdsworth against Sir Stephen Proctor, in Crook's Rep. Part 2. p. 188. Sir Stephen Proctor moved in Arrest of Judgment, for that the Name of the Sheriff was not endorsed upon the Writ of Distringas with Nisi prius; and it was ruled, That the Trial was ill, and not amendable by any the Statutes of Jeofails: For, says the Judges, it's all one with the Case of a Venire facias, where the Name of the Sheriff is not thereto; which hath been frequently over-ruled, as being no Return, nor helped by any Statute of Jeofails. For the Statute of 18 Eliz. as I shall shew hereafter, from adjudged Cases, and from the best Authorities in Law, doth only help imperfect and insufficient Returns, and that only in Cases Civil, between Party and Party; but here is no Return at all.

In Rowland's Case, in Lord Coke's Rep. Book 5. p. 41. in Ejectment upon a Verdict for the Plaintiff, the Defendant moved in Arrest of Judgment; for the Venire facias was not returned or endorsed by the Sheriff, tho' the Poslea made mention that the Jury was returned per Mandatum Justiciorum: Yet in this Case it was ruled, That that would not help it; for the Judges said, That where there is no Return, it cannot be help'd by the Statute of 18 Eliz. or any other of the Statutes of Jeofails; for that Statute only helps imperfect and insufficient Returns, and such as want Form, and not such as are not return'd at all.

Again, in Sir Arthur Blackmore's Case, in Coke's 8th Rep. fol. 156. in this Case it was adjudg'd, That the Statute of 18 Eliz. doth not help a Trial, where no Return is made upon the Writ of Venire fac; as was formerly, say they, adjudged in Rowland's Case before-cited. And our Books are full of Authorities of this Nature, but shall not give you the Trouble to mention any more.

Mr. Solicitor. Mr. Emot, these Authorities, which you have here cited, it's true, are grounded upon the Statute which you have mentioned of 12 Ed. II. but this Statute has only relation to Writs; and in this Case the Sheriff summoned the Jury, not by Virtue of a Writ, but a Precept under the Hands of the Commissioners; which differs the Case.

Mr.

Mr. Emot. Mr. Sollicitor, then you say, that the Case at the Bar is not within the Words of this Statute of 12 Edw. II. for that this is a Precept to summon the Jury, and not a Writ, and so consequently the Sheriff not obliged to sign and return the same. A very wise Distinction!

However, I shall endeavour to shew, that this Precept is within the Reason and Equity of the Statute, and that the same ought to be returned and signed by the Sheriff. In order thereto, I shall put this Court in mind, how Statutes have from Time to Time been taken by Equity in divers Manners; that those Things which are alike in Reason, are alike in Law; and that where an Act of Parliament hath been made to remedy some Mischiefs, that the same hath been extended to other Things, in like Degree, and that even in Penal Laws. As for Example:

Stat. of Gloucest. c. 5. By this Statute, an Action of Waste is given against one who holds for Years; yet by the Equity of this Statute, a Man shall have an Action against him who holds but for half an Year, notwithstanding the Act be Penal.

Westm. 2. c. 3. This Statute gives an Action of cui in Vita, after the Coverture dissolved by Death: Yet if the Coverture be dissolved by Divorce, the Wife shall have, by the Equity of this Statute, a Writ of cui ante Divortium.

And lastly, the Stat. 25 Edw. 3. de proditionibus. This Statute expressly says, That no Case shall be taken by Equity, unless it be adjudged in Parliament; and yet by the Equity of the Words of that Statute, which are, If the Servant kill the Master, it is taken, If the Maid kill the Mistress, that this is Petit-Treason.

So that from hence I am humbly of Opinion, That we are fairly within the Equity of the Stat. 12 Edw. 2. Besides, a Writ and Precept in this Case are only synonymous Terms, and signify one and the same Thing.

These Reasons were over-ruled.

And the Court ordered the Sheriff to make a Return upon the Precept to summon the Jury, conform to the above Stat. 12 Edw. 2. which the Court said they had Power to do, and to help that Defect.

Mr. Emot. I find your Honour has over-ruled all the Reasons that we have offered in Arrest of Judgment, in Behalf of the Prisoner Col. Bayard, why Judgment ought not to pass against him, according to the Verdict of the Jury; but have not as yet observed, that either Col. D' Peyster or Captain Walters have given their Opinion to all, or any of the Reasons we have offered. I humbly therefore pray, that we may have their Opinion, so that we may know by what Hands we fall.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Emot, you which have been assigned Council for the Prisoner, have hitherto, in all the Course of the Trial, carried yourselves like Men of your own Profession; you must not now therefore begin to menace the Court. You shall have the Opinion of the rest of the Commissioners.

Whereupon Mr. Atwood turning himself to them, and whispering them, they severally did declare, That they were of Opinion with Justice Atwood, in that the Reasons offered were not sufficient to arrest the Judgment.

Mr. Atwood. Col. Bayard, have you any thing to say, why Sentence should not pass against you?

Prisoner. I have nothing more to offer, than what my Council have offered, and what is contained in my last Petition.

Mr. Atwood. I am sorry to find you so impenitent of your Crime, which is so heinous and abominable in the Sight of God and Man. You have lately made Reflections upon the Proceedings of this Court against you, as if it had been a Design to do the Job; comparing your Case to that of Naboth's Vineyard: But I hope God will open your Eyes, that you may be convinced, and repent of the Crime.

Then he pronounced Sentence in these Words:

It is considered by the Court here, that you be carried to the Place from whence you came; that from thence you be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution; that there you be hanged by the Neck; and being alive you be cut down upon the Earth, and that your Bowels be taken out of your Belly, and your Privy-Members be cut off, and you being alive, they be burnt before your Face; and that your Head be cut off, and that your Body be divided into Four Quarters; and that your Head and Quarters be placed where our Lord the King shall assign. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Prisoner. I desire to know, whether I may have leave to answer to your Honour's Speech made before Sentence.

Mr. Atwood. No.

Prisoner. Then God's Will be done.

The Prisoner was remanded.

Alderman Hutchins of New-York was Tried, Convicted and Condemned of High-Treason, for the same Facts with which Col. Bayard was charg'd, and had the same Usage both before, in, and after his Trial.

The Queen against William Fuller, upon an Information for Libels.

Mr. Montague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Information sets forth — “ That the Defendant being an Impostor, and a common Lyar, and a Person of an ill Name and Reputation, falsely, maliciously, wickedly and seditiously contriving, practising, and intending the late King William and his Subjects, falsely and unlawfully to delude and deceive, and Discords between the said late King and the Peers, and the Noblemen of this Kingdom, and the great Officers and Ministers intrusted by the said late King, in Business relating to the Government of this Kingdom of England, and other Subjects of the said Kingdom, to move, excite, and stir up; and also to bring the Noblemen and Peers, and the great Officers and Ministers aforesaid, and other faithful Subjects, into Hatred and Contempt with the said late King; and to get and obtain several great Sums of Money fraudulently and deceitfully from the said late King; He, the said William Fuller, the first Day of January last at London, &c. (to perfect and bring to effect his said wicked Practices and Intentions, and of and concerning a Correspondency between divers Officers and Subjects of the said late King and the late King James, while he resided at St. Germain in France, falsely pretended to be had, and of divers Sums of Money by the said late King James distributed amongst the Subjects of the late King William, falsely pretended to be sent here into England;) did falsely, wickedly, maliciously, and scandalously write and print, and cause to be printed, a false, scandalous, and defamatory Libel, entituled, “ Original Letters of the late King’s (meaning the late King James) and others, to his greatest Friends in England, with the Depositions of Thomas Jones and Thomas Widdrington, Esqrs; proving the Corruption lately practised to ruin this Nation. In which false, feigned, and scandalous Libel, among other Things, are contained as follows: [1st Page.]

Thomas Jones, Esq; deposeth, That he being at St. Germain, the Court of the late King James in France, in January, 1692, the said late King being in his Closet, sent for this Deponent, and there commanded the said Deponent to begin his Journey for England, in Company with Colonel Tho. Dallaval, and Mr. George Hayes; and the said late King did then, and there deliver to this Deponent several Letters and Papers, to divers Noblemen and others in England, to whom this Deponent had several times before and since brought Letters from the late King and his Queen, and pretended Secretaries of State, delivered according to Order. This Deponent further saith, by the Oath he hath taken, That the late King James, at the time aforesaid, in his Closet at St. Germain, did deliver to this Deponent a Paper, being an Order for this Deponent to receive Six Thousand Pounds; which Sum this Deponent was to pay to several Persons in Places in Trust then in England, to engage them more firmly to endeavour the invalidating the Evidence of William Fuller (who, as the said late King expressed, had been by him, his Queen, and chief Servants, intrusted and employed in their most secret and weighty Concerns, for a considerable time after the late King and Queen’s coming to France). [P. 7.] And this Deponent saith, He informed Mr. Fuller that Dallaval and Hayes were come to Town, and lodged at an Apothecary’s in Holborn, which House Hayes formerly lodged at; but that Dallaval not being well, they could not come to him; therefore this Deponent said to Fuller, that they desired him to come to them; but he urged his Condition rendered him unfit, begging of the Deponent, to intreat them not to fail to attend the House of Commons at the time appointed. All which this Deponent imparted the same Day to Col. Dallaval and Mr. Hayes, and with them went the same Evening to three Gentlemen that were then Members of Parliament; and this Deponent had a Letter from one of those three Gentlemen, (that was a Member of Parliament) directed to one of the Secretaries to the then Secretary of State, which this Deponent was to carry to him the next Morning; which accordingly he did by Seven of the Clock. And this Deponent saith, He paid the said Under-Secretary 500 Guineas. And this Deponent saith, That when he left the Secretary, he went directly to the Sun-Tavern in King-street Westminster, where he found the three Members with Dallaval and Hayes, and an eminent Banker of the City of London: Then this Deponent desired the Banker to give his Bill to pay each of those three Gentlemen that had been Members, 1000 Pounds payable on Sight; which being done, the said Banker delivered also to one of them his Bill for 1500 l. to be paid on Demand, for the Use of a considerable Person, whose Station would not permit him to be present. And this Deponent saith,

* See State Trials, Vol. 8. p. 78.

by the Oath he has taken, That the several Sums of Money beforementioned, with several lesser Parcels, were so disposed of by him, according to the late King's especial Directions. And this Deponent faith, He has now by him the Receipts of each Person for the respective Bills and Moneys he disposed of, with the true Copies of his Original Bills, delivered to him by the late King's own Hand. This Deponent faith, He delivered to the late King a Letter he had for him, from the three Gentlemen that were Members, and also several others he brought from England. And forasmuch as this Deponent faith, As he hath formerly been employed to bring Letters, and Bills, and Orders, from the late King James and the French King and their Ministers; this Deponent faith, That he has kept a Journal of the same, and is ready to lay it before either or both Houses of Parliament when required. And this Deponent faith also, by the Oath he hath taken, That he can produce his original Orders, that he received from the late King's, and the French King's own Hands, for the distributing more than One Hundred Four-score Thousand Pounds Sterling for their Use, to Persons that were in Places of Trust. And this Deponent faith, He can produce the Receipt of each Person to whom the Money was paid, and also the Persons from whom this Deponent received the said Sum or Sums by the Order aforesaid.

Tho. Jones.

(2d Book.) "The Information further sets forth, That the Defendant, the Day and Year aforesaid, (to perfect and bring to effect his furthest wicked Practices and Intentions against divers Officers, and other Subjects of the late King William, upon a feigned and pretended Correspondence between them and the late King James, whilst he resided in France, and of several Sums of Money sent by the said King James out of France into England, to be distributed amongst the Subjects of the late King William) another most false and scandalous Libel [Title Page] entitled, Twenty Six Depositions of Persons of Quality and Worth falsely, wickedly, and most deceitfully, did write, print, and cause to be printed; in which said false and scandalous Libel, amongst other Things, are contained, viz. [5th Page.] "Mr. Jones has also made Oath, That he paid 5000 l. more, by the late King's Order, to several Persons in Places of Trust, that they might compleat my Ruin, and invalidate me for ever. Nor is this all; for the same Mr. Jones will prove, by undeniable Witness and Demonstration, that he has distributed more than One Hundred Four-score Thousand Pounds in Eight Years last past, by the French King's Order, to Persons in publick Trust in this Kingdom."

W. Fuller.

"And the said Defendant Fuller afterwards, the said Day, &c. falsely, unlawfully, and wickedly did publish, utter, and for Truth affirm, the said several false and scandalous Libels, without any lawful Authority. Whereas, in Truth, the said Thomas Jones did not depose upon his Oath, as is contained in the said false and scandalous Libel; but that the said scandalous Libels were and are false and feigned, and altogether contrary to Truth, to the great Scandal and Abuse of the late King William, and his great Officers and Ministers, and other the faithful Subjects of the said late King, to the evil Example of others,

"and against the Peace of the said late King, his Crown and Dignity."

He pleaded Not Guilty, and Issue joined thereupon.

The Case. "The Defendant Fuller is so notorious a Cheat, and his Practices so publickly known to all Men, that there need not much to be said here to aggravate his Offences; for in the Year 1691, he was censured by the House of Commons, prosecuted, convicted and punished for those very Crimes he now stands to be tried; and notwithstanding that Sentence and Punishment, he still persists in his villainous Practices and Designs."

"About two Years since, he applied himself to the chief Ministers at Court, and insinuated what Discoveries he could make relating to the Cheat of the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales, and of great Sums of Money received by several Persons of Quality here, from the late King James and the French King, and of several Correspondences had between them, and the great Officers of State here in England; but not meeting with that Encouragement he expected, he then undertakes to write and publish the two scandalous Libels mentioned in the Information, and caused great Numbers of them to be printed and sold about the Town; and then petitions the House of Peers to be heard, to make out the Truth of what he wrote and published. The House of Peers, by his Importunity, appointed a Day for him to produce those Persons he mentioned, to make good his Accusations and Charge, which he undertook to do; but failing from time to time, their Lordships ordered him to be committed, and prosecuted for an Impostor; but the Defendant being an harden'd Rogue, was no way humbled at this Order, but immediately thereon applies himself by Letters to the Speaker of the House of Commons, alledging the same Matters, as he had done before to the House of Lords. The House of Commons ordered him to be brought to their Bar, where he only desired Ten Days Time to produce those Persons mention'd in his Libels; and that House, (to leave him no Excuse) granted him a Fortnight; but having trifled with the House of Commons, as he had done before with the House of Lords, they voted him an incorrigible Rogue, and ordered him to be prosecuted. What the Reasons were for this unparallel'd Impudence, whether for the sake of Gain, or Malice to those Gentlemen he hints at in his Libels, are yet Secrets."

*Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Charge Sir Edward has been very fully opened, and I need not say much. His Crime is his publishing these two Books (mention'd in the Information.)

He has been some Time setting up for an Evidence, pretending to discover a secret Correspondence between the late King James, and several Persons here in England. He made an Offer of some such Discovery about Ten Years ago, and he then applied himself to the House of Commons, and they gave him Time to produce his Witnesses; but after all, he could produce none, and the House ordered him to be prosecuted as a Cheat and Impostor; and he was prosecuted accordingly, convicted —, and set in the Pillory. Now some Time last Winter, he did apply himself to some of the late King's Ministers, and pretended he would produce Thomas Jones, and Tho. Witherington, to make considerable siderable Discoveries. They heard him, but he could never produce these Men before them. And afterwards having no Encouragement from them, he took on him to publish these two Books, mention'd in the Information, whereof he stands now accused. And after he was before the Parliament, he first applied himself to the House of Lords, and they heard what he had to say, and gave him Time to produce his Witnesses; but he could not do it, and thereupon the Lords were pleas'd to direct this Prosecution. Then he applied himself to the House of Commons, and they gave him Time likewise to produce his Witnesses; but he could produce none; whereupon they voted him a Cheat, a false Accuser, and an incorrigible Rogue. My Lord, these Books were published with a very malicious Design, and no doubt, he had other People, who do not now appear, to support him in it; and I doubt not but he would have set up Witnesses to have sworn whatever he would have them, if he had met with any Encouragement. He has the Impudence to put in the Frontispiece of his Books, Published by Command; but being asked in the House of Peers, by whose Command? He said, it was by his own Command. And he has publish'd in the Books, that he would produce Witnesses to prove the distributing of an Hundred and eighty thousand Pounds to Persons in Places of Trust, and to produce Receipts for the same, and he had an Opportunity now of doing it. We will prove the Charge upon him.

+ Sir John + Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, the Matter of the Information has been fully opened; but we are to consider the ill Consequences of it. This is a new Practice for a Man to publish Things of this Nature, and not be able to prove any thing: But he pretends to set up a second Witness to make out what he has said; that is, Jones, as if Jones were to relieve him. Now if that were true, it would be a great Thing to corroborate what he did say; but he has never produced this Jones, but only has printed something that he calls Jones's. If it were only what depended on his private Knowledge, the Case were otherwise; but when he pretends to bring Jones to prove it, and does not produce him, he makes himself guilty of the Scandal; and it is very necessary that this Man should be brought to Punishment. I will not trouble your Lordship further, but call our Witnesses.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. The Matter has been opened so fully, that there is no need for me to say any thing; we will now call our Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will prove that Fuller carried this Book to the Press, and not Mr. Jones, therefore we may well presume it was his own.

Mr. Coniers. He could never produce Jones, but he could frame Depositions for him.

Then Fuller's Book was produced.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Call Mr. Buck [who appeared, and was sworn]. Mr. Buck, Who caused that Book to be published?

Mr. Buck. Mr. Fuller.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How do you know that?

Mr. Buck. He brought it to me in Manuscript, and he said he took these Depositions out of the Secretaries-Office.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. But what did he desire you to do?

Mr. Buck. He desired me to print it: And he said, Because it was not done sooner, it had done the King Ten thousand Pounds Damage.

Mr. Coniers. Did he make any Alteration in them afterwards?

Mr. Buck. No, only alter'd the Mistakes of the Press.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that Book printed by his Order?

Mr. Buck. Yes.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I will not give these Gentlemen the Trouble to prove it; I own it was writ by me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you own the other Book too? Mr. Buck, look on that Book [then the other Book was shewn him]. By whose Order was that printed?

Mr. Buck. By Mr. Fuller's Order.

Mr. Fuller. My Lord, if it be the Book I publish'd, I will own it. [Then it was shewn him.] Yes, my Lord, it was printed by my Order.

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Title.

Clerk. Original Letters from the late King James, &c. Published by Command.

L. C. J. Holt. By whose Command was it publish'd?

Mr. Att. Gen. By Fuller's.

L. C. J. Holt. His Order is a Command, it seems.

Then some Paragraphs were read.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Mr. Fuller will produce this Jones, to make good what he says, he will do a great Piece of Service; otherwise, he deserves to be severely censured.

L. C. J. Holt. Read the other Part.

Then the Clerk read the Title.

William Fuller. Pray read the whole Title.

L. C. J. Holt. He is in Love with it.

Clerk. [Reads the Title] Twenty six Depositions of Persons of Quality and Worth, with Letters of the late Queen, Father Corker, and Mrs. Mary Grey, &c. Publish'd by Command.

Mr. Att. Gen. Read the rest.

Clerk. Mr. Fuller's Answer to the chief Objections made against him, &c. — Mr. Jones made Oath, that he has paid 5000 l. more to several Persons by the late King's Order, that he might compleat my Ruin, and invalidate my Evidence for ever, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have proved his publishing of these Books. We will now hear what he can say for himself.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I humbly beg you will hear what I have to say.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, yes, Have you any Council?

W. Fuller. No my Lord, I have none; I have no Money to procure Council. I have put my Thoughts in Writing, and I beg leave to read it.

L. C. J. Holt. But you must speak to the Purpose. What do you say concerning the publishing these Books?

W. Fuller. That is what I have to offer.

L. C. J. Holt. But can you make it appear that they are true?

W. Fuller. My Lord, I hope I shall.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any Witnesses?

W. Fuller. I have none here at present. But if your Lordship will please to hear the Terms upon which which the Witnesses would have come in, I can produce them : If your Lordship will grant your Warrant for Jones, I will forfeit my Life if he appear not.

L. C. J. Holt. You might have had Subpœna's for your Witnesses against this Day.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I did endeavour it ; but I had not Money to bear their Charges.

L. C. J. Holt. You made the same Excuse before the House of Lords and Commons.

W. Fuller. If it can be made appear that I had any Assistance from the House of Lords, or the House of Commons, I own I am in the wrong.

L. C. J. Holt. What Assistance would you have had from them ? Or what would you have from me ?

W. Fuller. The House of Lords summoned me before them ; and I desired—

L. C. J. Holt. If you take on you to write such Things as you are charged with, it lies upon you to prove it at your Peril.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he did appeal to the Lords : and they gave him from Time to Time to produce his Witnesses, and he could not do it.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have any Witnesses, I will hear them ; but to hear you make a Speech, it is to no Purpose.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I hope you will believe it to be to the Purpose, if you please to hear me.

Mr. Coniers. What signifies your Belief ?

W. Fuller. Why am I not to be believ'd ?

L. C. J. Holt. What ? Because you have stood in the Pillory for an Impostor heretofore.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. The whole Nation do not believe you ; for the Lords and Commons did not, who represent the whole Nation.

W. Fuller. The Lords did not think fit to put it to the Trial. These Gentlemen charge me to have abused several Persons : I would be glad to know who these Persons are.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot tell who they are ; your Book promises to make that appear.

W. Fuller. If a Man of an ill Character abuse the Nation, I hope I shall not suffer for that.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to write these Books, that are not true ?

W. Fuller. My Lord, I believe they are all true.

Mr. Att. Gen. Produce the Original Affidavits made by Jones, which you caused to be printed.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Produce the Receipts for the Money, which you say you have ; and then you will do something.

W. Fuller. Do I say it ?

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Yes, if that Print be yours.

W. Fuller. I wonder a Man of your Gravity should assert such an Untruth in the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have any Witnesses, produce them.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I presume you cannot but remember, that in Crone's Case I behaved my self honourably, and was owned to have done the Nation good Service.

L. C. J. Holt. That was formerly, and signifies nothing to what you do now.

W. Fuller. I ventur'd several times into France, and back again : Shew me a Man that ever did so besides ?

Mr. Att. Gen. If you had made out the Discovery you pretended to make, I should have commended you.

W. Fuller. After I had made that Discovery, the Court at St. Germain's did what they could to ruin me. There have been a great many Books lately printed, to prove the Legitimacy of the Prince of Wales, and none of them taken notice of.

L. C. J. Holt. You charge a great many Persons with corresponding with France, and cannot prove it.

W. Fuller. I charge none, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. You charge all that are intimated in the Books. The same Mr. Jones will prove by undeniable Demonstration, that he distributed more than 180000*l.* by the French King's Order to several Persons employed under the Government. Now these Persons are scandalized ; for you produce no Proof of what you charge them with : And you say, I had the Original of this from Mr. Jones, &c. Where are they ?

W. Fuller. If your Lordship will please to grant me your Warrant, I will produce them.

L. C. J. Holt. If you take on you to make good these Things, you cannot in Justice require my Warrant to fetch in others to prove what you say ; you must prove it.

W. Fuller. By his own Confession, he has been guilty of High-Treason ; and therefore will not appear without a Warrant.

L. C. J. Holt. You cannot pretend to have a Right to any Warrant.

W. Fuller. If your Lordship please to give me Leave to say something in my Defence—

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, if it be to any Purpose.

W. Fuller. I am unacquainted with the Laws, and have not—

L. C. J. Holt. What is that to the Purpose ; You are not to make Libels, nor traduce Ministers of State. What have you to say to that ?

W. Fuller. When I had printed this Book, I was summoned before the Lords ; and after that was committed to the Fleet. My Friends were all called before the Lords ; and by my Lord Jeffreys and other Lords, there were such Questions asked, as I believe were never asked before—

L. C. J. Holt. This is not to be endured ; you do but aggravate your Crime.

W. Fuller. This is not what I would offer.

L. C. J. Holt. If you can offer any Matter to prove what you have writ, let us hear it.

W. Fuller. Mr. Jones has confess'd himself guilty of High-Treason, and therefore cannot appear.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is he ? Where did he make this Confession ?

W. Fuller. In the Country.

L. C. J. Holt. Before whom ?

W. Fuller. I do not know that ; I was not with him when he did it.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is the Man ?

W. Fuller. If your Lordship will please to give me your Warrant, I will produce him.

L. C. J. Holt. Shall I make a Bargain with you ? Why have you not produc'd him all this while, before the House of Lords, and the House of Commons ?

W. Fuller. Mr. Attorney did say I appealed to the Lords. I was called before them ; I made no Application to them, but was called by the Order of the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you was there.

W. Fuller. I was there ; and there were Three Letters read of mine in the House, and I desire they may be read here.

L. C. J. Holt. What is that to the Purpose ? Can you produce your Witnesses ?

W. Fuller. Mr. Jones is now in Hampshire.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you not had Time enough to procure him ?

W. Fuller. My Lord, I cannot force him. I was with the Secretary of State, and told him, Jones will not come in voluntarily ; if the Lords will grant a Warrant, he may be brought. I offer'd this to the House of Commons too, but it was not granted. I could not force him.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. The Secretary of State sent one or two for him.

W. Fuller. He sent no body.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear what the Purpose of this Information is, and you hear how it is proved ; and you hear the Witness say, He brought these two scandalous Books to the Press, and that he corrected them ; and he owns, he was the Publisher of them : And if you believe he did so, you are to find him Guilty.

The Jury brought him in Guilty, without going from the Bar.

CLXXIV. The Tryals of Colonel RICHARD KIRKBY, Captain JOHN CONSTABLE, Captain COOPER WADE, Captain SAMUEL VINCENT, and Captain CHRISTOPHER FOGG, at a Court-Martial in Jamaica, for Offences against the Articles of War, Octob. 8, 9, 10, 12. 1702. 1 Ann.

AT a Court-Martial held on Board her Majesty's Ship the Bredab, in Port-Royal Harbour in Jamaica in America, the 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th, Days of October, 1702. Present,

The Honourable William Whiston, Esq; Rear-Admiral of Her Majesty's Ships for the West-India Squadron, President,

*Samuel Vincent,
John Hartnoll,
Christopher Fogg,
John Smith,
John Redman,
George Walton,*

*William Ruffel,
Barrow Harris,
Hercules Mitchell,
Philip Boyce,
Charles Smith.*

Arnold Browne, Esq; Judge-Advocate.

Who being all duly sworn, pursuant to the Act of Parliament, proceeded to the Trial of John Arthur, Gunner of the Defiance, on a Complaint exhibited by Francis Knighton, Third Lieutenant of the Defiance, and George Foster, Gunner of the said Ship, for hiding and concealing Forty three Barrels of Powder in the Wadding-Room, and covering them with Wadding and Coins, &c. when a Survey of Her Majesty's Stores of Ammunition after an Engagement was ordered ; and denying to the Surveyors, that there was any more Powder on Board, than was in the Powder-Room and Gun-Room, viz. One Hundred ; which, upon a second Survey, were discovered. It was proved also, That he had Two Keys to the Powder-Room ; and that having lost or mislaid his own, he, without making any Application to the Commanding Officer then on Board, who kept the other Key, prevailed with William Baker, Carpenter of the said Ship, to break open the Door.

In Mitigation of his Offence, he alledged, That examining into the Powder-Room, he found Three Barrels that had received wet, which caused his removal of the Forty Three Barrels ; but had little to say for his concealing them from the Surveyors. Whereupon the Court adjudged, That the said Offence falling under the 33d Article of War, the said John Arthur should be carried from Ship to Ship in a Boat with a Halter about his Neck, the Provost-Marshal declaring his Crimes ; and all his Pay, as Gunner, to be mulct'd and forfeited to the Chest at Chatham ; and be render'd incapable of serving Her Majesty in any other Employment.

Colonel Richard Kirkby, Commander of the Defiance, was tried before the aforesaid Court, (except Captain Samuel Vincent, and Captain Christopher Fogg, who appeared as Witnesses for the Queen,) on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge-Advocate on the Behalf of Her Majesty, of Cowardice, Neglect of Duty, Breach of Orders, and other Crimes committed by him at a Fight at Sea, commenced the 19th of August, 1702, off St. Martha, in the Latitude of Ten Degrees North, near the main Land of America, between the Honourable John Benbow, Esq; Vice-Admiral of the Blue Squadron of Her Majesty's Fleet, and Admiral and Commander in Chief, &c. on Board Her Majesty's Ship Bredab, Christopher Fogg, Commander, and Six other of Her Majesty's Ships, viz. the Defiance, Richard Kirkby Commander ; the Falmouth, Samuel Vincent Commander ; Windsor, John Constable, Commander ; Greenwich, Cooper Wade, Commander ; Ruby, George Walton, Commander ; and the Pendennis, Thomas Hudson, Commander : And Monsieur Du Casse with Four French Ships of War : Which continued until the 24th of August inclusive.

The Witnesses that were sworn in Behalf of the Queen ; viz.

The Honourable John Benbow, Esq; Admiral.

2 Captains.

8 Lieutenants.

5 Masters.

5 Inferior Officers.

Who deposed, That the said Colonel Richard Kirkby, the Van in the Line of Battle, the 19th of August, August, about Three in the Afternoon, the Signal of Battle being out, the Admiral was forc'd to send his Boat on Board of Kirkby, and command his making more Sail, and get a-breast of the Enemy's Van, for that he was resolv'd to fight them. About Four the Fight began; but the said Kirkby did not fire above Three Broadfides, then luff'd up out of the Line, and out of Gunshot, leaving the Admiral engaged with Two French Ships till dark, and the said Kirkby receiving no Damage: That his Behaviour caus'd great Fear of his Desertion. At Night the said Kirkby fell a-stern, leaving the Admiral to pursue the Enemy.

That the 20th, at Day-light, the Admiral and Ruby were within Shot of all the Enemy's Ships; but Colonel Kirkby was near Three or Four Miles a-stern. The Admiral then made a new Line of Battle, and took the Van himself, and sent to each Ship, with a Command to the said Kirkby to keep his Line and Station; which he promised to do, but did not; keeping Two or Three Miles a-stern, tho' the Signal for Battle was out all Night. The French making a running Fight, the Admiral and Ruby plied the Enemy with their Chase-Guns till Night. That the 21st Day, at Light, the Admiral was on the Quarter of the Second Ship of the Enemy's Rear, and the Ruby on the Board-side, very near, who plied him warmly, and met the same Return; by which he was so much disabled, tho' the Admiral came in to his Assistance, that he was forc'd to be towed off: And this prevented the Admiral's Design of cutting off the Enemy's Sternmost Ship. This Action lasted Two Hours; during which Time the said Kirkby lay a Broadside of the Sternmost Ship; as did also the Windsor, John Constable Commander. The Admiral then commanded the said Kirkby to ply his Broadfides on him. But this having no Effect, the second Time he commanded the same; but he fir'd not a Gun: Nay, his own Boatswain and Seamen repeated the Admiral's Command to him; but were severely us'd, and threaten'd that he would run his Sword thro' the Boatswain. And had the said Kirkby done his Duty, and Captain Constable his, they must have taken or destroyed the said French Ships. The Admiral, tho' he receiv'd much Damage in his Sails, Rigging, Yards, &c. yet continued the Chase all Night. That the 22d in the Morning at Day-light, the Greenwich was Three Leagues a-stern; and the Defiance, Colonel Kirkby, with the rest of the Snips, Three or Four Miles, the Falmouth excepted, whose Station was in the Rear: That the said Captain Samuel Vincent, seeing the Behaviour of the said Kirkby, and the rest, came up with the Admiral, and sent his Lieutenant on Board, desiring Leave to assist him, which was accepted: The said Kirkby never coming up; and by his Example the rest did the same, as if they had a Design to sacrifice the Admiral and Falmouth to the Enemy, or desert. The Enemy were now about a Mile and an half a-head, standing into the Shore with a small Breeze at W. fetch'd within Sambeys, the Admiral firing at the Sternmost till Night, and continued the Pursuit; and a Flemish Ship that was in Monsieur Du Cassé's Company, on Board of which was all the French and Spanish new Governors and other Officers, made her Escape. That the 23d, in the Morning, at Day-light, the Enemy bore North-West, distant about Four or Five Miles, the Admiral and Falmouth pursuing; but the said Colonel Kirkby, with the rest of the Ships, being Three or Four Miles a-stern; (tho' there was not a Ship but, before and after the Battle, fail'd better than the Admiral.) About Seven in the Evening, it having been some time calm, a Gale of Wind sprung up, the Admiral and Falmouth were about Two Miles from the Enemy; and at Eight, the said Kirkby and his separate Squadron was fair up with the Admiral: And this Day the Admiral sent away the disabled Ruby, George Walton Commander, to Port-Royal; and under his Convoys the Anna Galley, retaken from the French.

That the 24th, in the Morning, about Two of the Clock, the Admiral came up with the Sternmost of the Enemy within Call, and the Falmouth pretty near; but the said Colonel Kirkby, with the rest of the Ships, according to Custom, were Three or Four Miles a-stern. The Admiral and Falmouth engaged the said Ship; and at Three the Admiral was wounded, his Right Leg being broke, but commanded the Fight to be vigorously maintained; and at Day-light the Enemy's Ship appeared like a Wreck, her Mizen-Mast shot by the Board, her Main-yard in Three or Four Pieces, her Foretop-sail-yard the same, her Stays and Rigging all shot to Pieces. Soon after Day, the said Kirkby, with the rest of the Ships, being to Windward of the said disabled Ship, he the said Kirkby, with the rest of his separate Squadron, fired about Twelve Guns at the said Ship; and fearing a smart Return from her, he lower'd his Mizen-Yard, his Topfais on the Caps, set his Spritsail, Spritsail Topfail, and Foretopfail Stayfail, and having waired his Ship, set his Sail, and run away before the Wind from the poor disabled Ship, the rest following his said Example; tho' they had but Eight Men kill'd on Board them all (except the Admiral). The other Three French Men of War were at this Time of Action about Four Miles distant from their maimed Ship; whereupon the Enemy seeing the Cowardice of the said Colonel Kirkby, and the rest of the English Ships, in a Squale bore down upon the Admiral, who lay close by the disabled Ship; and having got in their Spritsail Yard, gave him all their Fire; and running between him and the disabled Ship, remann'd her and took her in. The Admiral's Rigging being very much shatter'd, was oblig'd to lie and refit till Ten a-Clock, and then continued the Pursuit; and the rest of the Fleet following in the greatest Disorder imaginable, the Admiral commanded Capt. Fogg to stand a-breast of the Enemies Van, and then to attack him, and having then a fine steady Gale, the like not happening during the whole Engagement; and further ordered that he should send to all the Captains to keep the Line of Battle, and behave themselves like Englishmen; and this Message was sent by Captain Wade then on Board the Bredab. That the said Colonel Kirkby on the Receipt of this Message, and seeing the Admiral's Resolution to engage, came on Board him, who then lay wounded in a Cradle; and without common Respect of enquiring after his Health, he the said Kirkby express'd these Words following, That he wonder'd that the Admiral should offer to engage the French again, it being not necessary, safe, nor convenient, having had Six Days Trial of their Strength; and then magnified that of the French, and lessened that of the English. But the Admiral being surprized at his Speech, said it was but one Man's Opinion, and that he would have the rest of the Captains; and accordingly ordered the Signal to be made for all the Captains to come on Board; and at this Time the Admiral and the rest of the Ships Ships were to Windward, and within Shot of the Enemy, and had the fairest Opportunity that in six Days presented, to chase, engage, and destroy the Enemy.

That the said Colonel Kirkby had endeavoured to poison the rest of the Captains; forming a Writing under his own Hand, which was cowardly and erroneous: The Substance of which was, Not to engage the Enemy any more. He the said Colonel Kirkby brought it to the Admiral, who reproved him for it, saying it would be the Ruin of all: Upon which he the said Colonel Kirkby went away, but writ another in the following Words.

At a Consultation held on board her Majesty's Ship Bre-dah, the 24th of August, 1702. off of Carthagena, on the main Continent of America.

It is the Opinion of us whose Names are under-written.

1. Of the great Want of Men in Number, Quality, and the Weaknesses of those they have.

2. The general Want of Ammunition of most forts.

3. Each Ship's Masts, Yards, Sails and Rigging, being all in a great Measure disabled.

4. The Winds are so small and variable, that the Ships can't be governed by any Strength: Each Ship

5. Having experienced the Enemy in Six Days Battle, following the Squadron consisting of Five Men of War and a Fireship, under the Command of Monsieur Du Casse; their Equipage consisting in Guns from 60 to 80, and having a great Number of Seamen and Soldiers on Board for the Service of Spain.

For which Reasons above-mentioned, we think it not fit to engage the Enemy at this Time, but to keep them Company this Night, and observe their Motion; and if a fair Opportunity shall happen of Wind and Weather, once more to try our Strength with them.

Richard Kirkby, Samuel Vincent, John Constable, Christopher Fogg, Cooper Wade, and Thomas Hudson.

That during the Six Days Engagement, he never encouraged his Men; but by his own Example of dodging behind the Mizen-Mast, and falling down upon the Deck on the Noise of Shot, and denying them the Provisions of the Ship, the said Men were under great Discouragement. That he amended the Master of the Ship's Journal of the Transactions of the Fight, according to his own Inclination.

All which being proved aforesaid:

The said Colonel Richard Kirkby denied the whole, excepting the pretended written Consultation: Which being shewn to him, he own'd his own Hand and Name too. He brought several of his Men to give an Account of his Behaviour during the Fight; but their Testimonies were insignificant; and his Behaviour to the Court and Witnesses most unbecoming a Gentleman. And being particularly ask'd by the Court, why he did not fire at the Enemies Sternmost Ship, which lay point-blank with him the 21st of August? He replied, Because they did not fire at him, for that they had a Respect for him: Which Words upon several Occasions, during the Trial, he repeated Three several Times.

Where, upon due Consideration of the Premises, of great Advantages the English had in Number, being Seven to Four, of Guns 122 more than the other; with his Acts and Behaviour as aforesaid, and more particularly his ill-timed Paper or Consultation as afore-recited, which obliged the Admiral for the Preservation of her Majesty's Fleet, to give over the Chase and Fight, to the irreparable Dishonour of the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, and come to Port-Royal, Jamaica: For which Reasons the Court was of Opinion, That he fell under the 11th, 12th, 14th, and 20th Articles of War; and adjudged accordingly, That he be shot to Death: But further decreed, That the Execution of Col. Kirkby be deferred till Her Majesty's Pleasure be known therein; but be continued a close Prisoner till that Time.

Captain John Constable, Commander of the Windfor, was Tried before the aforesaid Court, on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge Advocate on the Behalf of the Queen, for Breach of Orders, Neglect of Duty, and other ill Practices committed during a Fight commenced the 19th of August, 1702, as aforesaid. (Refer to Colonel Kirkby's Trial.)

The Witnesses sworn on the Behalf of the Queen were,

2 Captains,

7 Lieutenants,

5 Masters,

2 Other Officers.

The Honourable John Benbow, Esq;
Admiral.

17 Witnesses.

Who deposed, That Captain John Constable never kept his first nor second Line of Battle, but acted in all Things as Colonel Kirkby had done. That the Admiral had fired Two Guns to command him into the second Line of Battle. That he did set more sail in order to come into the Line, and his Station; but upon Colonel Kirkby's calling to him to keep his Line, he accordingly did. That the Admiral sent his Lieutenant Landgridge to command him the said Constable to keep his Line of Battle within half a Cables Length of the Ship before him, which was twice verbally delivered. And that he signed the Paper, Consultation, as is in Colonel Kirkby's Trial aforesaid; tending to the Hindrance and Disservice of Her Majesty, &c. and was drunk during the Fight, &c.

All which being fully proved as aforesaid; the said Captain John Constable, denied his Breach of Orders, or Neglect of Duty; but owned the signing the Paper, or Consultation prepared by Colonel Kirkby, and did it at his Request, and for that he had received Damage in his Masts and Rigging; and own'd no other Article to be true, but that he had sign'd to. He called several Witnesses to his Behaviour during the Fight; who all declared he kept the Quarter-Deck during the Engagement, and encouraged his Men to fight; and that sometimes he gave them Drums of Rum; and that Verbal Message delivered by Lieutenant Landgridge, was delivered him in some Heat and Passion, and was understood to be, to keep the Line within half a Cable's Length, and to follow Kirkby, which he did. That he so understood it him-himself, and several of his Men: He prayed the Mercy of the Court, and so concluded, &c.

Where upon due Consideration of the Premises, the Court were of Opinion, that the said John Constable, Captain, fell under the 12th, 14th, and 20th Articles of War; and adjudged the said Captain John Constable to be immediately cashier'd, and render'd incapable of serving Her Majesty, and be imprisoned during Her Majesty's Pleasure, and sent home to England a Prisoner in the first Ship the Admiral shall think fit; and be confined a Prisoner till then.

Oct. 10, 12. Captain Cooper Wade, Commander of the Greenwich, was Tried before the aforesaid Court; on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge Advocate, on the Behalf of the Queen, of high Crimes and Misdemeanors, of Cowardice, Breach of Orders, and Neglect of Duty, and other ill Practices, committed during a Fight, commenc'd the 19th of August, 1702, as aforesaid. (Refer to that Part of Colonel Kirkby's Trial.)

The Witnesses sworn on Behalf of the Queen.

The Honourable John Benbow, Esq; Admiral,

9 Lieutenants,

3 Masters,

3 Inferior Officers.

16 Witnesses.

Who deposed, That during the Six Days Engagement, he never kept the Line of Battle, fired all his Shot in vain, not reaching half way to the Enemy; That he was often told the same by his Lieutenants and other Officers; but notwithstanding, he commanded them to fire, saying they must do so, or the Admiral would not believe they fought if they did not continue the Fire. That during the whole Fight the Admiral was engaged in, the said Capt. Wade received but one Shot from the Enemy; That he was in Drink the greatest Part of the Time of Action; And that he signed the Paper or Consultation drawn up by Colonel Kirkby, as aforesaid; and in the Time of Fight arraigned the honourable Courage and Conduct of the Admiral.

All which being fully proved as aforesaid:

That the said Captain Cooper Wade denied the Arraignment of the honourable Courage and Conduct of the Admiral, during the whole six Days Engagement; declaring the Bravery and good Management of the Admiral in this Time of Action, and that no Man living could do more or better, for the Honour of the Queen and Nation. He called some Persons to justify his Behaviour, who said little in his Favour. He begged the Mercy of the Court, and so concluded. Whereupon the Court was of Opinion, That the said Cooper Wade fell under the 11th, 12th, 14th and 20th Articles of War; and accordingly adjudged the said Cooper Wade to be shot to Death: But it was farther declared by the Court, That the Execution of the said Cooper Wade be deferred till Her Majesty's Pleasure be known therein, but be continued a close Prisoner till that Time.

October 12. Captain Samuel Vincent, Commander of the Falmouth, and Capt. Christopher Fogg, Commander of the Bredab, were tried before the aforesaid Court, on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge-Advocate, for high Crimes and Misdemeanors, and ill Practices in time of Admiral Benbow's Fight with Monsieur Du Casse as aforesaid, in signing a Paper called a Consultation and Opinion held on Board the Bredab, the 24th of August, 1702. (Which is Verbatim recited in Colonel Kirkby's Trial, to which refer.) It tending to the great Hindrance and Disservice of Her Majesty's Fleet then in Fight: And the said Paper so written, being shewed to each of them, they severally owned their Hands to the same, But the said Captain Vincent and Captain Fogg, for reason of signing the same, alledged, That being deserted during each Days Engagement by Colonel Richard Kirkby in the Defiance, Captain John Constable in the Windsor, Capt. Cooper Wade in the Greenwich, and Capt. Thomas Hudson in the Pendennis, and left as a Prey to Monsieur Du Casse, they had great reason to believe they should be Captives to the Enemy. And the Honourable John Benbow, Esq; Admiral, &c. coming into Court, declared, That during the Six Days Fight the said Captain Fogg behaved himself with great Courage, Bravery, and Conduct, like a true Englishman, and Lover of his Queen and Country: And that the said Captain Samuel Vincent valiantly and courageously behaved himself during the said Action, and desired Leave to come into his the said Admiral's Assistance, then engaged with the Enemy, and deserted by all the rest of the aforesaid Ships; which he did, to the Relief of the said Admiral, who otherwise had fallen into the Hands of Monsieur Du Casse.

Whereupon the Court being of Opinion, That the signing of the aforesaid Paper brought them under the Censure of the 20th Article of War, accordingly adjudged Captain Samuel Vincent, and Captain Christopher Fogg, to be suspended: But the Execution thereof is hereby respited, till his Royal Highness Prince George of Denmark, Lord High Admiral of England, &c. his further Pleasure be known therein.

Capt. Thomas Hudson, Commander of the Pendennis, died on Board his said Ship, in the Harbour of Port-Royal, at Jamaica, the

At Five a-Clock the 12th Day of October, 1702. the President, &c. having finished all the Business before the Court, dissolved the same.

CLXXV. The Trial of Haagen Swendsen, at the Queen's Bench, for forceably taking away and marrying Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, Nov. 25. 1702. Mich. 1 Ann.

N Wednesday the 18th of November, the Grand Jury of Westminster found the Bill of Indictment against the Defendants. On that Day an Habeas Corpus was moved for, and left at Newgate, and the Keeper refused to bring up the Prisoner on Thursday, but brought him on Friday Morning; and then he was Arraigned, and pleaded not Guilty; and the Court then appointed the Trial to be on Wednesday the 25th, that being the last Day that he could be tried, to have Sentence given against Convicted Persons in that Term.

Mr. Swendsen moved for a longer Time, alledging, That a German, a material Witness for him, was gone into Yorkshire. The Court then told him, that if any Person would Swear that any of his Witnesses could not be at the Trial on Wednesday, the Court would put off the Trial; but no Oath thereof being made, the Trial came on upon the Day appointed.

The Court being sat, at which were present the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Justice Holt, Sir John Powell, Sir Littleton Powis, and Sir Henry Gould:

Haagen Swendsen being brought to the Bar, Proclamation was made for Silence; and he being a Foreigner, claimed as his Right, the Benefit of a Party Jury; which was allowed him, and Leave to Challenge whom he would. He Challenged some; and the Gentlemen sworn were, viz.

Cler. of Arr. Upon which Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and pleaded not Guilty, put himself upon God and you the Jury at the Bar, being half Foreigners and half Natives.

Cryer. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on Behalf of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; the Prisoner stands at the Bar for his Deliverance.

Mr. Swends. Pray, my Lord, let me have Pen and Ink, I am not allowed Council; (which his Lordship granted.) My Lord, I would beg the Favour of your Lordship, that the Evidence may be examined apart.

* Mr. Soll. Gen. Is it not your Lordship's Pleasure to call the other Jury, the Facts are so twisted together, and have such a Dependence one upon another, that there will be an Inconvenience to us, if it be otherwise?

* Sir Simon Hartcourt.

M m m

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. They may stand at the Bar by themselves.

Mr. Montague. Or else it will break our Evidence: They may stand on the other side.

L. C. J. Holt. He must be tried single.

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the Queen: It was formerly reckon'd a less Crime to steal a Fortune of 10000 l. than to steal 12 d. of her Money or Goods; but in the Third Year of the Reign of King Henry VII. to cure this Defect in the Law, an Act of Parliament was made, whereby the taking away a Woman, having Goods or Lands, or being an Heir apparent, contrary to her Will, and afterwards Marrying her, is made Felony, and upon this Law the present Indictment is grounded.

Pleasant Rawlins was the Daughter of Mr. William Rawlins; he having left her a considerable Estate, appointed George Bright and William Busby to be her Guardians. Mr. Bright being dead, the other Guardian Mr. Busby, for the better Education of Mrs. Rawlins, placed her under the Care of his Sister Sabina Busby. Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins have lodged about Three Years last at the House of the Widow Nightingale. Haagen Swendsen, with Mrs. Baynton, lodged at Mrs. Blake's in Holbourn, and there they first projected and contriv'd how they might make a Prey of this young Gentlewoman. The first Step they took towards executing this Design, was to get Lodgings at Mrs. Nightingale's House for Mrs. Baynton; for which Purpose she was to pass for a Country Gentlewoman of a plentiful Fortune. One Mrs. St. John was sent to Mrs. Nightingale to take Lodgings for Mrs. Baynton, commending her to be a very good Woman; and that having the Misfortune of a Law-suit, and being obliged for that Reason to attend it in Town, 'twas her greatest Care to lodge in so reputable a House as Mrs. Nightingale's was. Under this Pretence, Lodgings were there taken for her. At her first coming, she was forced to put on a Disguise; she seem'd to live a virtuous Life, that she might ingratiate herself into the Favour of the Family, as often as she had an Opportunity of conversing with any of them: She pretended she had a Brother of a good Estate, one of the best Men in the World; and she hop'd he would shortly come to Town, that she might see him. In a little time after came this Swendsen (being nothing related to her) and appeared as her Brother, and frequently visited her under Pretence of that Relation. But Mrs. Baynton was too well known in Town to continue long undiscover'd; Notice was soon given to Mrs. Busby of the vicious Life Mrs. Baynton had led, and that she was not fit to be in the same House with her. Mrs. Baynton having discovered this, and finding she had no Time to bring about her Designs by Frauds and Wiles, and that no other Ways was left but open Force, the Prisoner at the Bar and she took Measures accordingly; and in order thereto 'twas agreed, that a Writ should be taken out against Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton contrives to get Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Busby into a Coach, and at a Place appointed a Signal was given, and the Writ executed; and Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton, were all carried in the Coach to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, where particular Care was taken to separate Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins, because unless they did that, they could not hope to accomplish their Designs. Mrs. Busby was by Force kept at that Tavern, without any Process against her till the Marriage was over; but Mrs. Rawlins was forcibly carried to Hartwell's the Bailiff's House. Mrs. Baynton pretended to be much concern'd for Mrs. Rawlins, and went in all Haste to call some of her Friends to be Bail for her. Some Time after Mrs. Rawlins was got to Hartwell's, in comes Mrs. Baynton, pretending that by mere Accident she had discover'd her being there, hearing her Name as she was passing by the Door; that she had been in Search, but could find no Help; and that her last Hopes was her dear Brother Swendsen, and she doubted not but he would Bail her: He by Agreement had been plac'd near the Bailiff's, and so was soon found, and brought thither, and was very ready to assist her. In order to her Discharge, the Prisoner, the Bailiff, and Mrs. Baynton, carry'd Mrs. Rawlins to another Tavern, where they had a Parson ready for the Purpose, and there this young Gentlewoman, thro' divers Artifices, of which you shall have a full Account, was constrain'd to Marry. These are the principal Circumstances, and they shall be plainly proved to you.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, I think it necessary to open a little the Manner of getting this young Lady away, and the Contrivance of getting her into the Coach; for your Lordship knows, that if any are taken away without their Consent, tho' they do afterwards consent to be Married to such Taker, yet he is guilty within this Statute. They were resolv'd to take this Woman by Force, when they found they could not otherwise accomplish their End. And Mrs. Baynton knowing Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins were used every Friday Morning to go to a Chapel called Oxendon Chapel, Mrs. Baynton said, I am going to Golden-Square, and if you are going to the Chapel, I'll set you down if you please: They, glad of such a Convenience, thought no Harm, but went in the Coach. They had gone no further than Dartmouth-Street, but these Bailiffs come. Hartwell opens the Coach, and goes into it; they cry out to the People for Help; Hartwell pluck'd up the Glasses, and those Bailiffs about the Coach cry'd, It is an Arrest of a Cheat that owes Money to Tradesmen. By this Means they carried her to the Star and Garter in Drury-Lane. When they had them there, the next Thing was to get her away from her Friend Busby, for unless that were done, they despair'd of getting her to marry Swendsen. Mrs. Baynton pretended to go find out Mrs. Rawlins's Friends to Bail her; but that was to meet with Swendsen: As soon as Mrs. Baynton was gone, the Bailiffs forced Mrs. Rawlins from Mrs. Busby, and Mrs. Busby was kept there by Force till Five a-Clock, till all was over. The Bailiffs, as they carried Mrs. Rawlins away, called her Jade and Slut, and bid her pay her Debts; and said, Put on your Mask you Jade, for we will have no Mob to rescue you; she put on her Mask, and the rest of the Bailiffs followed her, and said, She was a Cheat and was arrested. Then it was Time to open the Scene. Hartwell carried her to his House, and Mrs. Baynton pretending to be coming by and hearing of her Name, open'd the Door, and by an extraordinary Manner burst into the House, and told her, Madam, I went to all your Friends, but could find none at home; but I have been with my dear Brother Swendsen, who will come with another to Bail you, and 'twill not be long before they come; for they were placed at the Five Bells very near Hartwell's House: Upon this she went out again, and brought in Swendsen, and one Holt who keeps the Mitre Tavern in King-Street, Westminster. And truly when they were there, and talked of being Bail, then they would all go in a Coach to the Vine Tavern, the Place where they designed the Marriage;

Marriage; and they had got Two proper Instruments ready there for the Business, the Chaplain and the Clerk of the Fleet. When they had her there, my Lord, the Bailiff asked if she had any Bail? Mrs. Baynton said, that Mr. Swendsen and Mr. Holt would be her Bail; the Bailiff said, I will not take Swendsen's Bail, he is a Man I know not, but Mr. Holt I know, I will take his. The poor Woman begged upon her Knees, for Christ's Sake let me send for my Friends; and they pretended to send for abundance of them, but none came. Then she was threatned with Newgate, for that often came out; If you cannot get Bail, to Newgate you must go, and there must lie. This was often said by Hartwell. Then Mrs. Baynton cry'd (as she could do at command) O how I pity you, Mrs. Rawlins, Is there no way in the Law to help you? I believe if you were married that would put an End to the Action. Then speaking to the Bailiff said, If this Gentlewoman were married, would it not put an End to it? The Bailiff said, I can't tell but it might, if such a Thing were. Well, now her rich Brother Swendsen is propos'd, she must be married to him; the Bailiffs threatning her severely, that to Newgate she must go if she did not. Immediately they brought in the Chaplain and Clerk of the Fleet, and read the Form of Marriage, and after carried her to several Places, left they might be followed and prevented, Beds being provided for the Purpose at those Places, as your Lordship shall hear. And, my Lord, this taking of this Woman thus away against her Will, is an Offence against the Act of 3 Henry VII. and my Lord, we desire that the Statute may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. It shall be explain'd.

Mr. Broderick. My Lord, there was a whole Night compleated before the Prisoner was seiz'd.

Then Mr. W. Busby is called for, and sworn.

He is asked, Do you know Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins?

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Give an Account of her.

Mr. Busby. She is the Daughter of William Rawlins deceased, who left his Estate to Dr. Bright and my self, to be sold for Payment of his Debts and Legacies, and left the Surplufage to his Daughter, which is about 2000 l.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. What Lands has she?

Mr. Busby. She has 20 l. a Year.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. What Age is she of?

Mr. Busby. She is near Eighteen.

Mr. Montague. Was she ever married, or no?

Mr. Busby. She was unmarried.

Then Mrs. Sabina Busby was called and sworn, as also Mrs. Nightingale.

Mr. Swendsen. My Lord, I beg the favour that only one Witness be heard at a Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mrs. Nightingale, Do you know Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, and Mrs. Busby?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, I do.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have they lodged at your House?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long?

Mrs. Nightingale. Above Three Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you any Knowledge of Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How came you acquainted with her?

Mrs. Nightingale. One Mrs. St. John came to me to know whether I took Boarders? I said, I had taken some, but would take no more, unless it were the same Ladies again.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it came to you?

Mrs. Nightingale. One Mrs. St. John.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mrs. Nightingale, speak out, that my Lord may hear you.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Mrs. Busby lodge with you?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, my Lord, we were very intimate before; and since it pleased God to take away her Husband, I was pleas'd with her, and very willing to take her into my House.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Acquaint his Lordship how Mrs. St. John came to you.

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, my Lord, as near as I can. She came to me, and ask'd me, if I took Boarders? I told her, No, I would take none, except it were those Ladies I had before: She told me, she had an Acquaintance that was a Widow Lady that came out of Wiltshire, about a Suit of Law, and would be in a very sober Family near a Church. But however, I denied her Lodgings, and did expect to hear no more of her. But about three Weeks or a Month after, she came to me again, and asked me whether I had altered my Resolution.

L. C. J. Holt. Go on.

Mrs. Nightingale. My Lord, Mrs. St. John said, that the Lady was come to Town on the Saturday Night before, very much indispos'd in her Journey. I asked her whether she knew this Baynton or no? Mrs. St. John said, Yes; she was very intimate in the Family, and she said a great deal more of her, which I cannot remember. She said also, that she would have Boarded her her self, and would have been glad of her Company, if she had had Conveniences for her. Then she asked me, whether she should come her self and give her own Character? We thought no harm, she being a Woman, and not a Man. She further said, that Mrs. Baynton had seen a Maid whom I knew, and she believed she would take her. I enquired of another who lived in the Mews, if he knew Mrs. Baynton; he said, Yes, and that she came of a good Family. At length she came, and made a very modest Appearance in her Behaviour and Garb. She said to me, that I was very curious in taking in Boarders, and for that she liked me the better. I consented she should come. She asked me what I would have a Week? I told her Twelve Shillings for her self, and Ten Shillings for her Maid. She concluded to come on the Wednesday following; which she did with her Maid, a modest Girl, and a Neighbour, which gave me the more Encouragement. She carried her self very well till Michaelmas-Day at Night, when we heard of her new Brother; she seem'd elevated at the News, and fell into Convulsion-Fits, which I believ'd were real Fits. She said she had a dear Brother, a good Christian, and he would come on the Morrow. When he came, he brought two Gentlemen with him, very modest, which I never saw before, nor since. Mrs. Baynton made a Pot of Coffee, and sent for a Bottle of Wine, and she told her Brother before me, what good Lodgings she had, and said she wish'd he would come and lodge near them, for she knew he had but a puny Stomach, and believed he would like her Victuals. He said it was not convenient for him, because his Business called him every Day to the Change. She said also, there was a Bowling-Green near them, where he might divert himself. But all would not do. She asked me what I would have a Meal if her Brother should come at any Time: I said, when I had other Ladies, if any of their Friends came, I had Twelve-Pence a Meal of them. On Friday he came; I went to Church,

Church, and left them together at Cribbage, as I found them at my Return.

L. C. J. Holt. What Day of the Week was this?

Mrs. Nightingale. The Friday before the Sacrament. Mrs. Baynton said to Mr. Swendsen, before Mrs. Busby, You have an extraordinary Hand at making Punch; so they agreed to make a Bowl the Monday following; but Mrs. Rawlins hardly drank any, she not liking any strong Liquors. After this, she told me, her Brother was very ill of his Journey, being lately come out of the Country, tho' I don't understand he was in't. The Monday before Michaelmas-Day, we were at Dinner with two more than our Family, when Mrs. Baynton said, she had an Interest in a Norway Ship, and invited us all aboard; But he, viz. Mr. Swendsen, did not come to our House till Four Days after; but on Friday we concluded to go on Saturday; there were Eight of us in Company in all, Mrs. Rawlins, Mrs. Busby, I and my Daughter, and Mr. Ball another Lodger, belonging to the Exchequer. We went, and had much Discourse; after having drank a Glass of Wine, the Cloth was laid, and the Master offered a Bowl of Punch; says Mr. Swendsen, Ladies, I would please you all, and leave you all to your Liberties to drink what you please.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this Person Mrs. Baynton's Brother?

Mrs. Nightingale. This is he that went for her Brother.

L. C. J. Holt. Whereabouts is your House?

Mrs. Nightingale. Near Tuttle-fields.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This Mrs. Baynton came to you under the Character of a Country Lady on a Law-Suit; do you understand that she was so?

Mrs. Nightingale. My Lord, She said she came from the Bath.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You misapprehend the Question; Do you understand that her Pretence was true or not?

Mrs. Nightingale. I enquired of several Persons, who acquainted me that the Bayntons lived in Wiltshire; but it was not long before we began to suspect her, for there seemed to be an extraordinary Love between her and Swendsen, more than is usual between Brother and Sister. I said, Madam, I wonder you don't marry your Brother. She said, she thought that 'twas not lawful. I said there was such a Thing done in Westminster, of a Man's marrying Two Sisters.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray call to mind what Time it was that you first gave Notice to her that she should not continue in your Lodgings.

Mrs. Nightingale. When I first mistrusted her, I gave Notice of it in my Family. But we being all Women, and fearful of her, thought not fit to give her Warning till her Month was up. But before that, she came to me, and told me, and said Mrs. Nightingale, I have received a Letter from my Sister Baynton in the Country, which informs me, that the Trustees will agree, and so I design to return when my Month is up, for this Town is very chargeable. Very well said I, for I expect some Ladies very shortly. I went down to my Family and express'd my Joy to them, and said, I was very glad Mrs. Baynton had prevented me, for if she had not given me Warning, I would have given her Warning, for I resolved she should not stay.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mrs. Nightingale, it seems you had Notice of Mrs. Baynton's ill Carriage; did you take any Notice of it to her self?

Mrs. Nightingale. No; I did not, but I gave the Maid Notice as soon as I suspected any thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know whether the Maid had told any Thing to her or not.

Mrs. Nightingale. The Maid said to her, Madam, don't you see a Strangeness in the Family? Yes, said she, I can see and bear a great deal; but when I am roused, I'll be like a Lion.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long was this before Mrs. Rawlins was taken away?

Mrs. Nightingale. I can't prefix the Time, but it was before she gave me Warning.

L. C. J. Holt. Was she gone from your House before this Thing happen'd.

Mrs. Nightingale. No, my Lord she told me on Wednesday that her Time was out; but said, There is a Fellow in Town that I fear will cheat me, and I am taking out a Statute of Bankruptcy against him, which I think will cause me to stay in Town a Week longer; she also told me, she had taken a Place in the Coach to go on Thursday, but must lose her Earnest, for this Business would detain her a Week longer.

Mr. Raymond. Did you ever observe they were together in private?

Mrs. Nightingale. No, my Lord, we never had any Suspicion of Mr. Swendsen, but of the Woman; for she could put on all Manner of Disguises.

Mrs. Busby being called, she is sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mrs. Busby, pray do you know Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, I do.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How came you first acquainted with her?

Mrs. Busby. My Brother Busby was one of her Guardians, and put her under the Care of my Husband, while he was living, which was four Years ago this Christmas. She came to us by the Consent of her Guardian.

Mr. Soll. Gen. At what Place did you lodge?

Mrs. Busby. We lived in Stretton-Grounds, but since my Husband died, which is Three Years last July, I left House-keeping, and then we went and lodged at Mrs. Nightingale's.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long have you continued at Mrs. Nightingale's?

Mrs. Busby. We have continued there ever since.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, I do, she lodged at Mrs. Nightingale's.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was there any body who used to come to her there?

Mrs. Busby. None except a Change-Woman.

Coun. Do you know any Thing of Mr. Swendsen?

Mrs. Busby. Sir, The first of his coming to Mrs. Nightingale's, was the Day after Michaelmas-Day. Mrs. Baynton said, that she had a Brother that was to come to Town, which he did the Day after, with Two Gentlewomen, which I never saw, either before or since; but Mr. Swendsen after this came several Times to her as her Brother, her Sister's Husband; and she desired that he might dine with her sometimes; for which she agreed with Mrs. Nightingale at 12 d. per Meal.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was this Mrs. Rawlins at any Time in private with Swendsen?

Mrs. Busby. Never that I know of in all my Life; we were always in Company together when he dined there, and the Times that he dined there we computed to be 9 or 10; he was there sometimes when we were not at home.

Mr. Soll.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How did Mrs. Baynton behave her self when she was at Mrs. Nightingale's?

Mrs. Busby. We thought very well of her, till at last we discerned too much Freedom between Mr. Swendsen and her self; we suspected her Virtue, and thought she would Drink; and were informed she would Swear: She said she must stay in Town about a Month or Six Weeks about a Suit of Law. Her Maid told her of the Strangeness of the Family; she said they had best be Civil, or else she would stay and plague them. She told Mrs. Nightingale at length, the Town was chargeable, and her Business done, and that she would return into the Country.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What do you know concerning Mrs. Rawlins being taken away?

Mrs. Busby. Mrs. Baynton knowing it was our Custom to go to Oxendon Chapel every Friday Morning, she came and told us she had occasion to go to Golden-Square; and that being in the Way, she invited us to go with her in the Coach, and she would set us down at or near the Chapel. When we came to Dartmouth-street, somebody bid the Coachman stop: I expected she should set us down as she promised. On that side where I sat, there were old Buildings, and as I was looking out, I heard Mrs. Baynton cry out to the Coachman, Drive on; and all of a sudden I saw a Man in the Coach, which was Hartwell the Bailiff. Mrs. Rawlins and I were in a very great Fright, knowing nothing. I said for God's sake let's come out, we are not concerned. Hartwell said we were the Persons that he came for. I begg'd of him to let us come out: Hartwell had his Arms about Mrs. Rawlins's Side, and said, 'tis this Lady and you that I am concerned about. I ask'd him what it was. Said he, let you and I have two or three Words together, and all will be well enough. I said, you don't think I will say any thing to you, unless I have my Friends by me; Mrs. Baynton in the Coach, said, No, Madam, be sure you don't. I could not tell what he would do with us; at length he carried us all to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. I press'd him to let us go to Fleet-street, for I had Friends there. Hartwell was very angry, and would hear nothing of it. When we came to Drury-Lane, Mrs. Baynton would have had us put on our Masks; I said I had done nothing amiss, and I would not. When we were in the Room at the Tavern, Mrs. Baynton hastned out of the Room as fast as she could, pretending to go for my Friends. Mrs. Rawlins and I were in a great Consternation, wondering what they would do with us: I took hold of her Arm, and told her I would live and die with her. The Bailiffs came in, and said she was their Prisoner, and took her by Violence from me: They told me she must go with them, for they said she was arrested by a Writ out of one Court, and I by one out of another. When she was going, I put my Head out of the Window, and cry'd Murder, Murder, several times: When I pull'd in my Head again, Spurr said, What have you got by your Bawling? And said they were better known there than I. They brought a Man to me, who said he had Orders to keep me, and that he had only a Crown for his Pains; but he would not suffer me to send for any body. The Gentlewoman of the House came up, and said I had done a Diskindness to her House by crying out Murder: She said to me, Look and see whether your Name be spelt right, for it may be a false Arrest, &c. Wakeman that went away with Mrs. Rawlins, came back again, and said, the young Woman was well, and that he left her eating Fowl and Bacon; I said, I wish she was well. The Gentlewoman of the House bid the Bailiff shew me the Writ: He said he could not read well; but there was the Name of Sabina Busby, at the Suit of one Jones: But when he heard my Complaints a considerable while, he said he would go to my Friends, and would go as cheap as a Porter, and as soon. I sent him to Mr. Thornton and Mr. Nash: He pretended to go, but return'd no more till Night.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You say you cry'd out Murder, how did Mrs. Rawlins behave her self then?

Mrs. Busby. It was her great Fright and Crying that made me endeavour her Rescue; when we said we wou'd die together, then it was when they forc'd her from me; the Surprise was so great that made me cry out after that manner that I did: Upon which some Neighbours came in, but they told them it was an Arrest, and therefore they would not meddle in it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mrs. Busby, they kept you till Night, you say; did they take or require Bail for you before you was discharged?

Mrs. Busby. I'll tell you, Sir, if you please: I did not know what I was arrested for, it might be Murder or Treason, for aught I knew. There was a little Boy by, said, Madam, I know Mr. Unkle, your Friend in Newmarket, and I'll go for him: He went, but when he return'd again, he said he was not at home; which I thought was a Lye. There was a poor Man, a Labourer, working in the Chimney, he gave me a Wink, and said, Madam, I'll go for him; but I said to him, Pray don't leave me; I began to be afraid, for I did not know how my Life might be concern'd. Said the little Boy, I'll go any where for you. I sent him for Two Gentlemen, who came: The Bailiffs said they had an Action of 200 l. against me; the Gentlemen told the Bailiffs they were come to bail me: The Bailiffs were very impudent, but shuff'd about a-while, and left me, and took no further notice.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they take any Bail for you?

Mrs. Busby. No, they left me with these Gentlemen.

Mr. Mountague. When you went out in the Morning, did you design to go any where else but to Chapel.

Mrs. Busby. No where else.

Mr. Mountague. Was it your Invitation to Mrs. Baynton, or her Invitation to you to go in the Coach?

Mrs. Busby. It was Mrs. Baynton's Invitation to me; I had not a very good Opinion of Mrs. Baynton, for we suspected her Virtue in the Family, by reason of her too familiar Carriage to her Brother; but being to go shortly away, I apprehended no harm.

Mr. Mountague. Did Mrs. Rawlins go with you?

Mrs. Busby. She did.

Mr. Mountague. Mrs. Busby, do you know the Prisoner? Is this the Man that came to Mrs. Nightingale's House?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir.

Judge Powell. How long was it from the Time that you were parted after Arresting, that you saw Mrs. Rawlins again.

Mrs. Busby. The first time after was on Saturday, when they were before the Recorder.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you find her?

Mrs. Busby. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you at the finding?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time was it?

Mrs. Busby. About Noon, I believe.

Mr. Moun-

Mr. Mountague. When you saw her put into the Coach, did you hear her cry out?

Mrs. Busby. No, Sir; it was I that cry'd out.

Mr. Mountague. Did Mr. Swendsen make any Entertainments, or no;

Mrs. Busby. But one, as I know of.

Prisoner speaks to Mrs. Busby, and said, Have you done?

Mrs. Busby. I think so.

Prisoner. If you have, I'll ask you a Question; Did you know of any Love between Mrs. Rawlins and me?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know any thing of Love between Mrs. Rawlins and the Prisoner, or no?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

Mrs. Baynton's Maid call'd and sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, did you know Mrs. Baynton?

Maid. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was you her Servant?

Maid. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who recommended you to her?

Maid. Mrs. St. John.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know one Mr. Swendsen?

Maid. Yes, my Lord; there he is; pointing to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you ever see him before you were hired to your Mistress.

Maid. No, my Lord; I never saw him before?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you see him when you was with your Mistress?

Maid. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know whether there was any Relation between them?

Maid. Yes, my Lord; they went for Brother and Sister.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long was you with her?

Maid. About a Month.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How did she behave her self?

Maid. Till the last of her Time, very well; but the Family had a Mistrust of her long before she went away.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know the Reason why they mistrusted her?

Maid. I do not know, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know what was the Cause the Family mistrusted her?

Maid. They thought her a loose sort of a Woman, and therefore they mistrusted her.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they discern any Familiarity betwixt them?

Maid. No more than as Brother and Sister.

Mr. Soll. Gen. After this Suspicion, do you know whether the Family express'd any Repentment?

Maid. No, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you live with her when Mrs. Rawlins was taken away?

Maid. Yes, my Lord; but I went away the next Day.

Mrs. Berkley Sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mrs. Berkley, pray was you present when the Prisoner was taken up; and do you know whether he and Mrs. Baynton were Brother and Sister;

Mrs. Berkley. I went to Mr. Swendsen himself, and said, Is this wicked Woman your Sister? Says he, I cannot say she is; but I have made her my Tool, and she has done my Business, and I would get rid of her To-morrow, but that being Sunday I will not; but on Monday I'll give her a Reward for what she has done, and then I'll discharge her, and never see her more.

Mr. Mountague. Relate what Discourse you had with him to the Gentlemen of the Jury.

Mrs. Berkley. I asked Mr. Swendsen, Whether Mrs. Baynton was his Sister? He said, No, she is not my Sister; but I have gained my End, in making her a Tool to my dear Wife: I'll gratify her for what she has done, and put her away on Monday and never see her more.

Council. I think you lodged in the House with her?

Mrs. Berkley. No; but I was a Neighbour, and was very frequently there.

Council. Did you see any thing to cause you to mistrust that there was any thing more than ordinary betwixt them?

Mrs. Berkley. No Cause at all, that I know of.

Mr. Blake and his Wife sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Blake, pray do you know Mrs. Baynton?

Mr. Blake. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long have you known her?

Mr. Blake. About Twelve Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray is she a Country Lady that has got a good Jointure?

Mr. Blake. I know nothing but that she works for her Living.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Hath she any Estate in the Country?

Mr. Blake. None, as I know of.

Council. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mr. Blake. Yes, Sir.

Council. Where did he lodge at any Time?

Mr. Blake. He lodged at my House.

Council. How long?

Mr. Blake. About 6 or 7 Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is your House?

Mr. Blake. In Red-Lyon-street.

L. C. J. Holt. What other Lodgers had you at the same time?

Mr. Blake. I had a Parliament-Man lodged with me at the same Time.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did Mrs. Baynton lodge;

Mr. Blake. In the opposite Room against the Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. How long time?

Mr. Blake. About Seven Months.

Council. How long was Mrs. Baynton gone from your House before this Matter happened?

Mr. Blake. About Five or Six Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. How long before Michaelmas?

Mr. Blake. I cannot certainly tell; but I believe much about that Time.

Council. When they were in your House, what did you see betwixt them?

Mr. Blake. Nothing of any harm, as I know of.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Blake, did you never see any harm by Mrs. Baynton?

Mr. Blake. Not as I know of.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know whether she lay-in at your House?

Mr. Blake. I know not; for aught I know she might: I know nothing of Womens lying-in.

Mr. Wakeman call'd and sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were you one of the Bailiffs that Arrested Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins?

Wakeman. I was the Man that executed the Marshal's-Court Writ, and Arrested them.

L. C. J. Holt. Who employed you?

Wakeman. Mr. Hartwell.

L. C. J. Holt. Were you at Mr. Hartwell's House?

Wakeman. My Lord, I'll tell you the Truth of the Matter: On Wednesday before they were Arrested, rested, Mr. Hartwell was at my House to see for me; but being not at home, but in the Country, I came home about 11 at Night: My Daughter said to me, there was a Writ left by Mr. Hartwell for me to be served, and it must be done To-morrow Morning. On the Morning he came to me, and said, Mr. Wakeman, will you execute a Writ? He carried me to the Mitre-Tavern, and called for a Pot of Ale and a Bottle of White-Wine, and we had a Toast and some Cheese. While I was there, one Mr. Holt came in, a Man that I never saw in all my Life, and said, The Business cannot be done this Day.

L. C. J. Holt. What Day of the Week was this?

Wakeman. Thursday; he appointed me to call upon him at Nine next Morning. He said, If I came first we should get what we had before: He came in before we had done, and the Man of the House was dressing himself in the Kitchen: We eat a Toast, and drank the Wine, and after that, we had another. Mr. Holt call'd Mr. Hartwell out, and said, It cannot be done; by and by he said it might be done: I don't know what it was, but they took me to Stretton-Street; Mr. Hartwell and Mr. Spurr was with me: I was ashamed to stand in the Street, so I went into an Alehouse, and drank a single Pot of Drink.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had you seen Mr. Swendsen before that Morning?

Wakeman. No: I never saw him before in all my Life. At that, if it please your Honour, Mr. Hartwell and Mr. Spurr went before, and bid me follow the Coach. I did so as near as I could, but could not keep pace with the Coach, being lame; but at Dartmouth-Ground Mr. Spurr stopp'd the Horses, and then I came up to the Coach; and Mr. Hartwell, I suppose, gave the Word of Arrest, and into the Coach he went; but I did not go in because there was no room, but rid behind it. The Coach was order'd to go to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. When we came there, we went into a Back-Room; and the Gentlewoman that had a Band-Box said to Mrs. Rawlins, I will go to some of your Friends.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they do in Stretton-Grounds?

Wakeman. They were Arrested there: The Gentlewoman was carry'd by Mr. Hartwell to his House, and I follow'd them; but meeting with a Gentlewoman of my Acquaintance, she stopp'd me. When I came to Hartwell's House, Where is she, said I? They told me she was below Stairs. I said I had a little Business elsewhere, that will detain me about an Hour: He gave me leave to go. When I went out, Mr. Holt call'd me over the Way, and ask'd me, if Mr. Hartwell was at home? I said, Yes. And is the young Gentlewoman there too? I likewise said, Yes. He led me to the Five-Bells in Witch Street, into a Room where there were Three Boxes, and carry'd me to the middlemost Box, and there was a Gentleman.

Council. Was it the Prisoner at the Bar?

Wakeman. Yes, I think so. At that Mr. Holt fill'd me a full Glass, which I drank off; and I told him, I was going to do some Business in St. Martin's. And when I had done that, I went to Hartwell's House again: I enquir'd for the Gentlewoman. Mrs. Hartwell said, her Husband was gone along with the Gentlewoman to Holborn to make an end of the Matter. I ask'd her, Whereabouts? She said, At the Vine Tavern. I went thither, and ask'd for Mr. Hartwell. There was he, and Mr. Butler, and a Tallow-

Chandler going to eat Stakes: They invited me to eat some with them; which I did. Mr. Holt came into the Room two or three times: Then Mr. Holt told me, I was discharged of my Prisoner; so away I went.

L. C. J. Holt. You were eating Stakes, you say, at the Vine Tavern; Was she there then?

Wakeman. There is a Court against the Tavern, and I saw the Gentlewoman looking out of the Vine Tavern, where there were new Sash-Windows; as I came over the Way thro' the Court, this Gentlewoman look'd out of the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. What, before you went in?

Wakeman. Yes, my Lord; but I went in and saw him alone, but knew not whom he was.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see Mrs. Rawlins there?

Wakeman. No, not at the Tavern.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When Hartwell took away this Gentlewoman, did she go away quietly, or did Mrs. Busby and she make an Outcry?

Wakeman. She was a little frightened.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was it you first saw Mr. Swendsen?

Wakeman. At the Five-Bell Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. When was it you saw him there?

Wakeman. About Twelve a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was it he gave you the Pot of Drink?

Wakeman. At the Five Bells; but it was Mr. Holt that gave it me.

L. C. J. Holt. How many were there in Company there?

Wakeman. Only Mr. Holt, and Mr. Swendsen.

Council. What was the Occasion of your going?

Wakeman. Mr. Holt call'd me.

Council. When was it you saw him out of the Window?

Wakeman. About an Hour and a Quarter after.

Council. What Answer did you give, when they ask'd you where the Gentlewoman was?

Wakeman. I said, she was at Mr. Hartwell's.

Council. You said you serv'd a Writ on Mrs. Rawlins, had you no Process against Mrs. Busby?

Wakeman. No, none at all.

L. C. J. Holt. On what Account did you keep Mrs. Busby?

Wakeman. I did not keep her; but one Spurr was employed to do it.

Council. You came back to Mrs. Busby's; did not you say that you had been with a young Gentlewoman, who was eating Fowls and Bacon?

Wakeman. Mr. Hartwell ask'd me to eat some.

Council. Did not you shew Mrs. Busby a Writ, and read it to her?

Wakeman. I cou'd never read a King's-Bench Writ.

L. C. J. Holt. Can you read a Martial's-Court Writ?

Wakeman. Yes, but not the Latin of it.

Coun. When you went to Hartwell at the Vine Tavern, did you ask for Mrs. Rawlins?

Wakeman. Yes, yes; I ask'd where she was? They told me they were making an end of it. My Lord, I had like to have forgot; I asked where was the Prisoner? And Mr. Holt told me, they had just made an end of the Business.

Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Give an Account to his Lordship, after what manner you were Arrested, and carried from Tavern to Tavern.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I was Arrested with Madam Busby, and carried to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. How were you carried thither ?

Mrs. Rawlins. I was in a Coach going to Oxendon Chapel, when three Bailiffs were about the Coach.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did they carry you ?

Mrs. Rawlins. They carried us to the Star and Garter in Drury-Lane.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who did they carry with you ?

Mrs. Rawlins. There was Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Baynton, and I, and Hartwell the Bailiff ; when we came to the Star and Garter, they forced me up Stairs into a Back Room, but we got into a forward Room ; but we had not been there long till they parted Mrs. Busby and I ; Mrs. Baynton was gone, for our Friends, as she pretended. I was in a very great Fright, but Mrs. Busby saying we will die together, they took me by Force from her ; Hartwell swore a great Oath, and thrust me down Stairs and forced me out of a Back-Door into an Alley. When he went to put me into a Coach, I cry'd out, Murder ; then he threatened to put me into Newgate. He carry'd me to his own House, and no body came to help me a great while ; but Mrs. Baynton said, that as she was going by the Door she heard my Name, and came in in a mighty Fright ; she said to me, Madam, I pity you, will no body Bail you ? She told me, I will send to my Brother who shall be Bail for you. She sent for him, he came into the Room, and he said, what is the Matter with you, I said, Enough is the Matter when I am arrested for 200 l. and owe no Man a Penny. Said he in a Jocular way, what makes you affrighted at that, I have a good mind to arrest you my self. Then they took me thence to the Vine Tavern in Holbourn, where I was an Hour or Two before I heard any Thing of Marrying or any such Thing.

Coun. What did they do with you all that Time ?

Mrs. Rawlins. They got a Dinner ready, and after we had dined, she begged of me to have her Brother, and said, that if I did not marry him, I should be ruined. I told her I would do nothing without the Advice of my Friends. I desired my Friends to be sent for, but they would not admit it. She looked on my Ring on my Finger, and said, let me see your Ring from your Finger. I said, No, you shall not. She said I will force it off. I said I'll try that : But she forced it from me.

Prisoner. Remember you are upon your Oath.

Mrs. Rawlins. I know I am. When she took my Ring away, I asked her what she would do with it ; she said, we should go and get a Wedding-Ring made by it. I told her I would not marry without the Advice of my Friends. Away she went and bought a Ring, and came up again, and said to her Brother, she had a Ring ; well said I, give me my Ring and do what you will with the other ; she said, If I did not marry her Brother I should be ruined for ever.

There was a Minister in the House, whom they said had been there about a Quarter of an Hour, but I supposed longer ; they brought him, with the Clerk, up Stairs ; the Parson saying, I hear there is a Couple to be married ; he asked no Questions, but told me, if I did not marry this Gentleman, I should be sent to Newgate and ruined for ever.

Coun. Give an Account of what was after the buying the Ring.

Mrs. Rawlins. When they brought the Ring, they said to me, will you be married or no ? I answered, I will not, there are none of my Friends here, and I will not marry without the Consent of my Friends ; They said, If I did not I should be ruined for ever. So with many Threats and Persuasions, they at last prevail'd with me to marry. I was forced to marry him out of Fear, not of going to Newgate, but of being murdered.

Coun. Where did they carry you ?

Mrs. Rawlins. To Blake's House in Red-Lyon-Street, Holborn.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time of Day was it ?

Mrs. Rawlins. I cannot give an exact Account ; but I think it was Candle-light.

Prisoner. It was about Twelve a-Clock, at Noon.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time was it that you were marry'd ?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, it was about Three a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. When you went to Blake's House, who was with you there ?

Mrs. Rawlins. None but Mr. Swendsen, Mrs. Baynton, and I.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there any Force or Threats us'd when you were at Blake's House ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, there was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Give an Account of it.

Mrs. Rawlins. They thrust me up Stairs, and ordered to have a Bed sheeted. Mrs. Baynton said to me, Undress and go to Bed. I said I would not. She said she would pluck my Cloaths off my Back. I said she should not. She said she would pluck off my Cloaths and make me go to Bed.

Coun. What did she do with you ?

Mrs. Rawlins. She put me to Bed.

Coun. Did she use any Violence with you ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Such Violence that made me go to Bed.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to be released ?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was Saturday Morning before I was released ; there was some of my Friends came to the Place where I was.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you were with him all Night ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Swendsen, will you ask her any Questions ?

Prisoner. She must be my chiefest Evidence my Lord, when the Witnesses come ; she must be the chiefest of them.

L. C. J. Holt. You will not ask her any Questions now, but when the Witnesses are call'd.

Prisoner. My Lord, I presume she does not go out of Court. Orders given for her to sit down.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We have done with our Evidence at present.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Swendsen. What do you answer to the Evidence ?

Prisoner. My Lord, I am very much unprepar'd for a Tryal at present.

L. C. J. Holt. Why so ?

Prisoner. Because I had but little Time for Preparation, and I am not prepared, I desire that I may be allow'd Council.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, it cannot be allow'd you ; and as for the time of your Trial you were told, if you would shew good Cause to have it put off yet, the Court would have done it.

Prisoner. Then I hope if I speak any Thing that may be prejudicial to my Cause, that the Court will not take Advantage from it.

The first Time I was at Mrs. Nightingale's, I was desired by Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Baynton to make a Bowl of Punch, which I did, and we were very merry over it, then I invited them to go on Board a Ship Ship, which they all did, and we in a short Time came very well acquainted. My Lord, I desire my Wife might stand by her self, and none of them near her.

L. C. J. Holt. There is none near her that will hurt her.

Prisoner. My Lord, I beg she may stand by her self, that I may have a fair Trial; I pray your Lordship to grant me this Favour. My Lord, will you please to grant it?

L. C. J. Holt. Must I grant it only for your Humour?

Prisoner. 'Tis not a Humour, my Lord, but of a great Consequence to me: Will your Lordship grant me it? I beg it, my Lord, for 'tis the most material Thing I have to ask; I beg all those People may be removed from her, 'tis the greatest and most material Thing I have to say.

L. C. J. Holt. I'm sorry for it.

Prisoner. It is so, good my Lord grant me that.

L. C. J. Holt. There's no body near her that concerns you at all.

Prisoner. There are those by her that will do me no Kindness. Then she was ordered to be remov'd.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, her standing there is enough to disorder her.

Prisoner. My Lord, she is very well.

L. C. J. Holt. Remove her a little further.

Coun. My Lord, he does it on purpose to fright her.

Prisoner. We went (as I was telling your Lordship) aboard a Ship, and they invited me to come the Week following to partake of a Treat; accordingly I went, and there was one Mr. Pugh, and he and I made a Bowl of Punch. Mr. Pugh at that Time courted Mrs. Rawlins, and that little Time I was acquainted with her, I discerned she had a Kindness for me, as I had for her; and I told her I could not be easy while she suffered Mr. Pugh to kiss her; she desired me to be easy, and it should be remedied.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, do you remember any such Thing?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I do not remember any such Thing, or that any such Words ever came out of my Mouth.

Prisoner. Did not you say this, Mrs. Rawlins, Mrs. Swendsen I should say, did not you say, if I would not sit by you you would not eat a Bit or a Crumb; when I sat by you and profered my Place to another, can you say you were not offended?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I was not.

Prisoner. Are not you upon your Oath? did not you give me some Encouragement?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not know how I could shew it you, I know not of any such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. You ought to speak the Truth, because his Life depends upon it. Did you in the first Place ever admit of his Courtship, in order to marry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I don't remember any such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever shew any Kindness to him upon any such Account?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I don't know I shew'd him any more Kindness than all the rest of the Family shew'd him.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you ever in his Company alone?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord.

Prisoner. To give me more Ease and Satisfaction

VOL. V.

after Dinner we had our Bowl and Walnuts, Mrs. Swendsen peeled the Kernels and gave them to me; she gave them faster than I could eat; she heaped my Plate with them, every one at the Table took notice of it, and she jogged me with her Knee, that I should take them, and gave some to Mrs. Baynton, and bid her take them and give to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Busby, Were you there?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see any Thing of this kind?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

Prisoner. Will your Lordship be pleased to ask her yourself?

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, did you e'er give peeled Walnuts to him, or send them to him in particular?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I do not know that I was more kind to him than the rest of the Company.

Prisoner. Every Body took notice of it, and Mr. Pugh in particular.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you say, Mr. Swendsen?

Prisoner. My Lord, Mr. Pugh, if he were here, would say the same as I do. He was afraid I should get away his Lady.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is he?

Court. He is in the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. You may have him for a Witness if you will.

Prisoner. More than this, before he went away, she told him she did not care for him; this she spoke to make me more easy still. This I believe Mr. Pugh can witness, in as much as Madam Busby complain'd to her about it, at Mr. Scoreman's the Picture-Drawer's, who is one of my Evidences; I desire he may be called.

L. C. J. Holt. Well let him be called.

So he was called and came.

L. C. J. Holt. Hear ye, he calls you to be a Witness, you are not to be upon your Oath, but are under the highest Obligation to tell the Truth.

Mr. Scoreman. While I was drawing a Gentlewoman's Picture, Mrs. Baynton's, there was a Fire, it began to be Cold, they fell into Discourse about Mr. Swendsen and Mrs. Rawlins, Mrs. Busby was there at the same Time, they fell into Discourse about Mr. Swendsen and the young Lady.

L. C. J. Holt. Was she there?

Mr. Scoreman. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was it?

Mr. Scoreman. At my Lodgings; there were Mrs. Busby, the young Lady, and Mrs. Baynton.

L. C. J. Holt. Whose Picture were you drawing?

Mr. Scoreman. Mrs. Baynton's. They fell into Discourse relating to a Matter of Love, between Mr. Swendsen and the young Lady. She said the young Lady had a Love for Mr. Swendsen more than the other.

L. C. J. Holt. You heard her say so?

Mr. Scoreman. No, but I can say Mrs. Baynton said so.

L. C. J. Holt. But tell us what you heard.

Mr. Scoreman. She should have said so, I did not hear her my self, but afterwards upon a Discourse she afterwards said, what she had said she would stand to.

L. C. J. Holt. What did she say?

Mr. Scoreman. I do not know that she said so or not.

Prisoner. My Lord, may I speak it as well as I can, he cannot speak English right, I'll speak it to him, my Lord.

N n n

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no. Did you hear Mrs. Busby say any Thing? What did she say?

Mr. Scoreman. In way of Discourse she said so.

L. C. J. Holt. What, in way of Discourse, did she say nothing?

Mr. Scoreman. I heard the Lady say only that Word, that all she said she would stand to.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you hear them talk about?

Mr. Scoreman. They were playing at Cards, and she took up the Tricks of Mr. Swendsen, which discovered Love.

L. C. J. Holt. The Question is, Whether you did hear them speak any thing of Love, or not?

Prisoner. My Lord, he would speak better with an Interpreter.

L. C. J. Holt. Let an Interpreter be called for.

L. C. J. Holt. What Countryman are you?

Prisoner. My Lord, he is a Dane.

The Interpreter, a Jury-man, was sworn, and beginning to talk with Mr. Scoreman; and then he said, he is none of my Country, he is a Dutchman, I don't understand him.

L. C. J. Holt. He speaks English well enough.

Prisoner. Very well; but he knows not where he begins: He would say what Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Baynton were speaking, but knows not how to utter himself.

L. C. J. Holt. He cannot say any thing for you.

Mr. Scoreman. I heard but a few Words, and cannot say much of it.

L. C. J. Holt. You must have a better Witness, or you are in a dangerous Condition.

Prisoner. My Lord, Mr. Pugh complained to Madam Busby, that she slighted him very much.

L. C. J. Holt. What, for Love of you.

Prisoner. Yes, my Lord, I could tell you of divers Things that pass between Lovers, that would be impertinent for me to relate to wife Men.

L. C. J. Holt. Let us hear some of them?

Prisoner. When we were by our selves, she kissed me; and squeezed me by the Hand, when we walked privately in the Garden.

L. C. J. Holt. Did she kiss you?

Prisoner. Yes, my Lord, and squeez'd me often.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you not think her very coming?

Prisoner. Yes, I did; and when we talk'd of Marriage, she seem'd to be very well pleased.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, you hear what he says: Did you squeeze him by the Hand, and kiss him? Is it true?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I did no such Trick, not I; and as for walking in the Garden, I did not walk in the Garden alone with him.

Prisoner. I could mention a great many of these little Things; but if she denies them I cannot help it. My Lord, the last time I was at the House we had a Barrel of Oysters; I stood with my Hands behind me, and as she passed by at any time, she gave me squeezes by the Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you to this, Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did not do so upon my Oath.

L. C. J. Holt. She says she did not do it, upon her Oath.

Prisoner. Now for the Matter of Fact; as for the Arrest, I never knew any thing of it, directly or indirectly, till I saw her at the Bailiff's House.

L. C. J. Holt. If she did know any Thing of, or was consenting to the Arrest, why did you force her to the Tavern, and marry her with a Parson you had provided for that Purpose?

Prisoner. She married me with as much Freedom as could be in a Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you to that Mrs?

Prisoner. Will your Lordship please to ask her, whether I offered any Violence to her either by Word or Deed.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, give an Account how you were carried from the Bailiff's House.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, when I was at Hartwell's the Bailiff's House, Mrs. Baynton pretended to come accidentally by, and that she heard my Voice, and came in and said, How do you do, Mrs. Rawlins? You know how I do, said I. She pretended to help me, and proposed to go to her Brother to bail me; and he came, and I was carried from thence in a Coach to the Vine Tavern,—She was asked whether he came into the Coach to her?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you cry out when they put you into the Coach?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I did not cry out then, I made no Noise then.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do then?

Mrs. Rawlins. They carry'd me to the Vine Tavern a Prisoner.

Mr. Soll. Gen. She went willingly enough from Hartwell's House to the Vine Tavern, because she thought that there she should be bailed.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. What was the Pretence of your being carried from Hartwell's House?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, they would not tell me before they carry'd me to the Place.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Swendsen, Will you ask any other Questions?

Prisoner. Not yet, my Lord. I desire the Parson may be called that marry'd us. Which was done.

L. C. J. Holt. Come Doctor you are not upon your Oath; How come you to be concern'd in this Match?

Parson. My Lord, it was at the Vine Tavern where I saw them in Holbourn.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it the Mitre, or the Vine?

Parson. The Vine, I believe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you there?

Parson. There was a Gentleman fetch'd me and the Clerk from the Fleet.

L. C. J. Holt. What to do?

Parson. He said there was a Gentleman there to speak with us. When we came there, the Clerk and I went up one Pair of Stairs and drank a Pint of Wine. Then we were led into another Room; I asked him what I was to do. He told me, for to marry him to that Young Gentlewoman.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there a Licence?

Parson. Yes; When I saw the Licence I read it, and saw it a true Licence; Then I asked the Gentlewoman her Name, to know whether it was the same that was in the Licence; and found it was the same.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it written in the Licence, that the Marriage was to be performed at the Vine Tavern?

Parson. No my Lord. But a Blank was left.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you take the Queen's Duty?

Parson. No, my Lord, but returned their Names to the Supervisor: My Lord, when I asked her Name, I also asked her whether she was willing to be married. She said she was willing. And another Gentlewoman was with her, that said she was her Sister: I said to her; Madam, if you consent, and your Sister is willing, here is a Licence, for I believe there is no Danger to marry you.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ask her any other way than in your Form, Will you have this Man to your wedded Husband?

Parson. I ask'd her, whether she was willing to marry, she said, Yes, she was willing.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you ask her before you you did the Office?

Parson. Yes, my Lord, I did, and she consented to it.

Counsel. Pray who was the Person that came to the Fleet to you, to carry you to the Tavern; was it the Gentleman at the Bar?

Parson. No, 'twas not him.

Mr. Mountague. How long was it before you went to him, after you went into the Tavern?

Parson. My Clerk and I went in, and sat the drinking a Pint of Wine, about a quarter of an Hour; then we went to the Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you think that they should grant Licences to marry in a Tavern, and out of Canonical Hours?

Parson. I never did it in all my Life before, and never will do it again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Reason why you were conducted into another Room, and not where they were?

Parson. I know not the Reason.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long were you in the Room where they were?

Parson. I cannot well tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you Marry them as soon as you came in?

Parson. Almost as soon.

Mr. Mountague. Did you ever marry any at a Tavern before?

Parson. No, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Will your Lordship be pleased to hear the Licence read?

L. C. J. Holt. It may be read. You may see the Date and the Names. The Licence is dated Oct. 14. 1702. The Names Haagen Swendsen in the Parish of St. Paul's Shadwel; and Pleasant Rawlins in the Parish of St. Mary Whitechapel.

Council. Is there any Blank left?

Parson. Yes, there is a Blank left, that the Marriage may be in the Parish Church of St. Mary Whitechapel, vel a Blank.

Mr. Mountague. Were you entertained there?

Parson. Before the Marriage the Clerk and I drank a Pint of Wine in the first Room.

Mr. Mountague. Had you any Victuals then?

Parson. Not before they married; but after.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, Sir, did you bespeak a Dinner before the Marriage?

Parson. No, Sir, the Gentleman bespoke a Fowl.

Mr. Dan. Cotchett was called.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire he may be asked whether he heard any Noise, or whether any Violence was offered to the Young Woman?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear any Noise or perceive any Violence offer'd to the Young Woman?

Mr. Cotchett. No, my Lord.

Prisoner. Ask Mrs. Cotchett whether any Noise or Violence was offered to the Young Lady?

L. C. J. Holt. I'll ask her that Question: Was there any Noise, or Violence used to the Young Lady?

Mrs. Cotchett. No, my Lord, there was no Noise; they came in and asked for a Room, and I shewed them a lower Room, but they would not have that, but went up. Soon after Mr. Holt the Vintner came down and went out, and Mr. Hartwell call'd for a Pint of Wine for the Coachman, but the Drawer grumb'd at it, and said he did not know who'd pay for't. Then Mr. Hartwell the Bailiff told me it was an Arrest, and that the Parson was to be Bail for the Lady, and at that I very much wondered; and afterwards they told me there was a Wedding above, which we admired at, that there should be a Wedding and Bailiffs: And after all was over, the Gentleman and the Lady went out at the Back-Door, and took Coach.

Prisoner. Did you see Mrs. Swendsen Discontented when she went out?

Mrs. Cotchett. No, my Lord, she seemed not Discontented: What I know I'll speak, an no more.

Walker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What Place?

Walker. In the Bar, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you keep the Bar?

Walker. No, my Lord; but I was washing the Bar at that time.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear any Noise?

Walker. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear of a Wedding?

Walker. Yes, my Lord.

Prisoner. My Lord, Will you be pleas'd to ask her, if she was not had before the Recorder, and promis'd a Reward if she would say any thing for their Service.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you say to this?

Walker. My Lord, only this, That if I knew any thing, and discover'd it, I should be satisfied for my Trouble.

L. C. J. Holt. Were you sent up Stairs to the Gentlefolks to receive Directions for the Supper?

Walker. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When you came up into the Room, what Condition was the Young Gentlewoman in?

Walker. She sat at one End of the Room, and seemed to be very Melancholy.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How did she look when she went away?

Walker. Not Melancholy then. When Orders were given about the Supper, I asked her what Sauce she would have; she said she would eat nothing at all.

Mr. Blake's Daughter being called.

Prisoner. Ask what she knew of my Wife?

Blake. My Lord, she carried it very well; the Lady was pleased to say that I should wait upon her. I offered to pull off her Shoes and Stockings when she went to Bed, she held out her Legs, and I pull'd off her Shoes and Stockings.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were you present at the beginning, before she began undressing?

Blake. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When she was come in, were you there all the Time?

Blake. No, I run to and fro.

Blake. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Hath she a Husband?

Blake. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you make the Bed in Mr. Swendsen's Chamber?

Mr.

Blake. Yes, my Lord, I made it where he lay, I saw nothing.

L. C. J. Holt. How long was it after from the Time they came, to the Time they went to Bed?

Blake. I know not, they came into the House just about Dinner?

L. C. J. Holt. What time was it?

Blake. About three or four a-Clock in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. Holt. How long was it after they came, before they went to Bed?

Blake. About two Hours, or thereabout.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you think that 5 or 6 a-Clock was a fit time to go to Bed?

Blake. I knew not what was betwixt them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Is it usual to go to Bed at that time at your House?

Blake. No; I did not know what was betwixt them.

Mr. Mountague. What time did they rise again?

Blake. About 7-Clock.

Mr. Mountague. Did they lie at your House that Night?

Blake. No; they did not.

L. C. J. Holt. When did they go away?

Blake. They went away as soon as Supper was done.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire she may be asked whether my Wife was Sorrowful or Discontented, or unwilling to go to Bed.

L. C. J. Holt. What time was it they went to Bed?

Blake. About Four a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know what the Design was?

Blake. No, my Lord, I did not know any other-wise than as Mr. Swendsen told me the Young Lady was his Wife.

L. C. J. Holt. What time did they rise again?

Blake. About two Hours, they rose up and got to Supper.

Judge Powis. What time did they go from your House?

Blake. Between Eight and Nine a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did they go? Do you know where they went?

Blake. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot tell.

Mr. Blake Sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Blake, How long have you known Mrs. Baynton.

Mr. Blake. About 12 Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you ever know that Mrs. Baynton had a Husband?

Mr. Blake. I cannot tell, it was reported that she had one.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you ever see Mr. Baynton? Did he own her to be his Wife?

Mr. Blake. My Lord, They did not live with me while he was living.

M. Soll. Gen. How long has he been dead?

Mr. Blake. I don't certainly remember; about three or four Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long is it since Mrs. Baynton lay-in at your House?

Mr. Blake. About four Months ago.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When she was such a Woman as this, and brought a Gentlewoman to your House, and ordered a Bed to be made, how could you admit her into your House again?

Mr. Blake. I did not know that it was any clandestine thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Swendsen?

Prisoner. Let the Constable be call'd for.

L. C. J. Holt. What Questions shall I ask him?

Prisoner. Ask him what it was my Wife said to him?

Constable. My Lord, the Man was in one Room and the Woman in another; when I opened the Door the Gentleman asked her how she did.

L. C. J. Holt. What Gentleman was it?

Constable. It was the Gentleman that gave me the Warrant. He said to her, Are you married? Yes; There is my Husband. She seemed very much satisfied: He said to her, Madam, I wish you much Joy, and if you please to go to the Recorder's, there is your Guardian to approve of what you have done: But when she was dress'd, she would go to the next Justice of the Peace: They could not agree about going, but they drank each of them a Glass of Wine and went away. The Gentleman that brought me the Warrant was also with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Are they here?

Constable. The Warrant was to take up the Bailiffs and all together.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Constable. In Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

L. C. J. Holt. In what House did you see them?

Constable. 'Twas in Red-Lyon-street, over-against the Red-Lyon-Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. About what time of the Night was it?

Constable. About Seven a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. What Night was it?

Constable. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot tell.

Mr. Mountague. Whose House was it? Was it Blake's House?

Constable. Yes, it was so.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is your Warrant?

Constable. They took it away from me.

L. C. J. Holt. But you ought not to have parted from your Warrant.

Constable. The Men were not there that the Warrant run for.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not the Warrant against Mr. Swendsen?

Constable. The Warrant was for such Men as took the Young Gentlewoman away. I cannot tell whether his Name was there or no.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins what were those Men who came along with the Constable; were they your Friends?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord, they were my Friends.

L. C. J. Holt. What is this Geary?

Mrs. Rawlins. He is an Acquaintance of Madam Busby's?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you say you consented to the Marriage before them?

Mrs. Rawlins. If I did, I did not know what I said.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire she may be asked what she said to the Constable.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I do not know whether I said such a thing; if I did, I was not in my Senses, I did not know what I said.

Prisoner. My Lord, I hope you will give me leave to speak. She said to the Constable, I am very well content with the Marriage, and this is the Ring that married us.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you to that, Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. I don't know but I might; but I did not know what I said.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you been in Bed then ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, we were in Bed about an Hour.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was there any Threats used by Mrs. Baynton.

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord ; she said that I must own him for my Husband, or else we were all ruined.

Justice Baber called.

Prisoner. My Lord, he is one of the chiefest Witnesses that I have, I desire it may be asked him, what my Wife declared to him of her own accord.

J. Baber. My Lord, I think it was Friday Night, the 6th of this Month, the Prisoner here at the Bar, and I suppose that may be the Gentlewoman too [pointing to her] and another Gentlewoman and a Woman came to me to my House in York-Buildings, and desired me, but the Prisoner in particular, that I would administer a voluntary Oath to the young Lady, which she was willing to take, that she was married to this Gentleman. I told him that I had nothing to do to confirm Marriages, and told them I was loth to meddle with it.

L. C. J. Holt. How came they to you ? Had they any Officers ?

J. Baber. No, my Lord, they came in a Coach without any Officer.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there any Oath taken ?

J. Baber. No, my Lord.

Council. What was the Reason that you did not tender the Oath.

J. Baber. Because I thought I had nothing to do with it.

Council. What sort of Frame was the young Woman in ?

J. Baber. In very great Disorder ; not like a Gentlewoman, but in a very confused Condition : She spoke what she said by her own Consent ; but with much Disorder.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire it may be asked Justice Baber, whether I desired him to tender the Oath to my Wife.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Mr. Swendsen desire you to tender the Oath ?

J. Baber. He did put me upon it at first.

Prisoner. I ne'er did so in all my Life.

Mr. Bulkley called.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire this Man may be heard.

Mr. Bulkley. This Gentleman, on the 7th of November, in the Forenoon, stopped at the Porch of my Door, and gave me Orders to wait upon him, upon the Business of my Calling.

L. C. J. Holt. What is your Calling ?

Mr. Bulkley. A Barber. He told me that he was married. I asked him, What are you married ? Yes, said he, I am ; and here's my Wife ; and the Gentlewoman she said so too. At that, I wished them much Joy and Happiness. The young Woman said, She did not question it, since what she had done, was with her own voluntary Consent.

Mr. Hudson called.

Prisoner. What did you hear my Wife say ?

Mr. Hudson. When Mr. Swendsen, with his Wife, came to our House, (my Lord) he bid her take Mr. Blake by the Hand and ask him how he does. She said, Yes, my Dear. She went into the House and took my Master by the Hand, ask'd him how he did. Mr. Swendsen said, This is my dear Wife ; and she said, This is my dear Husband, and took him about the Neck and kissed him.

L. C. J. Holt. What Trade are you ?

Mr. Hudson. An Upholsterer ; Mr. Blake is my Master.

L. C. J. Holt. You say the young Woman took Mr. Blake by the Hand, and said, How do you do ? Did she ever see Mr. Blake before ?

Mr. Hudson. Not that I know of. But Mr. Swendsen said, This is my dear Wife.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When was this ?

Mr. Hudson. On Saturday Morning.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If they lay there over-night, what Necessity was there for Swendsen to tell Mr. Blake that was his dear Wife.

Mr. Hudson. He did not say so to him, but to his Wife ; and she kissed him.

Mr. Mountague. What need he to tell Mr. Blake that was his Wife, when he knew it before ?

Mr. Hudson. Why may not I, if I had a Wife, come to her and say, My dear Wife ?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Blake, Pray was Mrs. Rawlins at your House before then ?

Mr. Blake. Never, as I know of.

Mr. Green called.

Prisoner. I desire that this Man be asked what he heard my Wife say before the Recorder ?

L. C. J. Holt. What did you hear the young Woman say before the Recorder ?

Mr. Green. She owned that she was married to the Gentleman, by her own Consent, without any Force or Compulsion.

L. C. J. Holt. Did she marry him willingly ?

Mr. Green. Yes, my Lord, she said so.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire he may tell how she behaved herself there.

L. C. J. Holt. What said she ?

Mr. Green. She said she was married to that Gentleman without Force or Compulsion.

Council. Did she say nothing else ?

Mr. Green. This is all that I remember.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did the Gentlewoman continue in that Tone all the Time she was at the Recorder's ?

Mr. Green. No, I believe she did not.

L. C. J. Holt. Was the Recorder by then ?

Mr. Green. Yes, the Recorder was by. Then he asked her whether she was married by her own Consent.

L. C. J. Holt. What did the Recorder say more ?

Mr. Green. He said, he was afraid she was drawn in by this Man, who he feared was a Spark and Bully of the Town.

Council. Pray, when she said she was married by her own Consent, had Mr. Swendsen her Hand in his ?

Mr. Green. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Then I ask you whether Swendsen was afterwards withdrawn ?

Mr. Green. He was so.

L. C. J. Holt. And did you hear what she said after that ?

Mr. Green. No, I did not, I was thrust out.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live ?

Mr. Green. I live in Carter-Lane. I belong to the General Post-Office.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to be acquainted with this Matter.

Mr. Green. My Lord, I came into Red-Lion-Street accidentally, two Doors off Mr. Swendsen's : I went to Mr. Swendsen's Lodgings, and asked how he did. I was told he was very well, that he had married a Fortune, and was in Bed with his Lady.

L. C. J. Holt. What was the Man's Name ?

Mr. Green. His Name was Blake, my Lord ; it was a pure accidental Thing to me.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you known Mr. Swendsen?

Mr. Green. I have known him several Years.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you dealt with him?

Mr. Green. Yes, I have; and I believe here are many present, can give a better Account of him than I can.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, what my Wife said to the Recorder.

Mr. Green. My Lord, upon Examination she seemed to be much surprized upon that Occasion, but what she did, she said was voluntarily; and that as he was her Husband, so she would own him; and when she was asked whether she was in Drink; she said she was never given to drinking.

Prisoner. And as I have been represented by some as a Bully of the Town, I desire I may have my Friends heard, as to my Life and Conversation.

One of his Friends called.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Ans. At Ratcliff; my Education has been at Sea. I have been acquainted with Mr. Swendsen two Years, and have found him to be a very honest and ingenious Man.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you any Dealings with him?

Ans. Yes, my Lord, I have dealt with him for 3000 l. and better?

L. C. J. Holt. In what manner did you deal with him?

Ans. I consigned my Effects to him.

L. C. J. Holt. From whence?

Ans. From England to Norway.

L. C. J. Holt. How could they be consigned to him when he was here?

Ans. He was not here then, but at Norway. In May 1701. he came over, and had a Ship of mine, called the Swan, and sold her for my Account.

Coun. Did you apprehend that he traded for himself, or as a Factor?

Ans. He traded for himself; and I can shew you the Bills of Lading that will shew they were for his Account: And I believe all that knew him, will give him the Character of an honest Man.

Mr. Evans called.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you know of Mr. Swendsen?

Mr. Evans. I was in Norway, and found then that he lived in very good Repute and Credit there among all People, the best of Trading People; and I found he had a familiar Converse with them: I was with him at the Generance and Admirance, which are the chief Offices in the Place: I was by his Letter of Recommendation credited by the most eminent Merchants of Norway. At that Time he had several Ships consigned to him for Lading, at a Time when Goods were difficult to be gotten, and he did load them.

Another Witness called.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you know of Mr. Swendsen?

Ans. My Lord, I was born in Norway, where this Gentleman lived for some Years, and was esteemed worth 10000 Dollars. I have had no great Dealings with him, but when he wanted Money, when Money was short with him, I lent him some, which he paid again very honestly.

Prisoner. Call John Shorey.

Shorey. The Knowledge I have had of him was caused by his buying several Parcels of Goods, of me, and order'd them to be shipp'd, and paid me honestly for them.

Another Witness called.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you?

Ans. I have known this Gentleman about two Years: The first of my Knowledge was, I had a Bill of Exchange of 50 l. drawn upon him, which he paid very honestly. I never heard any otherwise, but that he was a very honest, just Man.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I would observe to your Lordship, that the principal Part of our Evidence the Prisoner hath given no Answer to; that is, the Force: If the taking and detaining Mrs. Rawlins was by Force, as several of our Witnesses have testified: And if she married while she was under that Force, no subsequent Act or Consent of hers can lessen the Offence, if the Jury could give Credit to the Prisoner's Evidence, and believe her Consent was real. The Gentlewoman did herself confess, that after she had been hurried from Tavern to Tavern, she did declare he was her Husband, and that she consented to the Marriage; but what afterwards happen'd, plainly shews that it was through Fear and nothing else: Had she really consented to the Marriage, why was she carried to the Justice of Peace to take an Oath, that she was married by her own voluntary Consent? Whilst the Prisoner held her by the Hand before the Recorder, she confessed that she married with her free Consent: As soon as the Prisoner was withdrawn, she burst out into a Flood of Tears, and confessed that she was married by Constraint. My Lord, there is but one thing more I would answer, and that is the Licence which was given in Evidence to give Colour to this Marriage; but this plainly shews, that this whole Management was the Prisoner's contriving. The Licence bears Date three Weeks before the Time of the Marriage, which shews how long they had waited for an Opportunity to accomplish this Design. When the Prisoner took out this Licence he swore her Age to be 25, and his to be 35.

My Lord, now we will examine some Witnesses to these Facts, and so we'll have done. She was carried to Justice Baber to take a voluntary Oath. If your Lordship pleases he may again be called: We will examine him upon Oath.

Justice Baber called.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, Sir, give an Account of the whole Matter.

J. Baber. They came to me about 8 or 9 a-Clock on Friday Night the 6th of this Month; and the Prisoner here told me the Purport of his coming, that it was a light and short Business; and pointing to the Gentlewoman, said, that she came to take a voluntary Oath, that she was married to him with her own Consent; she said she was married, and that with her Consent. I told her, I had nothing to do with confirming Marriages. He told me, amongst other Things, that he had a Certificate. You know that best, said I; a Marriage is a Marriage, and I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But when she told you that she was married, what Condition was she in?

J. Baber. She was in a very great Disorder.

Another Witness.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was you before the Recorder?

Witness. Yes, on Saturday the 7th of this November. While Mr. Swendsen held her by the Hand she owned the Marriage; but when he was withdrawn she threw herself upon me, and desired me to stand by her, or she was undone.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Account did she give when Mr. Swendsen was withdrawn?

Ans. She spoke much to the same Purpose as she she has done here ; and that what she had done was all by Force, and out of Fear.

Mr. Taylor call'd and sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know any Oath the Party took, in the taking of this Licence ?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How old did he say the Gentlewoman was ?

Mr. Taylor. He said that she was 25, and that he was 35 Years old.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Are you sure he took the Oath ?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord, there is the Surrogate's Hand, and the Prisoner's own Hand to it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were you present ?

Mr. Taylor. No, I was not, but my Clerk was.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, there's his Hand to it, and we can prove his Hand.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord it is an Act of the Court.

Coun. My Lord, I hope that may be of the same Force as a Deposition in Chancery.

L. C. J. Holt. It cannot be read as Evidence. Mr. Taylor, did he ever take a Licence at any other Time ?

Mr. Taylor. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was the Licence dated that Day he took it ?

Mr. Taylor. It is always dated the same Day it is taken.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I desire Mrs. Busby may be asked, whether she talked at the Picture-Drawer's about any Thing of Love, or no ? Mrs. Busby, the Question is, Whether or no you talked any Thing about Love at the Picture-Drawer's ?

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, Mrs. Baynton desired me to go with her to the Picture-Drawer's to see her Picture drawn ; we were talking by the Fire-side that Mrs. Rawlins had spoke by way of Discouragement to Mr. Pugh ; Mrs. Baynton said that she thought her Brother would make her a very good Husband, and was able to make her a considerable Jointure here in England. My Lord, Mr. Pugh came, by the Consent of Friends, on honourable Terms.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, This Prisoner is indicted for Felony, in taking away by Force Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, and marrying of her ; this is Felony by the Statute of the Third of Henry VII. which enacts, " That if any Person shall " take any Woman that hath any Substance in " Goods or Land, against her Consent, and marry " or defile her, he and his Procurers and Receivers, " shall be adjudged to be Felons.

Now it hath been proved to you, that this young Woman had a Personal Estate left her by her Father, to the Value of 2000 l. and had another Estate in Land, to the Value of 20 l. per Annum. If any one shall take her away by Force, and marry her, he is guilty of Felony by that Statute. You have heard that she was placed by her Guardian, under the Tuition of Mrs. Busby, who took a Lodging about 3 Years last past, at one Mrs. Nightingale's, in Stretton-Grounds, Westminster ; and boarded with her, who took Boarders into her House ; and if any Friend of her Boarders came to Dinner there, she receiv'd 12 d. per Head: About 3 Weeks or a Month before Michaelmas last past, there came one Mrs. St. John, and recommended to her a Lodger of her Acquaintance, and desired that she might board with her as others did, and said she was a Widow that came out of the Country about a Suit of Law, and represented her to be a sober Person. Mrs.

Nightingale refused her at that Time, and heard no more of her till about 3 Weeks after ; then she, Mrs. St. John, returns and prevails with Mrs. Nightingale, to take her Acquaintance into her House. Mrs. Baynton that is mentioned in the Indictment, was the Person designed by Mrs. St. John ; and she came to Mrs. Nightingale, and desired to be with her as other Boarders were ; she pretended to be of very good Quality, so she was taken into the House ; her Carriage and Demeanor there were very civil, and she pretended she had a Brother, that would come to see her : The Prisoner at the Bar was the Person that came, and she call'd him Brother, and owned him for such ; he dined there several Times with the rest of the Boarders ; he said, He had an Interest in Shipping, and invited all the Family to go on Board a Ship. They accepted of his Invitation, and were very well entertained, but suspected nothing ; but at length it was observed there was too great a Familiarity between Mrs. Baynton and the Prisoner, more than was common betwixt so near Relations ; they afterwards perceived that Mrs. Baynton was inclinable to drink, which caused some Jealousy of her in the Family, and she perceiving the Strangeness of the Family, gave Mrs. Nightingale notice that she should go in a short Time, for that she had finished her Business at Law, and that the Town was chargeable, and she intended to be gone at such a Time. When that Time was expired, she pretended to Mrs. Nightingale that there was another Thing had happen'd that would detain her a Week longer : She consented that she should stay. Now you may observe by the Evidence, that it was usual for Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins to go to Oxendon Chapel on Friday ; which Mrs. Baynton very well knew, and pretends that she was to go in a Coach that way into Golden-Square, and invites them to go in her Coach, and promised to set them down by the Chapel : They accepting the Invitation, and being come near the Place, the Coach was stopped by several Men. Hartwell the Bailiff opened the Door, got into the Coach, said it was an Arrest. At which Mrs. Busby was very much concerned, and thought this Arrest was for Mrs. Baynton, and that she and Mrs. Rawlins might go out, for they were not concerned in the Matter. At last they perceived it was of themselves ; and then Mrs. Baynton pretended to be concerned for them : And when the People in the Street asked what was the Cause of the Disorder ; the Bailiffs said, that they were Cheats and Trading-Women that owed People Money, and now they are Arrested for it. Under this pretended Arrest, they were carried to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, and put into a Back-Room. They were in a great Consternation at their being Arrested, being not conscious to themselves that they owed Money to any Person. One came to Mrs. Busby, and said, See that your Name be right, that you are rightly Arrested. Another of the Bailiffs, by Force, carry'd away Mrs. Rawlins, saying, she was his Prisoner ; and it was pretended, that one Bailiff had a Process to carry the one to Newgate, and another had another Process to take the other to the Marshalsea. Mrs. Rawlins was carried to Hartwell's House. When she was there, Mrs. Baynton pretended that coming by accidentally, she heard her Voice, and came in, and seem'd to pity her, and said, Madam, will none of your Friends help you ? She proposes her Brother to be Bail, and Holt he was to be the other. Under that Pretence of being bailed, they carry her to the Vine Tavern in Holbourn, where Hartwell pretended tended to be very willing to take his Bail, and said he knew Holt, but questioned the Prisoner. It will appear to you from this Evidence, and that which follows, of this Force and Contrivance, that their Design was to bring about the Marriage; for when the Bail was pretended to be refused, Mrs. Baynton proposes a Marriage between the Prisoner and Mrs. Rawlins, as the best way to make an end of this troublesome Business: She would have the Ring from her Finger, to get a Wedding-Ring made by it. Says Mrs. Rawlins, I have no mind to be married: Says Mrs. Baynton, it's best for you to be married; and threatened Mrs. Rawlins, that if she did not marry, she should be committed to Newgate. There was a Parson and Clerk ready, who were called to do the Office. The young Woman being under this Terror, the Office of Matrimony was performed; and she was forthwith conveyed to one Blake's, and by Constraint there was put to Bed in the Day-time. You must go to Bed, says Mrs. Baynton: I will not go, says the young Woman: And some Violence was used to force her Cloaths off, and she was put to Bed, where she lay about an Hour or Two, and thereby the Marriage was supposed to be consummated.

The Prisoner, on the next Day, being discoursed with about this Matter, and asked, whether he was Mrs. Baynton's Brother? No indeed, says he; I made use of her as my Tool; she hath done my Job for me; I'll make her Satisfaction for it, not Tomorrow, being Sunday, but on Monday I will do it, and never see her Face more. After all this Evidence, the Prisoner doth insist upon his Innocence, because he was not present at the Arrest; and hath produced several Witnesses to prove, that this young Woman was very well satisfy'd with the Marriage; and that Reverend Divine the Parson asked her, whether she was willing to be married to the Gentleman? And she said she was willing. And then Mr. Blake's Maid and Daughter said, that she desired them to pluck off her Shoes and Stockings, undress her, and put her to Bed. And that very Night the Prisoner and Mrs. Rawlins went to Mr. Baber's, a Justice of the Peace, at Tork-Buildings, to take a voluntary Oath before him, that she married this Prisoner by her own free Consent. Mr. Baber would not Administer the Oath. And that afterward they Bedded together that Night, and the next Day they went abroad together in a Coach; and meeting his Barber, the Prisoner bids him come to him to shave him, and says to him, Here is my Wife; she said likewise, that he was her Husband: He wished her much Joy; she reply'd, that she did not question it, seeing that what she had done was by her free and full Consent; and declared, she was well satisfied with what was done. The next Proof is of their Return to Blake's House, where they first lodged; the Prisoner Swendsen orders his Wife to take Mr. Blake by the Hand, and ask him how he did? Which she did, and expressed to him how well she was pleased with the Marriage, saying, This is my dear Husband, and kissed him. His Witness tells you, on Friday Night a Constable comes with the Recorder's Warrant, to apprehend the Persons supposed to have committed this Force; and discoursing with her, she expressed her self very well satisfied with her Marriage, so that they desisted from serving the Warrant. Then he relies upon his Reputation, as being a Man of great Credit, and having had Goods consigned to him, and paid Bills of Exchange; and produces Witnesses to prove, that he was a Trader in Norway, where he lived, and in good Credit, remitted Money, drew and paid Bills of Exchange, freighted Ships, &c. and was in very good Esteem by the chiefest in those Parts. Then he called other Witnesses, to let you know how the young Woman carried it at the Recorder's; that there she said, that she was married by her own free Consent, &c. Gentlemen, this is the Sum of the Evidence that he hath given. To which it is replied, That as to what was said before the Recorder, that is true; so long as he had her Hand in his, she declared her Consent to, and Satisfaction in the Marriage; but when he was withdrawn, and she was examined by her self, she declared her Marriage was by Violence and Force, that she did it out of Fear, &c. Then they tell you again, of a Licence that was taken out by him, and produced by him, but bore Date almost Three Weeks before this Marriage was accomplish'd: It was observ'd also upon the Licence, that this Licence was to marry Mrs. Rawlins of the Parish of St. Mary White Chapel, when she lived not there.

This is the Sum of the Evidence on both Sides, and these Observations are to be made from it:

I. You are to know, That if she be taken away by Force, and afterwards married, tho' by her Consent, yet is he guilty of Felony: For it is the taking away by Force that makes the Crime, if there be a Marriage, tho' by her Consent.

II. In the next place it is to be observed, That she was taken away by Force, and a Stratagem was used to give an Opportunity thereunto, and the Arrest was but a Colour.

III. You may consider upon the Evidence, how far the Prisoner was concerned in the first Force: It is true, he was not at the Arrest, and did not appear until she was brought to Hartwell's House; and under that Pretence of Bailing her, she was carried to the Vine Tavern, where there was a Parson ready, and the Marriage was had in such manner as you have heard. Now, considering these Matters, it is left to you to determine, whether the Marriage was not the End of the Arrest? And if so, how it would be possible for such a Force to be committed to effect the Prisoner's Design, and he not be privy to it?

IV. If it can be imagined, that he was not privy to the colourable Arrest, yet she was under a Force when he came to her at Hartwell's House; and from thence she was carried by Force unto the Vine Tavern, where she was married. That is a forcible taking by him at Hartwell's House; and tho' when she was at the Vine Tavern she did express her Consent to be married, yet it appears even then she was under a Force, and had no Power to help her self. Her Marriage was by Force, when she was carried to Blake's, and put to Bed; all this was Force: Nay, when she was carry'd to the Justice of Peace, even then she was under a Force; and all that she said was not freely, but out of Fear: Such a Force would avoid any Bond, for she was under Imprisonment. But however, if the first taking was by Force, and she had consented to the Marriage, the Offence is the same, it is Felony.

And as to his Reputation, it is possible he might have been an honest Man: A Man is not born a Knave, there must be Time to make him so, nor is he presently discovered after he becomes one. A Man may be reputed an able Man this Year, and yet be a Beggar the next: It is a Misfortune that happens to many Men, and his former Reputation will signify nify nothing to him upon this Occasion. If you be satisfied upon the Evidence, that he is guilty of this Crime, you are to find him so; if not, you ought to acquit him.

Mr. Swendsen. I desire, my Lord, that my Wife may be asked, Whether she did not, upon her Knees, swear, she went away from me as a good a Maid as she came to me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Question need not be ask'd, since the Marriage is so plainly proved, which is sufficient to bring you within the Statute.

The Jury desire the Act may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Let it be read. It was so.

The Jury ask Mrs. Rawlins, how old she is?

Mrs. Rawlins. Eighteen at Candlemas.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you ask any Questions upon this Act?

Jury. No, my Lord.

Then the Jury went out, and after three Hours stay, brought him in Guilty.

He was sentenced afterwards along with Sarah Baynton.

CLXXVI. The Trials of SARAH BAYNTON, JOHN HARTWELL, and JOHN SPURR, at the Queen's-Bench, for forceably taking away Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, and procuring her to be married to Haagen Swendsen, Nov. 25. 1702. Mich. 1 Ann.

 Motion was made by the Queen's Council, for putting off this Trial to Friday, November the 27th, but his Lordship would not grant it, but ordered it to begin presently.

The Prisoners were call'd to the Bar, and a Proclamation made for all concern'd to attend.

The Jury were sworn, whose Names are, viz.

Robert Lympny, Gent.

Richard Bealing, Gent.
Charles Murry, Gent.
John Cannon, Gent.

Giles Ridle, Gent.

Clerk of the Ar. Sarah Baynton, John Hartwell, and John Spurr, hold up your Hands. [Which they did.] Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hear their Charge. Then the Indictment was read as in the first Trial: Upon which they were Arraigned, and plead not Guilty.

* Sir Simon Harcourt. Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: The Prisoners at the Bar, together with one Swendsen, stand indicted before you for a very great Offence; Swendsen (for whose Sake this Felony was committed, for which the Prisoners are now to answer) has already had his Trial: The Three Prisoners at the Bar were his Accomplices. The Law, to shew how odious such Offences are, and to deter all Persons whatsoever from committing them, has made no Distinction between the Principal and Accessories: The Abettors, Procurers, or Contrivers, are declared and enacted to be, and to be judged as principal Felons. The Gentlewoman mentioned in the Indictment, Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, was the Daughter of Mr. William Rawlins, who left her a good Fortune: Her Grandfather likewise left her an Estate of Inheritance. Her Father being dead, her Guardian, Mr. Busby, placed her under the Care of his Sister, who boarded with her at one Mrs. Nightingale's. Mrs. Baynton (one of the Prisoners at the Bar) and Mr. Swendsen lodged at Mr. Blake's, where they projected what was afterwards put in practice. Lodgings were to be taken for Mrs. Baynton at Mrs. Nightingale's. In order thereunto, 'twas pretended, That she was a Country Gentlewoman who came to Town about a Law-Suit, and being very tender of her Reputation, would board in a sober Family. By these Insinuations, Lodgings were taken for her at Mrs. Nightingale's, where in a little Time she got acquainted with the Family; and in Conversation, as often as 'twas possible, would take some Opportunity to discourse of her own Affairs, particularly of her Relations, of her dear Brother Swendsen, who was never mention'd without many Commendations. Mr. Swendsen, tho' no ways related to her, often visited her under that Character: But Mrs. Baynton having lived a very scandalous lewd Life in Town, could not long continue under the Disguise she came in to Mrs. Nightingale's. Intimation was given to the Family of her true Character, and Notice thereof was soon given to her by her Maid. Whereupon she resolved to quit her Lodging; and being past all Hopes of betraying Mrs. Rawlins, and wheedling her into her Ruin with her Consent, she enters upon another Project, which was to bring about the Marriage by Force and Violence.

VOL. V.

In this Contrivance, you will find every one of the Prisoners at the Bar had their several Parts to act; Hartwell was to get a Writ, Mrs. Baynton, who could not be concerned in the Execution of the Writ, was to contrive when and in what manner it might be executed: Hartwell sues forth the Writ, and Mrs. Baynton appoints the Time. She knowing it to be the usual Custom for Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins to go to Church on Friday Mornings, she prepares a Coach, and proffers her Service to set them down at the Chapel, and prevail'd with them to come into the Coach. As they were going toward the Chapel, Hartwell the Bailiff stops the Coach, and gets into it; and Spurr conducts the Coach to a House that they had prepared for their Purpose. When Hartwell got into the Coach, Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Busby, not imagining themselves to be concerned, desired him to let them go out; No, says Hartwell to Mrs. Busby, it is you that I am concerned with; let you and I have a few Words together, gether, and all Things will be set to rights. But Mrs. Busby refusing to have any Discourse with him, away they were all carry'd (Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton) to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. While Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins were kept together, they had no Hopes of making Mrs. Rawlins marry; and therefore Hartwell by Force takes away Mrs. Rawlins, and carries her to his own House: Spurr, who had no Process whatsoever against Mrs. Busby, yet keeps her Prisoner at the Star and Garter. Mrs. Baynton seeing her Friends used in this manner, pretended a very great Concern, and out of Kindness went to find their Friends to bail them. Mrs. Rawlins had not been long at Hartwell's before Mrs. Baynton came into the House to her, in a great Surprise to find her there, telling her she fancied, as she passed by Hartwell's House, she heard Mrs. Rawlins's Name mentioned: Immediately she gave her a very melancholy Account, how she had been in Search for her Friends; but none could be found, and to Goal she must go, except Bail could be got. At last she thought of her Brother, she was sure he would be her Bail; and having placed him hard by, she brings him to Hartwell's. When he comes there, all Three of them (Hartwell, Mrs. Baynton, and Mr. Swendsen) under Pretence of setting Mrs. Rawlins at Liberty, take her to another Tavern, where she was plainly told, she must marry Mr. Swendsen, or go to Newgate, and undergo the Miseries of a Goal: If she married, then all should be well. The Circumstances of the Taking, Detaining, and Marrying this Gentlewoman at that Tavern, and of the several Facts I have mentioned, our Witnesses will prove to you.

Mr. Busby sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. I pray give his Lordship an Account of this young Gentlewoman, Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins.

Mr. Busby. My Lord, her Father, Mr. William Rawlins, was a Man of very good Estate: He ordered his Estate to be sold to pay his Debts and Legacies, and the Overplus was given to his Daughter this young Gentlewoman, which was about 2000 l. Her Grandfather likewise by Will left her an Estate of 20 l. per Annum.

Mrs. Nightingale sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Nightingale, pray give an Account to his Lordship, how long this Gentlewoman lived in your House.

Mrs. Nightingale. My Lord, she hath lived with me about three Years; and since Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins came to live with me, my Husband died: I am likewise a Widow too; we all lived together. Mrs. St. John, about nine Weeks before this Fact, came to me, and asked me whether I took Boarders? I said, No, I would take none without it were those Ladies that boarded with me before. She told me, this was a Country-Gentlewoman that was coming to Town about a Suit of Law; she was a very good Woman, and would be near a Church. She told me, that she was a-kin to the Lady Anne Baynton, and a great deal more that I cannot remember: But I told her, I did not design to take Boarders. She came about three Weeks after, and asked me, whether I was in the same Mind? She told me the Gentlewoman was come to Town: She told me she was an extraordinary good Woman, and that her Husband was acquainted with the Family, and gave her an extraordinary Character. She said she would not have parted with her herself, but that she did not take in Boarders, and therefore thought it not worth her while to take her in.

L. C. J. Holt. Did she say, she was her Husband's Acquaintance?

Mrs. Nightingale. She told me, That her Husband was very well acquainted with the Family. She told me, Mrs. Baynton came to Town on Saturday Night, and was very weary with her Journey. She said to me, Madam, if you please she shall come to you, and recommend her self. At length she came, and repeated the same Things, That she was a Country-Gentlewoman, and came up about a Suit of Law, &c. She said, Madam, I understand you are very nice in taking of Boarders, which makes me the willingest to come to board with you. I took her to be a very sober Woman; and seeing it was but for a little while, I agreed with her. She said she would come on Wednesday: The Reason she told me, that she came to Town no sooner, was, because her Maid was sick of a Fever. Mrs. St. John recommended to her a Neighbour's Child, which was a pretty civil Girl; she hired her, which made me still like her the better. On Wednesday, Mrs. Baynton and her Servant came: We were all Widows, and became very familiar in a short Time; for she is a Person of a great deal of Sense, if pleased God to give her Grace. She invited us on Michaelmas-Day, to go on Board of a Norway Ship; she had a Friend there. One of my Friends asked, whether she had any Interest in it? She said, Yes, she had. She likewise said she had a dear Brother come to Town, an extraordinary Christian, that had married her Sister: They strived, she said, who should out-do one another in Affections; and when her Sister was upon her Death-bed, she recommended Mrs. Baynton to be both his Wife and Sister. Mrs. Baynton said, My dear Brother will come To-morrow to see me. Accordingly he came, with two Gentlewomen with him, that we never saw before nor since: Then she sent for a Bottle of Claret, and desired us to drink, which we did, with them. Then she took Occasion to praise the Family she was in: She invited her Brother to live in the same Street near to her, seeing he had but a pining Stomach; and said, she believed he would like their Victuals. He declined that, saying, it was out of the way for his Business, being obliged to be every Day at 'Change. Then she asked me, what I would have a Meal, if he should come at any Time to see her? I told her 12 d. for a Dinner; for so I had of the young Ladies Friends that came to see them.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Pray, how did the Country-Gentlewoman behave her self?

Mrs. Nightingale. She seem'd to be very modest, but shew'd abundance of Love to her Brother.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. In her Behaviour?

Mrs. Nightingale. Very well, below Stairs; but the Maid said she would swear above.

Council. How oft did he dine there?

Mrs. Nightingale. Nine or ten Times.

Council. You say he dined nine or ten Times at your House, did you discern that there was any thing of Love betwixt him and Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Nightingale. No body in the House discerned that there was.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Were they observed at any Time to be alone?

Mrs. Nightingale. No, Sir, they were never alone that I know of.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Had you any mistrust of Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, Sir; she came twice Home elevated with Drink, and we began to suspect there was something between her and her Brother that was was not usual. My Lord, her Servant took notice, that we carried it with Strangeness towards her Mistress; inasmuch that she said to her Mistress, Do you not discern the Family to be strange? Ay, Betty (said she) but I do not care; if they rouse me, they'll find me like a Lion: Or to that Effect.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did Mrs. Baynton discern that you knew that she said so?

Mrs. Nightingale. No, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you express any Dislike of her?

Mrs. Nightingale. No, Sir, not to her; tho' I discovered my Dislike of her to several of the Family, telling them, I designed to give her Warning when her Month was up. But before that, she came to me and paid me, as her Custom was, for a Week. She told me she had received a Letter from her Friends, That the Trustees had made up the Business; and the City being chargeable, she designed to return into the Country. I went to my Mother in another Room, and expressed to her, with a great deal of Joy, the Warning she had given me. When her Time was expired, she came to me again, and said, There was a Fellow would cheat her in Town, and that she must take out a Statute of Bankrupt against him, which would detain her a Week longer; and upon her D-fire, because I would part friendly, I consented to her staying a Week longer.

L. C. J. Holt. Speaking to the Prisoner Baynton, said, She might ask Questions.

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord. Mrs. Nightingale, when I went into your House there was no such Character of me, as you speak of; but you invited me; and I said, That if I should be troublesome, I would not come.

L. C. J. Holt. She liked you well by the Character that was given you by Mrs. St. John, but afterwards she had no such good Thoughts of you.

Mrs. Baynton. If they did not like me, my Lord, they might have given me Warning; but instead of that, when I gave her Warning, she seemed to be sorry.

L. C. J. Holt. She was glad of the Opportunity of your giving her Warning.

Mrs. Baynton. You were pleas'd, Mrs. Nightingale, to speak of going aboard of Ship, it was after Mr. Swendsen had been there a second Time: When he came to your House, you said you loved Punch entirely; and I said, If you please, Madam, Mr. Swendsen shall make a Bowl; and this was before our going on Board.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mr. Swendsen aboard the Ship?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, he was; but I knew not of his being there.

Mrs. Busby sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Come Mrs. Busby, give an Account to my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury what you know of this Matter.

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, I know Mrs. Nightingale told me that Mrs. St. John came to take Lodgings for Mrs. Baynton, according as Mrs. Nightingale expressed her self; and I was a little curious in enquiring what she was, and begged her Pardon for asking so many Questions about her.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. After she had been there, how did she carry her self?

Mrs. Busby. At Michaelmas-Day, at Night, she came up very brisk, and said she had heard from her dear Brother, and fell a praising him, and said how happy she was in him; and that her Sister, upon her Death-bed, said that she should be both Wife and Sister to him; She said likewise, that she had been a Widow 4 Years, and that she would never marry for the Love she had to her Brother.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Pray give an Account, Mrs. Busby, whether there was any Talk in the Family of this Woman's leaving the Family?

Mrs. Busby. Sir, as to her leaving the House, we were informed that she was not what we took her to be; and Mrs. Nightingale and I were very uneasy; at which Mrs. Nightingale design'd to warn her away.

Council. Mrs. Busby, Pray give an Account of your going in the Coach with her.

Mrs. Busby. On Friday Morning, the 6th of this Month, Mrs. Baynton said she was going to have her Lac'd-Head washed; she sent her Maid for a Coach, and said she would set us down near the Chapel. After she had invited me, and I saw the Coach, I did not know how to evade it well, but accepted of her Civility. She bid the Coach stop at Hedge-Lane, and said we should be as near to the Chapel, as she went to the Place whither she was going. When we came to the old Buildings, I was looking out at them, and on the contrary Side I heard a Bustle, Mrs. Baynton called to the Coach to go on, and presently Hartwell was in the Coach, with his Arm about Mrs. Rawlins's Waist. I did think Mrs. Baynton was arrested, I cry'd out for God's Sake let us alone, we are not concern'd. Hartwell pull'd up the Glass, and said we were the Persons concerned. She (pointing to Hartwell at the Bar) said, This is the Man, and he himself own'd it before the Recorder, that he told me 'twas the young Lady and I was concerned; says he, Let me have a few Words with you, and all will be well. I said, To be sure I will not say any thing to you except my Friends were near. This Lady, Mrs. Baynton, said, No Madam, be sure do not; she advised me not to be frightned, for such a Case once happen'd to her with her Niece. I asked Hartwell what he would do with us? He said he would carry us to a Place where we might send for our Friends, and make up the Business. Mrs. Baynton seemed to take my part, and said she would go to my Friends; and such Discourse as this held till we came to the Star and Garter Tavern.

Council. Mrs. She pretended to be your Friend?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir, she argued with the Bailiff and said, may I not go where I will? And seemed to be very angry with him. Mr. Hartwell also seemed to be very angry with her, and call'd her Mrs. Pert, saying; if she were Civil, she should have the more Respect.

Council. Whom did he call Mrs. Pert?

Mrs. Busby. He called Mrs. Baynton so. Then they carried us to Drury-Lane, and she advised us to put on our Masks upon our Faces: I thought to do it, but afterwards recalling my self, and thinking I had done nothing amiss, I would not. They conducted us to the Tavern and put us into a back Room, and Mrs. Baynton hastened out of the Room as if she would go for some of my Friends, as she said she would: I directed her to Mr. Thorntons and another; which she said she went to. The Room where we were was very dark, so we pressed into a forward one: We were in a very great Fright, inasmuch, that I said to Mrs. Rawlins, We'll live and die together, and then she took me hold by my Arm. Hartwell seeing that, took her from me by Force, and said she must go with him. I understood she was arrested in one Court, and I in another; She must go to the Marshalsea, and I to Newgate. Then they hurried her down Stairs out at a back Door into a Coach: I cry'd out Murder out of the Window, and said, For God's Sake take care of the young Woman, for I know not where they are carrying her. After this, Mr. Spurr said to me, What have you got by Bawling? We are better known here than you. My Fright was very great, and I was very much surprized: There was a Man left with me, I made my Complaint for Friends to be sent for. Says I to him: Is it Treason or Felony? He told me he did not know, he was only hired for a Crown to keep me: I desired that the Gentlewoman of the House might come up to me; it was about 12 a-Clock, and at last she did. And Mr. Wakeman came up, and said, Madam, Why do you not Eat and Drink? He said the young Gentlewoman was well, and did both. Said the Woman of the House to me, Do not you owe Money? I said, No. Nor the young Lady neither? I answered, None that we should be Arrested for. When this Mr. Wakeman was here, said the Gentlewoman of the House to me, Why do you not enquire into the Cause of Action? Wakeman told me, that there was a Writ against Sabina Busby, at the Suit of William Jones, and that William Jones arrested me. Says the Woman of the House, it may be your Name is not right, and so you may be falsely Arrested. I asked whether I might not send for Bail, it being an Action of Debt. It being an Action of Debt, says he, you may; and I will go for you as cheap, and as soon as a Porter. But I saw him no more till Night.

Council. How long did they keep you?

Mrs. Busby. It was betwixt 10 and 11 when they carried me there first, and it was not till near Night that I saw him again.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did he make you give Bail for your Discharge in the Afternoon?

Mrs. Busby. There was a Lad in the Room said, Madam, I will go to some of your Friends for you. I directed him to some of them, and when he came again, he said, they were not at home. There was a poor Man, a Labourer, at work in the Chimney, he gave me a private Wink, and said he would go for me, for he knew Mr. Unkles; he went, and Mr. Unkles came. I likewise sent for Mr. Thornton and another; they all came, and met together. Mr. Thornton demanded on what Account they kept me there? They said they had a Writ against me of 200 l. Then they said they would bail me. They asked them, Where the young Lady was? They told him she was with her Friends. Then, my Lord, after this, the Bailiffs shifted off, and I knew nothing more of it, but went away to get a Warrant to take care of the young Lady.

Council. Had you any manner of Dealings with Mr. Jones?

Mrs. Busby. No manner of Dealings with him in all my Life.

Mr. Mountague. When you came into the Fore-Room, was Hartwell then with you in the Room?

Mrs. Busby. She and I was in a great Fright; several was there, and Hartwell was one of them.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mrs. Baynton there?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How long did she stay?

Mrs. Busby. She went out presently; she told me she would go to some of my Friends; and away she went.

L. C. J. Holt. Did she come again?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see Hartwell there?

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, he was there, and forced the young Lady from me; and Spurr, when I put my Head out of the Window, and cried after her, said to me, What have you got by your Bawling? We are better known here than you.

Mr. Justice Gould. Pray, when was the first Time you took Notice of Spurr?

Mrs. Busby. Sir, the first Time I took particular Notice of him, was, when I put my Head out of the Window; but it seems he hid behind the Coach; he was left with me when Mrs. Rawlins was taken away, and was in the Room when my Friends came; and Mr. Wakeman was there too.

Mr. Justice Powell. I ask you, did your Friends offer Bail?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir, they did.

Mr. Justice Powell. Did any of them require Bail?

Mrs. Busby. My Friend, Mr. Thornton, asked on what Account they kept me? And they said they had an Action of 200 l. against me.

Mr. Hartwell. Was I there then? Did I ever come back after you were there?

Mrs. Busby. I believe you were, but I cannot be positive; but you were in the Coach, and you were the Man that carried away Mrs. Rawlins from me.

Mr. Wakeman called.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Give an Account to my Lord and the Council, of what you are concerned in this Matter.

Mr. Wakeman. If it shall please your Honour, my Lord, Mr. Hartwell came on Wednesday (before this Thing happen'd) to my House, and left Word there, that there was a Writ to be executed, if I would execute it: I was not then at Home, but when I came Home, which was late at Night, my Daughter told me of it. I went to him on Thursday Morning. He said to me, Mr. Wakeman, I have a Writ to be executed, will you do it? I said I would. Then he carried me to Westminster to the Mitre-Tavern, and made no stop nor stay; then he called for a Quart of Ale, and a Quart of White-Wine, and a Toast and Cheese; and when he had eat one Toast, we had another. The Man of the Tavern came in, whose Name was Holt. Mr. Hartwell said to me, We must not do the Business this Morning; it cannot be done, said he: But he appointed me to come on Friday Morning. He ordered me, if I came first, to call for Wine, and the same as we had before. I came first, and called for Wine, Ale, a Toast and Cheese; in the mean Time Mr. Hartwell came in, and eat some with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was the Writ against?

Mr. Wakeman. It was against Madam Rawlins. Mr. Holt went out, and called Mr. Hartwell, and said, the Business would be done that Morning. Then we followed him to Stretton-Ground. Mr. Holt said to Spurr and my self, we had best stand near the Place: He took Mr. Hartwell with him to the Top of the Street, the People gazed at us, and I was ashamed, and went into an Ale-House; a Man came back, and said, The Coach is at the Door; and Mr. Hartwell came and said, the Coach would come by presently; Mr. Hartwell and Spurr went before, and bid me follow the Coach; and coming near the Park, in Westminster, I was behind; Mr. Spurr stopped the Coach. Mr. Spurr stopping the Coach I made up to it; but before I came to it Mr. Hartwell was in the Coach, and what he said to them I do not know.

L. C. J. Holt. Who stopped the Coach?

Mr. Wake-

Mr. Wakeman. Mr. Spurr stopped the Coach, and served the Writ ; it was my Writ. Mr. Hartwell ordered the Coach to drive to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane ; we went all along with it ; and when we came there, they led us to a little Room, and the Gentlewoman did not like it, but went into a forward Room, and this Gentlewoman (pointing to Mrs. Baynton) with her Band-box, was with them.

Council. Who was it ?

Mr. Wakeman. (pointing to Mrs. Baynton at the Bar, said 'twas she) I did not know but she was this Lady's Friend ; I never saw any of them before in all my Life. Mr. Hartwell went down, and Mrs. Baynton ; and I thought she went to fetch Madam Rawlins's Friends. Mr. Hartwell came to the young Lady, and said, You must go to my House. The young Gentlewoman said, O Lord, don't part us. But he did so, and put her into a Coach. I saw the Gentlewoman going, but did not go with her myself, for I was stopped by a Gentleman of my Acquaintance ; but when I came to Mr. Hartwell's House, I said, Mr. Hartwell, Where is the young Gentlewoman ? He told me she was below Stairs. I told him that I had something of Business elsewhere. I asked him, and he gave me Leave to go. I went, and when I returned back to Mr. Hartwell's House, I asked for him, but his Wife told me he was not within. I asked where the young Gentlewoman was ? She answered, that she was gone with her Husband to the Vine-Tavern in Holborn. I went and asked for Mr. Hartwell ; they told me he was above Stairs. I went up, and found him with Mr. Spurr, and a Tallow-Chandler. I should have told you, that when I went from Mr. Hartwell's House about my Errand, I saw Mr. Holt standing near the Back-Door of the Five-Bell Tavern in Witch-street, and he asked me where Mr. Hartwell was ? I told him he was at Home. Then Holt asked for the Woman, I said she was at Hartwell's—Afterwards I saw Mr. Swendsen at the Five-Bells with Holt, and he gave me a full Glass of Claret ; I drank it off, and away I went. When I went to the Vine-Tavern, Mr. Hartwell, Mr. Spurr, and a Tallow-Chandler were in a Room by themselves. I saw that Gentleman (looking out of a Window) that was with Holt ; he looked at me, and I at him. Mr. Hartwell asked me if I had dined ? I told him No. He said there were some Stakes. I dined there ; then the Gentlewoman, viz. Baynton, at last came out of Door and called Mr. Hartwell to her. When Mr. Hartwell came from her, he told me the Matter was made up, and the Prisoner was discharged.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was the Writ against ?

Mr. Wakeman. Mrs. Rawlins.

L. C. J. Holt. When the Prisoner was discharged they gave you the Writ again ?

Mr. Wakeman. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you a Writ against Mrs. Busby ?

Mr. Wakeman. I had none against her.

Council. How far is it from Hartwell's House to the Star and Garter-Tavern ?

Mr. Wakeman. It is about a Furlong.

Council. What was your Writ for ?

Mr. Wakeman. But 20 l.

L. C. J. Holt. And you said you had an Action of 20 l.

Mr. Wakeman. My Lord, Mr. Hartwell said so. I do not know the Woman, but she will be shewed us.

L. C. J. Holt. Look at the Prisoner at the Bar. Was she in the Coach when Mrs. Rawlins was Arrested ?

Mr. Wakeman. Yes, yes. I had no ill Design in what I did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go behind the Coach ?

Mr. Wakeman. Yes, my Lord, I did.

The Writ produced and read in Court.

Mr. Just. Gould. Were you there at the Star and Garter when Mrs. Busby's Friends came to Bail her ?

Mr. Wakeman. When I came to the Star and Garter Tavern, the Gentleman came and asked me, whether I knew where Mrs. Busby was ? I told him I left her at the Vine-Tavern, and believed that there they might find her.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Spurr at the Vine-Tavern any Time ?

Mr. Wakeman. My Lord, I left Spurr, Hartwell, and the Tallow-Chandler at the Vine-Tavern.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Was it Mr. Hartwell or Spurr that asked you to eat Stakes ?

Mr. Wakeman. It was Spurr.

Mrs. Baynton. Mr. Wakeman, Did you ever see me before the Arrest ?

Mr. Wakeman. No, I never saw you before then.

Mrs. Berkley Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Pray look upon this Prisoner, Mrs. Baynton, Do you know her ?

Mrs. Berkley. Yes, Sir, I do know her.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How came you to know her ?

Mrs. Berkley. By her lodging in Mrs. Nightingale's House, and no otherwise.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did you ever hear her speak of a Brother that she had ?

Mrs. Berkley. Yes, Sir, she said this Mr. Swendsen was her Brother.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Rawlins, Are you Sworn ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Stand forward a little. Do you give my Lord an Account of the whole Matter.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, speak the Truth, I desire nothing but Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. You are upon your Oath remember, and therefore speak nothing but the Truth.

Council. Give an Account of your Proceedings in the whole Matter.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Do you know any of the Prisoners at the Bar ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, I know them all, Mrs. Baynton, Mr. Hartwell, and Mr. Spurr.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you know them ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to be acquainted with Mrs. Baynton ?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I came to be acquainted with her by her taking Lodgings at our House. She came and took Lodgings at Mrs. Nightingale's for a Month or Six Weeks. When her Month was out, she said her Business was done, and she must go into the Country.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Give an Account of what happen'd to you on Friday the 6th of November.

Mrs. Rawlins. We were going to Oxendon Chapel, Mrs. Busby and I. Mrs. Baynton told us, she was going that Way, and invited us into her Coach ; she said she would set us down near the Chapel ; we accepted of her Invitation, and went with her. When we were at the Broad Way in Dartmouth-Ground, there was Hartwell, and Two more Bailiffs ; they stopp'd the Coach, and Mr. Hartwell got in. Said Mrs. Busby, to him, For Christ's Sake let us go out we owe no Man any thing. He said the Matter concerned Mrs. Busby and me, and he ordered the Coach to be driven to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane.

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did any Body come into the Coach?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Sir, Mr. Hartwell.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did he do any Thing to the People in the Coach?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Sir, but ordered the Coach to go to the Star and Garier Tavern. When we came there we went up Stairs, and did not stay above a Dozen Minutes in one of the Rooms, but removed from thence to a Room forward: Mrs. Baynton was gone, and Hartwell sent up Spurr.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Mistress, Pray look, Do you see the Man that came up to you?

Mrs. Rawlins. I suppose it was the Man that is next to Mrs. Baynton; if I be not mistaken it is him; I cannot be positive.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Some of them came up to you and said, they must have the young Lady down Stairs?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Sir; and Mrs. Baynton said, Nay. They after that forced me away.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Who was it that did that?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was Mr. Hartwell that did it.

Mr. Hartwell. Who is Mr. Hartwell?

Mrs. Rawlins. Your self, Mr. Hartwell, took me about the Middle, and drove me down Stairs. I cried out Murder, and desired some good Body to go with me; he said, if I did not hold my Tongue he would send me to Newgate that Minute.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Where did he carry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. He carried me from the Star and Garier Tavern to his own House.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Where is his House?

Mrs. Rawlins. In Witch-street.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How long did he keep you there?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not know justly, but I think it was about an Hour.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. What did they do with you there?

Mrs. Rawlins. They put me into a Back Room, there was no Body with me: but at last Mrs. Baynton came in and pretended she was going by and heard my Name, and therefore came in. I was very much frightened. She said she had been at several of my Friends, but could get no Body to come. She told me she would send for her Brother, and he should be Bail for me.

L. C. J. Holt. You say she would send for her Brother to be your Bail?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What followed then?

Mrs. Rawlins. She went for her Brother to come to be my Bail, and it was hardly half a Quarter of an Hour before she came in again with her Brother.

Council. What is her Brother's Name?

Mrs. Rawlins. Swendsen. Mr. Hartwell came into the Room where I was, and said, Is Mrs. Rawlins's Friend come yet? Mrs. Baynton answered, Yes. They had a Coach prepared at the Door, and in that they carried me to the Tavern in Holbourn; there was in the Coach, Mrs. Baynton, her Brother, Mr. Hartwell, and I.

Mr. Mountague. Where did they carry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. To the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn.

Mr. Mountague. What did they do with you then?

Mrs. Rawlins. They carried me up Stairs, put me into a Room, I cannot tell exactly how long I was there.

Mr. Mountague. What did they do then?

Mrs. Rawlins. Then Holt was there to be the other Bail; they were very willing to take his Bail, but were very scrupulous in taking Mr. Swendsen's Bail. They told me, in short, that I must marry Mr. Swendsen, and that would put an End to it, or else I must go to Newgate.

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton said, If I did not marry her Brother, I must go to Newgate. I replied, that I would not marry without my Friends Advice; but I was not so much afraid of going to Newgate, as I was of being murdered, or sent away somewhere into the Country, where I might never see or hear of my Friends.

Council. How did they behave themselves in the Room?

Mrs. Rawlins. They importun'd me to marry Mr. Swendsen, and for that End Mrs. Baynton would have my Ring from my Finger; I would not let her have it, but she forced it away from me. I asked her what she would do with it? She told me, she would go and get a Wedding Ring made by it. She went and bought a Wedding Ring, and gave me my own again: Then the Minister and Clerk was brought into the Room; the Minister and Clerk came in and married Mr. Swendsen and me.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How long did you stay in the Room after you were married?

Mrs. Rawlins. Not a Quarter of an Hour.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was Hartwell?

Mrs. Rawlins. They were in the Room over-against us.

L. C. J. Holt. Who brought the Parson into the Room?

Mrs. Rawlins. Holt brought them in.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did they carry you then?

Mrs. Rawlins. To Mr. Blake's House in Holbourn.

L. C. J. Holt. Who went with you?

Mrs. Rawlins. No body but Mr. Swendsen, Mrs. Baynton, and my self.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they do then?

Mrs. Rawlins. They ordered the sheeting of a Bed, and put me to Bed.

Council. Was there any Compulsion in going to Bed, or did you go voluntarily?

Mrs. Rawlins. I did not go freely, but was forced to Bed; Mrs. Baynton asked me to go to Bed; after which she asked me the Reason why I would not go to Bed? Says I, my Reason is, because I don't care to go to Bed so soon.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Who undressed you?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton and Mr. Blake's Daughter.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How long was you in Bed?

Mrs. Rawlins. About an Hour or Two.

Mr. Mountague. When you went out, had you any Expectation to go any where else but to Church?

Mrs. Rawlins. No where but to Church, upon my Word.

Mr. Mountague. Did you go voluntarily to the Tavern in Drury-Lane, or against your Will?

Mrs. Rawlins. To be sure it was against my Will.

Mr. Hartwell. Did you see me, Madam, at the Vine-Tavern the Time that you were confined there?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see Hartwell at the Vine-Tavern before you were married?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Mr. Hartwell, you may remember that you were once in the Room where I was: I will give you an Instance of it; you were smoking a Pipe of Tobacco; Mrs. Baynton said to you, What would you have with her? You said I was the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they take the Bail that was offered?

Mrs. Rawlins.

Mrs. Rawlins. Mr. Hartwell said, he would consider it with Mrs. Baynton; and they all went out, and left me alone by my self. Mrs. Baynton, after they had consulted together, came in and told me that they refused the Bail.

Mrs. Baynton. When you were left by your self, Mrs. Rawlins, if you had not a mind to marry Mr. Swendsen, why did not you make your Escape.

L. C. J. Holt. Did she come there by her Consent?

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, but when she was left to her self, she might have easily got away.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, You were left alone in the Room, Was there any Proposal of your Marriage to Mr. Swendsen made before that?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, if I may have leave to speak, they contracted Friendship almost a Month before.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. stay your Time. [To Mrs. Rawlins] Consider the Question.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, the Ring was bought before she was left alone, she knows it very well, and was looking upon it when I came into the Room again.

L. C. J. Holt. To Mrs. Rawlins. Had you the Ring before that?

Mrs. Rawlins. Not as I know of, my Lord.

Mrs. Baynton. You had the Ring upon your Finger, and said, it was a very handsome one; but I had bought it a little too wide for you.

Mrs. Rawlins. It is very ridiculous; I said no such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. She was left in the Room alone, when you both went out; but it seems it was upon her Desire to be Bailed, and therefore she would not escape.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Yes, yes, it was with the Intent to be Bailed that she did this.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, it is now Time for you to make your Defence.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I will. Mrs. Busby, when Mr. Swendsen came to her House first, called him her dearly beloved Likeness; Did not she say so Mrs. Rawlins?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever hear Mrs. Busby call Mr. Swendsen her dearly beloved Likeness?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I desire she may answer for her self.

Mrs. Baynton. Pray, my Lord, let her stand by her self a little, that no body may speak to her.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever hear her speak of Mr. Swendsen, that he was her dearly beloved Likeness?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord; I do not know but she might say so.

L. C. J. Holt. What, when Mr. Swendsen was by?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you remember that you ever heard Mrs. Busby call him so?

Mrs. Rawlins. Once, my Lord, to Mrs. Baynton.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you Mrs. Busby, did you call him so?

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, I thought him very much like my Husband in one Part of his Face, and Mrs. Baynton her self call'd him my beloved Likeness.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, How could I call him her beloved Likeness, and never saw her Husband with my Eyes?

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what Questions will you ask?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I will ask Mrs. Rawlins several Questions. The Second Sunday when I was at their House, Mrs. Rawlins, you know you staid at home, and I did so too; Did not you say then, that you wished Mr. Swendsen was there, when they were all at Church, did not you say so? Remember you are upon your Oath.

L. C. J. Holt. Upon your Oath, do you remember any such Thing?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord; and I would not for all the World say any thing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you, or did you not?

Mrs. Rawlins. Indeed, my Lord, I do not remember that ever I said any such Word.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did you not come to my Bed-side often, and kiss and hug me, and would be talking with Pleasure of Mr. Swendsen?

L. C. J. Holt. Do you remember that you sat at her Bed-side, and spake of Mr. Swendsen, and kissed and hugged her?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, indeed Mrs. Baynton did much talk of her Brother.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you talk of her Brother?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, if I did say any Thing, I did not speak with a Design to have him; it may be I might do so.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did not you bid me to tell him, that there was a good Lady, that had her Fortune in her own Hands, and at her own Disposal, that would make him a very good Wife? Did not you tell me this?

Mrs. Rawlins. I did not say so; but said there was a very good Lady that would make a very good Wife whenever she married; but did not say, that she would make him a good Wife.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, Have not you been the most uneasy Woman in the World, when he did not come to dine at Mrs. Nightingale's?

L. C. J. Holt. Speak out.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, Mr. Swendsen had a Cold, and she told me, she could not be easy till he was cured of it.

Mrs. Rawlins. I never said such a Thing. Can you say so, Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Baynton. My Life is upon it, and I will not for my Life say any Thing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you express any such Thing to Mrs. Baynton, of your Uneasiness till Mr. Swendsen had got rid of his Cold?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord.

Mrs. Baynton. But, Madam, Did not you seek to tell me these Things by your self? You told me, you had a great deal of ill Usage; and told me, you lived more like a Servant than any thing else: You said, that when there was another Lodger there, because you went to see her in her Room, you were chid severely for it, and charged never to go near her.

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not know but that I might do it.

L. C. J. Holt. But why did you do it?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I can give you no Account?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you bid her tell him, that you knew a Gentlewoman, at her own Disposal, that would make him a very good Wife?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I do not know but that I said to Mrs. Baynton I wished her Brother a very good Wife.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you say, that you knew a Gentlewoman, at her own Disposal, and a Fortune, that would make him a very good Wife?

Mrs. Rawlins.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did not speak with a Design to marry her Brother, but was resolved to take the Advice of my Friends.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you say, that you wish'd your self Mr. Swendsen's Wife, several Times?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever tell her, that you wish'd your self Swendsen's Wife?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I don't know whether I did or no.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to have such a good Opinion of Mr. Swendsen?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton told me he was a very good-temper'd Gentleman, and never out of Humour.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you marry a Man for his good Humour only?

Mrs. Rawlins. I never had married, if there had not been a Force put upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you tell Mrs. Baynton, that you would never marry, but by the Consent of your Friends?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, I did.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I never heard her say so in all my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you tell her, notwithstanding what you said of Mr. Swendsen, that you would never marry without the Consent of your Friends?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did often say, that I would never marry without their Consent.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did not you, when you were acquainted with Mr. Swendsen, slight Mr. Pugh?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you shew any Dislike of Mr. Pugh, upon Swendsen's Account?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I cannot tell; if I did shew any Ill-will to Mr. Pugh, it was not with a Design to have Mr. Swendsen.

L. C. J. Holt. Hath there been any Courtship carry'd on betwixt Mr. Swendsen and you?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, no more Courtship to me than to all the Family; my Lord, I did not perceive that Mr. Swendsen shewed me more Favour than any in the rest of the Family.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Questions, Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Baynton. When Mr. Swendsen was walking in the Garden, did not you say, that you would go and walk with him, but that they would take notice of it? But pray, said I, do not, you may make them angry by it. Did not you say, that you would go up, and look out of the Window, with Expectation to have been called down by me? Did not you walk with Mr. Swendsen, and discourse with him about the Things of Love, and he said, he would have no body but you, and you likewise said, that you would have no Body but him?

L. C. J. Holt. Were you alone with Mr. Swendsen, at that Time in the Garden?

Mrs. Rawlins. I think I was with him in the Garden at that Time, but not alone.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, she was alone with Mr. Swendsen in the Garden several Times.

Mrs. Rawlins. I can speak it upon my Oath, that I was never in the Garden with Mr. Swendsen, but that Time.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you say that you would have no body but Mr. Swendsen?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I never said any such Thing.

Mrs. Baynton. What made you go up Stairs, and cry for an Hour together; and said to my Servant, that you would have your Belly full of crying, before you went away: Betty can testify this, she is in the Court, but must not be heard.

L. C. J. Holt. She may be called, if you will.

Mrs. Baynton. Pray Mrs. Rawlins, did you not once come up to me, and said you had been twice there, and wished that you could see Mr. Swendsen, and that you could not be easy without his Company?

Mrs. Rawlins. As I am upon my Oath, I never said such a Thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did not you say a Hundred Times, that you loved Mr. Swendsen, above any Man in the World?

Mrs. Rawlins. I never said any such Thing in my Life.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you peel Walnuts for Mr. Swendsen, and desire me to carry them to him;

Mrs. Rawlins. I never did so.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I would have her asked; whether she consented to be taken away, directly, or indirectly?

L. C. J. Holt. What say you to that Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, It was all against my Knowledge and Will, I never consented to it.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins is not this true, that you pulled your Ring from your Finger, and gave it me to have a Wedding Ring made by it, which discovered your free Consent to the Marriage?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, do you think that I would have given any manner of Consent to be married to him, without the Advice of my Friends, if I had not been forced to it?

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you send all Mr. Pugh's Letters back again, and desired him in your Letter to come no more at you; and that you would have nothing to say to him, and that if he came he would put you to such a Fright that you would not be capable of seeing him?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you tell her so?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not remember that I told her any such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you send back Mr. Pugh's Letters?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not remember that I spake any Thing to Mrs. Baynton, tho' I did send back the Letters.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you so?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was not upon Mr. Swendsen's Account that I did so.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you remember that you repeated to her any of the Contents of a Letter that you had written to Mr. Pugh, about sending back his Letters?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I had it from her own Mouth, else how could I have known of it? I did not know it till she told me. Mrs. Rawlins, how can you say you told me not these Things?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, you do not say true. I never knew nothing but what I had from her own Mouth.

L. C. J. Holt. You sent his Letters back again, pray upon what Account did you do so?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was upon Things that we heard of Mr. Pugh, that was not very handsome. Mrs. Busby can tell the same.

L. C. J. Holt. Did the Courtship break off?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, it was but the Day before this Thing happen'd.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Busby, did you know of the sending back the Letters? And who was it that put Mrs. Rawlins upon sending of them back?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir, it was by our Advice.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Whose Hand was it that wrote the Letter?

Mrs. Busby. Mrs. Berkley.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Was it by her Inclination and Consultation of her Friends?

Mrs. Baynton. Had not you a mistrust, that there was Love betwixt Mr. Swendsen and Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Busby. I had no mistrust of any such Thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Why did you tax me with it then?

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it was at the Limner's; I heard something as if Mrs. Rawlins should speak Words of Discouragement to Mr. Pugh. Mrs. Busby, when I told her of it, she denied it, and said, Mrs. Baynton, I do not know this. But here is Mrs. Rawlins her self, and she shall answer for her self, if such a Thing is: She thought, if there was any Strangeness between Mrs. Rawlins and Mr. Pugh, it was occasion'd by Mrs. Rawlins's Love to Mr. Swendsen. When they asked my Advice of the Thing, Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Busby told me, that Mr. Pugh had Three or Four Thousand Pound Stock: I said, if Mr. Pugh had such a Love for Mrs. Rawlins as he pretended to, that he would do well to have drawn out One Thousand Pound, and given it to the young Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, have you any thing to ask?

Mrs. Baynton. Perhaps I may have more to say, but I am in Confusion, my Lord: Mrs. Busby, as well as Mrs. Rawlins, was never easy, but when Mr. Swendsen was there.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, upon the Oath that you have taken, did you consent to your being taken away after the Manner as you were, or gave any Encouragement to Mr. Swendsen?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I do not know that I gave him any manner of Encouragement.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, she gave him all the Encouragement imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. I pray, Mrs. Baynton, do not put your self into a Passion: I speak in Favour to you; you will not deliver your self so well in Passion, as without.

Mrs. Baynton. She lay baiting of me Night and Day, and always speaking to me of her Love to Mr. Swendsen; and to hear her speak the quite contrary, really it moves me, my Lord.

Betty, Mrs. Baynton's Maid, called.

Mrs. Baynton. Betty, have not you told me, that Mrs. Rawlins said she would fill her Belly with Crying before she went, and that she would enquire for Mr. Swendsen?

Betty. No, I said no such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Speak the Truth, without being bias'd by one Side or other. Did you hear that ever Mrs. Rawlins went into the Chamber to cry, or enquire for Mr. Swendsen?

Betty. No, my Lord, I never heard it.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I never was the Woman that asked this Maid any Question any way, but she frankly told me all this; and she often said, that she was sure Mrs. Rawlins had a very great Kindness for Mr. Swendsen: And one Day she hearing of such a Noise of Laughing, and the Doors flinging, that she went down Stairs to see what was the Matter; Mr. Swendsen was there then, and Mr. Pugh. Mr. Pugh was so offended at Mrs. Rawlins's Mirth, that he went away in a great Distaste; and she said, that Mrs. Rawlins was never easy, but when she was talking of Mr. Swendsen.

Mrs. Baynton. Betty, did not you say, that she asked you several Times of Mr. Swendsen, and wished he would come and dine with them?

Betty. I never heard her but once.

Mr. Swendsen's Jury return to give in their Verdict all Twelve.

Gentlemen, are you agreed in your Verdict?

Ans. Yes.

Who shall say for you?

Ans. The Foreman.

Erasmus Johnson, a Dane, and one of the Jury said, He was not satisfied.

Johnson. If it shall please you, my Lord, I am not satisfied; I do not find, from any of the Evidence that hath been given, that he was privy to the Arrest; my Conscience will not let me comply with the rest, that he is Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. What kind of a Conscience have you? Do you not believe what the Witnesses have said? Have you any Evidence that Mrs. Rawlins went away with her own Consent?

Johnson. I do not find, my Lord, that it was done by him.

L. C. J. Holt. Did not he go to Hartwell's House, and from thence, while she was under the Force, went with her to the Vine Tavern, where he married her? Which was a forceably taking by him.

Johnson. But, my Lord, it was with her Consent; else how could he marry her?

L. C. J. Holt. Tho' she did consent to the Marriage; yet if she was taken by Force, it is the same Offence.

Foreman. My Lord, he did agree that this was a Point of Law, and would leave it with your Lordship; he believes she was forced, but he thinks he was not privy to the Woman's Actions that he employed.

Johnson. My Lord, I do not see there were any Evidence against him.

L. C. J. Holt. When the Bailiffs were employed to take her, it appears by the Sequel, that it was with an Intent that he might marry her: What can be plainer? Govern your self by Reason.

Johnson. I believe that there was a Force by the Bailiffs.

L. C. J. Holt. Did not he take the Advantage of the Force? And was that to any other Purpose, but for him to marry her? There was no Cause of Action either against her or Mrs. Busby.

Johnson. It proved so, my Lord.

Foreman. My Lord, he would know whether he were in that Statute, in Point of Law, if this Maid did consent to it?

Judge Powel. He was guilty of the Thing; he was consenting to it afterward.

Johnson. They were in Streets and Houses before they married; and so, if she had not consented, she might have cried out.

Judge Powel. Did not he go to Hartwell's House, and to the Vine Tavern?

Johnson. I cannot believe him guilty, as I would answer it before God and the World.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray consider, do not give a Verdict contrary to plain Evidence.

Johnson. By all the Circumstances, she was as willing as he: All that I can say to it, my Lord, is that he had something of Connivance with this Woman.

Foreman. He believed that all along.

Johnson. I say, Mr. Foreman, at the Beginning there was such a Thing, as was done by Mrs. Baynton, without his Knowledge.

Foreman. He did consent before you to take your Lordship's Judgment; that if your Lordship be of Opinion that he was concern'd in the first Force, then that will carry it.

Johnson. I do not know that she complain'd to any body, my Lord: I do not speak for any Favour or Affection, my Lord; but 'tis merely out of a tender Conscience.

Foreman. He agreed, that if the first Force was within the Statute, then he would comply; and that we came away upon, to have your Lordship's Opinion. He believed, Mr. Swendsen did employ the Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you agree?

Johnson. I cannot, but I leave it to your Lordship's Pleasure.

Mountague. The Fact he does agree to; he does agree that she was taken away by Force.

L. C. J. Holt. Was she taken away by Force?

Johnson. She was by the Bailiffs.

L. C. J. Holt. Did not he take the Advantage of this?

Johnson. She was under the Force before.

L. C. J. Holt. Besides, Did not you perceive that she consented for fear she should go to Newgate? The Law of England says, that is a void Consent, which is obtained out of Fear.

Johnson. My Lord, I don't know there was any Violence used by him either in Word or Deed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not he present when Violence was used?

Johnson. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then was Violence used by him.

Johnson. But She was very well satisfy'd both before and after she was married.

L. C. J. Holt. She was under Force, before she was married; and indeed, all that Night, and afterwards.

Mr. Johnson. She was not hindred to send Letters.

Coun. Who would you have carried them, the Bailiffs, or Mrs. Baynton?

Johnson. No, my Lord; but somebody for half a Crown, or a Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. It appears very evident, if you will believe Witneses, that she was under a Force, before she was married, when she was married, all Night after, and the next Day when she was at the Recorder's. If you are not satisfy'd, I'll say no more, not one Word more.

Foreman. We must go my Lord, and have been Fasting all Day, He is prepar'd for Fasting, if it be for a Day, or two or three.

Judge Powel. The Question is now, Whether you do not believe, upon all this Evidence you have heard, whether this Lady was not under an Arrest, and taken by these Bailiffs?

Johnson. Yes, I do believe that; but I do not believe Mr. Swendsen employed them; all that I speak upon is this, that she had her free Liberty.

Foreman. My Lord, he was resolv'd to stand by what your Lordship should say.

Judge Powel. If he did not set them to work, yet his Act afterwards made it as bad as if he had actually employ'd the Bailiffs.

Johnson. I can say no more, I must agree with the rest.

Gentlemen, Are you agreed?

Foreman. Yes, my Lord, we are all agreed now.

Then, Is he Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. He is Guilty, — And so you say all, Yes.

What Goods or Chattles, &c.?

Foreman. We know of none.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, Will you go on?

Mrs. Baynton. I hope your Lordship will take Notice that my Servant own'd it once.

L. C. J. Holt. What was it?

Mr. Mountague. Only whether he was to dine there.

Mrs. Baynton. That which I said, my Lord, she said to me.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, Will you be pleas'd to answer me some Questions?

Mrs. Rawlins. I will.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you sit down in the great Chair in the Dining-Room, and you said, now I must go to Bed? Did not you pluck off your Things, and gave them to me, and I gave them to Mr. Blake's Daughter?

Mrs. Rawlins. I consider Mrs. Baynton, that you undressed me.

Mrs. Baynton. You sat in the Chair, and undressed your self, How can you deny it?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton, I can deny it, for I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. Nay, more than that, when you were in Bed, Did not you call to Mr. Swendsen, my dear Husband, Why do not you come to Bed?

Mrs. Rawlins. I said no such thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it was at Mr. Blake's.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you say, Come to Bed my dear Husband, you must love no Body in the World but me?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not; I have taken an Oath this Day, and I said no such thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you say, that you loved him above all the Men in the World?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not tell you any such thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you say these Things?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton.

Coun. Speaking to Mrs. Baynton, said, Do you know that ever Mrs. Rawlins writ any Letters to Mr. Swendsen?

Mrs. Baynton. She would; but I would not let her.

L. C. J. Holt. Why would you not let her?

Mrs. Baynton. I told her I would not carry any Letters to him, but if she desired me to tell him any thing by word of Mouth, I would do it; and, my Lord, when Mrs. Rawlins was Arrested, I going down Witchstreet, the Coach that she was in coming along then, and I seeing her in it, that was the only Reason that I went into the Bailiff's House. When I came there, she hung about me, kissed me, and said she desired me to stand by her; when your Lordship hears, you will believe me no other than a Friend to her. She begged me not to leave her. I offered Bail to Mr. Hartwell, but he would not take it; but said I behav'd my self sawcily. And when Mr. Swendsen came in, she said, now she was happy. Besides, my Lord, when he was there, he did not desire her to go out of the House.

L. C. J. Holt. If you had no Design but for her Good, How came you to Mrs. Nightingale's upon on such a Design with Pretence that you had a Law-Suit, &c. ? And why did you carry her out in the Coach, in order to be Arrested ?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it was not the first Time that they went with me in a Coach, they desired me several Times to set them down, and I did so.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you this ? You pretended that you had a Law-Suit, and that you came to Town about it, and it appears not that you had any.

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mrs. Nightingale. My Lord, It was Mrs. St. John that recommended Mrs. Baynton to me.

L. C. J. Holt. We know that.

Mrs. Baynton. If I were such a Woman as they represent me to be, Why did they not warn me out of their House. Mrs. Rawlins, say the whole Truth, and remember that you are upon your Oath, I desire not Favour or Affection. Did not you say to Mr. Swendsen, This is my own dear Husband, and this is the Ring that married us ? Did not he begin to speak, and you said to him, Hold your Tongue, and let me speak ?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton, you know I was very much intoxicated, I hardly knew I had a Head.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, you can drink your Glass of Wine as well as any Body else. Mr. Swendsen was often there at Cards, and she was the most uneasiest Creature in the World when he was not her Partner. Did not you desire me to let you sit by him in particular ?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins had said this several Times to Mr. Swendsen, to desire him to sit by her. We play'd at Cards, and sav'd the Winnings till it should come to 20 s. and designed it for a Treat. Did not you say you would treat Mr. Swendsen, and would send for Walnuts and Apples ? But I said, No, you shall not ?

Mrs. Rawlins. I did send for Walnuts and Apples ; but it was not with a design to pleasure Mr. Swendsen.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, Why did you say Mr. Swendsen was your Brother ?

Mrs. Baynton. I never said he was my own Brother.

L. C. J. Holt. You said it.

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, I said he was my Sister-in-Law's Husband.

L. C. J. Holt. How was she your Sister-in-Law.

Mrs. Baynton. By Adoption, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. By Adoption, What do you mean by that ?

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, if you had no mind to him, Why did you give him such Encouragement, as to kiss him, and go betwixt his Legs and kiss him ?

Mrs. Rawlins. I take it upon my Oath, that I never did so in all my Life.

Mrs. Baynton. Did you not love him ?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, not well enough for to make him my Husband.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, It is very hard that all these Things that I have said to her, are all true, and she hath made a Resolution to say nothing but No.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, Did you design to have Mr. Swendsen for your Husband ?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I was threatned to be sent to Newgate, if I did not marry him. You know, Mrs. Baynton, that you said, that if I did not marry your Brother, they would carry me to Newgate.

Mrs. Baynton. I never in my Life said any such thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, Mrs. Baynton, give an Account how you have lived ?

Mrs. Baynton. I never run into any Body's Debt.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you a Husband ?

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How long hath he been dead ?

Mrs. Baynton. Eight Years To-morrow.

L. C. J. Holt. But you have had a Child lately, within this four Months : Are you married now ?

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord, I am married.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you prove that ?

Mrs. Baynton. I could give your Lordship an Account ; but it is not proper now, before the whole Court.

L. C. J. Holt. Is it not proper now ?

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, for some Reasons.

L. C. J. Holt. I think it is very proper. Pray give an Account how you have lived ?

Mrs. Baynton. I have a Sister at Barbadoes that hath been very kind to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you married to Mr. Baynton ?

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Hartwell, Who directed you to take out this Writ against Mrs. Rawlins, at the Suit of one Jones ?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I was sent for to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, by Mr. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is he ?

Mr. Hartwell. He is not yet taken. He sent for me twice before I went. When I came to him, I received Money for a Writ against that Lady ; on which I sent my Assistant for a Writ.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was your Assistant ?

Mr. Hartwell. (Pointing to Spurr, said, he was his Assistant). I sent the Writ to Mr. Wakeman, to get him to serve it. He was not at Home, and I went to him the next Morning. I asked him whether he would serve the Writ, he told me he would ; and I told him the same that Mr. Holt told me, that it could not be done till Friday Morning. On Friday Morning Mr. Holt went with me, and these Officers, Wakeman and Spurr. He bid us be ready, and said the Coach was coming. So we served the Writ as we were ordered, and went to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane ; from thence I carried her to my House. If I had had any mistrust of any bad Design, I would have carried her back again. But I came forward with her to my House. In a little time after she had been there, came Mrs. Baynton, and one that is gone now [meaning Mr. Swendsen] was sent for, by some Stratagem that I knew not of. They being together, told me, that every thing was agreed of and made easy.

L. C. J. Holt. What was made easy ?

Mr. Hartwell. The Debt, as I thought, my Lord. When I carried the young Gentlewoman first to my House, I left her with my Wife and a young Woman. When I came Home again, I found Mr. Swendsen and this Gentlewoman there, who told me, that every thing was made easy. On which they desired to go to any Tavern, I knew not where : But they agreed to go to the Vine Tavern in Holbourn.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you take her from her Friend Mrs. Busby.

Mr. Hartwell. It is usual with Officers to do with Prisoners as they please.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a barbarous Thing to separate them one from another, when you could apprehend there was no Danger of being rescued.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon, I have no Counsel but my self; I may speak Things in Point of Law that may prejudice my Life; but as to the Purpose I'll speak the Truth.

L. C. J. Holt. You made her put on her Mask; you forc'd her to it.

Mr. Hartwell. Mrs. Rawlins, Did I force you to put on your Mask?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, he forced me, but I would not at first; but he forced me. When I cry'd out Murder, he said, Put on your Mask, and hold your Tongue, or you shall go to Newgate.

L. C. J. Holt. What Writ had you against Mrs. Busby?

Mr. Hartwell. There was no such thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. You said you had a Writ against Mrs. Busby, and another against Mrs. Rawlins.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, as to a Writ against the young Lady, there was one; I know no other positively.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you refuse Holt's and Swendsen's Bail.

Mr. Hartwell. It was no such thing, my Lord; I cannot help what the People swear: I hope to prove to the contrary, both from the beginning to the end.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you part with your Prisoner at the Vine Tavern without Bail?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I no sooner came into the Vine Tavern, but the Person that employ'd me, gave me the Money; which was this Woman [pointing to Mrs. Baynton].

Mrs. Baynton. You said Holt employ'd you. I gave him no Money, my Lord; and he declared, that he never saw me before in his Life.

Mr. Parker called.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Mr. Parker. I lived at the Star and Garter then, and Mr. Holt was there, who sent me for Mr. Hartwell.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, when I came there, Mr. Holt was drinking, and it was all out but a Glass. He asked me to drink; which I did. Then we went from the Star and Garter down to the Mitre in Westminster, which was Holt's House. Being there, and I smoaking a Pipe, in came this Lady [pointing to Mrs. Baynton] and gave me Money for a Writ. I sent my Assistant for the Writ, and the first Person I lit off, which was Mr. Wakeman, I made use of to assist me in it. When I serv'd it at the Star and Garter Tavern, this Gentlewoman [pointing to Mrs. Baynton] ask'd me where I lived? I said in Witchstreet. Said she, take care of her (Mrs. Rawlins) and take her along with you to your House, or you will lose your Money. So I carried her to my House, and having Business elsewhere, I left her with my Wife, and a young Woman to keep her Company. When I came again, I found Mr. Swendsen and this Gentlewoman there drinking a Pint of Sack. They told me if I would go to any Tavern, the Business should be made up. We took Coach and went to the Vine Tavern, and there the Matter was made an end of. They told me that they would satisfy me for my Trouble on Monday Night, if I would meet them at Mr. Holt's. Away I went, and was taken ill to that Degree that I thought I should have died.

L. C. J. Holt. How can you prove that she employ'd you.

Mr. Hartwell. I believe I shall have somebody to prove that. But, my Lord, the main Witness of mine is not come in, and that is Mr. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. He is fled.

Mr. Hartwell. But, my Lord, I suppose his Wife is here. My Lord, I hope you will allow Mr. Wakeman to come into the Court, that I may ask him some Questions.

Justice Powel. A Woman cannot be a Witness for or against her Husband; Then for what reason should she be called?

Mr. Hartwell. What can be more material than my going to Holt's? I have no other Persons to appear for me.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Holt first employ you?

Mr. Hartwell. He first sent for me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any other Witnesses?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I thought they call'd for Wakeman.

Mr. Wakeman called.

L. C. J. Holt. Ask him what Questions you will.

Mr. Hartwell. Mr. Wakeman, Who was it employ'd me.

Mr. Wakeman. He never told me who employ'd him till he came to the Recorder's, and then he told me that this Woman [pointing to Mrs. Baynton] employ'd him. The Recorder ask'd me who it was employ'd me? Hartwell made Answer, and said, I employ'd him; and said likewise, that the Woman brought him Money for the Writ.

Mrs. Baynton. I never gave Hartwell Money, nor employed him, nor confessed to the Recorder.

Mr. Wakeman call'd a Witness, who said for Hartwell, that 'twas Mrs. Baynton confessed before the Recorder upon her Examination, that she gave Money to, and employ'd Hartwell to sue out a Writ against Mrs. Rawlins, at the Suit of W. Jones for 20*l.* and gave for Reason, on farther Examination, that the said Jones owed Mrs. Baynton 20*l.* And he wrote to Mrs. Baynton to get Arrested Mrs. Rawlins for 20*l.* due from her to Jones; and that on such Arrest, Mrs. Rawlins would pay the Money to Mrs. Baynton.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more to say?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I never saw Mr. Swendsen before he came to my House with Mrs. Baynton, when the young Gentlewoman was there. When I came in, they were drinking a Pint of Sack together. The young Lady was very free to go the Vine Tavern. Madam, Were you not free to go?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not deny but I was free to go.

Mr. Hartwell. Did we offer any Rudeness to you at that Place?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, not then.

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Thing you are to answer to, your taking her away by Force.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I know nothing of it; I cannot help it, my Lord, there is nothing in it.

Mr. Hartwell. Mr. Wakeman, Did I know any thing of your being with Mr. Holt and Mr. Swendsen at the Five-Bell Tavern?

Mr. Wakeman. I don't know that you did.

Mr. Hartwell. No, my Lord, I knew nothing of it till last Thursday he told me of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Who sent for Mr. Swendsen?

Mrs.

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton.

Mr. Hartwell. Mrs. Rawlins, Was I in the House at that Time?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I did not see you there then.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, with Submission to your Lordship, I understand by something I have heard, since I have been in Custody, that this Gentlewoman, Mrs. Baynton, said to Mrs. Rawlins. Shall I send for my Brother?

L. C. J. Holt. Do you keep a Publick House?

Mr. Hartwell. No, my Lord, only a Prison-Room, but sell no Drink: This Gentlewoman was in the Parlour all the while.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more to say?

Mr. Hartwell. Nothing at all, my Lord; I was rul'd by the Person that employ'd me.

Just. Powel. What did you apprehend by this?

Mr. Hartwell. She told me there was one gone for; and she said she would bring a Gentleman to pay me the Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Spurr, What say you?

Mr. Spurr. I know nothing more of the Matter, than Mr. Hartwell's giving me Money for taking out the Marshal's Court Writ, and I was employ'd by him.

L. C. J. Holt. When Mrs. Busby cry'd out, did you not say, What have you got by your Bawling?

No Answer made.

Mr. Mountague. We have a few Words to reply, if the Prisoners have done. The Gentlewoman at the Bar insists upon it, that Mrs. Rawlins was consenting to the Matter, was in Love with Mr. Swendsen: We think, not only by the Evidence given, but by what they say themselves, that she was carry'd away by Force. Indeed when she was taken into Hartwell's House, there was no body by at that Time, but those she was not afraid of. To conclude; if there was any Consent by Mrs. Rawlins, it was only to have her bail'd; it was that only that she design'd. Hartwell says, he was only employ'd as a Bailiff by Holt: He carry'd them from his House to the Vine Tavern: Now, what Occasion had he to carry them to the Tavern for Bail? We shall prove further, that when they came to the Vine, Hartwell himself was said to be the Bail for the Action.

Anne Cotchet called, and sworn.

Mr. Mountague. Mistress, pray will you give an Account how Hartwell brought the Prisoner there?

Cotchet. Mr. Hartwell, when the Coach came, ordered a Pint of Wine for the Coachman. The Drawer said, We draw, and draw, but don't know who will pay for it. Mr. Hartwell came to me, and said, it was an Arrest for 120*l.* that he would see us paid.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it the Woman in the White Gown that was Arrested for 120*l.*

Cotchet. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Hartwell. Did you see me in Company with the Parson?

Cotchet. You came down Stairs, and ordered a Pint of Wine for the Parson, and half a Pint besides; and told me the Parson was the Bail.

Mr. Hartwell. I did not know that the Parson was in the House, till I had just done my Business, and was going away. Did you see me with the Parson Madam Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not tell you so.

Mr. Mountague. All that is to be prov'd in this Indictment is, that she was taken away against her Will, and afterwards compell'd to marry.

Cotchet. I did not see Mr. Hartwell after that.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, these three Prisoners are indicted for Felony, upon the Statute made in the third Year of King Henry the Seventh; That they with Haagen Swendsen now convicted, and Thomas Holt that is fled, did violently and feloniously assault one Pleasant Rawlins, being seized of an Estate of Inheritance of about 20*l.* per Ann. and possessed of a personal Estate of the Value of 2000*l.* and took her away by Force against her Will; and that he, Swendsen, did marry her. Now the Question is, Whether the Prisoners at the Bar are guilty of this Crime? First, As to Mrs. Baynton, you have heard what an Account is given of her: She was a Person that came to lodge at Mrs. Nightingale's House in Stretton-Grounds in Westminster: She went for a Widow, by the Name of Sarah Baynton. It seems, Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins did lodge about three Years in Mrs. Nightingale's House. They being all single, were very well satisfy'd one with another. Mrs. Rawlins was plac'd by her Guardian under the Care of Mrs. Busby; and has a personal Estate of 2000*l.* and 20*l.* a Year. About three Weeks before Michaelmas last, you hear of one Mrs. St. John that was an Acquaintance of one Mrs. Nightingale's, came to her and told her of Mrs. Baynton, a well-disposed Gentlewoman, that was come to Town about a Suit of Law, and thought she should stay about a Month, and thought that her House was a proper Place for her Lodging, and gave her a very good Character, that she was a civil religious Woman, of a good Conversation, and desired to be near the Church. After some Time, Mrs. Baynton came her self. She said, as Mrs. St. John had done before, that she came to Town about a Law Business, was a Widow in the West. Mrs. Nightingale, by reason of the Character that was given her, received her into her House. When she was there, she behaved herself very civilly for some Time; so that Mrs. Nightingale and Mrs. Busby were well pleased with her, and thought her to be a Gentlewoman of very ingenious Conversation. She tells them she had a Brother that had Interest in Shipping; and so there was an Invitation of Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton, to go on Ship-board, where they were treated by Mr. Swendsen. Mr. Swendsen used to visit Mrs. Baynton; and she used to call him Brother: While she was there, Swendsen dined 9 or 10 Times. She had not been there long, before they began to have different Apprehensions of her from what they had at first, and were very uneasy at her Continuance. Mrs. Baynton did apprehend there was some Appearance of Uneasiness; and came to Mrs. Nightingale and told her, she had made an end of her Suit of Law, and had no occasion to stay in Town, but would return into the Country. It seems Mrs. Nightingale and Mrs. Busby were well pleased with Mrs. Baynton's Warning. Before she went away, she understood that Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins used to go to Oxendon Chapel; she came to them and said, she had occasion to go that way with a Band-Box to her Milliner's; told them she went in a Coach, and if they pleased they might go with her, and she would set them down at a Place near the Chapel. They accepted her Civility, thinking nothing of any Design; and as the Coach was driving along, it was stopped by Bailiffs, and all on a sudden Hartwell opens the Coach, and thrusts himself into it. Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins were not conscious of any Cause of an Arrest, thought the Arrest was upon Mrs. Baynton, they began to be concern'd for her; but it appeared that 'twas upon them, and then Mrs. Baynton seem'd as much concern'd for them when they were both to be carry'd away; but asked Hartwell what what it was for? He told them it was no great Matter; but if you and I talk together a little, all will be well. Mrs. Baynton express'd her self to be much concern'd for Mrs. Busby; she advis'd her not to talk any Thing with him, without her Friends were nigh. And when they were in the Coach, it was directed to be drove away. Mrs. Busby desired to be carried to Fleetstreet to her Friends; but Hartwell would carry her to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. Mrs. Baynton continued in the Coach until they came thither, and then pretended to go for Mrs. Busby's Friends; and when they were at the Star and Garter Tavern they were carry'd into a Back-Room. Mrs. Busby forced her self with the young Woman into a Fore-Room; then Hartwell laid Hands upon Mrs. Rawlins, and said she was his Prisoner, and carries her away by Violence, forces her down Stairs, and swears at her to put on her Mask, otherwise he would carry her to Newgate. Mrs. Busby, the Prisoner above Stairs, was to go to Newgate, as was pretended; but Mrs. Rawlins was to go to the Marshalsea. Away she was carried to the House of Mr. Hartwell; but Mrs. Baynton who pretended, that as she was going by chance that Way heard Mrs. Rawlins named; thereupon she goes in, and very luckily finds her there, and pretends to pity her Condition, and said she had been with several of her Friends to be her Bail, but could procure none of them to come. Then she said she would go for her Brother Swendsen, who she was sure would be her Bail. Upon that Message he came, and then Mrs. Rawlins was to be carry'd to the Vine Tavern. Mrs. Baynton went with her thither, as they pretended, to make up the Business. Then it was propos'd that Holt and Swendsen should be Bail. Hartwell refused them as insufficient: Upon which she was told she was in danger of going to Newgate, and Bail could not be taken; and the only Way was, that she must be marry'd to Swendsen; and if she did not marry, she should go to Newgate. Mrs. Baynton took the Ring from off her Finger, in order to get a Wedding-Ring to be made by it; which being procured, there was a Parson in the House ready provided with a Clerk to do the Office, who came into the Room where the Marriage was made, and so ended that Arrest. From the Vine Tavern she is carry'd with Mr. Swendsen and Mrs. Baynton to Mr. Blake's House, and there she was forc'd to Bed: Within an Hour and Half they arise again, at Seven a-Clock at Night; and thus the Marriage was consummated. As for Mrs. Baynton there is this further Proof upon her, that she did pay Hartwell for this very Arrest, which is proved upon her by her own Confession, before the Recorder. Then, as to Hartwell, he is affected by these Circumstances. First, there was no Process against Mrs. Busby, but yet she was Arrested and carry'd to the Garter Tavern, where she was kept in Custody until the Evening, and could not procure any Friends to be called to her; and during the Time of her being there, Mrs. Rawlins was married to Mr. Swendsen at the Vine Tavern. And it is further prov'd against him, that when the Parson was come, he told the Mistress at the Vine Tavern, that the Parson was to be one of the Bail. It is also prov'd, that he insist'd upon very good Bail; for he told the Woman of the House the Arrest was for 120 l. when as it appear'd it was but for 20 l. Now you are to consider what hath been said in their Defence. Mrs. Baynton says, that Mrs. Rawlins was in Love with Mr. Swendsen, and did complain of her Confinement and hard Usage; and that she told her she could help Mr. Swendsen to a young Lady at her own Disposal; and that there was one Mr. Pugh that made Application to Mrs. Rawlins; but she return'd his Letters that she had receiv'd from him: That Mrs. Rawlins did say, that she could help Mr. Swendsen to a Lady that had a Fortune at her own Disposal, which is own'd by Mrs. Rawlins; and that by that Lady she did mean her self; but that she had any familiar Discourse with him in the Garden, or that she was Sick for him, and went up and cried for him, that she denies upon her Oath. And further says, that she never intended to do any Thing against the Advice of her Friends, or that she had set her Love upon him. Then Mrs. Baynton charges Mrs. Busby, that she had a Kindness for her Brother Swendsen, because she said he was her beloved Likeness. Mrs. Busby owns, that he was something like her Husband, and on that Account might innocently call him so. As for Hartwell, he relies on his being a Bailiff, and in Execution of his Office, being employ'd by Mr. Holt and Mrs. Baynton, and that she paid him for the Writ. Mr. Holt sent for him, and he knew nothing but of Arrest, and was not privy to any other Design. It is prov'd indeed, that Mr. Holt did send for him. This is the Sum and Substance of his Defence. I must tell you, that if Hartwell was employ'd in this Design, in order to take her into Custody to carry on this Marriage, and was privy to it, then he is equally Guilty; but if he did only Act as a Bailiff, and did not know the Design, then he is not Guilty. But his Arresting Mrs. Busby, against whom he had no Process, and taking Mrs. Rawlins from Mrs. Busby to his own House, and from thence carrying her to the Vine Tavern; his pretending that the Warrant was for 120 l. when as in Truth it was but for 20 l. and his pretending that the Parson was to be the Bail, though he was not present in the Room where the Marriage was, but hard by; yet he was in the same House, which is all one, if he knew what Design was a-foot: These are the Things you are to consider of. As for Mrs. Baynton, she pretended she was a Widow, and you hear how she proves it; and when she is taxed with having a Child, then she says she hath a Husband. And when she is asked about him, she will give no Account, nor how she supports her self. She said indeed she paid every Body their own, and that she has no Difference with any Body whatsoever. She pretended she was Mrs. Rawlins's Friend in what she did; but it is plain by what she owns her self, that she employ'd Hartwell, and paid him for the Writ. And her pretending to set them down at Oxendon Chapel, there it was her Design to bring them under that Force to effect this Marriage. I must leave it to you to consider, whether from the beginning to the end she was not an Actress and a Manager of this whole Business. She hath been asked how Mr. Swendsen came to be her Brother. First she says, he was her deceased Sister's Husband. Then being asked who was that Sister? She said he was an adopted Sister's Husband. It was very extraordinary for her to go to Mr. Hartwell's Meousto the young Gentlewoman, and pretend that she came by chance, and heard her Name. I must leave it to you Gentlemen of the Jury to consider of the whole Matter: And as for Spurr, he was an Under-Officer, a Bailiff's Follower, and might be ignorant of the Business. You have not Evidence enough to make it appear that he was privy to this Design, and therefore you are to acquit him; but as to Mrs. Baynton and Hartwell, if they were privy to this Design of a forceably taking away of Mrs. Rawlins, with an Intent to marry her to Swendsen, as it is plain that he was an Actor, Actor, and she Abettor in the Force; then Gentlemen you are to find them Guilty: if you are not satisfied, you are to Acquit them.

The Jury went out for half an Hour, and brought in the following Verdicts.

Mrs. Baynton, Guilty.

Mr. Hartwell, Not Guilty.

Mr. Spurr, Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt said to Hartwell, You have had a very Merciful Jury, let it be a Warning to you for the future.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I am with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. That will be considered on Saturday November the 28th.

The Prisoners were called to the Bar to receive Sentence of Death.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I pray your Lordship's Judgment against the Prisoners at the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Haagen Swendsen hold up thy Hand. Thou hast been convicted of Felony done by thee and committed on Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, and the Jury hath found thee Guilty; What have you to say for your self, why you should not receive Sentence of Death according to Law?

Mr. Swendsen. I could say a great deal, but I shall say but a very little. I do not doubt but the honourable Court observ'd how various she was in her Evidence. What she deny'd in my Trial, she confess'd in Mrs. Baynton's; and so I leave it to the Court, if there may be an Arrest of Judgment till the next Term.

L. C. J. Holt. Unless you can shew us some Cause for it, it will not be granted.

Mr. Swendsen. My Lord, She said those Things in her Trial which she deny'd in mine.

L. C. J. Holt. Some Things she mentioned in your Trial, that she had no occasion for in hers.

Mr. Swendsen. The same Things that were in my Trial were in hers.

L. C. J. Holt. There were some Things in her Trial that was not in yours.

Cl. of Arr. Sarah Baynton hold up thy Hand. Thou hast been Indicted for Felony, and found Guilty. What hast thou to say for thy self, why you should not receive Sentence of Death according to Law?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I am with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. That is no Plea against Judgment.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I desire that it may be taken into Consideration, how that she contradicted her self in her Evidence; that she spoke those Things in Mr. Swendsen's Trial, that she contradicted in mine. I think I have a great deal of Injustice; I am as innocent as any Person in the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. That you did this Thing is most apparent: that you deluded this young Person, and pretended your self to be a Person of Quality, a Religious Woman, and one that came out of the Country about a Law-Suit; that you pretended that this Mr. Swendsen, the Prisoner at the Bar, was your Brother, your Sister's Husband; and all this False Dealing was to bring him in to delude this Woman. It is plain, you had no Suit of Law, as you pretended. It is plain, you took out this Process against the young Gentlewoman. It is plain, that you pretended you would set them down at a Chapel.

Mrs. Baynton. It is not the first time, my Lord, that I set them down.

L. C. J. Holt. But you made use of this Stratagem to accomplish the Arrest. You have deluded the World by these Things; and indeed it is very hard against you.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, they desired me to set them down.

L. C. J. Holt. The Licence was taken out before the 6th of November a considerable time.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, She cannot deny but she spoke for it to me. She her self ordered it to be done. My Lord, when I was upon my Trial, abundance of People prompted her to speak those Things she knew nothing of; Mrs. Busby in particular; though I do not question but she her self would have married Mr. Swendsen, for she expressed Love for him in calling of him her Beloved Likeness.

L. C. J. Holt. She said he was like her Husband and therefore on that Account she might say so.

Crier, Make an O Yes.

Mr. Swendsen. My Lord, my Trial has already made a great Noise in the World; and I do not know but that by this time it may be come to the Queen's Ear, therefore I desire that your Lordship would be pleased to make a favourable Construction of it to her.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, I do not question but Her Majesty hath heard of it.

Crier, Make an O Yes, while Judgment is given.

Justice Powell. You that are the Prisoners at the Bar, Haagen Swendsen and Sarah Baynton, you have been both Tried and Convicted of a very great Offence, for which you are brought to receive that Judgment that the Law requires. You have had a very solemn Trial, and have both been Convicted upon very plain and full Evidence. Your Offence is of a very high Nature; and I am glad that you have had such a solemn Trial, that all People may know how great a Crime this of Fortune-stealing is (which is Death by the Law) and may take Warning by you; it may be a great many People do not know how penal this Offence may be, but I hope your Trial may be a Means to deter others from making use of such wicked Practices. Your Offence hath been in a Nation where Property is better preserv'd than in any other Government in the World. Here it is Death for a Man to take away any Thing, though never so small, by way of Robbery: How much worse is it for you to take away the Child of a Man, and with her all that he hath gotten by his Industry all his Life-time, at once? This is most certainly a very great Offence against the Publick, being so great a Violation of Property; and the Injury you have done to this Woman is very great too, and cannot be repaired: All the Satisfaction that can be given, is by taking away the Lives of those Persons that were the Contrivers of it. You Haagen Swendsen have had the Privilege (the Law allows to Foreigners) of a Party-Jury; and I believe, had there been any room for a Jury to bring you in not Guilty, you had not been found Guilty; but the Fact was prov'd so plain upon you that they could not possibly avoid it. It is true, you insisted upon it that you were not present at her first taking, and that she gave her Consent to the Marriage. It is true, that you were not present when she was first taken, but there were strong Presumptions to conclude that you were privy and consenting to it, which will render you equally culpable as if you had been present. For when she was taken in Custody, she was brought to an House where Holt and you were seen together; Holt being the Man that set the Coach, and gave Directions to the Bailiffs when to seize her; and besides, you had a Licence prepar'd for your Marriage to her. These are very great Circumstances of your being privy to the first taking. But admitting you were not privy to the first taking, you were privy to her being in Custody under an Arrest, when you was brought to Bail this Woman; and Word was brought brought in that they were contented to take Bail, but excepted against your's; and when she was told by Sarah Baynton she must go to Newgate unless she marry'd you, you were present at all this; and this being done and acted whilst the first Force was continued upon her, is in Law a forceably taking; so that you are plainly guilty of a forceable taking. And then also, if that were necessary, of marrying of her by constraint, she being under Menaces, that if she would not marry you she must go to Newgate: You yourself were conscious, this was no such Consent as Marriage requires, since that Evening you made Application to a Justice of Peace to take an Affidavit from her that she had given her Consent. When you brought Witnesses to give an Account of your former Life and Conversation, that some Years since you were an able Merchant in your Country, one in great Credit, an ingenious Man, and of good Interest and Acquaintance there, I confess, I had great Commiseration for you, and thought that this Misfortune befel you upon the Account of your Acquaintance with this ill Woman; the Acquaintance with such a Woman will make a rich Merchant quickly poor, will soon reduce a wealthy Man to a Morfel of Bread. I am afraid that she hath been a very great Instrument in your Ruin.

And you Sarah Baynton, when you were ask'd to give an Account of what kind of Life you liv'd, it appear'd to be but a very sorry one indeed, so that I could not but conclude you to be a very lewd Woman. You had Wit and Parts enough which might have been of great Service to you, if you had lived honestly; but you made use of them to another End, and it is not fitting that you should live longer that cannot live better. You contrived and carried on all this wicked Design from first to last; and that you might the better perform it, you went to a civil House under the Character of a Gentlewoman, that came out of the Country about a Suit of Law. There you pretend to be a very good Woman, and seem to be much pleased with the Family, because they were sober People; but your Design was to entice and delude this young Woman. Whether your Design at the beginning was to commit this Fact, I cannot tell; but being not used to this Course of Life, you could not wear your Disguise long without Discovery; you began to be suspected and to be seen through; the Family was very willing to be rid of your Company; which you perceiving, you resolv'd you would Achieve your Design before you went. For that End you invite them into a Coach, promising to set them down where they were going; but instead of that, you employ Bailiffs to Arrest them; for you with your own Hand paid the Bailiff that was to do it; and after they were taken, you pretended to pity them. And when Mrs. Rawlins was at Mr. Hartwell's House, you pretended that you accidentally and providentially over-heard her Name mentioned in Mr. Hartwell's House, as you pass'd in the Street. You go into the House, and pity her Condition, and propose your Brother for her Bail; but instead of that, all your Design was to bring about this Marriage; and for that End you forced her Ring from her to get another made by it. It was you that told her she must go to Newgate unless she married your Brother; and after that forced her to Bed. From the Beginning to the End you carried on this wicked Design to the Ruin of this young Woman; you have a great deal to answer for. I have stated this Matter, that you may be satisfied that this Fact hath been proved against you both very fully, and therefore you can expect no other than an Award of the Punishment the Law requires, that is, Death. I hope you will reflect upon those evil Courses that have brought you to this End. You have but a short Time to live, and therefore it would be well for you to consider your Future State: You may have better Instructions for that than I can give you; therefore I will now proceed to the Sentence, which is,

That you shall go hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and that there you severally hang by your Necks until you are dead; and so the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Mr. Swendsen. My Lord, now I am bound to do this Woman Justice. She hath not been the Contriver of it. It was all done by my Direction; and for her sake I desire the Queen may know of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, that will clear up the Doubt to some of your Countrymen, who did think that you were not the Contriver of it.

Mr. Swendsen. I desire, my Lord, that the Matter may be represented to the Queen as favourable as you can.

Cl. of Arr. Sarah Baynton, Hold up thy Hand. Baynton. My Lord, I am with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. Let a Jury of Matrons be sent for. They are sent for. Upon the bearing of her Sentence she fell into Fits.

Cl. of Arr. You the Matrons of the Jury, shall view and diligently enquire, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence, whether Sarah Baynton be with Child, quick with Child, or not. So help you God.

The Names of the Jury of Matrons are as follow:

Mrs. Sarah Johnson .	Mrs. Sarah Webb .
Mrs. Christian Walker .	Mrs. Dorothy Mordit .
Mrs. Susannah Goff .	Mrs. Eliz. Guernella .
Mrs. Mary Herbert .	Mrs. Mary Rogers .
Mrs. Sarah Randol .	Mrs. Jane Smithson .
Mrs. Mary Vere .	Mrs. Margaret Leach .

L. C. J. Holt. You the Matrons are to consider well the Oath you have taken, which is diligently to enquire whether this Woman be quick with Child: If she be with Child, but not quick, you are to give your Verdict so; and if she be not quick with Child, then she is to undergo the Execution of the Sentence in convenient Time.

About half an Hour after the Jury of Matrons came in.

L. C. J. Holt. Are you agreed in your Verdict?
Answ. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Who shall say for you?

Answ. The Fore-Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you find the Prisoner to be with Child, with Quick Child or not?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes, my Lord, she is quick with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this your Verdict?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. And so you say all?

Answ. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Hark ye, Mrs. Baynton! These Women by their Verdict give you longer Time to prepare you for Death, and therefore I hope you will improve your Time, for the Judgment is past, and will be executed soon after your Delivery.

Sarah

Sarah Baynton was reprieved, but Haagen Swendsen was executed.

He made no Speech at the Place of Execution, but referr'd himself to the following Paper, which he left with the two Divines who attended him.

I Do believe the World will expect I should say, something for their Satisfaction. That I had a Design to have Mrs. Rawlins for my Wife is most true. I was told of her by a Neighbour and Friend of hers, and then made a further Enquiry, and found her Quality such as I might, without any Exceptions, presume to, her Father being the Son of a Tradesman; the next was, how to get into her Acquaintance; and not knowing how to be introduc'd, I prevail'd with, and persuaded Mrs. Baynton to take a Lodging in the same House with Mrs. Rawlins, by which Means I found easy Access to my Wishes, and was as welcome to the Family, as if I had been one of themselves. I had their Company on Board a Ship, where I gave them an Entertainment, and was invited to dine with them, and by degrees I possess'd my self of Mrs. Rawlins's Affection so far, that she seem'd uneasy without me, and frequently importun'd for my speedy Return, and oblig'd me to sit next to her at Table, saying, that if I did not, she would not eat, and treated me with many private Caresses, by which Lovers, who have not frequent Opportunity of speaking, do by Signs and Tokens express themselves.

I do declare that I had as good Reception as a Lover could wish for, and all the Encouragement imaginable; infomuch that nothing seem'd disagreeable to my Intentions, but all things did promise to facilitate my Design with Success, she herself having told me that she was at her own Disposal, and would marry to please her self.

My Familiarity with Mrs. Rawlins before my Marriage was so great, that there was no room left for me to practise Violence upon her; tho' I must say I was impatient of Delays, and wish'd for an Opportunity to accomplish my Desire.

But as for the unhappy Contrivance of the arresting Mrs. Rawlins, I had no share in it, but was persuaded to consent to it by Mr. H— and his Wife; and when the Intrigue was brought to Perfection, I comply'd, and laid hold of the Opportunity, in order to marry Mrs. Rawlins, which with little Difficulty, and less Persuasion, I accomplish'd; so having, without any Force or Violence, declar'd to the Minister that she was at her own Disposal, and free to marry me, which the the Minister declar'd in open Court, at my Trial.

After we had been in Bed, comes in one Mr. Bennet, a Constable, with some of Mrs. Rawlins's Relations, who requir'd me to go with them before a Justice of Peace; finding they had no Warrant, I refus'd to give Obedience to their Commands, which created some Dispute; and my Wife hearing the Noise, came out of the Bed-Chamber, desiring me to be quiet, and let her speak to them; which accordingly she did, in these express Words following, viz. Cousin, I have married this Gentleman with my own free Consent, he is my Husband, and this is my Wedding-Ring, shewing the Ring on her Finger: As for Mr. Busby, I will give him under my Hand he shall come into no Trouble, and what would you have more?

VOL. V.

Then said they, if it be so, then God bless you both together, and drank a Flask of Wine or two with me, and then departed; they were no sooner gone, but I asked her, whether she would be willing to appear and declare what she had said to her Friends to a Justice of Peace, and she said she would with all her Heart; then we went to Mr. Justice Baber, in York-Buildings, and declar'd the same to him; he told her he would take Notice of her Face, and bid her stick to that.

The next Day, about eleven of the Clock, there came a Constable with a Warrant, and carried us before the Recorder, unto whom she said the same thing over and over. Then said the Recorder, Alas! Child, they made you drunk, and you did not know what you did. To which she answer'd, That there were a great many there present that knew her Life and Conversation, that she did not use to be drunk: And when the Recorder could not prevail with her, he conceiv'd, that my being personally with her, oblig'd her to stand so firm to her Marriage; he then order'd me to be pull'd away by Force from her, at which she fell a weeping; how she afterwards was lectur'd by her Friends, was sufficiently attested by my Prosecution, Trial, and Sentence; and after I was committed to Newgate, I was remov'd by a Habeas Corpus to the Queen's-Bench Bar, there to be arraign'd, and pleaded Not Guilty to the Indictment. I pleaded for longer Time to prepare for my Trial, but was allow'd but four Days; when I was brought to my Trial, I moved for a Council to plead my Cause, as being a Stranger, and not acquainted with the Laws of England; my Life being thus at Stake, a powerful Interest against me, and the Court not for me, render'd my Case both despicable and deplorable; and as for some of my Evidence, I do verily believe they were bribed by the adverse Party, others taken off by sinister Art, and some hinder'd by Force from appearing in Court for me. As for Justice Baber, he shew'd himself but coldly in giving his Testimony, and said, that my Wife did confess before him, that she was marry'd by her own free Consent; but at the same Time he added, that she seem'd very much disorder'd: As for that Gentleman, I forgive him, and shall leave God to be Judge between him and me.

It is to be noted, That my Wife did not deny, in open Court, that she had made the Declaration aforesaid, of her Marriage, to Mr. Bennet, the Constable, and others, that Night we were married: But said, she did not know what she did when she said so, and many other Things she positively, upon Oath, denied at my Trial; which makes me have Pity upon her poor Soul, considering she confess'd many Things at Mrs. Baynton's Trial, which she denied upon Oath at mine: The World may see what it is to be a Stranger, and unacquainted with the Laws; nay, I my self heard my Wife openly confess in Court, in Mrs. Baynton's Trial, That there was a young Lady in the World, who was at her own Disposal, that wish'd me a good Wife; and at last confess'd she herself was the Person.

Amongst my many Misfortunes, I was represented by my Wife's Friends to the Court, to be a Sharper and a Bully; but I call'd in, and produc'd several Gentlemen of Repute, to give Account of my Life and Conversation, who have accordingly attested the Honesty of my Principles by my Practice.

"It is further observable how my Jury disagreed about the Verdict. There was one of them, Mr. Erasmus Johnson, a Person to me altogether a Stranger; for I declare, in the Presence of Almighty God, that I do not remember to have been in his Company three Times in my Life, except in Church: This Mr. Johnson alledg'd, that none of the Evidence did prove, or swear, that I had any Hand in the Arrest, nor used any Force or Violence to the Gentlewoman, but she confess'd the Marriage, which was prov'd by several Witnesses; which render'd my Case so hard, that the said Mr. Johnson insisted upon it to have me discharged, according to the Dictates of his Conscience, but at last he was over-ru'd.

"Since my Conviction I have us'd all the Means I could to procure my Pardon; but finding little or no Probability of it, I am now going to beg for Entrance at the Gate of Mercy in Heaven, which I beseech God to open for me.

"I expected my Trial should be published, that the World might see my Treatment; what I have done, and what I have left undone in my Case; but I am inform'd it may not be printed. I have said this only to do my self Justice, altho' I could say a great deal more of Moment to the Purpose; but my Time being so very short and precious, I must employ that little Time to the saving of my most precious Part, my Soul.

"I humbly beseech Mankind to believe me; and that I have said, or shall say, are the Words of a dying Man; this is not the Time for me to equivocate, nor to go out of the World with a Lie in my Mouth: I do therefore declare, and call the great omnipotent God of Heaven to my Witness, that I have asserted nothing, to the best of my Knowledge, but the whole Truth, nor utter'd a Syllable out of Malice, or Bitterness of Heart, against any Person whatsoever; but so far from it, I do frankly forgive all my Enemies, and beseech God to put it in their Hearts to repent of their Sins.

"As for my Wife, I am so much in Charity with her, that I cannot believe the Severity extended to me, did altogether proceed from her self, but her consenting to spill my Blood, makes the Guilt her own. God of his great Mercy give her a true Sense of her Crimes, that the heavy Judgment hanging over her Head may not descend on her.

"As for Mrs. Baynton, who is likewise under Sentence of Death on the same Account with my self, as I have in the Court, so do I now again positively declare she had no Hand in the Intrigue of my Marriage, any more than what she did by my special Direction and Persuasion; for Mrs. Baynton was wholly a Stranger to Mrs. Rawlins, until the unhappy Contrivance of my Marriage made them acquainted, neither did I know Mrs. Baynton till June last past; tho' some have been pleas'd to say that I kept her Company for three Years, and have had two Children by her; all which I declare is a wrong Notion, and nothing of Truth in it. The only Load I have on my Conscience is her Death, of which I am the unhappy Instrument. I beseech God in his Mercy to move the Queen's Clemency to spare her Life, that her Blood may not rise in Judgment against me.

"As for my self, I am now a going to suffer an ignominious Death, for a Crime which my own Conscience doth not accuse me of, but the Rigour of the Law hath made it my unpardonable Crime. And as I forgive all Mankind, so I beg Forgiveness of those, whom, thro' Inadvertency, or otherwise, I have injur'd or offended, beseeching God, of his great Mercy, to vouchsafe them Forgiveness whensoever they shall ask it.

"My great Comfort is, that I have reconcil'd my self with my God, and that I die in my natural Senses, and that short Time I have had since my Trial, I trust in my Saviour, I have not mispent.

"And now, O Lord God! of thy infinite Goodness hear my Petition, pardon my Offences, and forgive me my Sins, forgive mine Enemies, and lay not my Blood to their Charge, but grant that a sincere Repentance may wash away their Guilt.

"I am now going out of this Vale of Calamity and Sin to my eternal Repose, where, thro' the Merits of my Saviour Jesus Christ, I hope to see God in his Glory; and so I conclude, O Lord receive my Soul into thy boundless Mercy, for the Merits of my Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

The King against Richard Hathaway, for an Impostor.

Surry ff. The King's Attorney General has exhibited an Indictment against the Defendant, by the Name of Richard Hathaway, of Southwark, in the County of Surry, Labourer; and the Information sets forth, That the said Richard Hathaway being a Person of an evil Name and Fame, and an Impostor, and contriving and maliciously intending, one Sarah Morduck, the Wife of one Edward Morduck of Southwark, in the said County, Waterman, who for the whole Course of her Life was an honest and pious Woman, and not a Witch, nor using Witchcraft, Incantment, Charm or Sorcery, to bring into the Danger of losing her Life, the 11th Day of February, in the 12th Year of the Reign of the King, at Southwark, in the said County, in the Presence and Hearing of divers Persons, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and knowingly, and as a false Impostor, did pretend and affirm himself, by the said Sarah, to be bewitched, and by the Occasion of that pretended Witchcraft, he could not eat, and by the Space of Ten Weeks to fast, and was affected with divers Diseases; and that he by drawing Blood from the said Sarah, by scratching, should be freed from the said pretended Witchcraft; that the said Richard Hathaway did then, and there, with Force and Arms, scratch the said Sarah, and did draw the Blood of her, the said Sarah, by scratching; and thereupon, he, the said Richard Hathaway, did then, and there, falsely, maliciously, and knowingly, by affirming himself to be freed from the said Diseases, by drawing the said Blood, whereas in Fact and in Truth, the said Richard Hathaway was never bewitched, and had not fasted for the Time aforesaid, nor for any great Time; and that whereas in Truth and in Fact, the said Richard, then, and there, well knew himself not to be bewitched by the said Sarah, to the great Contempt of our Lord the King and his Laws, to the evil and wicked Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Mr. Raymond. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Information sets forth, That the Defendant being a Person of an evil Fame, and an Impostor, and maliciously contriving to take away the Life of one Sarah Morduck, the Wife of Edward Morduck, who always was a good Woman, and not a Witch, nor using Witchcraft, the 11th Day of February, in the 12th Year of the Reign of the late King, at Southwark, in the Presence and Hearing of divers Persons, did falsely, devilishly, and knowingly, and as a false Impostor, pretend and affirm himself to be bewitched by the said Sarah, and that by reason thereof he could not Eat, but had fasted for ten Weeks, and was also affected with divers Diseases, and that by his drawing Blood from the said Sarah, by scratching, he should be freed from his said pretended Bewitching: That the Defendant did thereupon scratch the said Sarah, and did draw the Blood of the said Sarah by such his scratching, and thereupon he falsely affirmed, that by drawing the said Blood he was freed from the said Diseases; whereas in Truth and Fact he was never bewitched, nor had he fasted as aforesaid, and he knew himself not to be bewitched by the said Sarah, in Contempt of the said late King, and his Laws, and against the Peace of his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. Conyers. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: This is an Information against Richard Hathaway, for a Cheat, for endeavouring to impose upon the People a Belief, that he had been bewitched by one Sarah Morduck, and that as an Effect of her pretended Witchery, he vomited up Nails and Pins, and that he could not speak, nor open his Eyes, and that great Noises were heard in the House where he lay, and there could be no Remedy for him, but by his scratching and fetching Blood of this Sarah Morduck; and by this Means the poor Woman has been very much abused by her Neighbours, reputed a Witch, and brought to a Trial for her Life as such; but that there was nothing but a malicious Design in it, will appear by the Evidence that will be produced. This Richard Hathaway was for some Time an Apprentice with one Welling, a Blacksmith, in Southwark. About September last was Twelve-month, he gave out that he was bewitched, and he went to this Woman's House and scratched her; and the Pretence was, that scratching and fetching Blood of her recovered him. The Minister of the Parish, Dr. Martin, hearing that it was noised about, that the Defendant had been relieved by scratching Morduck, came and visited him. He could neither speak nor see, as he pretended; but understood what was said to him, and gave Assent to what was proposed to him, by holding up of his Hands. Dr. Martin tells him, he heard this Woman had bewitched him, and that his scratching of her was the Means by which he was relieved; and that he desired to see the Experiment himself, and therefore had brought Sarah Morduck there, and desired him to hold up his Hand, if he understood what he said; which he did. Dr. Martin had another Woman there at that time (tho' that was concealed from Hathaway) and Sarah Morduck, by the Doctor's Direction, spoke to him, and came to his Bed-side, and the Defendant was by the Doctor bid to scratch her. When he came to scratch, the Doctor took the Hand of the other Person, and put it into the Defendant's Hand, and as soon as he had scratched the other Person his Eyes began to open, and he could speak; and immediately it was made known to himself and the Company, that the Person he had scratched was another Person, and not Sarah Morduck. But notwithstanding this, he was not satisfied, but still there was a Prosecution of Sarah Morduck for a Witch, and she was forced for some Time to go and reside in London: And there the Rabble got about her and abused her; of which Complaint was made to a Magistrate in the City, and Sarah Morduck was had before him, and then Hathaway was sent for, and there again scratched her; and it was so far credited there, notwithstanding the Account given by Dr. Martin of the Experiment he made, that the poor Woman is committed for a Witch, and afterwards brought to a Trial for her Life; and upon the Trial it appeared plainly, that all this was a Contrivance, and there was no Evidence to charge her with the bewitching this Man; and after a long hearing, upon a full Evidence, the Jury acquitted her, and the Man was committed for a Cheat. But notwithstanding this Acquittal, he still goes on to persuade People, that he was bewitched; that he had fasted several Days together, and could not eat; and then for a further Conviction that he was an Impostor, and only endeavoured maliciously and falsely to impose this Belief on People, he is about the Beginning of last November committed to the Care of a Chirurgion, one Mr. Kensley, where for Two Days he did not eat; but afterwards his Stomach began to come to him, and when he could get any Victuals privately, he had a very good Stomach, and could Eat and Drink till he was drunk. And it was contrived, that Holes were made into the Room where he was, and the Maid that looked after him was directed to give him Notice, that she would help him privately to Victuals; and from the second Day after he was there, till the eleventh Day, he did constantly eat every Day, tho' he pretended he fasted all that Time, and had done so for fourteen Weeks, and he was seen to eat thro' those Holes. All this, and much more, will be fully proved by the Witnesses. So that there has been a great Affront to the publick Justice of the Nation by this Proceeding, many having abetted it, and they have put up Bills in several Churches to pray for him against the Trial, and gathered Money to support him in this false and malicious Pretence.

Mr. Brodrick. My Lord, the discovering and punishing such a Cheat as this, is highly necessary; and and not only for the vindicating the publick Justice of the Nation, but for the Sake of Religion it self, which suffers by nothing more, than by the countenancing of indirect Practices, made use of upon a Pretence of maintaining and supporting its Credit. Religion has in it self such genuine and native Truth, as must work Conviction upon the Understandings of all Persons, who allow themselves Leisure to consider it without Prejudice: But when Tricks and little Arts are carried on for a Time, and attain a general Credit, and appear afterwards to be what are called Pious Frauds, they do far more Mischief than all the Good proposed by such Practices can make amends for. For when Men who are sceptically inclined, find that the Generality of Mankind run away with Stories of this Nature, and those Facts afterwards prove undeniably false, they carry their Doubts on much too far, and are apt to conclude, that they cannot securely rely upon the Relation of others, and general Consent of Mankind, for the Certainty of any Fact whatsoever. It is therefore the Duty of all Persons, that are concerned for Religion in general, to endeavour to detect such Practices which weaken one of its most solid Foundations.

And, my Lord, we conceive this Prosecution very necessary, in order to the vindicating the Justice of the Nation. Here was a Woman that underwent a solemn Trial, and upon a full Hearing was acquitted, yet afterwards, notwithstanding the thorough Examination of the Fact, and such an Evidence given as convinced every unprejudiced Hearer of the Innocence of the Defendant, and the Malice and Hypocrisy of the Accuser, such a Spirit did reign, that it was represented that the Accuser had hard Measure; and not only the Jury, but the Court too, were reflected on: Nay, it went so far, that after the Innocence of the Woman appeared by her Acquittal, a Magistrate (whose Name the Witnesses will disclose in their Evidence) gave publick Countenance to this Impostor (for by that Name I will venture to call him) and so far gave Credit to him, that when the poor Woman was abused by the Rabble, and her Life being in Danger, she made Application to that Magistrate for Protection; who, instead of affording it to her, encouraged her Prosecutors, as if she had really been guilty of the Witchcraft laid to her Charge; and considerable Collections were made for this Man, to support his Spirits under the Disappointment he met with in her being acquitted.

This Prosecution was necessary too, upon the Account of the poor Woman, who, unless some Check be put to the unruly Proceedings of unthinking People, is not yet safe in her House, but in Danger to be torn in Pieces: And it was thought most proper, that this Matter should be thoroughly examined in this Place, where the Scene of his counterfeiting, for the most part, did lie; that prepossessed People might be Ear Witnesses of the Fairness of the Proceeding, and that all Persons might have an Opportunity, if they thought fit, of offering any thing fit to be offered in his Defence.

My Lord, we need not trouble the Court with Evidence tending to prove, that the accused Person is not guilty of Witchcraft: She is acquitted of that, and it ought not to be suffered to be made a Dispute. But our Evidence will go beyond that, not only that there was no Colour or Foundation for the Charge on her of being a Witch; but that the Defendant did maliciously, without any Ground, and contrary to his own Knowledge, charge her with the having bewitched him. And I think our Evidence, all through, will prove this Matter fully upon him, that he was not bewitched, nay, that he did not believe himself to be so, yet charged and prosecuted her.

The first part of his pretended Witchcraft shewed it self, by his vomiting Pins: How that Business was managed, and how he was detected in it, the Witnesses will declare. And though we are not obliged to endeavour the giving an Account of what it was that induced him first to undertake this Imposture, I think it will appear by the Evidence, that he had some Aim and Prospect of Gain to himself. For, upon his first pretending to vomit Pins, we shall prove he had prepared a Narrative of his own being Bewitched; and he himself carried it to a Printer, that so he might bring a Concourse of People to him: But the Printer being a Man of some Understanding, look'd on him to be a Cheat, and would not meddle with the Copy. He practised this Trick of vomiting Pins several Times; but pretending to it once, before one who did not take every thing upon Trust, but was curious enough to observe nicely, and search him; after some Resistance, several Rows of Pins were found in his Pocket.

The next Discovery of his Imposture, was the Affair wherein Dr. Martin was concerned; who brought two Women to him: The Particulars of which having been already opened, I'll not repeat them. The Doctor put an innocent Deceit upon him, but it was in order to disclose a vile Imposture. When the Woman was brought to him to be scratched, being conscious to himself, how little real Effect the barbarous Experiment would have upon him, the whole Company observed, that he felt three or four Times from her Hand to her Elbow, before he scratched, that he might be sure it was a Woman's Hand: And when he had scratch'd, and felt Blood, his Eyes were opened, tho' it was the wrong Woman.

Another Instance of his acting a Part, with Design to impose upon the World, was, when he was carried from the King's-Bench to Mr. Kenfey's. It was necessarily to be imagined, that if he eat or drank nothing, nothing would come from him, either by Stool or Urine. He considered this, and for fear it should be taken notice of, that he discharged himself after so long a Fast as he pretended; having Occasion to make Water, he found the Lid of a Box, and making Water in it, put it out of Sight, on the Bed's Tetter; and the first Discovery of his Counterfeiting at Mr. Kenfey's, was by the dropping of that Water on the Cloaths of the Bed. After he had been two Days there (during which Time he really did not eat) Mr. Kenfey not knowing but that his Complexion might incline him to such a Sullenness, as to starve himself, rather than directly confess his Cheat, having first examined his Mouth and Throat, and finding nothing there but as it was in all other Men, and that he had not only all other Organs, but that of swallowing, without any Obstruction, as other People had, thereupon he framed this Design: He took Occasion to pretend a Quarrel with the Maid-servant who lived in his House, within the hearing of the Defendant, and told her, she was as very a Hypocrite as this Fellow; and after warm Words on both Sides, and a seeming Resolution by her that she would quit her Service, the Master went away, leaving the Maid and the Defendant together. She, to insinuate her self into the Defendant, said, Her Master was an odd Kind of a Man, a dangerous Man, therefore she would not have the Defendant Defendant take any thing from him ; and said, she would take care to supply him whilst he staid in the House. Then his Stomach came to him very readily, and he was so far from being unable to drink, that he drank Brandy and other Liquors to Excess, and this for several Days. But still those in the House being wary, thought it might be pretended by People who were very willing to believe him, that this happened by the Charin's being dissolved, and that he was unable to eat before ; and therefore it was thought advisable to bring in several Persons of Reputation, who should observe him through a Hole fit for the Purpose : Who, after they had seen him eat, examined him how long he had been a Faster ? And he made Signs, that he had fasted twelve Weeks, and clung up his Belly as a Proof of his Emptiness, according to his common Practice, though he had in their Sight, just before, eaten a plentiful Meal. So that, Gentlemen, it is evident, that what he did was done maliciously, and with a Design to deceive and impose upon the World. After this, there being sufficient Proof of the Imposture, it was thought fit to bring him before a Court of Justice ; thereupon this Information was exhibited against him : And if we prove it, I doubt not but that you, Gentlemen of the Jury, will do that Right to the Government, and to Religion, as to find him guilty of it, that he may be brought to the Punishment that such a Crime deserves.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I humbly pray your Lordship's Indulgence of the same Side ; and beg Leave to observe, this Man was formerly troubled with Fits, and there was a Design laid by him and his Friends to create a Belief in People, that those Fits were the Effect of Sorcery and Witchcraft ; but whether to get Money, or take away the Life of the Woman, or both, I submit to your Lordship's Judgment upon the Evidence. 'Tis certain, they proceeded so far as to bring her to a Trial, and did what they could to take away her Life. And the better to carry on their Designs, and to prepare the World to believe the Impostor, we shall shew, that when he had these Fits, it was industriously published, that he was bewitch'd, and that it was by this Woman ; and if he could but scratch her, he would be well. Dr. Martin, the Minister of the Parish, hearing of it, came to him ; and to make an Experiment to discover the Imposture, brought another Woman with the pretended Witch, and said to Hatbaway, if you think the scratching this Woman, meaning Morduck the pretended Witch, will do you any good, hold up your Hand : Which he did. Then the Doctor put the other Woman's Hand into his ; and although at that Time he pretended to be Blind and Dumb, and he and his Friends would have had it thought, that he lay under the strongest of the old Woman's Charms ; yet he was apprehensive of what he did, and so jealous lest he should be imposed upon, and thereby his Imposture discovered, that he felt several Times from the Wrist to the Elbow, to discover whether it was the Arm of the pretended Witch or no, before he would begin scratching ; and then believing it to be hers (it being much about the same Size) fell to scratching, and being told he had fetched Blood, his Eyes were immediately opened, and his Speech restored.

The Doctor thinking every body was convinced of this Imposture, and believing the poor Woman would be quiet for the future, went away.

But notwithstanding this Detection, the People were dissatisfied ; and Welling, the Master of Ha- ibaway, and others, being angry at the Discovery, pursued the Woman with more Malice than before : Where-ever they found her, they cried out, A Witch, and used her so barbarously, she was forced to leave Southwark, where she had lived many Years, and all her Employment, which had been profitable to her, and to go live in London.

Their Malice pursued her thither ; and there Hatbaway, with Soldiers and others, in a riotous Manner, got into the House where she lodged, and would have broke open the Door where she was ; but a Constable being called in, the Soldiers went off, and Hatbaway was carried before an Alderman of the City ; and the poor Woman and her Friends acquainted the Alderman of the riotous and illegal Proceedings, and prayed that Justice might be done upon them. But instead of punishing them, he was pleased to say, there was too great Provocation for what they had done ; and giving Credit to the Accusation of Hatbaway against the Woman, ordered her to be carried up Stairs to be searched, to see if she had any Teats, or other Signs of a Witch, and permitted her to be scratched by Hatbaway, and then committed her for a Witch ; refusing 500 l. Bail, and dismissed Hatbaway.

The Woman afterwards was brought to a Trial at Guilford Assizes, and was acquitted, and he was committed for a Cheat. And to make more ample Discovery of the Imposture, he was taken to the House of Mr. Kensley a Chirurgeon, and there he was obstinate, and would not eat for the first two Days ; and a Quarrel was feigned between Mr. Kensley and his Maid, he saying she was as bad an Hypocrite as Richard Hatbaway, and gave her Warning to be gone. The Maid seemed very angry with her Master, and said to Hatbaway, Whatever you do, do not eat any thing that is given you by my Master or his Brother, for they are your Enemies ; and promised she would help him privately to what he wanted. Whereupon he thinking she had been his Friend, and that he was safe in her Hands, took Meat and Drink from her from Day to Day, and eat heartily, and drank so very plentifully of Strong Beer and Brandy, and was so merry, that he play'd on the Tongs, and Danced, and shew'd Tricks before the Maid ; but when any body else offered him Meat or Drink, he refused it, making Signs that he could not swallow, and signify'd to them, that he had fasted all the fourteen Days that he had been at Kensley's, and that he had fasted many Weeks before. And as to vomiting Pins, it will appear to you, that he carried Papers of Pins in his Pocket, to make use of on Occasion. But when he vomited in a Basin, and his Hands were kept down, and he not permitted to carry them up to the Basin, there was not one Pin in the Basin.

I will not trouble your Lordship with a Detail of all the particular Instances of this Cheat, but will call our Witnesses ; and when we have proved the several Matters that have been opened, there will be no Room to doubt but that the Defendant is an Impostor, and the greatest this Age hath produced.

Mr. Conyers. We will first call Dr. Martin (who was sworn) we will go on with our Evidence in the Course of Time. The first Time that Notice was taken in the Parish of this Business, was in September was Twelve-Month. Dr. Martin, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account, Whether you know Richard Hatbaway, and when was the first Discourse of this Witchery.

Dr. Martin. February last was Twelve-Month, (the ninth Day, to the best of my Remembrance) I came came to Church in the Afternoon, and after the Curate was gone into the Desk to read Prayers, I was going into the Pew ; but hearing a great Hurly-burly in the Church, I sent the Sexton to know what was the Occasion of it. He brought Word that there was a Witch in the Church ; so the Curate could not go on in reading Prayers ; and the Sexton went and brought in one Sarah Morduck to me, and after her came a great many of the People into the Vestry ; so that tho' it be pretty large, it was presently filled. And this Sarah Morduck came up to me, and told me what was the Occasion of her being brought there. I ask'd her how she had behav'd her self amongst her Neighbours, that should give such Occasion to deal thus with her. She began to cry, and said, she had given no Occasion for it. I told her, I had nothing to do to enquire into the Business, but bid her continue in the Vestry, the whole Congregation being so much disturbed, that they would go out of the Church if she staid in it. So I turned every body out of the Vestry, and locked her in. And Sermon being ended, I came into the Vestry, but found she was gone ; and upon Enquiry, I understood the Reason was this, The Sexton told me, that she said, if she staid till all the People went out, she should be torn in Pieces, and begg'd of him to let her out while the Psalm was singing after Sermon, that she might go away undiscerned, and accordingly she went. Afterwards many of my Parishioners made Application to me to go to Richard Hathaway, who was supposed to be bewitched ; and told me, that it was taken very ill that I had deferr'd it so long. Upon this I went to him the next Day ; and meeting his Master below Stairs, I asked him what Condition his Servant was in. He said, he was Blind and Speechless, and was a very dismal Object. I said, I desired to be excused, for I did not love to see any dismal Sight. But he said, he was very sensible, and knew every one by their Voice. And with that, I went into the Room, and his Master (speaking to Richard Hathaway) said, Mr. Martin is come to see you. Says I, Richard, I am come to see you, and if you know me hold up your Hand : He did so, and took me by the Hand and kiss'd it. I ask'd him whether I should pray with him in the Prayers of the Church, and if he desired it, I bid him hold up his Hand : He did so, and I prayed with him, and he did seem to be affected with it, and lifted up his Hands several Times. Afterwards I took my Leave of him, and went down ; and I discoursing with his Master for some Time, I asked him what he thought was the Reason of it ; he said, an evil Tongue ; and a bad Woman, Sarah Morduck, had bewitched him. But how do you know that ? His Master then told me he had scratch'd her, and found Good by it ; and said, he was utterly undone by it, and if he did not speak to the Church-wardens to take him off his Hands, he should be ruin'd. And hearing of this Scratching, it came into my Head to try an Experiment too ; so I went away, but without discovering my Intentions. And about Ten a-Clock at Night, to prevent Jealousies, I went to the House where Sarah Morduck lodged, and found she was gone to Bed. I left Word that I desired to speak with her the next Day : But instead of her coming to me, her Brother, Mr. Hearne, came to me, and thanked me for preserving his Sister from the Mob. I gave him the Reason why we did that, and I told him then what I intended to do. He answer'd me, I am afraid my Sister will be so silly that it will fail in the Execution. I bid him leave that to me, I would give such Directions in the Matter, that it was impossible for it to miscarry : So he left me to my Liberty to do what I thought fit. Then, says I, when I send for her, do you come with her. I went to the House where Hathaway lay, and went into the Room, where he lay with his Eyes fast shut, and seemingly Speechless. I spoke to him, I am informed you have received Benefit by scratching Sarah Morduck formerly, now if I can get this Woman for you to scratch her, Do you believe by scratching her you shall receive any Benefit ? If you do hold up your Hand : So he did ; and by and by there came a Message that Mr. Hearne and the Witch were come. I then desired Mr. Bateman, whom I brought with me for that Purpose, to sit by the Bed-side while I went down, lest any might inform him what was said, or he might over-hear any thing spoken below. So he sat there, and I went down, and I bid them let in as many as would come in ; and when the Room was full, the Door was lock'd. I had before met with a poor Woman, whom I ordered to follow me, who received Alms of the Parish, designing she should be the Person the Experiment should be try'd on. I told them I design'd to try another Woman, and I will make him believe he scratches the Witch. The Answer was, This will signify nothing, Wellings's Wife said, he had scratched another Woman, and it signified nothing. Now this was, to the best of my Remembrance, one Willoughby, who is a very big Woman, and very much unlike Sarah Morduck : But I desired the Satisfaction to see it done my self ; upon which it was consented to. Then I ask'd the Woman I brought about it ; I told her I would give her a Shilling if she would let this Man scratch her : She flew off, and said she would not suffer it for all the World. At last somebody said, here is a Woman will suffer her self to be scratch'd ; and this was one Johnson. I ask'd her if she would suffer her self to be scratch'd ; she said she would, if there would come no Damage by it. Says I, whatever Damage you sustain, I will make it good to you ; and you being about the Size of Sarah Morduck, are a very fit Person. She did decline it for some Time, but at last she consented ; and after some Instructions given to her and Morduck, we went up together with many of the Neighbours. Tho' you cannot see, says I, to Richard Hathaway, you can hear that there are many People in the Room ; now, before all these People, Do you believe that Sarah Morduck has done you this Mischief ? If you do, hold up your Hand. He did so. Do you believe you shall be relieved by scratching her ? If you do, hold up your Hand. He did hold up his Hand. Sarah Morduck, do you speak to him, that he may know you are the Person. Says she, What is the Matter with you ? Do you believe this Woman, said I, to be the Person that has bewitched you ? If you do, hold up your Hand. He held up his Hand. Then ask'd Sarah Morduck, are you willing this Man should scratch you ? Yes, with all my Heart, he shall have my Heart's Blood, if it will do him any Good. Then, says I, pray give me your Hand. Here it is. And instead of taking her Hand, I took Johnson's, and clapt it into his ; and I did observe, that two or three Times he felt from her Wrist to her Elbow ; and I said, I have something else to do than to wait on you (and I spoke to him somewhat eagerly) if you will not scratch, I will be gone. Then he scratch'd her, and she whisper'd me in the Ear, she believ'd she should faint. I saw he had razed her Skin, and I said, you have drawn Blood, and you may be satisfy'd. With that he left off, and turned on his Back in his Bed. I turn'd out Johnson immediately mediately, and I and Morduck stood together, and he lay still for some time; but I saw nothing would do, if I did not work him up. Now, says I, I would fain see how his Eyes are now; come some of you, look, do not his Eyes twinkle? With that both his Eyes were open as mine are now, and he caught hold of the Apron of Sarah Morduck, and look'd her in the Face. Then I told him his Mistake; and Johnson came in with her Arm bleeding. Says I this is the Woman you scratcht, you have not touch'd Sarah Morduck's Arm, not fetch'd one Drop of Blood from her. The Fellow upon this seem'd very much cast down. Now, says I, give way to no Humours, and go about your Business, and serve God and your Master. Then I went down, and several People were satisfy'd. Well, says I to Welling, your Man's Eyes are open now. It's well, says he, if his Eyes continue open. He can speak and see too now. I do not know, says he, it is strange if he should do well after this. Farewel, said I; and I went into London. Upon my Return, about Five-Clock, I enquir'd about him, and found there was a greater Mob in the House than before; and I was accosted at my first coming in by the Master and Mistress of that Fellow: What have you done? you have ruin'd both me and my Family—

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?

Dr. Martin. The Master and Mistress of this Fellow. Why, What Hurt have I done you? You have given it out to be a Cheat. Did you get any Money by it? No, I never did expect it. But pray go and look on him now, he is in a worse Condition than he was before. Here hath been two Doctors, and they will take their Oath that he is bewitch'd. So I went away; but as I went out, I was stop't by Johnson. She cries out, What have you done? What is the Matter, said I, Does your Arm fester? No; but this wicked Woman has spread abroad that by scratching me he was relieved, and she is not the Witch, but I am the Witch; and it had reach'd her Husband's Ear, and he was become so jealous of her, that he would not have any thing to do with her. I went away after this, and going home, met her Husband, and gave him all the Satisfaction I could, that his Wife was no Witch. And I was inform'd the next Day, that Sarah Morduck had been dragg'd again to the House, some time after I went away, and brought to Hathaway's Bedside, and he scratch'd her, and his Eyes were open'd, and he eat and drank, and walk'd about. Upon this, I sent one Evening to him to come to me; and I took him into my Study, and said, What is the Meaning of it, that you make such a Trouble in the Parish, to condemn this Woman for Witchery? I see no Reason for it. Says he, she has done me a great deal of Hurt; said Hathaway, she has bewitch'd me. He said, that was the Woman had done him all the Prejudice he labour'd under. Then says I, you are a poor sort of Fellow, you must get your Living by your Labour; now you had better go into the Country out of her Reach. No, Sir, says he, I am bound Apprentice to my Master; and if I go, I shall be as bad there as I am here: And seeing I was bound here, this Parish must keep me; and if I should go into the Country, they will send me back again. Why will you not try? No, I will not. Do you not believe I am bewitch'd? No, I do not. Then, says he, I may as well not believe what you say in the Pulpit; I may say to you, as our Saviour said to the Jews, Tho' you see Miracles, you will not believe. Whereupon, I turn'd him away, and did not think I should have had any thing more to do with him. But about Easter last, Sir Thomas Lane sent to me, to desire me to come to him; the Witch being then got into London for Shelter.

I went accordingly, and when I came, I found Hathaway, his Master, and several others there. I found him looking briskly, and eating heartily, and I ask'd the meaning of it. It was answer'd, That before Sir Thomas Lane, he had drawn Blood of Sarah Morduck, and that had brought him to himself. I sent in my Name to Sir Thomas Lane, and he sent for me in. There was Sir Owen Buckingham, and I think, Dr. Hamilton. There were several People examined, while I was there, about this Person; and after all Sir Thomas Lane desired me to tell what I knew in this Matter. I gave an Account of what I have done here. Says Sir Thomas Lane, Richard Hathaway, Do you know that Gentleman? Yes. How? I have seen him in the Pulpit. What, no where else? Did not you see him by your Bedside? No. Was not I with you at your Bedside? No. All this while he was eating Bread and Cheese; till Sir Thomas Lane spoke to him, Lay by your Bread and Cheese, and be not so unmannerly. Says I, this is very unaccountable, that he should not know me; and yet he had said, that after Mr. Martin was gone, I was a great deal worse than I was before. This is a very unaccountable Thing, and I desire to know how this is consistent; therefore I do desire that his Master may be called in. And his Master was sent for, and Hathaway was going out to call him. No, says I, I desire he may not go out, I will call his Master myself. When Welling came in, I asked him whether he did not tell me that Hathaway was sensible from the Time I came to him? Yes, he was. Now I desire to know how these Things are consistent? And to put this out of doubt, that this Man did see me, the Woman stood at the side of the Bed by me near the Feet, and he took hold of her Apron readily. How can he come off in this Matter? Says Sir Thomas Lane, They tell you he had a most violent Fit after, and that made him forget what was done before. Another Question was ask'd Mr. Welling, You know you desired me to get this Servant of yours off your Hands, and that I would speak to the Churchwardens about it. Now I am inform'd, this Servant of yours was going to Goodman's-fields, and as he was going, the Press-masters met him, and he being a likely Fellow, they whipt him aboard. Is this true or no? Yes. And then you got a Letter, and went down and fetch'd him up. Yes. Then, says I, How come his Master to be so much concern'd to be rid of him as he pretended; and yet when he might have been rid of his Servant, would not take the Opportunity? To that Sir Owen Buckingham answer'd, It was only his Charity for him to fetch him from aboard; he could do no less considering his Condition: So I came away. In a little Time after, I heard that this Sarah Morduck was bound over to the Assizes, and I was subpoena'd to give my Evidence the last Assizes at Guildford.

Then the Indictment was read, upon which Sarah Morduck was Tried and Acquitted of Bewitching Richard Hathaway.

Mr. Coniers. Dr. Martin, pray go on.

Dr. Martin. I was subpoena'd to go to the Assizes, but before the Assizes came on, there were Bills put up in several Churches, and particularly at Christ-Church, where I hapned to preach. I read the Bill, A poor Man being afflicted by an evil Wo- man, man, now coming to her Trial, desires the Prayers of this Congregation. I went down to Guilford to the Trial; and when I came up, I thought all People would be satisfy'd with the Justice that was done. But when I came to Town, I was abused by many People, both openly and privately: You have the Blood of that innocent Man to lie at your Door; The Woman had been bang'd, if you had not saved her; The Judgments of God will fall on you. One Woman followed me to the Water-side, and said, I was the Occasion of the Ruin of that innocent Man; for she her self —

L. C. J. Holt. Who is this?

Dr. Martin. I do not know her, I only give Evidence of the Abuses I underwent.

Mr. Conyers. Do you know any thing after the Affizes, how he behaved himself?

Dr. Martin. No, Sir, I know nothing of that.

Mr. S. Jenner. What was done by other People, ought not to be given in Evidence.

Mr. Broderick. If this Man does prove an Impostor, it will aggravate his Crime, if the Consequence be mischievous, and the World be still abused with a Persuasion that he was bewitched.

Mr. S. Jenner. What was done by other People signifies nothing to us.

Mr. Broderick. This is very material, for it is a Confirmation that there was a Design carried on — (being interrupted).

L. C. J. Holt to Serj. Jenner. What other People did, must not affect this Man. But hear what Answer can be given, you that are the Queen's Council?

Mr. Broderick. The Charge of the Information is, That he, as an Impostor, pretended himself to be bewitched by Sarah Morduck, to deceive the World, and prejudice the Woman. And what can be more proper Evidence of that Charge, than that altho' he really was not bewitched, yet he had so prevailed upon the Opinions of the People, that they still believe him bewitched, and affronted Dr. Martin for being instrumental in her Acquittal: 'Tis all of a Piece, a Continuance of the same Imposture.

L. C. J. Holt. This Evidence is proper. He is indicted for a Cheat, for endeavouring to beget an Opinion in People by his fraudulent Practices that he is bewitched. Now, Dr. Martin says, the People were still possessed with such a Belief; and thereupon affronted him, because they thought he was instrumental in having the Woman acquitted. Now, Is not this an Evidence that his pretending himself to be bewitched, begat that Opinion in the People.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What the Doctor has said all along, has been of what others have done.

L. C. J. Holt. No, it has been what he saw himself. You say this Man's Evidence is most of what others have said. Not so, He has by himself prayed with him, and tried an Experiment with him upon a wrong Woman.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. He tells you what Welling said, and others; How does this affect my Client, what another Man, or another Woman said?

L. C. J. Holt. He was insulted upon the Account that Hathaway pretended himself to be bewitched, blind, speechless, and not able to eat.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, with Submission, other People's censuring the Doctor cannot be brought as Evidence against my Client, unless they make it appear that he had a Hand in it, unless he put them upon it.

L. C. J. Holt. What other People have said, abstractedly considered, ought not to affect Richard Hathaway; but if there be Evidence that Hathaway hath been guilty of Deceit, and a Design to deceive People, Will you not allow it be given in Evidence, that the People have been deceiv'd? And how came they to be deceiv'd, but by his feigning himself to be bewitched?

Juryman. Mr. Serjeant, If you have any Thing to object, we desire to hear what you say, for you speak so low we cannot hear you.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. I object to what the Doctor says by hearsay only.

Juryman. I believe that will be little considered by the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. The Information is for an Impostor and Cheat: Now what is that? A Cheat is a Design to impose on the Credulity of others, to induce them to believe a Thing that is not true. Now Dr. Martin's Evidence is what Hathaway did, and that People did believe him to be bewitched; and they abused Dr. Martin, and told him he had done very ill in the Case of this Woman; and if it had not been for him she had been condemned.

Dr. Martin. I have only one Thing more to say; it was reported that I had been bribed; I was told I had received several Guineas; that the Judge was bribed and the Jury bribed, and the Judge would not suffer the Woman to be searched, he being bribed.

Mr. Conyers. Doctor have you done?

Dr. Martin. I have.

Mr. Conyers. We will next call Mrs. Johnson who was scratched.

Mr. Broderick. Sir, I think you mentioned a Gentleman that you sent for up? Where is he?

Dr. Martin. He is here.

Mr. Broderick. What is his Name?

Dr. Martin. Mr. Bateman.

Mr. Broderick. We will call him to give an Account of that.

Mr. Conyers. We will first call this Woman. Mrs. Johnson, Were you at any Time with Dr. Martin at such Time as Hathaway pretended to be bewitched?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Conyers. Then pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know about it.

Mrs. Johnson. I went into the Room to see Sarah Morduck.

Mr. Conyers. What Room?

Mrs. Johnson. I was in the Room where Dr. Martin fetched her to be scratch'd; and Dr. Martin told me, he designed that he should scratch some other Woman; and he desired me to let him scratch me; but I denied him, and said, I was a Wife, and was not willing; at last I consented, and he told me I must not speak when I came into the Room where Hathaway was; and he brought me to the Fellow; and he said to him, If you think the Blood of this Sarah Morduck will do you any good, hold up your Hand. Which he did. Then he bid Sarah Morduck speak to him; which she did. Says he; Are you willing this Man should scratch you? She said, Yes: My Heart's Blood, if it will do him good. So with that he scratch'd me, and Sarah Morduck cry'd out. He had razed the Skin of my Arm, but no Blood came presently. Dr. Martin desired me not to speak, and I did not; the Blood came afterwards, but none then.

Mr. Conyers. Were you in the Room when the Doctor spoke to him?

Mrs. Johnson. I went into the other Room; Dr. Martin put me out before him.

Mr. Conyers.

Mr. Conyers. Was not you brought in again?

Mrs. Johnson. No, I went in of my own accord.

Mr. Conyers. In what Condition was he then?

Mrs. Johnson. He looked in this manner, his Eyes staring open.

L. C. J. Holt. Were his Eyes shut, when you first came and was scratch'd, or open?

Mrs. Johnson. No, they were fast shut.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he speak then?

Mrs. Johnson. No, he said nothing when I came back, till his Eyes were open, and then he said, O Christ Jesus, or O Lord Jesus.

Mr. Phipps. But did he feel your Arm before he scratch'd you?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes, over and over.

Mr. Conyers. Call William Bateman (Who appeared and was sworn). Pray give an Account what you know of this Defendant's vomiting Pins.

William Bateman. About a Twelve-month ago I went to see Richard Hathaway.

Mr. Conyers. Were you desired to go to him by Dr. Martin?

William Bateman. I can't remember that.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

William Bateman. In Pembroke-shire.

Mr. Conyers. Then you do not remember any thing that past then?

William Bateman. I do not say I do not remember any thing, but I do not remember whether Dr. Martin desired me to go to him.

Mr. Conyers. Give an Account of what you know about his vomiting Pins.

William Bateman. About this Time Twelve-month, on a Sunday Night, a Woman came to Dr. Martin's House to enquire for him. I went to the Door; and the Woman said, If Dr. Martin would but come now, he might see Hathaway vomit Pins. Can I see him, says I? Yes, says she. So I went immediately; and in the House there were little Chinks that I could see through; and I saw him walk about the House, and heard him talk to the People, and I stood some Time to hear him. At last I knock'd, and he came and let me in; and seeing me, he seemed to be troubled, and feigned himself to be in some Pain.

Mr. Raymond. You say you look'd through the Chink, How was he then? Repeat that.

William Bateman. He seem'd to be as well as he is now.

Mr. Raymond. What did you do then?

William Bateman. I knocked, and he let me in; and when I came where the Light was, he knew me; and I said to him, I hear you spew Pins. Yes, says he. Says I, Prithee let me see thee. So he sat on a low Seat, and they gave him something in a Cup; and by drinking this I was to see him vomit Pins; and he took some Drink, but as far as I could perceive he did not swallow any.

Mr. Conyers. What was the Effect of it?

William Bateman. He pretended then to be in an Agony, and vomited several Times, and there were Pins on the Ground. I had the Room swept very clean, and gave him the same again. He vomited again, and there were abundance of Pins on the Ground again. I believe he vomited fourteen or fifteen Times, and I believe there were some hundreds of Pins on the Ground; but I thought the Pins were dropt from one or other; and I took up some of them, and they were dry; and I took up two or three in a Chain; and I said, I believed those were the Pins that were shewn at our House.

VOL. V.

No, no, says his Master, these are not the same; and he did endeavour to satisfy me that he did vomit these Pins; so I desired he might have a Pot to vomit in; and I had a Pot brought and made very clean, and I searched his Mouth and found no Pins there; and I held the Pot to his Mouth close, and he often endeavoured to put his Hand to the Pot, and I would not suffer him, for I perceived his Hands often moving to his Pocket. He vomited several Times, and there were some Pins scattered on the Ground, but none in the Chamber-pot. Says I, these Pins do not come out of his Mouth; but the People were very pressing on me to believe they did.

L. C. J. Holt. Who were they?

William Bateman. They were all Strangers to me. Upon this I told them, I believed he had a Slight of Hand to convey them there, and I took hold of his Pocket. He stop't my Hand, and would not let me put my Hand into it. But after some Time, says one, Let him, let him search your Pocket. So I did, and took out several Things, and among the rest several Parcels of Pins, and I believe these were they that he convey'd on the Ground.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see him take them out of his Pocket?

William Bateman. No, but I took out several Hundred.

Juryman. What sort of Shape were they of?

William Bateman. They were of a very odd kind of Shape.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they strait or crooked?

William Bateman. They were crook'd in strange Figures, like them on the Floor.

Mr. Broderick. And he made a great Difficulty of letting you meddle with his Pocket?

William Bateman. Yes.

Mr. Phipps. And when you would not let him put his Hand to the Pot, there were none in the Pot, but only on the Ground?

William Bateman. Yes, Sir.

Juryman. Did you see any Pins come out of his Mouth?

William Bateman. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What became of the Pins you saw on the Ground; you say you saw abundance, what became of them?

William Bateman. They were swept away.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Who swept them away?

William Bateman. Some of the Family.

Juryman. I think he said that several of the Pins were taken up dry, were any of the Pins that were on the Ground dry?

William Bateman. Yes; and I said, these Pins did not come from him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When was this?

William Bateman. About a Twelve-month ago?

Mr. Broderick. Now, my Lord, we will shew your Lordship that he drew up a Narrative for the Press, giving an Account of this Business. [Call Richard Ball, who was sworn.] Mr. Ball, Pray give an Account of what you know of Richard Hathaway's endeavouring to print a Story of his vomiting of Pins.

Ball. About a Twelve-month ago, in December, Richard Hathaway brought a Writing, and withal a Dish-full of crooked Pins, and told us, those Pins he had vomited, and that he had been afflicted by a Woman in Southwark, and I think he said he had not eat any thing from my Lord-Mayor's Day.

R.r.r

Mr. Bro-

Mr. Broderick. What did he desire you to do ?

Bail. To print this Paper. And after he had told this Story, he said he had been with a Woman in Goodmans-Fields. There was a Boy with him. And he desired us to print his Paper. It related the Story of his vomiting of Pins. He said he had taken Quicksilver, and it would not move him ; and Madam Goodwin was mentioned several Times in the Papers, that she had cured him.

Mr. Conyers. How came it that you did not print his Paper ?

Bail. My Master stood by ; says he, You look very well ; I will have nothing to do with it ; I believe you are a Cheat. I believe no such thing, says he ; and upon that went away. But the next Day there was a Paper printed by somebody ; and Richard Hathaway comes to us afterwards, and says, You have printed a Paper, tho' you would not have it of me : But it is not true, says he ; I can give a better Account.

Mr. Broderick. Then he talked very freely to you, tho' he had not eat in six Weeks before ?

Bail. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Broderick. And he looked very well ?

Bail. Yes, Sir ; and we wonder'd at it.

Mr. Conyers. Call Mr. Hearne (who was sworn).

Mr. Hearne, pray give my Lord, and the Jury, an Account of what you know of this Matter.

Hearne. About September was Twelve-month, my Sister was fall'n upon by this Hathaway, and scratched and abused in a barbarous Manner ; and about six Weeks after she was scratched again. After this we went before Justice Riches, and Justice Riches persuaded them to be quiet, and not to trouble this Woman ; and he persuaded her to remove to some other Place. After this there was a Tumult made about her in Newgate-street.

Mr. Conyers. Were not you present when Dr. Martin was with the Defendant ?

Hearne. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Conyers. Then give an Account of that.

Hearne. I went to Dr. Martin ; and Dr. Martin told me that he would try a Stratagem (to see whether he was bewitch'd) by making him scratch another Woman. I told him, I was afraid we should be betray'd. Says he, Let me alone to manage it : So I said no more. Says he, Do you go and fetch Sarah Morduck to me, and I will go before. So I came with my Sister to Welling's House, where Dr. Martin was, and there was a House full of People : And then he ordered the Door to be shut ; and then Dr. Martin left me at the Bed-side, and he got a Woman that was willing to be scratch'd. She refused at first, but afterwards consented. And then Dr. Martin brought them into the Room where Hathaway was ; and he ask'd him if he did believe that scratching Sarah Morduck would do him any good ; if he did he should hold up his Hand ; and he held up both Hands. Says he then to Sarah Morduck, Are you willing to be scratch'd ? Yes, her Heart's Blood to do him good. Then give me your Hand, says he ; but instead of hers he took Mrs. Johnson's Hand, and gave it into Hathaway's Hand. And Hathaway took her by the Wrist, and felt her several Times. Then says Dr. Martin, If you will scratch her, scratch her, I cannot wait on you always. Then he fell to work, and Dr. Martin said, he will open his Eyes presently, there is Blood enough ; and he presently opens his Eyes and catches Sarah Morduck by the Apron, and holds her as fast as he could, and the Woman that was scratch'd was gone into another Room ; with all the Strength I had I could hardly loosen his Hands from Sarah Morduck. Now, says Dr. Martin, You are mistaken, this is not the Woman you have scratch'd ; and then his Countenance chang'd, and he looked like a Fool, he was so surprized. Then says Dr. Martin, Where is the Woman that he scratch'd ? And I fetch'd Johnson out of the other Room, and shew'd him her Arm, that she was the Woman he had scratch'd. Says Dr. Martin, I see what you are ; go and mind your Business ; or to that effect ; and then we went away. This was about Twelve or One a-Clock the 11th of February. And when we were gone, the same Day, as soon as it was dark, they got half a Dozen lusty Fellows to go to Sarah Morduck's House, and there they abused her.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know that ? Did you see it ?

Hearne. My Lord, I will tell you presently. When she had had this Mischief she sent for me ; and when I came, her Shift on her Back was as wet as muck. She sent for me, because she had none to assist her but me, and I found her that Night in that pickle. They said, as soon as we were gone, the Fellow was bad again, and they have put this Trick upon us ; but we will have the right Witch to scratch her.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was at the House that Night that you say she was in an ill Condition.

Hearne. There were several at the House then, Mrs. Sarah Hays the Landlady was there, and others.

L. C. J. Holt. You say they were in a Hubbub, and would have the right Woman scratch'd. Who was it that would have it so.

Hearne. I heard so. But when I came to her, I found her in a lamentable Condition. Then I went to Justice Riches, and desired his Warrant to take some of them ; and he granted it, and I took up one Osborn ; and when I came with him to Justice Riches, we had no Body to swear that she was lame a Bed, and so he was discharged ; and Justice Riches said, if there be no other to prove it on the Trial you will spend a great deal of Money to no Purpose, and therefore he let him go. So she was moved to Paul's Wharf, but a Company of Fellows followed her thither.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you prove that ?

Hearne. I heard of it, and desired the Landlord to send for a Constable ; he did so ; and when we came there, all the People made their Escape, except Hathaway and another Person. So then she was carried before Sir Thomas Lane ; and they telling him that he had vomited Pins, and other things, Sir Thomas was persuaded to believe it. I told him, these Fellows had disturbed this Woman's Peace, and very much abused her. Sir Thomas, will you not let me know who this Man is ?

L. C. J. Holt. What Man do you mean ?

Hearne. Jones. I begg'd, Pray let me know this Fellow's Name. Says he, It is no matter, there was Provocation enough. And then when we were talking of the Pins, Dr. Hamilton look'd in Hathaway's Mouth, and found his Mouth very well ; and he gave him Beer ; and he, when he had taken it, struggled with all his Might to keep it out ; then he cry'd out. Let her be scratch'd, said Sir Thomas. Dr. Hamilton said, Forbear a little, let us see the Effect of this Beer ; and so they forbore a little longer. Then they talked again of the Pins, and Dr. Hamilton would have her scratch'd again ; so he spake to the Woman about it, but she would not consent ; for she said she had been abused, and would would not be scratch'd, unless they would secure her for the future. But Sir Thomas would have her scratch'd; and so she was; and then when she was scratch'd, and he had drawn her Blood, the Fellow brustled about like a Cock-Sparrow; and then they call'd for Bread and Cheese; and so he that before pretended he could not swallow any thing, shew'd like an Antick to the People, for he was very greedy. And when he had eaten that, he call'd for more; and Welling said, Pray let him not have it, it will do him hurt, because he has not eat so long. Then Sir Thomas Lane ordered her to be stripped, and she was stripped above Stairs, and then he would commit her to Prison.

L. C. J. Holt. Why? Did any body say she had any thing extraordinary about her?

Hearne. No. Dr. Hamilton said she had nothing about her; I offer'd a Hundred Pounds Security for her; and Sir Thomas Lane would not take it. But when Dr. Martin had been with her at Night I Bail'd her out.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Was this Hathaway dumb when he was at Sir Thomas Lane's?

Hearne. He spoke before, and when Sir Thomas Lane bound her over to the Old-Baily, and all that time he was as well as could be.

Mr. Ser. Jenner. Was you at the Affizes at Guilford?

Hearne. Yes, and gave Testimony for her there.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, we have a great many others that were present with Dr. Martin; but we have proved that Matter sufficiently, Now we will shew how he behaved himself at Mr. Kenfy's. [Call Mr. Kenfy, who appeared and was Sworn.] Mr. Kenfy. Do you know Richard Hathaway?

Mr. Kenfy. Yes.

Mr. Conyers. Was he not committed to your Care?

Mr. Kenfy. Yes.

Mr. Conyers. When was it?

Mr. Kenfy. It was in November last.

Mr. Conyers. Now pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of his Fasting.

Mr. Kenfy. He was brought to my House the First of November last about Noon. I went to see him at the Kings-Bench, where about Nine in the Morning I found him in Bed. The Servants in the Prison told me his Tongue was swell'd. At my Request he put out his Tongue, which I found in a very good State and Colour, free from any Induration or Contraction. I observ'd the Glands under the Tongue, also his Throat, so far as I could see, free from any preternatural Accident or Impediment. He was brought to my House about Twelve the same Day. I kept him in the Room where we dined, and offered him Meat and Drink several Times, which he refused. About Eight at Night we put him to Bed, and took his Cloaths out of his Chamber. The next Morning we offered him Meat again, and he refused to eat; and we brought him his Cloaths, and he was furly and would not rise. At Night I offered him a Glas of Cordial, which he also refused. At the same Time we found his Rug wet, which we discovered to be his Urine dropping through the Tester of the Bed, he having hid his Urine upon it in the Cover of a large Box, through which it drained. And I threatned to discover him, and said, Pray discover who set you to work in this Matter: I look on you as a poor innocent Fellow, and that you are set on by others that have more Wit; but he would discover nothing. The next Morning I forced him to rise, and I found him resolute in his Humour of Fasting:

I found Persuasions and Promises of a Pardon could not prevail, nor Threatnings that I would starve him if he would not confess; so I feigned a Quarrel with my Maid, and railed at her in his Presence, saying, she was as very a Hypocrite as Richard Hathaway, and that I would be troubled no more with her. And I order'd her, so soon as my Back was turn'd, to rail against me as bad as she could, and charge him not to take any thing from me or my Brother, for she alone would take care to feed him. After this we took him up every Day, and contrived Places and Holes, whereby we discovered him to eat and drink heartily, sometimes three Times a Day, he thinking no body was Witness to it but the Servant. Particularly one Day I had Fish and Oysters for Dinner, and I ordered the Maid to give him some, and to give him strong Beer and Brandy too, and he eat and drank freely. And afterwards he brought up his Dinner, and I coming in, told him I was glad the Witch was found out at my House, and I told him to-morrow I would find out the Pins and Needles. He took the Poker, and raked the Ashes over it, that it might not be seen what he had vomited.

L. C. J. Holt. But did he know that you saw him eat?

Mr. Kenfy. No, my Lord. The next Day I offer'd him something to eat, to see if I could make him speak. But he pretended to be so faint that he could not get off his Chair; this was after he had eat several Days. And he danced and play'd on the Tongs.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you not see him drink?

Mr. Kenfy. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. But did he know you saw him;

Mr. Kenfy. He thought no body saw him but the Maid; but I saw him drink.

Mr. Broderick. How did you see him?

Mr. Kenfy. I hid my self in a dark Place in my own Buttery, and did see him eat and drink several Times. I did not see him eat every Day. But the eighth Day he endeavoured to make his Escape. My Brother and my Sons went into his Chamber with his Cloaths, and Hathaway having dress'd himself, watch'd his Opportunity, and jump'd out of the Room, and bolted them in. But they staying so long, I sent the Maid up, and she met him stealing down Stairs, and then he went back again and let them out. On Monday the 10th I gave him his Cloaths, and I being alone, he had not Patience to dress himself, but immediately seized me; but struggling with him, he pretended Feebleness, and fell on the Bed.

Mr. Conyers. Can you give account of any thing afterwards?

Mr. Kenfy. Yes.

Mr. Conyers. What Discourse had you with him then?

Mr. Kenfy. I will tell you. He was very furly. That was the first Day he spoke. I came to him, and told him he was a Fool; that his Friends were in Custody, and had not been true to him, but had discovered the whole Matter; and advised him to make a Discovery himself; and if he would, I would go with him to my Lord Chief Justice. Upon that, he cried passionately, and said he would tell the Lord Chief Justice the whole Truth. But my Lord not being at his Chamber, he in about an Hour recanted, and said he was bewitch'd. When he cried, he ask'd if his Mother was safe.

Mr. Conyers. Did he at any Time tell you how long he had fasted?

Mr. Kenfy. Yes. He made Signs that he had fasted several Times when we had seen him eat, and he took his Cloaths and wrapt them over him. And I said unto him how long hast thou fasted before you came to my House? He made Signs that he had fasted ten Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he pretend to be Dumb?

Mr. Kenfy. Yes. And I asked him how long he had fasted at my House; and he pointed Two more.

Mr. Conyers. You say he made Signs that he had fasted ten Weeks before he came to your House, and two Weeks while he was there. Now how often did you see him eat at your House after the two first Days?

Mr. Kenfy. I saw him eat several Times at Noon and Night. And after I had seen him eat. I would have persuaded him to eat, and he made Signs still as if he could not eat, and shook his Head.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How did you know what he meant by shaking his Head?

L. C. J. Holt. How did you know what he meant by his counting? How did you know that he meant Weeks?

Mr. Kenfy. He counted upon his Fingers, my Lord. I ask'd him how many Weeks he had fasted before he came to my House, and he counted Ten Fingers; and how long he had fasted at my House, and he counted Two more. And I ask'd him whether he had fasted Twelve Weeks then, and he made Signs of Twelve.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. You say he was dumb, and yet could hear.

Mr. Kenfy. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How is that likely, that he should hear, and yet was dumb?

L. C. J. Holt. Cannot a Man hear, tho' he be dumb?

Mr. Conyers. Call Elizabeth Baker. Where is she? [She was Sworn.] Were you a Servant to Mr. Kenfy when this Man was at his House?

Eliz. Baker. Yes, I was.

Mr. Conyers. Then pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of him.

E. Baker. Richard Hathaway came to my Master's House about twelve a-Clock on Saturday. When we went to Dinner at one a-Clock, my Master offer'd him Meat and Broth, and he refused it; he was ask'd to eat several Times, but still refused it. They ask'd him again at Night, and he shook his Head, and would not eat. And when he went to Bed, we took his Cloaths, and lock'd him in. And the next Day he refused to rise, and at Noon they went to see if he would eat any Thing, and offer'd him a Glass of Sack, and he refused it. And on Monday Morning he was ask'd to rise again, and he would not; but my Master would have him rise; and would have him come down and sit by the Fire; and when he was come down, ask'd him to eat, but he would not. And at last he look'd in his Mouth, and said he saw nothing but that he might eat and drink if he would. And my Master said to me, When I am with him I will call you up, and take an Occasion to fall out with you, and when I am gone, do you rail at me, and tell him he should take nothing of me or my Brother. And so I did; I said my Master call'd me Presbyterian Jade, but I said I did not know what Religion he was of; and that he was not more willing to have me go, than I was to be gone. And I told him he should take nothing of my Master or his Brother, I would look after him while I stay'd. So I went out of the Room, and fetch'd a Glass of Brandy, and gave it to him. But there was a Child with me, and he refused to drink it, with a Sign pointing to the Child; so I said I would hide the Child, and I stood between him and the Child; and then he drank it. And the same Day I gave him some Pudding and Small Beer; and at Night I carried him a Pint of Ale and a Toast, but found he had not eat the Pudding: I saw him eat the Toast and drink the Ale; but I did not see him eat the Pudding, tho' I suppose he eat it afterwards, for I saw it no more.

Juryman. In what manner did you convey this Provision to him?

E. Baker. My Master gave me the Key, and I went in and staid while he eat and drank, and I made him believe I had got the Key by Stealth. And I gave him a Glass of Brandy on Monday Night, and he drank it. And the next Day he eat and drank; he drank some Broth, and eat boil'd Mutton at Noon; and at Night he eat a Chop of Mutton, Bread and Cheese, and drank Beer and Brandy. On Wednesday we had a Shoulder of Mutton roasted, and after they had dined, I gave him a Plate of Meat, and he eat it in the Kitchen with me, and drank freely. And so he did every Day after while he was at our House.

Mr. Conyers. Did any ever see him eat besides your self.

E. Baker. Yes. That Day that we had fish, he was in the Kitchen; and being there, he went and wash'd his Hands, and I gave him a Plate of Fish, and set it by him; and he took it, and eat it. And I gave him a Bottle of Stout, and told him it was my Birth-day, and he must drink my Health; and after he had drank it, he pointed to his Forehead, signifying it was got into his Head; and about two Hours after, he was very merry, and danced about, and took the Tongs and play'd upon them. But after that he was mighty sick, and vomited sadly. And, says my Master's Brother, we shall see the Pins and Needles now. And to hide it, he falls a pulling the Fire over it.

Mr. Conyers. Did any of the Neighbours see him eat?

E. Baker. The 11th Day of the same Month, we had a Shoulder of Veal for Dinner; and after Dinner, my Master bid me set by some for him, and he would have some Gentlemen to see him eat it. They were accordingly hid in the Buttery and Coal-hole; and Richard Hathaway was brought down, and he took his Bread and Meat, and eat heartily, and drank with it.

Mr. Raymond. Who were those Gentlemen that saw him eat?

E. Baker. Mr. Collet. Mr. Norberry, Mr. Page and Mr. Stanton.

Mr. Conyers. These Persons are here.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, all this is of what was done after the Trial, this Evidence ought not to be given; the Record bears Date the first Day of the Term, and all this is said to be done in November; it is all after the Record.

L. C. J. Holt. It is to prove the Imposture committed before now. What Mr. Kenfy says of his pretending to fast twelve Weeks, tho' two or more be not within the Time of the Information, I hope they may give it as Evidence subsequent to prove what was done before,

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. But I oppose all this of eating at their House.

L. C. J. Holt. It is an Evidence of his cheating since that Time, and that out of the Information ; but it is an Evidence also to prove that his pretended fasting before was a meer Deceit ; for he then pretended to have fasted ten Weeks before he came thither, and after pretends to continue fasting in the same Manner ; if that be proved to be a Fraud, it is strongly to be inferred, that this pretended fasting before was so too.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. But then they may not give Evidence in Matter after.

L. C. J. Holt. Matter afterwards that proves a Thing done before ; for if a Confession be made subsequent to an Indictment for a Crime, Shall not that Confession after be brought as Evidence of the Thing done before ? Sure it may.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. And will that prove what was before ?

L. C. J. Holt. It is certainly so. The Thing is, Whether I can give in Evidence any Thing after to prove what was done before. If he pretends to fast twelve Weeks, ten Weeks before he came there ; and the two Weeks after, he did not fast but only pretended it : Whether what he did after be not Evidence of what he did before ? Sure it is. For he that cannot hold out fasting two Weeks, but was glad to eat, tho' he pretended to fast, may strongly be presumed to have eaten during the ten Weeks, tho' then he pretended to fast.

Mr. Conyers. Call Mr. Stanton. (Who appeared.) Was you at Mr. Kenfy's House to see Richard Hathaway eat ?

Mr. Stanton. Yes. Mr. Kenfy came to me the 11th of November, and desired me to come to his House, to see whether he eat or drank or not ; and I went, and was put into a dark Place, and I saw the Victuals before he was brought ; there was five Slices of Meat, and Bread, and Beer. And he was brought where it was, and he looked about him earnestly to see if any one saw him, and then he fell to, and eat as heartily as any Man could. And hearing a Noise whilst he was eating, he run away with it, and set it on the Dresser. The Maid said, there is no body coming ; and then he went to it again, and eat it up, and drank the Drink, and sat down by the Fire. And afterwards we went to him, and carried a Bottle of Drink with us, and drank to him ; but he made Signs that he could not drink, and shew'd us that his Belly clung to his Back, which we thought was very strange.

Mr. Conyers. Call Matthew Shipps, and — Baxter. (They did not appear.) Jo. Hunt. (He was sworn.) My Lord, we call this Man to give you an Account of the strange Noises that they pretended were heard in Mr. Welling's House ; and we will make it appear how that Noise came. Mr. Hunt, pray give an Account what you know in this Matter.

Jo. Hunt. My Lord, an Acquaintance of mine, one Kelpin, told me that he had watch'd with Richard Hathaway one Night ; and the next Day he came to me, and told me he fell a-sleep, and had not watch'd him as he ought ; and desired me to sit up with him, and to observe him as narrowly as I could, and see if I could find any Deceit in him. Accordingly I did so ; and when I came into the Room, I sat down on the Bed-side. There were two Gentlemen in the Room, Mr. Pocock, and Mr. Butler, and Thomas Welling. He lay as if he were almost dead. In a little Time his Master, Tho. Welling, brought in some Pins in a Coffee-dish, and said he had brought them up that Day, and that he believed he would bring up more. And after this seeing of the Pins, I went to Mr. Pocock, and said, I did imagine the Pins might lie in his Mouth, rather than in his Stomach ; and therefore it was very proper to have his Mouth search'd. And Mr. Pocock replied, Who will venture to do it ? And I said, If they would wash the Fire Poker clean, and put it into his Mouth, to prevent his biting my Finger, I would do it. Immediately upon this Hathaway raised himself, and began to make a Reaching, as tho' he would vomit ; and then Welling and his Wife said, now he is going to bring up Pins. Thereupon I kneeled down by the Bed-side with a Candle in my Hand to observe his Motions ; and after he had strain'd some Time, he made a Motion with his Tongue at each side of his Mouth, but I could not perceive any thing come up his Throat, tho' his Mouth was wide open ; and by and by he drew up his Mouth, and turned out two or three bright Pins, and presently after two more, which I catch'd in my Hands, and shew'd them to the Company, saying, they are bright and new ; and his Master said he believed they came out of some Chandler's Shop. Afterwards Hathaway lay down very quiet, and so continued for some Time. And Welling's Wife coming into the Room, ask'd why the Charms were not put on ? I replied, I have been told the Charms have been always taken off from him by the Witch ; but was resolv'd to watch so narrowly that Night, that they should not be taken from him. Then Welling and his Wife offering to put on the Charms, Hathaway made a struggling, as tho' he was unwilling to have them on ; and Welling said, you have always found Benefit by it, Why will you not ? They are order'd by Mr. Butler.

L. C. J. Holt. What are those Charms ?

Jo. Hunt. Three little Things in black Bags, I did not know what they were. And they ask'd him whether he was willing they should be put on ; if he was, he should hold up his Hand ; but he was unwilling. But I said, I was minded to have them put on ; so he lay still, and Mrs. Welling, or some other Woman, sew'd them to the Bosom of his Shirt. After the Charms were put on, I watch'd to see what would become of them ; and perceiving Hathaway to make several Motions with his Hands about them, I struck his Hands. I bid him either keep his Arms straight in the Bed, or else put them out of the Bed, for that the Charms should not be taken off that Night. Then I and the Company sitting still about the Bed, Welling said, Harken, you will not believe ; hear what a Noise there is, the like is heard here almost every Night. Whereupon all were silent. At last I heard a small scratching or rubbing at the Bed's Feet ; and putting my Head close to the Bed's Feet, listning, I heard something shriek ; and perceiving the Bed-cloaths stir, I took hold of the Fellow's Foot, and said, I have caught the Witch that made the Noise. I thought it had been Mice at first ; but seeing the Cloaths move, I catch'd his Foot. Thereupon Hathaway rose up, and in a Passion made a Motion towards me with both his Hands ; but I lifting up his Foot, he fell back upon his Pillow, and lay still, and the Noise ceased ; and about Five a-Clock in the Morning I left him, and the Charms upon him.

Mr. Conyers. Call Elizabeth Brand (who appeared). Pray give an Account what you know of any Collection of Money for Richard Hathaway.

Eliz.

Eliz. Brand. There was betwixt six and seven Pounds gathered.

L. C. J. Holt. How was it gathered?

Eliz. Brand. We went about to get Money for him to bear his Charges to Guilford, and we got betwixt six and seven Pounds.

Mr. Broderick. Do you know of any other Sums that were gathered for him?

Eliz. Brand. Yes, but I know not how much.

Mr. Conyers. Who employ'd you to do this?

Eliz. Brand. A great many of the Neighbours.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was the Money paid to?

Eliz. Brand. To Mrs. Welling.

Mr. Conyers. Do you know any thing of his scratching Sarah Morduck?

Eliz. Brand. I over-persuaded her to let the Fellow scratch her.

L. C. J. Holt. Did she consent to it?

Eliz. Brand. Yes, my Lord, I call'd her, and said to her, Let me persuade you to let this Fellow scratch you; and she bid me go and fetch him. And he came, and sits him down on a low Seat. Says she, Will you engage he shall not scratch my Eyes out? At last he scratches, and there came no Blood; and he scratches again, and then the Blood came; and he cry'd, O my Eyes, O my Eyes. And I said, now the Blood comes, and he stared. Says I to him, Can you see me? Yes, says he, as well as ever I could.

Mr. Conyers. Mr. Hearne, you was at Guilford Assizes, How long did this Fellow pretend he had fasted?

Mr. Hearne. I cannot be positive what he said at the Trial as to that; but they said he had fasted six Weeks, before Dr. Martin tried the Experiment with him.

Mr. Conyers. Call Matt. Shipps (he was sworn). Was Richard Hathaway under your Custody?

M. Shipps. Yes; He was brought from Guilford Assizes upon the 31st of July last. He came home at Eleven a-Clock at Night, and they told me he was come a Prisoner from Guilford to the Marshalsea, where he continued four Days, and he was ordered to lie with me; and every Night that he lay there, he slept very well to my thinking: And several Times I ask'd him how he did, he answer'd, he was pretty well; and every Day while he was there, he eat and drank with me, as the rest of the Servants of the House did, and was not in all that Time in any Fit as I could perceive, but went very well out of the Prison.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he say at the Assizes about his Fasting?

M. Shipps. I was not at the Assizes.

Mr. Conyers. Then we must leave it here.

Mr. Broderick. My Lord, we have the Woman here that they pretended was the Witch; but it may be, they may think it not proper, and therefore we shall let her alone.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the Defendant, Richard Hathaway, who is indicted for a Cheat and Impostor; and it is for pretending himself to be bewitched, and that he has used indirect Arts and Means to make People believe he was so bewitch'd; and that this Sarah Morduck was the Person that had bewitch'd him; and that this was contrived by him, in order to bring Mischief and Damage on this Sarah Morduck, and to the evil Example of the Queen's Subjects. You have heard the Evidence that has been given, and therefore I shall not repeat it, but only observe some good Things to you. The Doctor has taken a great deal of Pains in this Cause; but that which he does tell you by Hearsay, what other Persons have told him, is not such Evidence as you are to take any notice of, that is, what Johnson told him, and likewise what other Persons told him concerning this Man; for what they have said to him of this Man, tho' it may be true, is not to come under your Consideration. There are several others that have given Evidence of what other Persons have said, and they have given it as their Opinions that what this Man did was the Cause of their Doings; of which you are to take no notice. But, my Lord, that which seems to bear most hard upon us, is, That because the Doctor, and several others have been abused, both before and after the Trial, for what they endeavour'd to do; therefore they would insinuate as if my Client had had a Hand in it. But if a Man be doing any thing, and another takes the Advantage of it, to do another a Mischief, I hope that Mischief shall not be laid to his Charge. My Lord, there is one Man that has given a great deal of Evidence as to his Vomiting of Pins, and says that he was by, and he swept the Ground, and after he had vomited, there were Pins upon the Ground; and when he had a Chamber-pot to vomit in, he could not find any Pins there, but there was some upon the Ground again. So likewise for his Fasting, you have had Evidence to prove that a Cheat. And this seems to affect him most, that all this Pretence to be Bewitch'd, and Vomiting of Pins, and Fasting, was a Cheat. This is the Matter that they accuse him of. Of which if he be really guilty, I come not here to defend him; but I am to defend him as far as Witnesses will do. And now, my Lord, if my Brief be true, we shall satisfy you that my Client was in a very lamentable Condition, such as one would think no Man could be in and live; and I will lead you by these Steps. When he was thus disabled, could neither speak, nor take Sustainance, his Master, after he had served him two Years, and he had lived very civilly, and behaved himself well in his Master's Service, till he fell thus ill: Then he was so ill, that after the Master had spent a great deal of Money with Doctors and Apothecaries, he could get no Cure for him; then he got him into the Hospital, and there he continued a long Time, and at last they gave it in that he was incurable, and they turn'd him out. But his Master made Interest, and got him in again, and he continued some time there again; and there it was that he was first thought to be bewitched: For they had him twice, and could do no good with him, and the Tenders told him he must lie under some evil Tongue; and thereupon he was turn'd out as incurable, and with that Instruction that it was an incurable Disease. So he came Home again, and his Master and Mistresses were acquainted with it; and they consider what Person it should be that should have any evil Design against him. And at last they recollect, that his Master had taken a Room over the Head of this Sarah Morduck, and she had gone to the Shop often, and had given them very ill Words, and she should be even with him one Time or other; and therefore they concluded this Woman was the Person. Upon this there were many Things contrived, what Course they should take to do him good, and there was one Thing concluded upon in order to his Ease (which I think none should advise) that is, the Business of scratching. But this Woman, when she was accused by them of bewitching him, offered her self to be scratch'd, and she was scratch'd, and and from thence this Man found Ease. But afterwards he fell ill again, and he went into London, and was examin'd at Sir Thomas Lane's; and upon Examination they thought that this Man did lie under such an Affliction. I cannot say it is an irreligious Thing to say there are Witches in the World; but this Man lay under such a Distemper, that no Doctor could know what to do with it. And they could not imagine who should do it but this Woman, and she was there scratch'd by him, and he did find Relief by it. My Lord, this being the Matter of Fact, we shall call very substantial Witnesses to prove it. As to his Fasting, we shall prove that he was put under the Care of very substantial Persons, and that he did not eat or drink for three Weeks or a Month; so that it will appear we had no Contrivance in the World, but only would get Ease if we could. We have twenty Witnesses to call.

L. C. J. Holt. Let them all be call'd. Call as many as you will.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Anne Eaton (She appeared). Do you know Richard Hatbaway?

Anne Eaton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Anne Eaton. Ever since he came to his Master.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long is that?

Anne Eaton. About five or six Years.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Do you know what Condition he was in two Years ago?

Anne Eaton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Then pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of it.

Anne Eaton. I watch'd with him several Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Where did you watch with him?

Anne Eaton. At his Master's House.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. In what Condition was he then?

Anne Eaton. He was in a very bad Condition, he was dumb and blind, and his Senses were gone, and he seem'd as if he were dead; and when his Senses have come to him, he has burn'd like a Flame of Fire.

L. C. J. Holt. How long did you watch with him?

Anne Eaton. About nine Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he fast all that Time?

Anne Eaton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Might he not eat in that Time and you not see him?

Anne Eaton. I was with him constantly at Nights, but not in the Day; I have been with him four or five Days and Nights together, and did not see him eat or drink.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time was this that you watch'd with him?

Anne Eaton. From the Time that he came from Madam Davenport's, till your Lordship confined him.

L. C. J. Holt. Who put him to Madam Davenport's?

Anne Eaton. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Can you not tell what Month that was in?

Anne Eaton. I can't tell that.

Mr. Raymond. Did you observe him all that Time?

Anne Eaton. When I went out, I left one always in my Room.

L. C. J. Holt. You say you were with him four or five Days and Nights together.

Anne Eaton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Were you with him all Night and all Day?

Anne Eaton. My Lord, some Days I had Occasion to go out, but then I left some Neighbours with him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Gibson (Who appeared). Do you know this Man, Richard Hatbaway?

Gibson. I have seen him in a deplorable Condition.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When was this that you saw him?

Gibson. About two Years ago. His Master asked me to go and see him, and when I came up I saw him foaming at Mouth; I thought he would not live till Morning. The next Day his Master desired me to watch with him at Night; and I did, and he was so bad that I thought he would not live till Morning. Afterwards I saw him again, and he was blind and dumb, as it appear'd to me. And he had a strange Motion, he threw himself forward, and afterwards threw himself backward, as if his Head lay in the Reins of his Back; and I said to this Woman then, I believe he has broke his Back. I believe this was after he came from Madam Davenport's, about the Time that he appeared at the Bar at Westminster.

L. C. J. Holt. The first Time that you speak of, when you say he was blind and dumb, you say that was two Years ago; was he blind and dumb when you saw him the second Time?

Gibson. Yes, the second Time I saw him he was blind and dumb. I saw him in a deplorable Condition three Times.

Juryman. We desire to know the Circumstances of his Condition.

L. C. J. Holt. The Jury desire to be satisfied of the Circumstances of his Condition. You say you saw him two Years ago, and he was then in a deplorable Condition, and you saw him twice after; the Jury would have you describe the Circumstances of it as plain as you can.

Gibson. His Master desired me to go to him, and I was willing to oblige him; and when I came to him, he was both blind and dumb.

L. C. J. Holt. How long was this after you saw him the first Time?

Gibson. About half a Year after.

L. C. J. Holt. Are you a Neighbour?

Gibson. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. You say you saw him two Years ago, and you say he then foamed at Mouth and Nostrils; was he blind and dumb then?

Gibson. No, my Lord; but he was when I saw him the second Time.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you see him after?

Gibson. It was about a Twelve-month after that I saw him.

L. C. J. Holt. And not before?

Gibson. He was seven Weeks in the Hospital.

Mr. Broderick. Then you did not see him in the Hospital.

Gibson. I did; but he went almost double.

Mr. Broderick. Did you hear any thing of Mrs. Morduck then?

Gibson. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. What Trade are you?

Gibson. I am a Glazier.

Mr. Conyers. Have you no other Trade?

Gibson. Sometimes I work at the Custom-House. One Sunday we went to hear Dr. Pead, and Richard Hatbaway went with us. And when we were gone out a-Door, he could not speak; and when we came upon the Bridge, his Face was drawn a-wry so strangely that it astonished me; he stagger'd the Length of this Table, and his Face was drawn back again, and he fetch'd a Reel; but in a Quarter of an Hour he spoke, and his Speech continu'd till he came to Grace church-street, and there we met Mr. Fox, and so he continued till we came to Bishopsgate: But coming to Houndsditch, he made Motions that his Speech was gone again.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear him speak at Westminster?

Gibson. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Flummery (who appeared). Do you know this Man?

Flummery. Yes, I am a Neighbour.

L. C. J. Holt. What is thy Name?

Flummery. Flummery. After Guilford Affizes I went to see him, and he was in a lamentable Condition; he was like a Stock or Stone, Blind and Dumb. I went to see him —

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever see him before?

Flummery. I saw him several Times, but took no Notice of it; but then his Eyes stood wide open.

L. C. J. Holt. And yet you say he was blind, How could that be?

Flummery. My Lord, I will tell you how; I tried him, I wagged the Hair of his Eye-Lids, and put the Candle to his Eyes, and he took no Notice of it.

L. C. J. Holt. How could you know that he did not see?

Flummery. I tried him.

L. C. J. Holt. How did you try him?

Flummery. I tried him with my Fingers, and his Eyes would not wag.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he not look then as he looks now?

Flummery. No.

Mr. Broderick. Did you speak to him then?

Flummery. Yes, but I could not make him hear nor answer me.

L. C. J. Holt. Could he speak then?

Flummery. No, may it please your Lordship.

Anne Pearse, sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Anne Pearse, Pray tell my Lord, what you know of this Richard Hathaway.

Anne Pearse. I belong to the Hospital. When he came into the Hospital he was very bad.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he blind and dumb when he came in?

Anne Pearse. After he was brought in he was put to Bed, and he was taken with a Fit, and I was call'd to him; and I came to him, and he did not stir much, and turn'd up his Eyes. And afterwards one of his Master's Journeymen came to him, and he raised him out of his Bed; and one came to me and said, Sister, he is come to the Fire, but he is very bad still. Says I, What did you raise him out of his Bed for? He went upon his Ankles almost; he went very weakly, and continued so for some Time.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long was he in the Hospital?

Anne Pearse. About five Months.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was he out, and came in again?

Anne Pearse. Yes, he was. He complain'd he could not go to stool; and the Doctor gave him Quicksilver; and when it came from him, I heard the Apothecary made him take it again, and swallow it again.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When he came in the second Time, Was you there then?

Anne Pearse. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long was he there the second Time?

Anne Pearse. How long he was there the second Time, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Can you tell when he was put in the second Time?

Anne Pearse. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What was your Opinion of him?

Anne Pearse. I apprehended him to be in a very strange Condition; he lay seven or eight Days, and did not eat or drink; he had taken Quicksilver, and it did not come from him, and the Doctor wonder'd it should lie so long in his Body.

Mr. Broderick. Did the Doctor or you apprehend any thing of Witchcraft in the Case?

Anne Pearse. No, Sir. But at this Time his Eyes were set in his Head.

Mr. Broderick. When he was recover'd out of those Fits, did he pretend that he was bewitch'd?

Anne Pearse. No.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you never here him complain that he was bewitched?

Anne Pearse. No, my Lord, I did not hear of that.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Jo. Smith (who appeared). Mr. Smith, Do you know this Person, Richard Hathaway?

Smith. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Smith. About five or six Years.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How far do you live from him?

Smith. I believe about two Stones-throw.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Were you well acquainted with his Condition two Years ago?

Smith. Yes, I have done Business for the Family several Years. About five Years ago, I found him much afflicted with Convulsion Fits at his coming to his Master.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How was he about two Years ago?

Smith. He was in a very strange Condition; and I advis'd his Master to get rid of him, and to get him into the Hospital.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did he ail?

Smith. He lay in a very strange Condition.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How did he lie?

Smith. He lay struggling and striving often, and sometimes like a Man that was dead; and once when he lay in that Condition I laid Cupping-Glasses to him, and that enliven'd him.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you imagine ail'd him? Did you think he counterfeited or not?

Smith. Indeed, my Lord, I can't tell that.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Why did you advise his Master to put him into the Hospital?

Smith. I can't tell.

Mr. Phipps. You say you have known him five Years, and that he has been troubled with Fits. Did he ever talk of being bewitched till within this two Years?

Smith. No, not till within this two Years.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. When he lay seemingly dead, you do not know whether he counterfeited or no?

Smith. No, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Do you think a Man can be in such a Condition as he seem'd to be, and yet only counterfeit?

Smith. Indeed, my Lord, I know not. I examined him whether he was subject to those Fits formerly; and he told me, he was very much troubled with them in the Country.

L. C. J. Holt. You do not answer the Question. Cannot a Man counterfeit in such a Case? What do you think of that?

Smith. Without doubt it may be counterfeited.

L. C. J. Holt. You say, when he was in those Fits, you put Cupping-Glasses to him, and it enliven'd him; now, if he were in a real Convulsion, do you think it would have enliven'd him?

Smith. Sometimes it may be so.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Elizabeth Willoughby (she appear'd). Mrs. Willoughby, pray give my Lord an Account whether you know Richard Hatbaway, and what you know of him.

E. Willoughby. Sir, I have seen him since the Affizes at Guilford.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you never see him before?

E. Willoughby. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Then give an Account of what Condition you have seen him in.

E. Willoughby. I have seen him when the Breath came out of his Mouth like the Barking of a Dog. I had a Child that was troubled with Fits, and I was above Stairs, and I heard a great Noise; and I went out of the Door to see what was the Matter, and over the Hatch lay Richard. Lord bless me, says I, is it you makes this Noise? And I could not fancy any thing, but that it was like the Barking of a Dog.

L. C. J. Holt. How thick was it? Was it not like other Folks?

E. Willoughby. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What ailed him?

E. Willoughby. I cannot tell what ailed him.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you think he was bewitched?

E. Willoughby. I believe he was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose you have some Skill in Witchcraft. Did you ever see any body that was bewitched before?

E. Willoughby. My Lord, I have been under the same Circumstances myself, when I was a Girl, in Sir Edward Bromfield's Time.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know you was bewitch'd?

E. Willoughby. There was a Woman taken up upon Suspicion for it.

L. C. J. Holt. For bewitching thee?

E. Willoughby. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you scratch her?

E. Willoughby. My Lord, I had no Power to do any thing. I flew over them all.

L. C. J. Holt. You say you were in the same Condition with this Man, and you say you flew; did you fast too?

E. Willoughby. One held me by one Arm, another by the other, and another behind, and I flew sheer over their Heads.

L. C. J. Holt. Woman, can you produce any of these Women that saw you fly?

E. Willoughby. It was when I was a Child; they are dead; it was in old Sir Edward Bromfield's Time.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of that Woman that made thee to fly?

E. Willoughby. I cannot tell, I have been well ever since I was married.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How was you cured of that Witchery?

E. Willoughby. How do I know?

Mr. Conyers. Did you scratch her?

E. Willoughby. How should I scratch her, when I had not Power to see her?

Mr. Conyers. And yet you believe this Man was bewitched as well as you. What Condition was this Man in? How long did he lie in this Condition?

E. Willoughby. Night and Day he has lain over the Hatch, and over the Bed, and made a great Noise with his Breath.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Who did you suspect had done him this Harm?

E. Willoughby. I know not that.

Mr. Broderick. Are you a Widow?

E. Willoughby. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Keeling (who appeared). Do you know any thing concerning this Richard Hatbaway?

Keeling. I watch'd with him 9 Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did he eat or drink all that Time?

Keeling. He did neither eat nor drink, nor had he any Stool all that Time.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you watch with him 9 Nights and Days?

Keeling. There was another Man that watch'd with him in the Day; as I came out, he was let in; and as he came out, I was let in.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long was this before the Trial?

Keeling. Two or three Days before he came before Sir Thomas Lane.

Bridges sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with Richard Hatbaway?

Bridges. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long?

Bridges. Nine Days.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him the same Days that he watch'd with him in the Nights?

Bridges. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you not stir from him till he came?

Bridges. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you see him eat or drink all that Time?

Bridges. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Where was it that you watch'd with him?

Bridges. In an old empty House.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this House?

Bridges. By a Dock on the Bank-side in St. Mary Overy's Parish.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to put him into that House?

Bridges. The Masters of the Parish put him in it.

Mr. Webb sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mr. Webb, did you get a House to put Hatbaway in?

Webb. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to do so?

Webb. His Master used to work for me, and he came to me, and said, I cannot tell what to do with my Man, unless the Masters of the Parish take some Care of him; and I did speak with some of them about it; and they said, we will not trouble the Parish about it, we will spend a Crown a-piece, and put these Men into the House with him.

L. C. J. Holt. You took the House then?

Webb. We borrowed the House, it being empty, and put in these two Men. There were four or five Neighbours more, and I said to him, They say you vomit Pins, I will be satisfied whether it be true or no; and we stript him, and could find none about him; we search'd his Shirt, his Stockings, his Breeches, and his Hat, but could find no Pins about him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did he eat or drink all the Time you were there.

Webb. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did he vomit?

Webb. Yes, I went to him on Thursday Morning, and he had a husky Cough, and I thought he would have been choak'd; and at last he made a Crumb of Spittle out of his Mouth, and there were three Pins came from him in the Spittle, as rusty as if they had lain in a Ditch seven Years. About Saturday following, he had I believe four Pins more came from him; I took them, and I think the Hands of Man could not join them as those Pins were. On Sabbath-day in the Morning, a Gentleman came and desired him to go to Church with him, and desired him to drink a Pint of Ale, but he did not drink half; and about five a-Clock in the Afternoon came Mr. Sutton the Apothecary, and I stay'd with him till six on Monday, and heard not a Word from him.

Juryman. What People came in to see this Fellow while you watch'd him?

Keeling. No Man, Woman, or Child came to him the Time I was there, but only that Sunday Night that my Masters were there, and I said, you do not put him here to starve him; and they bid me ask him if he would eat any thing; if he would eat any thing, he might have it.

Mr. Conyers. Did not you use to carry him out sometimes?

Keeling. We never carried him out.

Mr. Conyers. Just now you said he was out on Sabbath-day.

Keeling. Yes, but never otherwise.

Mr. Broderick. Was he in a Ground-room, or up Stairs?

Keeling. He was in a Ground-room.

L. C. J. Holt. Were there any Windows in it?

Keeling. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there any Casement?

Keeling. Yes, there was.

Juryman. We desire to know of this Witness, whether he never was asleep in that Time while he watch'd with him?

Keeling. No, I sat just at his Head. I slept in the Day-time.

L. C. J. Holt. You that watch'd with him in the Day, did you not sleep all Day?

Bridges. No.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to concern yourself in this Business? Are you one of the Masters of the Parish?

Webb. No, I am not; but it was my Turn to be Overseer, and his Master spoke to me to speak to the Church-wardens; and I did, and they said they would not put the Parish to the Charge, but do it themselves.

L. C. J. Holt. What Trade are you?

Webb. A Lighter-man, my Lord.

Dell sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Do you know this Richard Hathaway?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Dell. Ever since he was an Apprentice.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you know him two Years ago?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What Condition was he in then?

Dell. I was at the Affizes at Guilford—

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did you know of him before that Time?

Dell. I took no notice of such Things.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Can you say any thing of him?

Dell. I can say, that the Night before he was before Sir Thomas Lane I watch'd with him, and he went to Stool, and his Excrements there was a Lump of Hair, loose Pins, a Stump of a Nail, half a Nut-shell, and two or three Pieces of Stone.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. And this you saw?

Dell. I saw him in a very deplorable Condition.

L. C. J. Holt. How? In what Condition?

Dell. This is all I have to say.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What do you call a deplorable Condition?

Dell. He lay in such a Condition as if he were dumb; and if he was not, I believe he is the greatest Villain in the World.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know those Excrements came from him?

Dell. I was one of the three Men that watch'd with him that Night. We had two Chamber-pots; these Things were in the first Stool, and when he had the second Stool, he sat on the Pot, and when he had done, we look'd, and there was nothing in it.

L. C. J. Holt. And were these Things in the first?

Dell. Yes, in the first; in the other there was none. And there were twenty Neighbours more that saw them.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was Benn there?

Dell. Yes, he was there.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mr. Benn, was this so?

Benn. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you help watch with him?

Benn. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. And are you sure those Excrements came from him?

Benn. Yes, I am sure. I stood over him with a naked Sword.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Why did you stand over him with a naked Sword?

Benn. Because People said he was bewitch'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Who employed you to watch with him?

Benn. I went into the House, and I told his Master, if they would watch him in the Day, I would in the Night.

Powel called.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What do you know of this Matter?

Powel. This Man and I went up one Night—

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When?

Powel. February was Twelve-month. We went up and look'd upon him, and he lay as one dead, and he did not wag his Eyes; and presently he hook'd his Neck about in such a manner that I thought he had broke it; and he foamed, and we took the Foam from his Mouth, and in it were five Pins, the crookedest Rams-hornest Things, that I believe no Man could do them so.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. That was one Night, did you see the same at any other Time?

Powel. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. But you did not see them come from him?

Powel. I took it from his Mouth, and they were rusty.

L. C. J. Holt. How should they be rusty?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. The Stomach will make them rusty. Call Madam Davenport (she appears).
Madam,

Madam, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know concerning Richard Hatbaway, when he came to your House, and how he was managed there.

Mrs. Davenport. My Lord, one Saturday I accidentally went to Dr. Hamilton's to visit his Wife, and I saw with the Doctor this Fellow's Master standing there; and I perceived he was come to desire the Doctor to perform a Promise he had made to him formerly—

L. C. J. Holt. Was this before the Trial, or after?

Mrs. Davenport. It was after the Trial. I came accidentally to the Doctor's, and saw the Fellow's Master with the Doctor.

L. C. J. Holt. Was the Fellow there himself?

Mrs. Davenport. No, my Lord, I never saw him there. But standing there, I perceived him expecting the Doctor to make good a Promise he had made him about this Fellow. I found the Doctor demurr'd upon it, not knowing where to put him. At last, says he to me, Mrs. Davenport, will you let me have a Garret in your House? Doctor, says I, you shall have my whole House at your Service, if you have Occasion for it: I thought nothing of this Fellow, till the Doctor told me it was for him. And the Doctor told me he should come that Night. Says the Fellow's Master, I will not send a Bed, that the Doctor may be satisfied there is no Cheat. And the Doctor, to prevent any Cheat, desired me to go and buy an old Bed. So I went and got a Bed in Long-lane, and at Night he was brought by his Master and some of his Neighbours. And truly I was surprized when I saw him, he seemed very weak.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did you do with him?

Mrs. Davenport. They said he had Fits, and I found I must take other Measures with him than I thought of. His Master desired he might be search'd; and my Son and two Men more search'd him. So he went to Bed, and was watch'd with that Night, and in the Morning he was struck blind.

L. C. J. Holt. At your House?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you appoint any Persons to watch with him?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him yourself?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, several Times.

L. C. J. Holt. How long at a Time did you watch with him?

Mrs. Davenport. But one Night at a Time myself.

L. C. J. Holt. When you did watch with him, did you watch the whole Night?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, several Nights; and this Gentlewoman or myself took care of him always.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did he eat or drink while he was there?

Mrs. Davenport. Nothing. As for his Fasting, the Doctor gave me a great Charge, and said he knew I would do it.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. All the Time you watch'd with him, you say he did neither eat nor drink.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Nights did you watch with him in the seventeen?

Mrs. Davenport. But two.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Days?

Mrs. Davenport. Every Day.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you watch with him every Day yourself.

Mrs. Davenport. Either myself, or this Woman, or the Servant, or my Son Davenport. He is now gone to Sea. My Lord, I do not tell you I kept him in the Garret all this Time.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When you left him, who reliev'd you?

Mrs. Davenport. This Gentlewoman, or my Servant.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What is that Gentlewoman's Name?

Mrs. Walker. Walker.

She was sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mrs. Walker, did you watch with him in this Place?

Mrs. Walker. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did he eat or drink while he was there?

Mrs. Walker. He did neither eat nor drink.

Mr. Conyers. How often was it that you watch'd with him?

Mrs. Walker. I cannot tell whether one or two Nights.

L. C. J. Holt. I would be satisfied in some Things. Is that Davenport you speak of your Son?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, my Lord. He is now gone to Sea.

L. C. J. Holt. How long has he been gone to Sea?

Mrs. Davenport. But a Week.

Mrs. Dorman sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mrs. Dorman, did you watch with this Man at Mrs. Davenport's?

Mrs. Dorman. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Within the seventeen Days that he was there, did he eat or drink?

Mrs. Dorman. No.

Mr. Phipps. How many Nights or Days did you watch with him?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Give an Account of the Time when you watch'd with him, and no longer.

Mrs. Dorman. Two Nights, and every Day.

L. C. J. Holt. He might have eat, and you not see him, might he not?

Mrs. Dorman. But the Time I saw him, he did neither eat nor drink. And he made Water, and I believe five times more came from him than he took.

Mrs. Dean sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mrs. Dean, do you know Richard Hatbaway?

Mrs. Dean. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Mrs. Dean. Not till he was at Madam Davenport's.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was you there all the seventeen Days?

Mrs. Dean. Not all the Time. I sat up with him two Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Who sat up with you?

Mrs. Dean. Madam Davenport.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. While you were there, did he eat or drink?

Mrs. Dean. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Dr. Hamilton. (He was sworn). Doctor, pray give an Account of what you know concerning this Richard Hatbaway.

Dr. Hamilton. My Lord I have very little to say upon my own personal Knowledge. But happening to be at Sir Thomas Lane's when he was brought before him, I heard what pass'd, and I desired Sir Thomas to let me try his Throat, — and I did try it, it, and found nothing amiss. But at last I found there was nothing to be depended upon, for there are abundance of Legerdemain Tricks, therefore his vomiting Pins, and other Actions, were not to be trusted to; and therefore there was nothing to be depended on but his Fasting; and if you would discover whether he be an Impostor or no, he must be lock'd up in a Room for a Fortnight, and watch'd. And then I said to the Fellow's Master, for my Curiosity, If you please, I will lock him up in a Room a Fortnight, and I shall find out whether he counterfeits or no. And he came to me afterwards, and said, Doctor, you promised you would make this Trial of my Man. I did so, says I, and if I can I will. I had Thoughts of putting him in the Garret; but then I consider'd, if I should put him in the Garret by himself, he might die. But at the same time Mrs. Davenport happen'd to come to my House; and I said to her, I dare trust you with an Experiment, for I believe he is an Impostor; and I desired her to let me have her Garret to put him in, and she consented. And I desired her either to go herself, or send to Long-lane, and buy Things for him; and that she should strip him, and see that nothing may be about him to hide Bread or any thing else in; and, said I, let none come to him, and let one or two of your Family sit up with him every Night. And she promised me she would. Accordingly she bought a Bed for him and other Things, and he was sent to her; and the next Day they sent me Word that he had strange kind of Motions; but I said, there is nothing to be depended on as to these Things; but I would fain know whether he fasts or no. I have heard of many that have fasted many Weeks, but they have taken Water, or some such thing, which, tho' they are very weak things, yet may keep one alive; but none can live without taking something: And if he should live to the End of the seventeen Days without eating or drinking any thing, I should have something to take hold of. They told me—

Mr. Serj. Jenner. That is no matter what they told you. Did you see him afterwards?

Dr. Hamilton. I was mightily concerned for the poor Creature when I saw him at Sir Thomas Lane's; and I was willing to try him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you see him after that?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes, when he was blind for several Days. And I sent to Dr. Martin, and desired the Favour of him to call upon me; and I said—

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you see him after he had been at Madam Davenport's?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you see him while he was there?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes. The thing that I depended upon was purely his Fasting. I saw him myself several times, and I could not believe but that he had eat, because his Pulse were strong; that was one Reason that I thought he must eat.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you see him the last Day of the Fortnight?

Dr. Hamilton. I was just going to Dinner when Dr. Martin came to me; and I said to him, Doctor Martin, let us try every thing: Will you go along with me to him? Says he, if I go he will fall in a Passion. But after I had dined I went, and enquired about him, and they told me he had strange Motions.

Mr. Broderick. You say you reject every thing but that of his Fasting.

Dr. Hamilton. Yes.

D

L. C. J. Holt. Doctor, do you think it is possible in Nature for a Man to fast a Fortnight?

Dr. Hamilton. I think not, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Can all the Devils in Hell help a Man to fast so long?

Dr. Hamilton. No, my Lord, I think not; and that made me to suspect him.

Mr. Phipps. Do you think the Pulse of a Man can be strong when he has fasted eight Days?

Dr. Hamilton. I think not.

Sir Thomas Lane called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Sir Thomas, be pleased to tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of this Man.

Sir Tho. Lane. It was above a Twelve-month ago that his Master brought a Woman before me, upon Suspicion that she was a Witch, and that she had bewitch'd his Man; but there having been a Trial, I shall wave that. I enquired what kind of Life he had lived; and his Master said he had behaved himself very civilly, and gave him a very good Character. He told me how grievously he had been afflicted, and that he had been six or seven Months in the Hospital, and had fasted a great while, above eight Weeks, and had voided and vomited Pins; and two Witnesses swore to Chains of Hundreds of Pins that came from him in his Excrements. And it seems they had a Fancy that scratching Sarah Morduck would give him Relief, and they were earnest with me that I would command this Woman to be scratch'd; and I appeal to them, whether I did not refuse it. I said, if I should order this, it would be an Assault; but if she will consent, you may do it. Says she, If I may be secured for the future, I will let him. Says I, if you do it, do it in your own way; there are several here that know it was so. And she did give her Consent; and he scratch'd her, and I pull'd away her Arm from him. The Fellow had Bread and Cheese brought him; and as soon as he had scratch'd this Woman, he took the Bread and Cheese and eat prodigiously; and he had about a Quart of Drink, and he drank it up at a Gulp. I ask'd Mrs. Morduck, and her Friends, whether they did ever know that this Fellow had got any Money by these Tricks? No, they could not tell of any; so that there appeared to be neither Profit nor Revenge in the Case? And I thought he could not be such a Fool to pretend all this for no End, and run the Hazard of being whipp'd.

L. C. J. Holt. The Question is not whether he shall be punish'd for a Fool, but whether he be a Knave; whatever Punishment he may suffer, if convicted, does not belong to you to determine.

Sir Tho. Lane. I sent for Mr. Martin, and I sent for him, and I sent for the Woman, and I examined them both; and Mr. Martin told me he suspected the Fellow might be an Impostor, for he had got a Woman to be scratch'd for Sarah Morduck. And he ask'd the Woman that Mr. Martin had hired, and she said, in her Opinion he could see no more than a Post.

L. C. J. Holt. Call Johnson again. This Man scratch'd you. When he had done it, did you see him afterwards?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Were his Eyes open?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. But could he see?

Mrs. Johnson. No. When he scratch'd me they were shut.

L. C. J. Holt. Every body can see when their Eyes are open.

Sir

Sir Tho. Lane. This Woman said, she believed he could neither see nor hear, any more than a Post.

Dr. Martin. It was after I was gone, I heard nothing of it.

Sir Tho. Lane. I sent for him after the Examination; all the Evidence that was before was of his fasting.

L. C. J. Holt. Anne Eaton, How long did you watch with him?

Anne Eaton. Nine Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he dumb and blind so long?

Anne Eaton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How long did he fast?

Anne Eaton. Thirteen Weeks in all.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him all the Time?

Anne Eaton. Sometimes by Night, but not by Day.

Heycock Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What do you know of this Man?

Heycock. I saw this Man in a very dreadful Condition since the last Affizes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Where did you see him?

Heycock. At Mr. Welling's. I saw him blind and dumb, and his Eyes were ready to start out of his Head.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long since was it that you saw him thus?

Heycock. I saw him several times in that Condition. And I was once in Company, when there were four or five to hold him in his Bed, whereas at another time he had not half the Strength of a Man.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Heycock. Since the Affizes.

Spurling Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did you see of this Person?

Spurling. I saw him at Madam Davenport's.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How often did you see him?

Spurling. Three Times.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him there?

Spurling. I went to see him, because I heard he was under a supernatural Power.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you think that was, was it an infernal Power?

Spurling. A diabolical Spirit.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever hear the Power of a diabolical Spirit described?

Spurling. But I suppose those that are under Witchcraft are under such a Spirit.

L. C. J. Holt. But can a diabolical Spirit enable a Man to fast forty Days?

Spurling. I can't tell that. I was acquainted with one that was under a supernatural Power, that was in such a Condition as this Man was.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he fast too?

Spurling. I know not that?

L. C. J. Holt. I never heard that the Devil ever made such a bold Attempt.

Spurling. That Person, the Devil, acted him so subtilly, that it was impossible to prosecute him.

L. C. J. Holt. How could you know that?

Spurling. Because when his Eyes were shut, he could tell any Man's Name that was coming up.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not he very well pleased to be bewitch'd?

Spurling. No, he was actually possessed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he sick, or out of order?

Spurling. No, my Lord; but he had crooked Pins came from him.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he accuse any body of bewitching him?

Spurling. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. What is become of that Person he accused?

Spurling. He accused several.

L. C. J. Holt. How many did he accuse?

Spurling. Five Women; especially one.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that Woman?

Spurling. She is deceased.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long and tedious Evidence. The Information is against this Richard Hathaway, for that he with an evil Design to take away the Life of Sarah Morduck, pretended to be bewitch'd, and to have fasted for a considerable Time, being not able to take any Sustainance for divers Days; nay, for, several Weeks, which he pretended to fast. And his fasting was imputed to this Woman's bewitching him; that he did not pretend to fast a considerable Time; that he did procure this Woman to be committed for being a Witch; that she was Indicted, Tried, and Acquitted, is plainly proved to you, without all manner of Question. The only Question that you are now to try, is, whether this Man did do this by reason of any Disability of his Mind, or Delusion that was upon him; or did counterfeit (what was the Reason to induce him to counterfeit, does not appear, whether to get Money, or what else, will not be material); but if this Man was under a Delirium of his Mind, and did fancy himself to be bewitch'd, then there will be no Reason to convict him.

Now it is urged, that he did this maliciously, and with a Design to take away the Woman's Life. First they tell you, that this Man had been a Servant to one Welling a Blacksmith: He came to him about four or five Years ago; then he had Fits, and was put into the Hospital; and being there, he pretends he could not eat. After that, he was dumb; and after that, he began to be blind; and being blind and dumb, and fasting, these were look'd upon to be the three Tokens that he was bewitch'd. Then the Man had a fancy that he was bewitch'd by this Woman, but for what Reasons does not appear; but his Fancy appear'd to be very strong, that she brought him into these Mischiefs. Therefore he must go and scratch her; which he did, and presently he could see and eat. This was look'd on as very strange, and People concluded that this Woman was the Cause of these Maladies that were upon this Man. It seems that this scratching was thought to be so effectual, that he was well for about six Weeks; after which he appeared to be ill again, and his Sight and his Stomach were gone again, and then it was proposed he should scratch her again. It seems that before that, Dr. Martin was desired to come to him, and pray with him, and he did: And to try whether he was sensible or not, he took him by the Hand, and by the Signs he made, found he was sensible; and therefore he did pity his Condition, but could not tell what to make of it. But Welling his Master told the Doctor he had received great Benefit by scratching the Woman before; and thereupon desired she might be scratch'd again. But he suspecting this might be a mere Counterfeit, and that it could not have that Effect, he thereupon gets the Woman seemingly to consent to be scratch'd, being resolved to try whether this was an Impostor or no. And Hathaway pretending himself to be blind, gave him an Opportunity to make the Experiment ; for he procured another Woman to represent Sarab Morduck, and she consented to be scratch'd in her stead ; Hathaway was laid up in a Bed, and Sarab Morduck was in the Room, and spake to him. It was observ'd, when this other Woman, whose Name was Johnson, was brought to represent this Morduck to Hathaway, she put her Hand into his, and then he examin'd it, and her Wrist, and her Arm ; and so it seems he had some Apprehensions of a Design to impose upon him. And then he proceeds to scratch that other Woman, who takes it patiently, till the Blood was ready to come ; and then she was suddenly taken away ; and some of the Company said the Blood is come, and presently his Eyes opened, and he laid hold on Sarab Morduck, and seizes her, and did not only appear to see, but to speak. This is proved to you by other Evidence besides Dr. Martin. Upon this, says Dr. Martin, you are mistaken ; you have deceived the World, you have not scratch'd Sarab Morduck, but another Woman. When he understood that, he was very much concern'd, and seem'd to begin to be ill again ; and Welling said, he will not be well till he hath scratch'd the right Woman ; so to appearance he fell ill again. You have heard how the Matter had been carry'd on afterwards ; for many looked on this Blindness and Fasting as an errant Imposture. Welling and his Wife complained to Dr. Martin, saying, you have undone us all, and our Family too. What should be the meaning of that ? What, because he had discovered a Cheat, therefore they were undone. It seemed likely, that if it were a Cheat, and Welling not conscious to himself of carrying it on, he need not have been concern'd at it. But they rest not here, the Woman, Sarab Morduck, must be scratch'd again ; which was perform'd with Violence, against her Consent ; and the Woman being pursued by the Rabble, not able to live quietly in Southwark, was forced to go on the other side of the Water, and take a Lodging there for her Security ; where she was again pursued, and assaulted by Hathaway and others, in a riotous Manner, in order to scratch her again ; and tho' Complaint on her Behalf was made of this Violence to Sir Thomas Lane, he did not think fit to give her any Relief, being (as it seems upon some Evidence) possessed with an Opinion that there might be some Grounds for pursuing this Woman in that manner. She was carried before him, and he being informed that this Fellow could not eat nor drink, thereupon it was thought convenient by Sir Thomas, in order to make a full Discovery, that she should be scratch'd again ; and accordingly she was persuaded to submit to be scratched, and presently after the scratching, Hathaway did eat, and drank very greedily, and thereupon this Woman was committed to Prison. This was thought a great Evidence of this Man's being bewitched by this Woman, Sarab Morduck. What Rule they have for it either in Philosophy or Divinity, I cannot tell. There was a Trial, and the Woman was acquitted, and upon full Evidence. He then pretended to have fasted for a long Time. That of our Saviour's fasting forty Days, is mentioned in Scripture as miraculous, and an Effect of divine Power, being one Evidence of the Truth of the Christian Religion. Who can imagine, that without such Assistance, a Man can fast forty Days, or above, and yet continue in Health ? It is not within the Compass of my Understanding to conceive it ; I must leave you to consult your own, and to consider with yourselves, whether you have any Evidence to induce you to believe it to be in the Power of all the Witches in the World, or all the Devils in Hell, to enable a Man to fast beyond the usual Time that Nature will allow ; they cannot invert the Order of Nature : And if the Thing be impossible, and he endeavour all this while to make the World believe he has fasted so long a Time, it is most evident he is a Cheat ; for he must contrive to have some Victuals some way or other secretly convey'd to him ; of which the Impossibility of his being able to fast so long is a Demonstration. But notwithstanding this Trial, and that this Woman was acquitted, yet this Matter must be carried on still. He was bailed out, and then returns to his Fits again ; and tho' then he was not blind, or pretended to be so, yet he seemed to fast, and to be dumb again for a long Time. This made a great Hubbub about the Town, and the People clamour'd that the Man had Injustice done him in the Trial at the Assizes ; and Reports were spread, that the Woman was acquitted by Favour or Corruption both of Judge and Jury. Upon this Account, the Woman was pursued by a Rabble, and came to be in imminent Danger of her Life. Wherefore it was thought highly necessary that the Prosecution against this Man, and others concern'd with him, should be speedy ; and thereupon he was apprehended, and bound to appear in the King's-Bench, and there he pretended still to be dumb. His Bail deliver'd him up, and he was sent to the Marshalsea. There he lay without eating or speaking for some short time, till it was consider'd that if he was under any real Affliction, it was proper he should be under the Care of some proper Person : Therefore he was put to the House of Mr. Kenfy a Chirurgeon in Fetter-Lane, who was order'd to take care of him, and use him well ; also to watch him, and endeavour to make a Discovery of the Truth of his Condition. He was deliver'd into his Hands the first of November last. The People of the House took care of him, and he fasted from Saturday till Monday ; and Mr. Kenfy asked him how many Weeks he had fasted, he counted on his Fingers twelve : But Mr. Kenfy thought he did not deal truly, but had a mind to impose upon the World, and therefore he locks him up. He eat nothing all Saturday and Sunday : But Mr. Kenfy found he had made Water, for he discovered the Rug or Counterpane of the Bed to be wet ; and that it appear'd to come from the Tester of the Bed : He made Water it seems in an old Box, and set it over the Bed. Drink was offered him, but he refused it. After this Mr. Kenfy makes use of this Stratagem : He pretends to quarrel with his Maid, and gives her reproachful Language, in the hearing of Hathaway ; calling her Hypocrite, like unto him. At which the Maid seemed to be provoked ; and out of Revenge, to prevent her Master's Design in making a Discovery, she takes an Opportunity and says to him, Take heed of my Master, he will betray you. And she had insinuated her self so far into him, that he began to trust her. She gave him on the Monday a Glass of Brandy, which he drank, and a Piece of Pudding, which he received and put into his Pocket ; and afterwards a Toast and Beer, which he eat and drank, and afterwards he entirely trusted this Woman. And Day by Day he did eat plentifully for several Days together in her Presence, from Tuesday to Friday Se'ennight following, thinking Mr. Kenfy did not see him ; but he being in a secret Place, undiscovered by

Hatha-

Hathaway, did see him eat and drink several Days, sometimes he drank so much, that he was perfectly drunk; and all this while he pretended to fast, tho' divers others besides Mr. Kensy and the Maid were Witnesses to his eating and drinking. Then it was thought to be time to discover this to the World; and he was told plainly by Mr. Kensy, that he was discover'd, and if he would tell the Truth, he should be pardon'd, seeing he could carry it on no longer. Now it is plain this Man had counterfeited during the Time he was at Mr. Kensy's; tho' that particular Time be not laid in the Information, yet it is a Continuance of that Time which is laid therein.

And if he was an Impostor by pretending to have fasted while he was at Mr. Kensy's House, I leave you to consider whether he was not so all the while before. You hear what Management there has been, how he was at Welling's Home, how Pins were pretended to come from him, how they were made use of, and Charms sewed to him. You hear how some Time ago one Mr. Bateman came to him, hearing at the beginning of this Business, he vomited Pins: He saw some on the Ground; when he vomited a considerable Number, they were linked up together; for it is hard to manage so many loose Pins; but when they are linked together, they are the easier to manage in the Mouth. Here he pretended to vomit Pins, and would be still putting his Hands to his Pocket, and Mr. Bateman fancied he pulled them out from thence. Therefore he took the Chamber-pot, and would not let his Hands come near it; then he vomited no Pins there; and he search'd his Pockets, and there were great Quantities of Pins found therein; neither did he at any Time seem to vomit any Pins, until he had drank a Draught of Ale. But notwithstanding all this, there are People that come and tell you that he was sick; he was disturbed, and had these Fits. One Woman tells you she has watched with him several Times; sometimes by Night: Another Woman tells you that she watched with him, when the other did not, and sometimes by Day; and that he did not eat, but was sick, and out of Order. And another tells you, he saw him; that he was in great Disorder, threw himself backward and forward, and would turn his Face round towards his Back; and that he was blind, tho' his Eyes were open. But how could he tell that he was blind? Said he, when I pulled him by his Eye-lids, his Eyes did not stir; and therefore he infers, that he was blind. And then they give you an Account that he was in the Hospital five Months; and that he was weak, and went upon his Ancles, and had Quicksilver given him; and that he lay seven or eight Days, and did not eat; but then there was no Apprehension of Witchcraft. And one Mr. Smith an Apothecary, a Witness, called on his part, and a Neighbour, said, he knew him four or five Years ago; and that Hathaway was then with his Master, and had Fits, and would fall down, and seem to be dead; whether he was really sick, or counterfeited, he cannot tell; he applied his Cupping-glasses to him, and presently brought him to himself. This is one of his own Witnesses. And then there is Mrs. Willoughby; she saw him in his Master's House, and she said his Breath made a Noise like the Barking of a Dog, and she believed he was bewitched, for she herself had been bewitched, and was made to fly, and she fancies he was bewitched because of his breathing in that manner. And then they tell you what Care was taken of him, and he was put into an empty House about nine or ten Days, and one Man watch'd with him by Day, and another by Night, and how they came to do that: And they swear they never saw him eat or drink all that time; but they say he did several Times vomit Pins in that time; but it seems he was put there merely out of Charity, the Parish would not be charged with him: Then they tell you there were People appointed to watch with him, there were two Chamber-pots; and in one there were Excrements, and there were Pins in it, and Hair, and a Piece of a Nail, but after he sat on the second Pot, there was nothing found therein; but they conclude him bewitched. Then there are others that say he lay as dead, and that they took out of his Mouth several Pins. And then you have an Account after the Trial, what happened at Mrs. Davenport's, where he was sent by Dr. Hamilton to be tried whether he was an Impostor or not. She says she watched with him herself sometimes, another Woman at other times, and another at other times, and that they could never perceive that he eat any thing. But there is one Mr. Davenport that was with him some other times, but he is gone to Sea, and could not appear. Then comes in at last Dr. Hamilton, and he tells you he was by when this Matter was brought before Sir Thomas Lane, and he could not tell what to think of his Fasting, but as to his Fits and the Pins, he says those may be easily counterfeited by Legerdemain Tricks, but, says he, fasting for so long, as some People did believe he did, is more than Nature can bear; no body can think the Devil has such a Power to enable a Man to undergo it. Tricks the Devil may play, but not work a Miracle, it is not to be thought that God should let him loose so far. This is the Sum of the Matter, his pretending to be dumb and blind, and to fast, and to be restored to his Speech, his Sight, and Stomach, by scratching this Woman, is fully proved. You are to consider whether he did labour under these Infirmities, or counterfeited them, and whether scratching and drawing Blood of the old Woman, could be effectual to cure him of them, if they had been real? If not, then it is a strong Argument that these Infirmities were counterfeited. His scratching and drawing Blood of a strange Woman, instead of Sarah Morduck, did seem to avail him, as much as if he had scratch'd her, until he understood he was imposed upon; then he seemed to relapse to his former Condition. You will remember what passed at Mr. Kensy's, and the Manner of vomiting of Pins as was pretended. You are to consider whether this Man was non compos mentis, or under a Delusion; therefore I shall spare the troubling you with more Words, but leave it wholly to you. If you do believe, upon the whole Matter, that this Man has imposed upon the Magistrate and on the World, or endeavoured by counterfeiting these Infirmities, to persuade People to believe that this Woman was a Witch, and had bewitched him, then there is all the Reason that can be, to find him guilty. But if you believe he did not counterfeit, or that he was non compos mentis, or under any kind of Delusions, you must acquit him.

The Jury consulted, and without going from the Bar, brought him in Guilty.

A short Account of the Trial held at Surrey Assizes, in the Borough of Southwark, March 26. 1703.

In an Information, against Richard Hathaway, Thomas Welling and Elizabeth his Wife, and Elizabeth Willoughby, Wife of Walter Willoughby, upon an Information for a Riot and Assault, &c.

THE Information sets forth, That the Defendants, with divers other Persons, the 25th of September, in the twelfth Year of King William, at Southwark, in a riotous and unlawful Manner assembled themselves, and made a great Affray and Riot; and upon one Sarah Morduck, the Wife of Edward Morduck, being an honest Woman, and not a Witch, nor ever using Witchcraft, Inchantment, Charm, or Sorcery, did make an Assault, and under a wicked Colour, against the Law, to try whether the said Sarah was then a Witch (the Defendant Hathaway then falsely and maliciously affirming himself to be bewitched by her the said Sarah, though in truth he was never bewitched, and well knew himself not to be so) her the said Sarah did then, and there scratch, wound, &c. against the Peace, &c.

The Information further sets forth, That the said Defendants, the 11th of February, in the twelfth Year of King William, at Southwark aforesaid, assembling themselves together riotously and unlawfully, did then and there make a great Affray and Riot, and also assaulted the said Sarah, and beat, scratch'd, and wounded her, in Contempt of the King, and against the Peace, &c.

The Information further sets forth, That the said Defendants, the said 11th of February, did Assault the said Sarah, and wounded her the said Sarah, against the Peace, &c.

The Defendants pleaded, Not Guilty, and Issue was taken thereupon. The Council for the King opened the Case to this Effect: That the Defendant's Case was the same in the other Information. Hathaway pretended himself bewitch'd, and the Contrivance was carried on by the other Defendants and divers others; but whether for the Hopes of getting Money by it, or out of malice to take away the poor Woman's Life, or what the Design was, was not then known; but it was certain that several Riots and Assemblies were made, and great Numbers of People came together in a Body at several Times to Morduck's House, and in a violent Manner enter'd the same, and by Force took her out and carried her away to the Defendant Welling's House, where the Defendant Hathaway scratch'd her; and the other Defendants also in a very barbarous Manner beat her, pulled out her Teeth, tore her Face, Hair and Cloaths, threw her on the Ground, stamp'd upon her Belly, and threw her into the Street, where she lay as murdered, until taken into a Neighbour's House; which the Defendants and others in a riotous Manner beset, and threatned to pull it down, unless Morduck (the pretended Witch) was again delivered to them. These Riots and Assaults happened to be encouraged by an Accident, which fell out as Morduck was going through Newgate-Market, where the People crying out, A Witch, the Rabble seized her, and threatned to throw her into a Horse-pond; that one of these Rioters being taken away, was carried before a Magistrate in the City, but he was so far from taking notice thereof, that he declared that there was Cause enough for it; and being desired to ask the Person's Name, refused it; but the same Magistrate afterwards ordered the Defendant Hathaway to scratch Morduck in his Presence, where were also present some of the Aldermen of London. These Matters being acted by publick Authority, gave the licentious Mob such a Confidence, that even after the Woman was tried and acquitted, and the Defendant Hathaway committed for an Impostor, yet he with the other Defendants, did again in a riotous manner Assault, Scratch, and Wound the said Morduck, and pursued her after a cruel Manner from Day to Day, till they were taken into Custody, in order to be punished for the same. For which several barbarous Facts the Defendants where then to be tried.

Then the Council for the King called their Evidence to prove the several Branches of the Information.

Sarah Morduck being called and sworn, deposed to this Effect: That in September last, Richard Hathaway came to this Informant in Surrey, as she was opening her Window, and being behind, scratch'd her Face in a very cruel Manner, and forc'd out one of her Teeth, and carried away her Cloaths. And upon the 11th of February last, Thomas Osbourn, Thomas Hatton, with four other Persons unknown, all in Disguise, came to this Informant's House in Surrey, and forced her out of her House, and carried her to the House of Thomas Welling, who is Master to the said Richard Hathaway; and there the said Hathaway, by the Encouragement of the said Osbourn and Hatton, and the rest of the Company, did again scratch this Informant in a most barbarous Manner; and afterwards Elizabeth, Wife to the said Thomas Welling, fell upon her and scratch'd her in a most cruel Manner; and tore her Face, and tore off her Head-cloaths and Hair; and then the said Thomas Welling gave this Informant two or three Kicks on her Belly, and threw her on the Ground and stamp'd upon her, and so much bruised her that she was forced to keep her Bed for about a Fortnight. And this Informant further deposeth, That in September last, one Elizabeth Willoughby, the Wife of Walter Willoughby, came to this Informant's House in Surrey, and brought a great many Persons unknown to this Informant with her; and the said Elizabeth gave this Informant several Blows with her Fist, and would have pulled her out of her House, for him the aforesaid Richard Hathaway to have scratch'd her, he standing at a Corner hard by, but was prevented by Mrs. Sarah Hall. And further saith, That in the Month of September last she having occasion to go into Newgate-Market, a Boy, his Name is John Hopkins, called out, saying, There goes the old Witch; whereupon a great Company of People in a riotous Manner, flock'd about her, and threatned to throw her into a Horse-pond; and this this Informant being got into an Ale-House by the Assistance of some Women, avoided the Fury of the Rabble, otherwise she had been Murdered, as she verily believes; and afterwards Mr. Burrel her Landlord, with others his Assistants came and conveyed her home.

Sarah Hall was the next Witness, who said, That in September 1700, about 8 in the Forenoon, the Defendant Willoughby came with Hathaway and others, pretending to buy Fruit of Morduck, and told Morduck she came to have her out, that Hathaway might scratch her; and Willoughby struck Morduck several Blows, and forced her out of Doors, before Hall could come to her Assistance, who with difficulty got Morduck into her House again; upon which the Defendants Willoughby and Hathaway, and others, beset her House and threatened to pull it down, unless they had Morduck deliver'd to them; but Hall calling up her Husband, who was a Bed, the Person went away.

Robert Adams, and John Boxer, both Watermen, declared, That plying for their Fair at Mason's Stairs, they saw the Defendant Hathaway come behind Morduck as she was opening her Window, and took her about the Neck with one Arm, and pulled her almost to the Ground, and scratch'd her Face in several Places till the Blood came, and tore her Mouth, and tore her Hood and Headcloaths from her Head; and being taken off, Morduck got into a Neighbour's House, whom Hathaway would have pursued in at a Window, had not Adams stoppt him.

To prove the Riot and Assault in February 1700.

Sarah Morduck declared, That the 11th of February, 1700. Thomas Osbourn, Thomas Hatton, with four others unknown, all disguised, came to and forced her out of her House, and carried her to the House of the Defendant Welling, Hathaway's Master; where Hathaway, by the Encouragement of the Company, scratch'd her barbarously; and after that Welling's Wife scratch'd her, and tore her Hair, and Face, and pulled off her Headcloaths; then Welling kick'd her two or three Times on the Belly, and threw her on the Ground, and stamp'd on her, and bruised her so much, that she was forced to keep her Bed for a Fortnight,

Mrs. Hall said, That in February 1700, in the Evening, several Persons unknown came to her House, and forced Morduck from thence, and carried her to Welling's (as she was told): That about half an Hour after, Morduck was cast into the Street, and being received into a Neighbour's House, Hall went to her, and found her Face much torn, in a most barbarous Manner, and her Legs, Arms, and Body cruelly bruised and black.

Then the Council called Witnesses to prove the Third Part of the Information.

Samuel Burrel being sworn, depofed, That Edmund Jones, in Company with Two more, came to his House, and desired to speak with Morduck, who lodged there, who being called to Jones, he ask'd her to go over the Water to be scratch'd by Hathaway, who declared he was bewitched by her; but she refusing to go, Jones said, if she walked London he would have her scratch'd; and further, that about Easter or Whitson Week last, the said Jones came to his House with about fourteen Strangers, among whom was Hathaway, and would have forced into Morduck's Chamber; but a Constable coming, they all but Jones dispers'd, who the Constable took, and carried before Sir Thomas Lane; but Sir Thomas would take no Notice of it.

Thomas Knowlton being sworn, depofed, That in Easter Week last, Jones and Hathaway, and several others, went into Burrel's House, and asked for Sarah Morduck, who was called down to them, when Burrel desired them to go up Stairs into the common Drinking-Room, and desired Knowlton to see Morduck had no Harm done her. That soon after came in about fourteen Persons, one of which said, they came to give Hathaway Ease, and that they would do it before they went, upon which Morduck, at Knowlton's Desire, retired into her Chamber.

Thomas Noon being sworn, declared, That all the Time aforesaid he saw Three or Four Persons, who were of Jones's Company, endeavouring to get into Morduck's Chamber; and upon Noon's asking them their Business, they cry'd they would speak with Morduck, but upon his threatening them they went into the Room below Stairs from whence they came.

Henry Armstrong declared, That in September was Twelve-month he saw a great Number of People following Morduck, calling her Witch; and going home afterwards, he saw a Crowd of People at an Alehouse Door, near St. Paul's Church-yard, who declared Morduck a Witch; and that he assisted Burrel in securing Morduck from the Rabble.

James Hearne being called, depofed, that in Easter or Whitson Week last, one Jones was apprehended for a Riot by him and others committed in Burrel's House, and carried before Sir Thomas Lane, who discharged Jones, saying there was Cause enough for the Riot and tho' often intreated by Hearne, yet Sir Thomas refused to let him know Jones's Name. And the said Hearne further declared, That the Day after Jones was carried before Sir Thomas, he and Burrel, by Sir Thomas's Directions, carried Morduck before him, where were present Sir Owen Buckingham and Dr. Hamilton and the Defendant Hathaway. That Sir Thomas would have had Morduck scratched by Hathaway, which she refused, unless she might be at Peace for the future: And after Dr. Hamilton had given Hathaway some Beer, Sir Thomas would have had Morduck scratch'd; but the Doctor said, Let her alone a little, to see what Effect the Drink would have on Hathaway; and said, if she was scratch'd it would be said that the Scratching, and not the Drink made the Alteration. And when Sir Thomas had heard some more Discourse of Hathaway's vomiting Pins, &c. Sir Thomas said again, let her be scratch'd; but Hearne opposed it; saying, she had been too much abused already, notwithstanding which, Sir Thomas ordered Hathaway to scratch her, and ordered her to be stript and search'd by some Women in his own House. That Hearne seeing Sir Thomas's Resolution, bid him satisfy himself. After which Sir Thomas committed Morduck to Wood-street-Compter, and refused 500 l. Bail for her Appearance: But upon Application made to him by Dr. Barton and Dr. Martin, Sir Thomas accepted Hearne's and his Brother's Bail for Morduck.

The Witnesses for the Defendants being called and heard, and the Right Honourable Lord Chief Justice Holt having spoken to the Jury, they withdrew, and soon after brought them all in Guilty.

CLXXVIII. *Proceedings against JAMES BOUCHER, * Gent. at the Queen's Bench for High-Treason, February 28. 170³. Hil. 2 Ann.*

THE Court being set, the Prisoner was called, and the Clerk of Arraignments ordered Proclamation to be made, for the Under Sheriff of Suffex to return the Precept, and the Keeper of Newgate to bring into Court the Body of James Boucher. Accordingly the Precept was return'd, and the Prisoner set to the Bar.

Clerk of Arr. James Boucher hold up thy Hand. (Which he did).

Then the Grand Jury of Suffex's Presentments were read.

Suffex ff. "THE Jurors for our Lady the Queen, upon their Oaths do present, That James Boucher, late of London, Gent. who was a Subject of the late King William the Third, and now Subject of Queen Anne, after the 11th Day of December 1688, viz. the first Day of August 1689, was in the Kingdom of Ireland, and after and before the Third Day of December 1697, viz. the first Day of December 1694, the said James Boucher did voluntarily go into the Kingdom of France, without Licence from the late King William the Third, or from the late Queen Mary: And that the said James Boucher, on the said third Day of December 1697, was not within the Dominions of the late King William the Third: And that he the said James Boucher, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance towards Our said Lady the Queen, that now is, his Supreme, True, Legitimate, Lawful and undoubted Lady; and as a false Traitor against our said Lady Anne, the Queen that now is, after the 14th Day of January 1697, viz. the tenth Day of December, in the second Year of the Reign of our Lady Anne, the Queen that now is; did Traiterously return and come into the Kingdom of England, viz. at East Bourne in the County of Suffex, without Licence from the late King William under his Privy Seal, or from our said Lady the Queen under her Privy Seal, obtained; against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Form of the Statute in this Case provided, and against the Peace of our said Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, &c."

Clerk of Arr. What sayest thou, Art thou guilty of the said Treason, whereof thou art indicted, or not guilty?

J. Boucher. Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you? Speak out.

J. Boucher. Guilty.

Clerk of Arr. James Boucher hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Then the Second Presentment was read.

Suffex ff. "THE Jurors of our Lady the Queen, upon their Oaths, present, That

"James Boucher, late of London, Gent. who was a Subject of the late King William the Third, and now a Subject of her present Majesty; after the 13th Day of February 1688, and before the 3d of February 1697 (viz.) the first Day of August 1689, was in Arms in the Service of the late King James, in Europe, viz. in the Kingdom of Ireland; and that the said James Boucher, afterwards and before the said third Day of December 1697 (viz.) the first Day of December 1694, did voluntarily go into the Kingdom of France, and the Third Day of December 1697, was not within the Dominions of the late King William. That the said James Boucher, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, and not regarding the Duty of his Allegiance to our Lady the Queen, his Supreme, True, Lawful and undoubted Lady, and as a false Traytor against the said Lady the Queen, after the 14th Day of January 1697, viz. the 10th Day of December, in the second Year of the Reign of our said Lady the Queen, did Traiterously return and come into this Kingdom of England, viz. at East Bourne in the County of Suffex, without Licence from the late King William under his Privy Seal, or from our said Lady the Queen, under her Privy Seal obtain'd; against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided, and against the Peace of our said Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, &c."

Clerk of Arr. How sayest thou, art thou Guilty of the said Treason whereof thou art indicted, or not guilty?

J. Boucher. Guilty.

J. Boucher. My Lord, I humbly beg that I may have leave to speak Two or Three Words.

L. C. J. Holt. What would you say?

J. Boucher. My Lord, I humbly beg leave to speak Two or Three Words.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, let us hear what you have to say.

J. Boucher. My Lord, it is very well known, that I have solicited this Two Years for Leave to come over into England. And while I have been in France, I have done all that I could to subside the English that were brought Prisoners to the French Camp, and have to my Power assisted them with Money, and other Necessaries, especially one Troop of Horse. I apply'd my self to Colonel Lumly, and he promised to lay my Case before the Queen. But not hearing from him, I went to his Son, and he told me he had no Opportunity to acquaint the Queen with it. Afterwards I was taken going for Holland, and then I sent to Colonel Lumly, and he promised to Remember me. And I continued still to solicit the Service of Her Majesty's Subjects, and have procured their Horses that have been taken from them, to be restored to them. I spoke to Colonel Godfry, and he promised to speak to—who promised to make it their Interest to procure my Return. And after the Camp was over, I came over into England at Noon-day, with my Children, and sent up a Letter to my Lord Nottingham to acquaint him where I was. It's true, I followed King James into Ireland, but had no Commission, only served the Duke of Berwick as Aid du Camp. And afterwards I went into France, but never served there with any Commission, but as Master of the Horse to the Duke of Berwick. And I did hope that the Articles of Limerick would take off a great Part of my Offence. My Lord, I hope you will represent my Case favourably to the Queen.

Dr. Sandys. My Lord, I beg leave to speak a Word or two on Behalf of the Prisoner. My Lord, I solicited —

L. C. J. Holt. What you can say to us will signify nothing; but if you have any thing to say for the Prisoner, you must apply yourself elsewhere.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as it is my Duty, I demand Judgment against the Prisoner, upon his Confession of the two Indictments.

Clerk of Arr. James Boucher, thou hast been indicted on two Indictments, and confessed thyself Guilty of both. What hast thou to say why Sentence of Death should not be pronounced against thee?

J. Boucher. I hope your Lordship will be pleased to intercede for me to the Queen.

Clerk of Arr. My Lords, the Queen's Justices do strictly command all Persons to keep Silence while Judgment is giving, on Pain of Imprisonment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Boucher, you are, by your own Confession, convicted of High-Treason, for which Judgment of Death is to be pronounced upon you, and which you are to suffer under those Circumstances which the Law hath appointed.

The Fact of which you were Accused, and have now Confessed, is, That since the Eleventh Day of December, 1688, you went into France without Licence either from the late King or Queen, and have returned since the Fourteenth of January, 1697, without any Licence under the Privy Seal, either from the late King, or her Majesty that now is; which Fact is made High-Treason by the Statute of the ninth Year of the late King.

The Wisdom and Justice in making that Law, will be very evident to any one that will but reflect upon the Posture of our Affairs at that Time: For in the Year preceding to that of the making thereof, there was an horrid Conspiracy formed from among that Party of Men who had so left the Kingdom, to assassinate the late King; to introduce a Popish and French Power, for the Subversion of the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties and Properties of the People of England: Which was managed with that Privacy, carried on with that Secrecy, that it was not discovered, nay, not so much as suspected, until it arrived to that Maturity, that it was come to the very Point of being put in Execution.

The Truth of which is very clear, as well as by the Proofs produced at the Trials of several of the Malefactors, as even by their own Confession.

In the following Year the Peace of Ryswick was made, whereby the Intercourse was restored between England and France. From thence it was evident, that divers of that Party of Men would return into the Realm, and thereby have an Opportunity to revive and carry on that horrid Design, in the Success whereof they had been so disappointed; for which, no doubt, they were not a little enraged, and it could not be otherwise expected but they would make use of it: For those of the same Principles will be guilty of the same Practices.

Therefore it was necessary to make a Returning into England by any of those who were under these Circumstances, to be so very penal, unless they should first give Satisfaction to the Government, either of their Innocence or Repentance, and obtain a Licence and Approbation for their Return, under the Privy Seal; for their Returning in any other Manner, is a Danger to the Queen's Person, and her Kingdom.

This Treason, tho' it seems, and is new in the Form, yet it is compounded of an old Treason, known in the antient Law of the Kingdom, which is, that of adhering to the King's Enemies. For what can be thought of those who, in Time of War, shall abandon their own Country, be harboured and protected in any Enemy's Country, for being of an Interest inconsistent with, even repugnant to, that of their own?

What your Design might be in returning in this Manner, whether to revive and pursue those wicked Practices, your own Conscience is your Witness, and will be your Judge; and if that shall acquit you, it will be for your Advantage in the World to come. But you are an Offender against the Law of the Land, which hath made this your Offence to be High-Treason, and therefore that Judgment appointed for one guilty thereof must be pronounced; the Court therefore doth award, That you be conveyed from hence to Newgate, the Prison from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn upon a Hurdle to Tyburn; where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and while you are alive to be cut down, your privy Members to be cut off, and your Bowels to be cut out of your Body, and burnt in your View; your Head is to be cut off, and your Body is to be divided into four Parts, and your Head and your Quarters are to be disposed as her Majesty shall appoint. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Clerk of Arr. Goaler, look to your Prisoner.

J. Boucher. My Lord, I beg that my Friends may have Leave to come to me.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have such as is usual, and as is fitting.

Clerk of Arr. Take away the Prisoner.

Accordingly he was carried back to Newgate, but was reprieved.

CLXXIX. The Trial of DAVID LINDSAY, at the Old-Bailey, for High-Treason. April 19. 1704. 3 Ann.

THE Court being set, Proclamation was made.

Clerk of Arr. David Lindsay, hold up your Hand (which he did). Thou standest indicted by the Name of David Lindsay of London, Gent. for that thou being a Subject of the late King William, and now a Subject of her present Majesty, after the Eleventh Day of December, 1688, viz. the 26th Day of March, 1689, was in the Kingdom of England, viz. at the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex; and afterwards and before the Third Day of December, 1697, viz. the First Day of October, 1696. Thou the said David Lindsay did voluntarily go into France without Licence from the late King William or the late Queen Mary; and that thou the said David Lindsay, on the said Third Day of December, 1697, was not within the Dominions of the late King William; and that thou the said David Lindsay not having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance towards our Lady the Queen that now is thy Supreme, True, Legitimate, Lawful and undoubted Lady; and as a false Traytor against our said Lady Anne, the Queen that now is, after the 14th Day of January, 1697, viz. the 10th of December, in the second Year of the Reign of our Lady the Queen, did traiterously return and come into the Kingdom of England, viz. at the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, without Licence from the late King William under his Privy Seal, or from our said Lady the Queen, under her Privy Seal obtained; against the Duty of thy Allegiance, and against the Form of the Statute, and against the Peace of our Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, &c.

Mr. Lindsay (taking a Paper out of his Pocket, read it to the Court). My Lord, I am very sorry I am so unfortunate as to fall under the Displeasure of the Government; and being willing to save the Court all unnecessary Trouble upon my Trial, I have therefore resolved to confess most of the Facts charged upon me in the Indictment, viz. As to my being in France, and coming into England without Licence. But I am advised that there is something so singular for my Benefit in this Case, that I beg your Lordship to hear me by Council before my Arraignment; the Council I desire, are Mr. Williams and Mr. Raymond.

 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he might have had Council assigned him before, if he had desired it.*

L. C. J. Trevor. You shall have these Council assigned you which you desire.

 Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I suppose this is not desired now, with any Design to delay the Trial; the Prisoner must first plead to his Indictment.*

L. C. J. Trevor. If his Council be here, we are willing to hear what they have to say.

Clerk of Arr. Call Mr. Williams and Mr. Raymond (who came into the Court).

L. C. J. Trevor. Mr. Raymond and Mr. Williams, the Prisoner here desires you may be of Council for him, and the Court have assigned you to be of Council for him accordingly.

Mr. Att. Gen. He has heard the Indictment read to him, but he has not yet pleaded to it.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I desire to be heard by my Council first.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, I apprehend Mr. Lindsay's Intention is, to give the Court as little Trouble as may be, and therefore the Facts, of which he is Guilty, and that are charged upon him in this Indictment he will confess. But, my Lord, he has been advised by his Friends, and other Council, that his Case has something particular in it, which he hopes will be for his Advantage, and desires to have the Benefit of what can be pleaded, besides Guilty or not Guilty.

L. C. J. Trevor. Is there any other Plea, that he can plead specially?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, not any that we know of; I desired him to advise with some other Persons about it; I hope he has done so. As to the Prisoner's Confessing, or pleading Not Guilty to the Indictment, it's a Matter of Prudence, and not of Law.

L. C. J. Trevor. Let him plead then.

Clerk of Arr. David Lindsay, art thou Guilty of this High-Treason, whereof thou art indicted, or not Guilty?

David Lindsay. Not Guilty.

Clerk of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

David Lindsay. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I have one Favour to beg, that my Wife and Children may come to me.

L. C. J. Trevor. I think he may have that Liberty, in the Presence of the Keeper, if you have nothing to object against it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are willing they should come to him, in the Presence of the Keeper. We will not abridge any Man of what he can reasonably and justly desire.

L. C. J. Trevor. Have you pitch'd upon any Time to appoint for the Trial?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, on Monday next, if it suit the Court. He shall have a Copy of the Pannel, and all other Things that are fit for him. I suppose, my Lord, the Prisoner is now committed to the Sheriff, as is usual on these Occasions.

L. C. J. Trevor. Yes; he is committed to the Care of the Sheriff.

Clerk of Arr. Where is the Keeper of Newgate? (He appeared, and took Charge of the Prisoner. And then the Court adjourned till Monday, Nine of the Clock).

Monday,

Monday, April 24, 1704.

THE Court being set, and the Pannel called over, as usual, the Prisoner making no Exceptions; the following Gentlemen were sworn upon the Jury:

Timothy Lenoy, Esq;	Tbo. Ellis, Esq;
Richard Brown, Esq;	Nich. Goodwin, Esq;
Joseph Jorey, Esq;	Tbo. Blackmore, jun. Esq;
Tanner Arnold, Esq;	Will. Snelling, Esq;
Arthur Bayly, Esq;	Peter Lekeux, Esq;
George Ford, Esq;	Jo. Pack, Esq;

L. C. J. Holt. You, Gentlemen, that are sworn, go within the Bar.

Clerk of Arr. David Lindsay, hold up thy Hand (which he did). Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to the Charge. He stands indicted by the Name of David Lindsay, of the City of London, Gentleman, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon which Indictment he hath been arraigned, and hath pleaded Not Guilty. Your Charge is, to enquire whether he be guilty of the said Treason, whereof he stands indicted. If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels he had at that Time, or if he fled for it. But if you find him Not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more. And stand together, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Morley. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment preferred against David Lindsay, the Prisoner at the Bar, for High-Treason; for that he being a Subject of the late King William, and now a Subject of her present Majesty, after the Eleventh Day of December, 1688, viz. the Twenty-sixth Day of March, 1689, was in this Kingdom of England, viz. in St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, and afterwards and before the Third Day of December, 1697, viz. the First Day of October, 1696, the Prisoner did voluntarily go into France, without Licence either from the late King William, or the late Queen Mary: And that the Prisoner, on the Third Day of December, 1697, was not within the Dominions of the late King William. But the Prisoner, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance towards our Sovereign Lady the Queen, did, as a base Traitor, after the 14th Day of January, 1697, viz. the 10th Day of December, in the second Year of the Reign of her now Majesty, traiterously return and come into this Kingdom of England, viz. in the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, without Licence either from the late King William under his Privy-Seal, or from her now Majesty under her Privy-Seal; and this he hath done against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided. To this Charge he hath pleaded Not Guilty.

If we prove him Guilty, I doubt not but you will find him so.

Mr. Lindsay. I shall give your Lordships, and the Court, as little Trouble as may be. I shall only beg Leave to state my Case truly before you, and then I shall submit to your Judgment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Lindsay, if you had a mind to confess, you should have done it before; now the Jury are to enquire whether you are Guilty or not.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I only desire to be heard as to the Fact.

L. C. J. Holt. You must stay till the Queen's Evidence is heard, and then you may say what you can.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, his Intentions may be as to some Things to save the Time of the Court; and perhaps to ease the Queen's Council of some Trouble.

L. C. J. Holt. Let the Queen's Council state the Evidence first, and then it may be proper for him to say what he will.

Sir T. Powis [the Queen's Serjeant]. You must either confess the Treason wherewith you are charged, or else we must proceed to prove it.

L. C. J. Holt. If you open the Evidence, then it may be he will confess; but it must be first opened.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, there is nothing meant by us to restrain him in any thing that he has to say; all that we design is, to put him in a proper Method. It is proper that he should understand the Case. He has pleaded Not Guilty, and we are under a Necessity to shew what Evidence we have to prove him Guilty. My Lord, this Indictment is founded on an Act of Parliament made in the ninth Year of the late King William. And it is grounded on very good Reasons; for, as it is taken notice of in this Act, there had been a former Act made in the third and fourth Years of the Reign of the late King William and Queen Mary, by which it was made High-Treason for any to repair into France without Licence; that any one that did so, should fall under the Guilt of High-Treason. But that Act was calculated only for the Time the War lasted, and was of no longer Continuance; and there being a Peace concluded, the Preamble of this Act takes Notice, that thereby it would become necessary for the carrying on of Trade and Commerce between England and France, that there should be a Freedom of going and coming out of, and into the said Kingdoms respectively. And therefore the Act further says, That whereas several Persons who had been in Arms, or had been engaged in treasonable Practices against the King and Government, and other disaffected Persons (as all that resorted into France without Licence, during the War, were supposed to have sufficiently shewed themselves disaffected to the Government) therefore the Act goes on, and provides against the Mischiefs that might ensue; and says, If any of his Majesty's Subjects, who had voluntarily, since the Eleventh of December, 1688, gone into France without Licence, and should at any Time, after the 14th of January, 1697, return into England without Licence, that such Person, so doing, should fall under the Guilt and Penalty of High-Treason. This is the Substance of the Act upon which the Indictment is formed. Now, that which we have to charge and prove upon the Prisoner, is, That he was here in England after the 11th of December, 1688. We are ready to prove that he was here in the Beginning of March, 1689, that he went into France in October, 1696, that he afterwards returned into England in December last. We say, he went into France without Licence, and returned without Licence; and it will be his Part, if he can, to make it appear otherwise. If he does not admit these Facts, we shall call our Witnesses to prove them upon him. If they are Facts that he admits, then he may regularly proceed.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, may I speak now?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, you may.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I do confess, that being a Native of Scotland, and never having had any Office in England, I did go into France without his late Majesty's Licence, after the Time mentioned in the Act; and I did continue beyond

Sea

Sea, till I was informed that her Majesty did, according to her usual Clemency, by her Gracious Proclamation in 170³, give a general Pardon to all her Subjects; and being desirous to take the Advantage of it, and to return to my native Country, I came into Scotland, where I presented myself before the Government, and had the Benefit of the Queen's Proclamation allowed me. Whereupon, my Lord, being advised by some eminent Council there, that I was as free to come into England, as any other Subject; and having my Wife and Children here, I came to London by the Way of Berwick. Therefore, my Lord, humbly conceiving, in these Circumstances, that I am not guilty of Treason within the Intent of this Act, I desire to be heard by my Council.

L. C. J. Holt. You own you went into France since the 11th of December, 1688.

Mr. Lindsay. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. From what Place did you go into France, from England or from Scotland?

Mr. Lindsay. From England.

L. C. J. Holt. Then he confesses the whole Fact.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But, my Lord, he was there before 1697.

L. C. J. Holt. You must agree on the Fact. He says he did go into Scotland within the Time mentioned in that Proclamation. And being in Scotland, he says, he did advise with some learned Council, and they told him he might safely come into England. Now, do you admit that he did go into Scotland on that Occasion of the Queen's Proclamation?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to that Fact, we cannot admit it. There was no Licence mentioned in it, the Proclamation gives no Licence to come into England, only a general Pardon. What his Council will make of it, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you expect it should be proved?

Mr. Att. Gen. If he will shew us the Proclamation, if it be the same that I have I will allow it.

L. C. J. Holt. Produce that Proclamation, look upon it, it may be you will admit it without any further Proof.

Then the Proclamation was produced, and Mr. Attorney General looked on it.

Sir T. Powis. Will they have it read?

Mr. Att. Gen. It may be read if they desire it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we desire it may be read.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, we would not have it look'd on as a Thing of Right to be read, without further Proof.

L. C. J. Holt. No, that is of Grace, it is a voluntary Offer of yours.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I shall not oppose the reading of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you do admit that to be the Queen's Proclamation for Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. I desire to know, whether they admit the Prisoner to be a Native of Scotland?

Mr. Att. Gen. We do not know that.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you must prove it, if you think it material.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, he went from England into France, and returned from France into England again.

L. C. J. Holt. He must be taken for a Native of England, unless he can prove the contrary.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, shall we first read the Proclamation, or prove him a Native of Scotland?

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Proclamation first.

[Then the Clerk read the Proclamation.]

A Proclamation of Indemnity.

By her Maſteſty's Command.

Queensberry.

GOD ſave the QUEEN.

Mr. Raymond. Look on the Backſide.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is that?

Mr. Raymond. A Certificate from the Duke of Queensberry, Secretary of State of Scotland, that it is a true Copy.

Mr. Att. Gen. We admit it.

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, it is inſiſted on that we ſhould prove the Priſoner a Native of Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you think it material, you may prove it.

L. C. J. Holt. They did think it material, and therefore made it part of their Caſe.

Mr. Williams. Call James Grey, Eſq; (who appeared, and was ſworn.) Sir, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

J. Grey. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman is he?

J. Grey. Always reputed of Scotland. I have known him this 20 Years, and he was always reputed ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you known him 20 Years in England?

J. Grey. Yes, my Lord, in England; not in Scotland.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you had any Correſpondence with him?

J. Grey. No, Sir, no great Correſpondence. In King James's Time he was Secretary to the Lord Melfort.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman was he reputed then?

J. Grey. A Scotchman.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know his Family?

J. Grey. No, I have been always in England; I did not know his Family.

Mr. Williams. We have another Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt bring better Proof than this, or elſe it will not do.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Trumbal (who appeared, and was ſworn.) Mr. Trumbal, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Trumbal. Yes.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known him?

Trumbal. I have known him this twenty Years.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman did you always reckon him?

Trumbal. A Scotchman.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know that?

Trumbal. He has always been reputed ſo. He dealt in Wine with one that I knew, and ſo I came to know him.

Mr. Williams. Did you know him in Scotland?

Trumbal. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you known him any where but in England?

Trumbal. No; but he has been reputed a Scotchman, that dealt in Wine. He had always the Repute of an honeſt Man.

Mr. Williams. Call Charles Canair (who appeared.)

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſhould bring your Witneſſes into the Court. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Canair. Charles Canair.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known the Priſoner?

Mr. Canair. Ever ſince I was a Child.

Mr. Williams. Where did you know him?

Mr. Canair. In Scotland. I remember him from a Child.

L. C. J. Holt. And you knew him to be a Native of Scotland?

Mr. Canair. Yes, my Lord, of Dundee in Scotland.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know any of his Relations?

Mr. Canair. Yes, my Lord; his Father was of Dundee in Scotland.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have ſomething farther to prove.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it?

Mr. Williams. That the Priſoner was allowed the Benefit of this Proclamation in Scotland; and we beg leave to ſay, this Faſt which is now charged againſt him is already pardoned.

Mr. Att. Gen. That Pardon has Influence in Scotland, not in England.

Mr. Williams. Then you admit alſo that the Priſoner had the Benefit of this Proclamation allowed him in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of that.

L. C. J. Holt. Now go on and ſtate your Caſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, Mr. Attorney General is not pleaſed to admit we had the Benefit of the Proclamation allowed us in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. They inſiſt on what I know nothing of; if they think they can have any Benefit by it, they may prove it.

Mr. Raymond. We have done our Endeavour to have the Secretary of State of Scotland appear here, but I don't know whether he has done us the Favour. We have the Certificate under his Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Is it the ſame Hand?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he aſſerts that Certificate, but we know not whether it be true.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Then that must be proved.

Mr. Raymond. Call Thomas Bruce, Esq; (who appeared, and was sworn). Mr. Bruce, do you know the Prisoner, and whether he had Benefit of the Pardon in Scotland?

Mr. Bruce. I know very little of him. I know he was at Edinburgh last Summer, and was under Confinement there, and under Examination several Times; but after some Days he was at Liberty again. That's all that I know.

Mr. Raymond. Was he not at Liberty by leave of the Government?

Mr. Bruce. It was so believed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell when he came back to Scotland?

Mr. Bruce. No, Sir. He was in Custody about July last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you be particular to the Time? Was it in June or July?

Mr. Bruce. I can't be positive; it was in the Time when the Parliament sat. I never was in his Company.

Mr. Raymond. Call Mr. Southerland.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know not why we should trouble the Court with this. What signifies the Pardon?

L. C. J. Holt. Let them make what Use they can of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, what is your Name?

Mr. Southerland. Southerland.

Mr. Raymond. Do you know any thing of the Prisoner's having any Benefit allow'd him of the Scotch Pardon?

Mr. Southerland. I heard he had surrendered to the Government.

Mr. Raymond. Was he discharged by the Government?

Mr. Southerland. Yes, it was generally reported so.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was that, Sir?

Mr. Southerland. In June or July last Summer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he there the 27th of July, or before?

Mr. Southerland. I cannot be positive.

Mr. Raymond. Call Dr. Hutton (who appeared). Doctor, what do you know of the Prisoner's having the Benefit of the Scotch Pardon, and its being allowed him by the Government?

Dr. Hutton. I was, in September, at Edinburgh, and there I saw Mr. Lindsay at the Queen's-Head, with the Attorney General. He had been examined about some Letters (as I heard say) that had been directed to him. And there I heard Sir John Stuart tell him, the Council had set him free. And I met him afterwards at Liberty, and it was done upon the Proclamation of Indemnity.

Mr. Williams. What Religion is he reputed of?

Dr. Hutton. I know not that. But I have known him six and twenty Years, and I heard him tell Sir James Stuart (who asked him why he came away from France) because he would not be a Papist, and he said, he had rather go to the Gallows than return again.

Mr. Williams. What is his Temper? Is he a quiet Man in relation to the Government; or of a turbulent Temper?

Dr. Hutton. I have always known him a fair, peaceable, friendly Man.

Mr. Raymond. Doctor, I would ask you one Question; whether you have any Law in Scotland that prohibits going into France?

Dr. Hutton. I do not know. I know several Persons that came from France to Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Doctor, you give him a fair Character. Can you tell in whose Service he was in France?

Dr. Hutton. No, Sir; I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was his Affection towards the Government?

Dr. Hutton. I know nothing of that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When did he return into Scotland; was it before or after the 27th of July?

Dr. Hutton. I do not know.

Mr. Raymond. He came into England in September last, after he had his Pardon. We say he came through Northumberland, and other Places hither, and in this County he was taken.

Mr. Lindsay. I was taken no where, but surrendered myself to Sir Charles Hedges.

Mr. Williams. The Fact is, that he came from Scotland through Northumberland, &c. and so into Middlesex, and surrendered himself; so that Northumberland was the first County of England that the Prisoner came into, after his leaving Scotland; and so that the Treason, if any, was committed there, and we insist that the Arraignment and Trial ought to be there.

L. C. J. Holt. If you insist upon it, that the Treason committed was in Northumberland, then you must prove it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, with Submission, tho' the Fact being that Northumberland was the first County of England that we came into, yet it may be difficult to us to prove it; but with Submission, it may not be absolutely necessary for us to prove, that Northumberland was the first County, in regard that your Lordship will take notice that Middlesex cannot be the first County, it being impossible to come from Scotland into Middlesex, without being in other Counties before; and the Indictment ought to have been in the first County of England he came into.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we indict him where we find him.

Mr. Raymond. We can prove that he came first to Berwick, then through Northumberland, before he came into Middlesex.

L. C. J. Holt. If you can, do.

Mr. Raymond. Dr. Hutton, do you know where he came first into England, and which Way he came hither?

Dr. Hutton. No, indeed; I have heard that he came through Northumberland, &c.

Mr. Raymond. Did you lend him your Horse?

Dr. Hutton. No, Sir; but a Friend of mine did lend him his Horse.

Mr. Raymond. Where does your Friend live?

Dr. Hutton. At Edinburgh.

Mr. Raymond. Did he come hither on that Horse?

Dr. Hutton. That I know not. He was left there by a Friend of mine, to be sent into England with the first Opportunity, and so he sent him by Mr. Lindsay.

Mr. Raymond. Did he make use of that Horse all the Way?

Dr. Hutton. I know not that.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I am, by your Lordship's Permission, of Council for the Prisoner: And I hope this free and ingenuous Confession, which he has now made at the Bar, being the very same which he before made at his Arraignment; and being the very same Confession which he made before the Secretary of State, and others, before before whom the Prisoner was examined, will be taken and weighed by the Court as a good Argument of the Sincerity of this unfortunate Gentleman; and that he designs in his Trial to put your Lordship to as little Trouble as possible. My Lord, It has been proved that he is a Native of Scotland, and he always has been of the Protestant Religion. He has been indeed in France, but finding he could not enjoy his Religion there, he was resolved by the first Opportunity to endeavour to gain a Licence from the Government for his Return into his own Country. In the mean time comes out Her Majesty's Gracious Proclamation of Indemnity. That Proclamation was proclaimed in a publick Manner, by all Her Majesty's Heralds, at the Market-Cross at Edinburgh, and it has very extensive Words in it, pardoning all Treasons, Felonies, &c. all Crimes and Misdemeanors whatsoever. My Lord, in Confidence of this Her Majesty's Royal Proclamation, we came from France to Scotland, and there claimed, and were allowed by that Government, the Benefit of the Queen's Mercy. Afterwards having been advised by the most eminent Advocates and Council of Scotland, that by this Proclamation we were rendred in every Respect as a free Subject, and might with Safety come from thence to England; we accordingly came from thence hither; but all this while we paid all the due Submission and Regard that could be, as well to the Law as to the Government; for we came from France unto the Hague, and we there attended upon Her Majesty's Envoy, Mr. Stanhope, and acquainted him with our Intentions of returning home. Immediately upon our Return into Scotland, we voluntarily came before the Chief Commissioner and Magistrates there; who, upon our Claim, were pleased, at length, to allow us the Benefit of Her Majesty's Royal Proclamation and Pardon. And when we were in England, on the first Notice of a Warrant out against us, we, of our own Accord, waited on the Secretary of State, Sir Charles Hedges, and he happening not to be then at Leisure, we voluntarily attended upon him a second and a third time; and upon our third Attendance we were committed. And now, my Lord, we stand indicted before your Lordship for the greatest of Crimes, High-Treason. My Lord, as to the Statute upon which we were indicted, tho' some Part of it, without doubt, was not only very reasonable, but absolutely necessary, I mean that Part of it which was for the Preservation of his late Majesty's Person and Government; but as to that Part of it upon which we are indicted, it seems, with great Submission, a severe Law. That the bare returning into our native Country, when we before were convicted of no Crime, or guilty, at most, but of a bare Contempt, in going out of the Queen's Dominions without Licence, that this should be made High-Treason, this, with Submission, is somewhat severe: So that in respect of the Severity of this Law, besides the common Arguments of its being a Penal Law, your Lordship will be the rather induced to admit of the most favourable and merciful Construction to every Part and Clause of this Act, that it will bear. My Lord, we do humbly insist on the Words of the Proclamation; and we take it, that those Words do amount to a Licence to us to come into Scotland: And if so, then we are not guilty within this Act of Parliament, of coming to the Queen's Dominions without Licence. And we likewise further insist, that one that has the Queen's Licence to come into Scotland, may, without any further Licence, come into England—I beg your Lordship's Leave to read that Part of the Proclamation, which we chiefly insist on. The Proclamation pardons all Treasons, and all corresponding and intercommuning with Rebels, or declared Enemies of the Queen. My Lord, it pardons all other Crimes, of what Nature soever. It pardons any Act, that may infer any Pain or Punishment, on the Lives or Estates of Her Majesty's Subjects. And it is declared to be as available to all Subjects, to pardon them all Crimes, as if the particular Crime were named, and as if Remissions under the Great Seal were pass'd. And then Her Majesty declares, That this shall be taken in the most favourable and comprehensive Sense that may be, for the Security of the Subject. Now, my Lord, taking this Proclamation in the most favourable and extensive Sense, in favour of the Prisoner; which Her Majesty has been pleased expressly to direct it should; with Submission, I take it, it will amount to a Licence from Her Majesty, to return from France to Scotland: And we humbly take it, that if the Prisoner did by Licence come from France to Scotland, that he afterwards coming from Scotland into England, is not within the Act.

My Lord, I would beg Leave to consider what it was that hinder'd the Prisoner from returning from France to Scotland: Sure it was his going to France without Licence. Then when Her Majesty is graciously pleased to pardon this Offence, we take it, that Her Majesty, by removing the Obstacle, does by necessary Implication give Leave to the Prisoner to return to Scotland again. Her Majesty is pleased, with Submission, plainly to give him this Leave, by taking off that that hinder'd his coming. That Parliament plainly did take it, and have been pleased to declare it an Offence, to go into France without Licence; and have therefore been pleased to punish that Offence with a temporary Banishment: But when that Offence is pardoned, when that Banishment is remitted, then the Prisoner seems at Liberty to return home: And that Liberty being given by the Queen's Proclamation, this, with Submission, amounts to a Licence from the Queen, for the Prisoner's returning home. My Lord, there are many Instances, wherein the King or Queen's Grants or Pardons shall have a double Operation, for the Benefit of the Persons upon whom they are bestowed. But these Cases, as I humbly conceive, not immediately relating to this Point now before your Lordship, I shall not trouble your Lordship with citing them. My Lord, if we, when in France, had been guilty of more than what is charged upon us in the Indictment; I mean, had we corresponded, or adher'd to the Queen's declared Enemies; still the express Words of the Proclamation seem plainly to extend to us, when it pardons all corresponding and intercommuning with the Queen's declared Enemies, which the French then were, and now are. My Lord, If this Proclamation could in any Part of it bear two Constructions (the one making for the Prisoner, the other against him) the Queen has been pleased to determine in what Sense it shall be taken; in the most beneficial manner for the offending Subject. But, with humble Submission, would this be observing of Her Majesty's Gracious Directions; instead of allowing to the Prisoner the Benefit of this Proclamation, to make his very coming to Scotland, to claim the Benefit of it, and humbly to lay hold of Her Majesty's Mercy; to make this very Act to amount to a Crime; to make it the greatest of Crimes, High-Treason? This surely would be the very Reverse of Her Majesty's most Gracious Intentions: And yet this, with Submission, would be the Consequence, if the Prisoner's coming from France into Scotland should be construed to be Treason. My Lord, I admit the Words of this Act are, If any return into England, or any other of Her Majesty's Dominions, without a Licence under the Privy-Seal, it shall be High-Treason.

Sir T. Powis. But this is not a Licence under the Privy-Seal.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Great Seal of Scotland will not vacate an English Act.³

Mr. Williams. Now we humbly take it, if the Queen is pleased to bestow her Licence by any Act, or in any manner equally notorious with her Privy-Seal, 'tis sufficient, and within the Meaning and Equity of the Statute. And this Proclamation made by all the Heralds at Arms, at the most publick Place in Edinburgh, is as notorious, nay, much more notorious and publick, than a Licence under the Privy-Seal only; and therefore within the meaning of this Act. Besides, the very Words of the Proclamation are, That it shall be in every Respect as valid and effectual, as if it were under the Great Seal: And if under the Great Seal, surely it must be at least as strong, as if under the Privy Seal. Besides, the Statute does not say, that the Licence must be under the Privy-Seal of England. The Words of the Act are, If any return into England, or any other of Her Majesty's Dominions, without Licence under the Privy-Seal, without saying of what Kingdom. Now, with Submission, it not being said what Privy-Seal, or of what Kingdom; it must be intended, according to the Subject-matter, the Seal of that Kingdom or Dominion where the Licence is granted; and that being Scotland, the Licence under the Great Seal of Scotland, is sufficient: For it seems improper, that the Seal of one Kingdom should be made use of, to license an Act in another Kingdom. Now, if a Licence under the great Seal of Scotland be sufficient, this Proclamation declares, that it shall be as valid as if 'twere under the Great Seal: And it can't be deny'd, as I have said, but a Licence under the Great Seal must be equivalent with a Licence under the Privy-Seal. Besides, the Queen's Proclamation does not mention what Great Seal, or of what Kingdom; and so it may be intended, that Great Seal that would be most beneficial to the Prisoner; taking it in its most favourable Sense, as Her Majesty is pleased to direct it should be.

But 'twill be said, That taking this to be a Licence, this is only a Licence to come into Scotland; but the Prisoner is indicted for coming into England without Licence. But we take it, If we had a Licence to come into any one of the Queen's Dominions, and we first came into that Dominion with this Licence; we can't then be guilty of Treason within this Act. The Words of the Act make it Treason to come into England, or any other of the Queen's Dominions without Licence; so 'tis the same thing as if it said, that it should be Treason to come into the Queen's Dominions without Licence. Then if one comes into Scotland with Licence, Scotland being one of the Queen's Dominions, the Prisoner can't be said to come into the Queen's Dominions without Licence; so that by this Licence the Prisoner is wholly out of the Act. This Act, with Submission, must operate and take its Effect upon the first Step made from France into any of the Queen's Dominions; so that if the Prisoner be guilty of High-Treason within the Act, it must be when he made his first Step from France into Scotland: But that being made lawful, by the Proclamation amounting (as we say) to a Licence; it can't be afterwards Treason, for the Prisoner to come into England. Take it, that the Prisoner had had Her Majesty's Licence to come from France into England; and accordingly the Prisoner comes into England, and afterwards goes into Scotland; had this been Treason? Surely not. Take it, that a Man within this Act returns from France into England without Licence, and is pardoned, and he afterwards goes into Scotland; would this have been a new Treason, for which the Man that was before pardoned must lose his Life? We humbly take it, that it would not.

Besides, with Submission, this Proclamation amounts to a Pardon of the Treason, tho' it be before the Prisoner return'd to any of the Queen's Dominions. And if it appears to your Lordship, that the Prisoner is pardon'd, tho' we have not pleaded it, your Lordship will not be pleased to suffer the greatest Punishments to be inflicted on any that your Lordship perceives are entitled to Her Majesty's Mercy, or on any that are so much as within Her Majesty's Intentions of being pardon'd. Besides, another Consequence of the Prisoner's being pardon'd, is, That then if he be pardon'd, he is a free Subject, and has Liberty to go any where, and into any of the Queen's Dominions. My Lord, as to this Point, whether the Treason be pardon'd, 'tis necessary, with humble Submission, to consider what makes this Treason. 'Tis the going into France without Licence, and returning home without Licence: 'Tis both joined together make the Treason; and the one without the other does not make the Treason. Had not the Prisoner gone into France without Licence, his returning without Licence would not have amounted to Treason: So that the going into France, is the Foundation of the Treason. And I humbly take it, that this Act of Parliament has made the bare going into France without Licence, an Offence; and has punish'd it as such, by Banishment during the Queen's Pleasure: So that the Prisoner, from the Time he went into France without Licence, was an Offender, and consequently capable of a Pardon. So, with Submission, 'tis plain, there was some things on which the Pardon might operate, tho' the Pardon was before the Prisoner's landing in Scotland; then taking it, that the Prisoner's going into France without Licence was an Offence, and the original Foundation of the Treason: This original Offence is, with Submission, pardon'd by the Proclamation, by the Pardon of all Crimes and Misdemeanors, of what Nature soever. And if the original Offence be pardoned, all the Consequences, all the Dependences upon that Offence, all that ensues upon that Offence are, with Submission, at the same Time pardon'd. This, my Lord, seems to be proved by Cole's Case, Plowd. 401. where, after one had feloniously wounded another, then comes a Pardon of all Crimes and Misdemeanors; and afterwards the Party wounded dies. The original Misdemeanor being pardon'd, all that ensues upon it is pardon'd; and consequently the Murder is pardon'd, by the Pardon only of all Misdemeanors. Now in our Case 'tis plain, the original Offence is going into France without Licence; and that being pardon'd, all that ensues that Offence, all the Dependences upon that Offence, according to the express Words of that Case, are pardon'd also: And therefore, the returning into the Queen's Dominions without Licence, being only only a Consequent and a Dependent upon the going into France without Licence; is pardon'd also. Besides, my Lord, so favourable a Construction does the Law make upon Acts of Mercy, that when the Crown pardons any Crime, the Pardon restores the Man in such a manner, as if the Offence had never been committed. And consequently, after this Pardon, 'tis the same Thing as if the Prisoner had never gone into France without Licence: And if the Prisoner had never gone into France without Licence, 'tis plain his coming home without Licence would not have been Treason.

In Hob. 81. Cuddington v. Wilkins, If a Man commits a Theft, and is pardon'd, if afterwards he is called Thief, an Action lies, tho' he is called so by one that had no Notice of the Pardon; for that after the Pardon, 'tis as if he had never been guilty of Theft. There is likewise another Case put there, which seems much stronger than the Prisoner's Case; which is this: If an Appeal of Felony be brought against a Man, and the Defendant prays Trial by Battle; the Plaintiff counterpleads the Battle, by saying, that the Defendant, when committed to Prison for his Felony, broke the Prison, and so escaped (which is a Presumption of Guilt) and so takes off the Trial by Battle; yet 'tis adjudg'd, that when the King pardons the Breach of Prison, this restores the Defendant to his Trial by Battle, and 'tis then as if the Defendant had not broken the Prison at all. Yet in this Case it might have been objected, That tho' the King has pardon'd the Breach of Prison, tho' the Prosecution or Punishment for Breach of Prison is pardon'd; yet the collateral Effect of it, which is the Presumption of Guilt upon the Party's Flight, might remain; especially as to the Appellant, whose Suit (according to the general Rule) the King's Pardon can't influence. Yet here 'tis adjudg'd, that even as to the Appellant, the King's Pardon of the Breach of Prison, makes it as if the Party had never been guilty of it. Now this is stronger than the Prisoner's Case: For in the Prisoner's Case, the Queen's Pardon is only made use of, to prevent her own Prosecution, and not the Suit of any Appellant. Therefore in the present Case, the Proclamation pardoning all Misdemeanors, pardons the Offence of going into France without Licence: And that being pardon'd, 'tis as if the Prisoner had never gone into France without Licence; and without this, the bare Return without Licence will not amount to Treason. So that, with Submission, we take this Proclamation to be a Licence to the Prisoner to return into the Queen's Dominions. Nay, we take it to be a Pardon even of the Treason of which he stands indicted.

Besides, I would humbly beg Leave to offer to your Lordship's Consideration, whether a Scotchman, that was not in England at the Time of the making of this Act of Parliament, be within the Meaning of this Act. The Act says, If any of his Majesty's Subjects shall go into France without Licence, if he return without Licence, 'tis Treason. I don't pretend to call in question Calvin's Case, which was (at that Time at least) a very convenient Resolution. I don't deny, but a Natural-born Subject of Scotland is, as to many Purposes, a natural-born Subject of England. But whether (upon the Construction of so very penal a Law as this is) a Scotchman is within the Meaning of this Law, is the only Question. Now, with Submission, when the Acts says, If any of his Majesty's Subjects shall go into France without Licence, this (according to a reasonable Construction) shall be intended only of English Subjects, strictly speaking, that is, those of England; it must be intended only of such of His Majesty's Subjects, who were represented by the Parliament that made this Law, and who are presumed to consent to the making of this Law; 'tis these Subjects only that may reasonably be supposed to have Notice of this Law, and therefore 'tis reasonable that they only should be bound by it; especially in the Case of so severe a Law, where a Man's Life, Estate, and all that is dear to a Man is at Stake. There may be a great deal of Difference betwixt an Act of Parliament that punishes a Fact that was before Malum in se, and an Act which makes that an Offence which was before lawful: Every one of any Nation is, at his Peril, to abstain from committing any Act that is Malum in se; and if he commits such an Act in any Country, he seems subject to be punish'd according to the Laws of that Country where the Fact was committed. But going into France, or any Place beyond Sea, without Licence, seems only Malum Prohibitum by this Statute: And therefore when the Act says, If any of his Majesty's Subjects who went into France without Licence, shall return without Licence, shall be deem'd guilty of Treason; it shall be intended only of those of England; such Subjects as either by themselves, or their Representatives, were consenting to the making of this Law. Therefore I humbly beg Leave to put the Case; That if one of Her Majesty's Subjects of her remote Plantations (as Barbadoes, or Antego) that was resident there at the Time of the making this Law, should have since the Year 1688, gone into France on any private or particular Account, without Licence; and afterwards should come into England; would this Subject (who, in all Probability, knew nothing of the making of this Law) be guilty of High-Treason, for coming into England? Surely this would be excessively hard. Then if one resident at Barbadoes, or Antego, at the Time of the making of this Act, should not be within this Law; much less shall a Scotchman be within it, in regard Scotland is a separate Kingdom, that can't be bound by our Acts of Parliament; whereas any of the foreign Plantations are plainly liable to be bound by English Acts of Parliament.

Besides, there is another Reason from the very Words of the Act, why a Scotchman that was not resident in England, at the Time of the making this Law, can't be intended within the Meaning of the Act: and that is not only because the Act mentions nothing of Scotland; but because the Words of the Act are, If any of his Majesty's Subjects who went into France without Licence, shall return into England, or any other of His Majesty's Dominions, without Licence, 'tis Treason. Now the Word (Return) must plainly have Relation only to that Country where the Party was resident at the making of the Law, or to the Country that he left at the Time of his going towards France. But it does not appear that the Prisoner, who is a Scotchman, was in England at the making the Act; and he having been proved to be a Native of Scotland, must be intended to be then in Scotland, unless proved to be elsewhere: And therefore the Prisoner's coming into England can never be within the Meaning of the Word Returning into England, any more than a Man can be said to return to a Place where he was not before.

There is another Objection (because I will give Mr. Attorney only one Trouble) and that is, That this Indictment (or Trial) can't in this Case be in Middlesex, but must be in that County where the Prisoner first came after his leaving France; which really was Northumberland, as he came from Scotland; or at least your Lordship will take notice, that it can't be Middlesex. 'Tis a known Rule, that all Indictments and Trials for Treasons and all other Crimes, must be in the County where the Treason was committed: And 'tis clear (taking the Proclamation out of the Case) that the Treason was committed in that County which the Prisoner first came into after leaving France. The Treason (taking the Pardon out of the Case) was compleated by the first Step made into England. Nay, if the Prisoner, immediately after his making his first Step into England, had returned, still it had been a complete Treason; and the Party had returned with his Guilt upon him. And, my Lord, I do not take it, that the Party commits a new Treason, by his going into another County. 'Tis true, 'tis said, if I steal Goods in one County, and carry them into another, this is Felony (tho' not Robbery) in every County where I carry them: But even in this Case, the Law (as I take it) is said to be otherwise, in Fitz. Abr. Tit. Coron. Par. 194. and that the Trial must be in the County where the Goods were first taken. But taking this to be Law, That the Felon may be tried in any of the Counties, where he carries the Goods he stole; as I must needs own, the Law is now allowed to be so; yet this depends upon a different Reason, no way affecting the principal Case. For the Reason given of this Case, in Dyer 40. and 7 Coke 2. and Bulwer's Case is, That the Robbery or Felony does not alter the Property of the Goods; and therefore, into whatever County the Felon carries the Goods, 'tis a new Felony. But there 'tis not that special Reason in the principal Case, and therefore the Law is not the same. Supposing the Prisoner had been pardon'd the Treason, in coming into the first County of Northumberland without Licence; could he afterwards have been punish'd for Treason, for coming into the next adjacent County? This would be a pretty strange Construction of multiplying Treasons. And if coming into every County would make a fresh Treason, a Man at that Rate may be brought to suffer as a Traitor, tho' with many Pardons about him. No surely, my Lord, 'tis the original Act the Law regards, and the coming into a second County does not make it a second Treason; and therefore we take it that the Indictment or Trial in this Case can't be in Middlesex, but must be in Northumberland, or such other County, which was the first County of England that the Prisoner came into. Upon the whole Matter, we, with great Submission, insist, First, That Her Majesty's Proclamation amounts in Law to a Licence for the Prisoner to come from France into Scotland; nay, that it amounts to a Pardon to him, even of his Treason that he is now indicted for. But if that be against us, we in the next Place take it that a Scotchman not resident in England at the time of the making this Act, is not within the Meaning of this Act. But if that also be against us, yet in the next Place we humbly insist, that he cannot be indicted for this Treason in Middlesex, but must be indicted in the County where he first enter'd England. And 'tis sufficient if any one of these Points are for us; and therefore we humbly hope the Prisoner shall be acquitted.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I'd beg the Liberty to offer a Word or two on the same Side for the Prisoner at the Bar.

I humbly apprehend, your Lordship expects no Apology from us, for appearing as Council in a Cause of this Nature, since 'tis by your Lordship's Permission granted us in Pursuance of an Act of Parliament, that we have this Liberty; and I can't forget what your Lordship has said formerly in this Place on the like Occasion, That it is as lawful for the Gentlemen of the Bar to be Council in such a Case, and that they are as much obliged to do their Duty for their Client in it, as in any other Case, wherein by Law they are allowed to plead.

I shall therefore, the Fact being agreed on by both Sides, state it as a Case, and submit the Observations I shall make upon it to your Lordship's Opinion.

The Fact is no more but this.

Mr. Lindsay, being a Native of Scotland, came into England, and resided some Time here; from thence he went into France, where he continued a considerable Time; after he was gone into France, and whilst he was there, the Act of Parliament, upon which he now stands indicted, was made. Afterwards the Queen granted a general Pardon and Indemnity to her Subjects in Scotland for all Treasons, &c. Depending upon which, Mr. Lindsay returned into Scotland, and having had the Allowance of the Benefit of it there, he returned into England, coming by the way of Berwick and Northumberland to London.

My Lord, I shall humbly insist upon it in behalf of the Prisoner at the Bar:

First, That he is not comprehended within the Words of this Act.

Secondly, That if he should be within the Words, yet that he is not within the Meaning of the Act.

My Lord, I shall by no means presume to arraign the Wisdom or Justice of the Law-makers in making this Act, which doubtless was founded on great Reason, and was very necessary for the Preservation of his late Majesty's Person and Government. But let it be never so wise, never so just, or never so necessary, yet, with great Submission, 'tis a very penal Law; partly, because it has a Retrospect and makes that Fact an Offence, which was none at the Time when it was done (for before this Act, it was lawful for any one to have gone into France, between the Eleventh of December, 1688, and the Time of the proclaiming War with France). But principally because it makes the Offender against it a Traitor, therefore it must be expounded according to those strict Rules of Construction, the Law has appointed for other penal Statutes, and must never be extended by Equity beyond the Letter.

My Lord, as to the Penning of this Act, I must observe, there is not one Word in it of Scotland, or the Subjects of Scotland, in express Terms.

The Question then will be, what other Words in it can extend to Mr. Lindsay's being a Native of Scotland? The most comprehensive Words seem to be these at the Beginning of the enacting Part, If any of her Majesty's Subjects, who have, &c.

I must beg Leave to insist upon it, that Mr. Lindsay can't be call'd one of His late Majesty's Subjects within this Act. I do agree he was the late King's Subject, as King of Scotland, but not as King of England; but this Act being made in England by the English Parliament, and using the Word Subjects, must mean such Subjects as that Parliament were able to oblige, which are only the Subjects of England, or the Dominions depending on the Crown of England; but not the Subjects of of Scotland, which is a distinct Dominion from England.

The King of England has a double politick Capacity in him, one as King of England, the other as King of Scotland; the two Nations are absolutely distinct, and so are the Laws by which they are respectively governed: If therefore the King, as King of these two Kingdoms, has two several politick Capacities in him; if the Nations and the Laws are distinct, with Submission, the Subjects of Necessity must be considered so too.

I am very sensible, My Lord, with what Solemnity Calvin's Case in 7 Rep. is said by my Lord Coke to have been adjudged; it shall be therefore, with a great deal of Submission to your Lordship's Opinion, and Deference to the Authority of that Case, if I shall say any Thing that may seem to clash with that Resolution.

I confess that Case has determined, that Allegiance is a Quality of the Mind, and can't be circumscribed by Place; that 'tis due to the Person of the King; and because his natural Person can't be divided, the Allegiance owing to him is inseparable and indivisible, and therefore that there is an Union of Allegiance of both Kingdoms; and that a Man can't be consider'd as a Liegeman or Subject, which is all one to the King, as King of Scotland, and not as King of England, and so Vice Versa.

I'll beg Leave to consider my Lord Coke's Foundation, upon which this Resolution is built, and submit it entirely to your Lordship whether that is able to support it.

According to my Lord Coke himself in Calvin's Case, Legiance is a true and faithful Obedience of the Subject due to the Sovereign, for which the Sovereign is obliged to protect his Subjects. Protectio trahit Subjectionem, Subiectio Protectionem. 7 Co. 5.

I suppose it will not be pretended that this Obedience due from the Subject to the Sovereign is an absolute blind Obedience to every arbitrary Command of the Sovereign; but is only such an Obedience as the Law of the Kingdom, or Principality, or Dominion, has respectively prescribed for the Subject to pay to his Sovereign; and the same holds as to the Sovereign's Part in Point of Protection. If therefore this Obedience or Legiance (which is the same) is altogether prescribed and governed by the Law of the Place where 'tis due, it must necessarily follow, that where the Laws are different, the Legiance or Rule of Obedience and Subjection must be different also, and consequently the Legiance due to the King as King of England, and the Legiance due to him as King of Scotland, (since the Laws of both Nations are distinct) must be separate and distinguishable: Were it not so, the same Act, if so in one, must in both Kingdoms be the Performance of the Subjects Legiance; and the same Act, if so in either, must in both Kingdoms be the Breach of it. But that that is otherwise, is easily to be proved; as for Instance, according to my Lord Coke in Calvin's Case, 7 Co. 7, 6. The King of England may command any Subject of England to attend him in his Wars beyond Sea; but suppose by the Law of Scotland a Subject of Scotland is not oblig'd to go with the King out of the Kingdom, the King commands a Native of Scotland to wait on him out of Scotland beyond Sea, and he refuses; now by the Law of England he has broke his Legiance to the King, and yet in Scotland he is as good a Liege Subject (notwithstanding this Refusal) as any Subject the King has there.—In this very Case of Mr. Lindsay, by his Return into Scotland from France (if your Lordship takes the Word Dominions in the Act in as large a Sense as I suppose the Queen's Council would have the Word Subjects took, that is, to all the Places in Subjection to the King, tho' not dependent on the Crown of England) he was become a Traitor to the Queen as Queen of England, which is the highest Breach of Allegiance that can be; and yet at the same Time (laying the Pardon out of the Case, and supposing there was no Law in Scotland to prohibit his coming thither) he was a very good Subject of the Queen's in Scotland, and not guilty of any Breach of Allegiance due to her there. Then certainly these two Allegiances are not the same, but distinguishable; one owing to the King as King of Scotland, the other owing to the King as King of England; and if the Allegiances may be considered separately, so may the Subject (who owes those Allegiances, and by owing of which he becomes a Subject) be separately considered as such in respect of them; and consequently, that Mr. Lindsay being a Native of Scotland, must be regarded as a Subject of the King as King of Scotland, and not a Subject of the King as King of England, and so not within the Words of the Act, for the Reasons offered to your Lordship before.

The second Thing I begg'd your Lordship's Leave to insist upon was, That taking it, that Mr. Lindsay, tho' a Native of Scotland, should be comprehended within the Words, any of his Majesty's Subjects, yet that this Act did not design to extend to any Native of Scotland, and consequently not to him. With great Submission to your Lordship, there are many Cases in the Books where Statutes have received a Construction contrary to the Words, to comply with their Intent. The Statute of Gloucester, Cap. 1. enacts, that the Disseisee shall recover Damage, in a Writ of Entry, founded upon the Disseisin, against him who is found Tenant; upon which Litt. Sect. 685, puts this Case, That if the Disseisor makes a Feoffment of the Land to B. C. and D. and Livery of Seisin is made to B. and C.; but D. was absent, and never would agree to this Feoffment, nor take the Profits; B. and C. die, the Disseisee brings a Writ of Disseisin in the Per against D. who pleads this Matter; tho' he is a Tenant of the Freehold of this Land, yet no Damages shall be recovered against him. So in this Case, tho' the Words of the Act in their utmost Extent would comprize the Prisoner at the Bar; yet if the Parliament did not design they should, a Construction shall be made accordingly.

That the Parliament did not intend to concern themselves with Scotland, or the Natives thereof, appears, with Submission, by the Preamble (which is, as my Lord Coke terms it, Co. Litt. 79. a Key to find out the meaning of the Law-makers).

The Words of the Preamble are, That upon the Conclusion of the Peace between his Majesty and the French King, it was become necessary for the carrying on a Trade between England and France, That the Subjects of each Kingdom should have, &c. — I suppose it will not be pretended that Scotland can be comprehended under the Word, of England; nor Scotchman under the Word, the Subjects of each Kingdom, that is, of England and France. — For if a Scotchman should be took to to be a Subject of the King of England, yet I humbly conceive he was never took to be a Subject of the Kingdom of England; the word Kingdom is the same as Realm, and is usually applied to the Land of England, and not to the Dominions dependent on the Crown of England; as on the 35 Hen. 8. C. 2. a Treason committed in Ireland was adjudged to be a Treason committed out of the Realm of England, and triable as a foreign Treason, Orurke's Case, Ander. 262. Pl. 269. But if Kingdom or Realm should be taken to have the same Signification as Dominion, that Case could not be Law, because Ireland was never held to be out of the Dominion of the Crown of England; so that with great Submission to your Lordship, nothing in the Preamble affects the Prisoner at the Bar.

The next Thing to be consider'd, is, what the Parliament meant by the Words, If any of His Majesty's Subjects, &c. And I humbly hope your Lordship will think it reasonable to let that Expression be explained by the Word Subjects used in the Preamble, and so interpret them his Majesty's Subjects of the Kingdom of England, which this Prisoner is not; and the rather, because to construe them to extend to Scotchmen, will be an Interpretation that will make the English Parliament make an Offence a Treason, which will not be in the Power of the English Government to punish, unless by Accident: For if a Scotchman returning out of France into Scotland, contrary to this Act, should be a Traitor, yet he could not be punished here, unless he accidentally came hither afterwards, because the English Government has no coercive Means to fetch him from Scotland hither to be punished. — But 'tis otherwise in respect of the Dominions depending on the Crown of England, as Ireland, &c. for a Man may be transmitted from England to Ireland, or Vice Versa, to be tried; as Colonel Lundy was 2 Ventr. 314. but England can't compel the Government of Scotland to send a Man hither from thence to be tried. Then I humbly conceive that it can't be imagined, that the Parliament design'd to make an Offence a Treason, which can't be punish'd but by Accident here, since 'tis below the Dignity of a Government to have Offenders against their Laws, in Crimes of so high a Nature, out of their Power to punish — But of an English Subject it would be otherwise, tho' he was in Scotland, or any foreign Prince's Dominion, because they might proceed against such a Person to Outlawry, and upon Attainder confiscate his Estate.

Another Thing I must beg leave to offer to your Lordship, as a Proof that this Parliament did not intend in this Act to include Scotland, or the Natives of Scotland, is, that the Paragraph which makes the taking of a Charter or Grant from the late King James to be Treason, is so far from relating to Scotland, or the Scotch, that it does not make it penal for any Englishman to take a Grant of Honour or Estate in Scotland from the late King James; the Words of the Act being, to be had or enjoy'd in the Kingdom of England or Ireland: So that the Parliament seem'd industriously not to concern themselves with any thing relating to Scotland; and yet doubtless they might have made it Treason for any Englishman to have took such a Grant; and there had been as great Reason so to have done, if they had thought fit to have meddled with any thing relating to Scotland, since the taking of such a Grant in Scotland by an Englishman from the late King James, had been as great a Derogation to the Liegance owing to the King, as if it had been of any thing in England; the Acceptance of such a Grant amounting to an Acknowledgment of another Power besides the King's — So that for these Reasons I humbly insist upon it, that the Parliament did not intend to include any Scotchman within this Act.

But, my Lord, taking it that Mr. Lindsay, tho' a Native of Scotland, should be within both the Words and Meaning of this Act; yet I must submit it to your Lordship's Judgment, whether this Act could bind him, he being beyond Sea, viz. in France, at the Time when it was made. I do agree, that if any of the Scots have Lands, &c. in England, they shall be liable to pay all Duties imposed by Act of Parliament on those Lands. I do also agree, that every Scotchman resident here, is bound by all the Laws of the Land; and so are all Foreigners whatsoever (be they Danes or Swedes, or of whatsoever other Nation they be) who live here under the King's Protection: But as soon as they are gone out of the Kingdom, their Allegiance, which was but local, ceases, and they are no longer obliged by the Laws of England. It must be agreed, that no English Act of Parliament can bind Scotland, nor, as I humbly apprehend, the Scots, whilst out of England; if so, then how could this Prisoner be bound by this Act, being a Scotchman, and out of this Kingdom, at the Time when the Act was made? With great Submission, his coming into England alone could not subject him to this Law; for there seems to be a great Difference between this Act, and other general Acts or Laws of this Place: For, as I said before, if a Scotchman comes into England, and inhabits here, he is liable to all the Laws then in Force, and shall be punished for the Breach of any of them; because he was before protected by those Laws, and therefore must be obedient to them. But in this Case, the Subjection to the Law, and the Offence, began at the same Instant; for before his Landing in England, this Law had no Power over him, and the very Act of Landing made the Offence in this Indictment; 'twill be therefore something severe to construe that Act, which only makes the Prisoner liable to the Law, to be a Breach of it. As to this Matter, there will be no Difference between a Scotchman or a Dane: Both, when here, are bound by the Laws; neither, when absent. Suppose it should be enacted, That if a Dane should land in England without Licence from the King, he should be a Traitor; and a Dane notwithstanding such Act should come into England without such Licence, would he be a Traitor? With humble Submission, Not. Such Act might amount to a Prohibition of his coming, and make him be used as an Alien Enemy, 7 Co. 6 B. as Perkin Warbeck was in Henry the VIIth's Time; but could not make him a Traitor, because he owed no Allegiance to the King, nor Subjection to the Law, at the Time when the Act was made. As to the Prisoner's having been in England, and having resided here before; that, I humbly think, will make no Difference, because his Subjection to the English Law ceased, as soon as he stepped off from the English Shore.

What I shall beg Leave further to insist upon for the Prisoner (supposing your Lordship should be of Opinion against him on the former Points) is, That this Evidence don't maintain the Indictment. The Indictment is for returning without Licence from France into England: The Evidence is, That he returned out of France into Scotland, and from thence thence into England. The Act of Parliament is, That if any of His Majesty's Subjects, &c. return into this Kingdom of England, or other His Majesty's Dominions: The Meaning of which, we for the Prisoner humbly take to be, That the first coming of any such Person, as is within the Act, into any of his Majesty's Dominions, shall be the Treason; and that the Act did not intend to make every several Coming into every distinct Dominion a new Treason; as if such Person should come out of France first into Scotland, then into Ireland, thence into Jersey, and so into England, the Act, with Submission, did not design to make this Person liable to be indicted for four Treasons; but that into what Dominion he first came, for that he was a Traitor and punishable: And that Construction sufficiently prevents the Mischief and Danger the Act design'd to arm against. For if a Man should come without Licence into any one Dominion, and is look'd on as a dangerous Person, the taking away his Life will prevent any future Mischiefs from him: If he has a Licence to come into one, 'tis to be believed, with a great deal of Reason, he may be trusted in any other of his Majesty's Dominions, or else his Majesty would never have granted him a Licence to return into any of his Dominions, where he would be equally capable of putting in Execution any dangerous Practices against the Government. If that should be the Meaning of the Act, then, with Submission, this Indictment ought to have been for coming into Scotland, which was the Place he first came into, for there was the Treason, and not for coming into England. Besides, if the coming into Scotland was the first and only Treason punishable by this Act, then we must offer the general Pardon of Scotland in the Prisoner's Excuse: Not, my Lord, that I can pretend, that a Pardon in Scotland can pardon a Treason in England; but we must beg Leave to insist upon it, as amounting to a Licence to return into Scotland. I do expect that it will be objected, that the Licence which this Act appoints, must be under the Privy-Seal of England, which this Scotch Pardon can't be pretended to be. I confess, my Lord, the Words are, without Licence from his Majesty under his Privy-Seal. But 'tis not said Privy-Seal of England. And tho' generally speaking, when an English Act mentions the Great Seal or Privy-Seal, it must be took to be the Great-Seal or Privy-Seal of England; yet in this English Act, if your Lordship will construe the Words, His Majesty's Subjects, not only to be his Subjects as King of England, but as King of Scotland, or any other Nation; if your Lordship will construe the Word, Dominions, to be not only the Dominions dependent on the Crown of England, but also all other Dominions of which his Majesty was King, as Scotland; by Parity, the Words, Privy-Seal, ought to be extended to all the Privy Seals the King has, as King of England, or King of Scotland. And if so, then since the Queen has in Her Proclamation, declared that Her Pardon shall be took as beneficially as if it had been under the Great-Seal; but the Great-Seal includes the Privy-Seal, and is of greater Efficacy: We humbly hope, that it will be as beneficial to the Prisoner, as if it had been under the Privy-Seal; nay, rather more, because as to Scotland it pardons the Offence; for tho' the Return is after the Pardon, yet it pardons the going into France, which is the Foundation of the Crime, and without which the returning into Scotland, or any of His Majesty's Dominions, was no Offence. This is the Use the Prisoner would make of this Pardon. I can't press it as a Pardon of an English Crime; tho' with great Submission to your Lordship, it seems something strange, that Mr. Lindsay, should by virtue of this Pardon be a very good Subject of the Queen's in Scotland, and have all the same Liberties other of his Countrymen have there, and yet that he should be a Traitor against the Queen here in England; that he should be within the Queen's Protection there, and out of her Protection here; and yet at the same Time that his Allegiance to her can't be severed, nor he considered as a Subject to Her, as Queen of Scotland, and not as Queen of England.

But admitting the Pardon will not avail the Prisoner in any respect, and that your Lordship should be of Opinion that his coming to England is a Treason, notwithstanding he returned from France into Scotland first; then I must insist upon what Mr. Williams has before mentioned, that this Indictment is ill, and that he ought to have been indicted in the County which he first came into, which was impossible to be Middlesex; and I must ground it on the general Rule, that all Crimes are local, and inquirable by the Grand Jury of the County where they are committed. Even in Batteries, which are transitory in Actions; yet, with Submission, Indictments are local, and must be enquired of by the Grand Jury of the County where they are committed. My Lord, I shall trespass no longer upon your Lordship's Patience, only just beg leave to say, that upon the whole Matter, for the Prisoner at the Bar, I humbly insist upon it, That he being a Native of Scotland, is not within the Words of this Act: For if he should be within the Words, yet he is not within the meaning of the Act. But if both those Points are against me, That, as this Case is, he is not obliged by it. If I should fail in all these, then I must have recourse to the Construction of the Act, that it intended only to make the first Entry into any of the Queen's Dominions Treason, and consequently that this Treason was upon his Return to Scotland, and ought in the Indictment to have been laid as such: For which Reason I humbly conceive that the Indictment is not only ill, but the Pardon will amount to a Licence. But if your Lordship should be of Opinion he is indictable for coming into England, that then the Indictment ought to have been laid in that County where he first came into. If any of which Points hold, with Submission, the Prisoner can't be found guilty on this Indictment; but your Lordship will be pleased to direct the Gentlemen of the Jury to acquit him, which I humbly pray in his Behalf.

Sir Thomas Powis. My Lord, I have observed these Gentlemen in the Method they have gone, and will follow them in the same Manner to give them an Answer. What we have to say, will be nothing but with respect to the Law, as it now stands upon the Act of Parliament: Whether the Case deserves Mercy or no, is not the Question here, that will be consider'd in another Place. Our Part is to maintain the Law as it stands, with reference to this Indictment; it must be owned that a great deal of that which has been said might have carried weight with it, if it had been pleaded in Scotland, where the Proclamation was made; but to make use of it here in England, as having any Force in this Case, is not agreeable to Law or Reason.

fon. First, no Man can say, a Pardon, if it had been under the Great Seal of Scotland, could pardon a Crime committed here in England; but it is not so, for it is not under any Seal at all. But supposing it were to be taken in the Extent they would have it, yet it would not be a sufficient Pardon in this Case. For these two Things must be consider'd. First, It is a Pardon only of Crimes committed in that Kingdom. Secondly, It cannot be a Pardon of a Crime committed since that Pardon granted; for we must mind the Date of that Pardon, and the Crime he is tried for. The Scotch Pardon is dated in March, 170³. that was March was Twelvemonth. No Man can say a Proclamation in that Kingdom can pardon a Crime that was committed afterwards. Now this Crime was committed in December last, for then it was he returned into England; therefore that Pardon can never extend to this Case. So that these two Things if considered, will be sufficient to answer all that has been insisted on, by way of Pardon. First, It is a Pardon of another Kingdom for Offences committed against the Crown of Scotland; whereas this Indictment is for an Offence committed against the Crown of England. And secondly, It was granted at a Time precedent to the Time of this Offence committed: But next, they say the Pardon in Scotland will amount to a Licence from the Queen to go into Scotland, and that then by Consequence he was free to come into England; with Submission, we think they cannot make such an Inference, for the Queen's Pardon cannot extend to such a double Purpose. Suppose the Queen had expressly pardoned his going into France and returning into Scotland, that would not have amounted to a Licence to come into England. So that we deny their Inference, that the Pardon in Scotland amounts to a Licence to come into England. But in the second Place, If the Queen had expressly given him a Licence to go into Scotland (tho' I do not admit that to be the Case) yet I deny that that would have been a Licence to come into England. If the Queen under the Privy Seal of Scotland, should have admitted him to come into Scotland, yet that would not have been a Licence for him to come into England; for it would have been a special Licence to go to one Place, which can never be reckoned, in such a Case as this is, a Licence to go to another Place in another Kingdom. For the King or Queen might perhaps think fit to license one to come into Scotland, and yet not think it convenient to license him to come so near their Royal Person, as he would be here in England. So that there is no such Licence in that Pardon, as is insisted on; and if there had been, yet it would not have had that Operation to license him to come to England. The next Thing they speak most fully to (and which is very considerable, if they make it out) is, that the Words of this Act of Parliament, upon which the Indictment is founded, or at least the Meaning of them, cannot be extended to a Native of Scotland. As for the Words of the Act we need do no more than read them, to make it appear to be otherwise. It is observed by them very truly, that Scotland is no part of the Kingdom of England; but they must admit it is a part of the Dominions of the Queen of England, tho' not part of the Kingdom of England. They would do little Service to the Subjects of Scotland, if they should endeavour to overthrow Calvin's Case, which was so solemnly determined near an hundred Years ago, which enables them of Scotland to come into England, and enjoy the same Privileges here, as the Subjects of England do. Certainly, as they are let into all these Benefits by the Resolution of that Case, so they are at the same Time the Subjects of the King or Queen of England. That the Words therefore of the Act are against them, nothing can be plainer; If any of His Majesty's Subjects who since the eleventh of December, 1688. have gone into France. — This leaves them no room for Dispute; it says not, if any of the Subjects of the Kingdom of England, but if any of His Majesty's Subjects; so that whoever was a Subject of the late King is within the Act. The Words are without any Restriction whatever, If any of his Majesty's Subjects; and they will not deny but that a Scotchman was a Subject of His late Majesty. But then they say, if the Words should extend to it, the Meaning of the Act cannot. With Submission, we think the Case before you is within the Words and Meaning of the Act, and within the Mischief which the Act provides against. For at the Time this Act was made, it being taken notice of, that upon the Peace concluded there would be a Door opened for a Communication between England and France, and that many Persons who had resorted thither, who had been actually in Arms there, and other dissaffected Persons, might take Advantage, and be encouraged from thence to form and carry on treasonable Designs and Practices against his Majesty's Person and Government; Therefore, to obviate that Mischief, this Act was made in such general Words, That if any of His Majesty's Subjects who had gone voluntarily into France, since the Time mentioned in the Act, without Licence, let them be born where they would, whether they were of the one Kingdom or the other, the Mischief of their returning without Licence was equal. And by consequence, it was the Meaning of the Act to exclude one as well as the other; for the Design of the Act was to prevent the Danger that might arise by such Persons coming over. But as to this present Case, if what the Witnesses have said be true, it would be very mischievous indeed, if a Person that had been resident here for near twenty Years, as the Prisoner was, by his own Witnesses, and afterwards went into France without a Licence, if he may be allowed to return back again without a Licence, because not originally a Native of England. By the same Rule all those Persons that have done the like both of Scotland and Ireland would be at Liberty to return also, because not Natives of England; which was not surely the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, nor ought the Construction of the Words to be so taken. It's true, we can't here by an Act bind them in Scotland, but we are not now putting in Execution this Act in Scotland, but putting it in Execution here in England on a Scotchman that had been long an Inhabitant here before. My Lord, the next Thing that was insisted on, is, that if he be such a Subject as may be construed within this Act, and if the Pardon should not have the Effect they contend for, yet they say this Indictment is laid in the wrong Place, it ought to have been laid in the County where he first arrived. There need little to be said to this, because the Prosecution is made where where the Party was apprehended. The Objection they make, is that which would render it impracticable to prosecute any for this Offence. For how is it possible to know where a Man first privately arrived? That which is enough to charge him, is, that he was first found in such a Place in England; for 'tis not said in the Act, that they shall not return to this or that County, but not to England. And then wherever he is found in England, there the Indictment may be laid against him. And the Case of the Felony comes home to this Point; the Man that steals Goods in one County, may be indicted in any other County where he carries them. So he that returns into England contrary to the Act, wherever he is apprehended he carries the Crime with him. And it does not appear, but that this is the first Place where he was found. They say it is impossible to come from Scotland into Middlesex, without first coming into some other County; but it is agreed that this is the Place where he was first apprehended. Therefore, upon the whole Matter, the Fact being confessed, we insist that he is within the Words and the Meaning of the Act, and within the mischievous Consequences which are intended to be prevented by it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not speak any thing to aggravate Matters against the Prisoner; but there have been some things said by his Council, which I think fit to be taken notice of,—They have given him a Character for his Faithfulness to the Queen, and called some Witnesses to it: And Mr. Williams was pleased to say, his owning the Facts charged against him in the Indictment (whereby he saved the Court and the Queen's Council a great deal of Trouble) was an Argument of his Sincerity.—I only say, I believe he had a better Opportunity by other Methods to have shewn it. My Lord, Every one knows from whence he came (viz. from France) and how long he stay'd there, and in whose Service. And it would have been a better Argument of his Sincerity, if he had given an Account of his Knowledge of what pass'd in France while he was there; and probably would have been of more Advantage to him, than saving the Trouble of proving what (he knew) we were ready and able to prove.

What has been said as to the Act in general, is something surprizing to me; to hear any Englishman complain of the Hardship of this Law, on which the Prisoner is indicted, which was made for the Preservation of the King's Person and the Government, and by the Wisdom of the Nation thought necessary. But as to the Matters of Law the Prisoner's Council have insisted on, they are reducible to two Heads.

First, That the Queen's Proclamation in Scotland, pardoning Her Subjects of Scotland of all Treasons, &c. amounts to a Licence to return to Scotland, by pardoning the Offence in going to France; and every Subject of Scotland may lawfully come thence into England.

Secondly, That the Prisoner ought to have been indicted in the first County, into which he first returned; which is impossible to be Middlesex.

As to the first Matter, it has been said, That a Native of Scotland is not bound, nor can be punish'd by a Law made in England. And the Council, tho' they have not denied the Authority of Calvin's Case, yet they do seem to dislike the Resolution of it. Now he is (according to Calvin's Case) a Subject of England. That Case was more beneficial to the Subjects of Scotland than to the Subjects of England; and it has been always allowed to be Law ever since. But, my Lord, we are not to consider this Gentleman in this Case as a Scotchman absolutely, but as a Scotchman here in England. How far an Act made in England would affect a Scotchman that should return into Scotland, I need not meddle with. But the Question here is, Whether an Act of Parliament made in England, will not bind every Person that is resident here in England? Now the Prisoner was resident here in England with his Family, and went hence to France: And by the Law, every Scotchman residing in England, is an Englishman; and hath Right to enjoy the Privileges of an Englishman. This is the Resolution of Calvin's Case. I will give but once Instance of this. The Act of Navigation made 12 Car. II. requires, in many Cases of Goods imported, that the Master, and three fourth Parts of the Mariners, shall be English. The Act of 14 Car. II. Chap. 11. of Frauds, declares, That any of her Majesty's Subjects of England, Ireland, and the Plantations, shall be accounted English, and no others.

Now the Natives of Scotland inhabiting in England or Ireland, have always been allowed to be English or Irish within the Act of Frauds; and have enjoy'd the Privilege ever since of being Masters of Ships: And the same hath been allowed them on all Trials in the Court of Exchequer, that is, according to Calvin's Case; That to all Intents and Purposes, a Scotchman being in England, enjoys the Privileges of an Englishman, he is a Subject of the Crown of England.

But give me Leave, my Lord, to consider how the Prisoner comes to be affected by this Act: Not as being her Majesty's Subject, living in Scotland; but he is bound by this Act, as he is a Subject residing here in England. For as to what they say, that his Offence is going into France; that is not the Matter he is charged with: That is the Description of the Person that falls under the Disability of the Act: [A Man under these Circumstances.] But his returning from France into England (being a Person describ'd by the Act) is the Offence.

My Lord, his returning is the Offence: Not his returning to Scotland, but returning to England, or any other her Majesty's Dominions, bound by the Acts of Parliament made in England. The Act is, If any of his Majesty's Subjects return: And every Scotchman that resides here, is a Subject of the Queen. Every Law that is made in England, will bind every Scotchman that resides here; and this will bind him from returning into England without Licence; which is all that is in this Case.

It hath been objected, The Act cannot bind the Scots here, because they have no Representative in Parliament. But that is not so: They may be Freemen of Corporations, and are capable of being Freeholders; and as such, may be represented in Parliament. The Penning of the Act shews, the Parliament intended to include all Subjects, that might in the utmost Latitude be called Subjects. The Words are [If any of his Majesty's Subjects, that have gone into France, shall return into England]. So that the Act says, They that were his Majesty's Subjects, and went into France, and did return, shall be guilty. Therefore, what hath been said of the Laws of England binding Scotland, is quite out of this Case.

The Council for the Prisoner have argued, That the Proclamation of Indemnity in Scotland, is a Licence to return into Scotland. I would fain know where where they find that. If there were a Pardon under the Great Seal of England for all Offences committed, I would be glad to know whether that would be accounted a Licence to return into Scotland? No, certainly. They have said, That the Matter that hinder'd the returning to Scotland, was the Offence of going to France without a Licence; which Offence is remitted by the Pardon. That is plainly a Mistake: For the Act had not Regard to any Offence of going to France; referring to the 11th of December, 1688, when, and long after, it was not any Offence to go thither without a Licence: Every Man, till the War was declar'd, might have gone thither without Licence. And yet by this Act, those that went between that Time and the War declared, as well as those that went during the War, are prohibited to return without Licence. So that the Pardon which they rely on, cannot avail the Prisoner: For the Act did not regard Crimes committed; but, as the Preamble is, it was made to prevent an Inconvenience which might follow by disaffected Persons returning; who might form and carry on traitorous Conspiracies, against the late King and the Government. And the Parliament look'd on Persons to be disaffected, that left their Country, and went and stay'd in France after the late King went thither; and therefore judg'd it not reasonable to have such trusted here, without the Government should license their Return.

The Persons mentioned in the Act are characterized: So that as to the Matter of the Pardon (if it were an English Pardon) it would not bring them from under the Act. Besides, any Licence or Pardon in Scotland, cannot indemnify them from an Act made in England.—The Law and the Seals of each Kingdom are distinct: And an express Licence under the Seal of Scotland to return to England, nay an Act of Parliament for that Purpose there, would not avail: For no Act of Scotland can take off a Disability laid on by any Act made in England. For this Act is a banishing them from England, unless the Queen gives a Licence to return.

My Lord, It is an extraordinary Thing which they argue from the Preamble of the Act, that mentions the carrying on the Trade between England and France; and Scotland being not named, the Act shall not extend to the Scotchmen. I do not see what can be gather'd from that.—The Scotchmen residing here, are considered as English: and being here, are bound by the English Laws; else the Scots would be in a better Condition here than the English. But, my Lord, that which we insist on, is, That the Scots residing here, are to all Intents Englishmen; That they are subject to the Laws of England, and bound by them. The going first to Scotland will not avail the Prisoner: For the Offence is, returning to the Place from whence he went, that is, England. Whether his returning to Scotland be an Offence within this Act or not, is not material; nor whether an Act of Parliament made in England, can banish a Scotchman from Scotland: But it is, That an Act of Parliament in England may prohibit any Scotchman, or any other Person, from returning out of France into England.

My Lord, The next Matter, which they mightily insist on, is, as to the Place of Trial: But if that Objection should prevail, it would make the Act ridiculous and useless. For then it would lie on the Queen's Council to prove, Where a Person (who privately return'd, and got into the Kingdom) first landed. But the Act says (If they shall return into England). And wherever he is found, thither he is returned. There was an extraordinary thing said indeed: That if we can make it Treason wherever he is found, then he may be tried in every County he comes into; although he be pardoned, or tried, for returning into one County. Certainly that will not be so. For the returning is but one Treason: And tho' he may go into several Places, yet when he is tried in one Place, and convicted, and pardon'd for that, it discharges him wholly. For the returning is but one intire Offence, tho' having been in many Places: The Queen may proceed against him in any one of them. It is like the common Case of an Escape. An Escape is an Escape in every County, wherever the Party goes afterwards: And the Party escaped, or the Sheriff may be proceeded against in any County whither the Party escaped goes, as well as in that whither he first escaped. And without this be so, the Act can never be put in Execution.

My Lord, I think this is the Substance of what they have said; that an Act made in England, will not bind a Native of Scotland. We think an Act made in England, will bind such a one residing in England. Now the Prisoner was residing in England for twenty Years; and he is both within the direct Words, and within the Intent and Meaning of the Act. There are a great many of them that are in France: And I believe the Parliament never intended to leave the Scots free to return into England, any more than the English.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I desire to know, whether the Queen's Licence does not set us free, as well in England as in Scotland? And whether one that has a Licence to come into Scotland, may not come into England too?

Mr. Att. Gen. One may be brought to a Trial here, tho' he had a Licence in Scotland.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, Her Majesty's Pardon extends further than a Licence: It restores to all the Privileges I had before.

L. C. J. Holt. If I take you right, you mean This Pardon in Scotland secured to you all the Advantages you had at the Time of your Birth, or at any Time before your Departure out of England; so that you are not to be impeach'd, or convicted of any Crime you have committed against the Laws of Scotland; but you are thereby upon the same Foot, and have the same Rights and Privileges as any other Scotchman hath, that hath never offended: And every innocent Scotchman hath a Right and Liberty to come into England when he will. Which is very true, that the Pardon discharges all Disabilities and Incapacities, that you have incur'd by any Offence committed against the Laws of Scotland, but not any committed against the Laws of England. That is, supposing the Pardon had been subsequent to your Return into Scotland, and that your Return hither had been High-Treason by this Act.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I think this Pardon reinstates me in all the Privileges I enjoy'd before.

L. C. J. Holt. I tell you no: It only restores you to the Privileges that you had as a Scotchman; and which you would have lost, if convicted of those Offences by the Law of Scotland; but exempts you not from any Punishment, to which you were then obnoxious by the Law of England.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would say but this only; That speaking of the Pardon, as a Pardon, it cannot pardon a Crime before it is committed. If the Pardon granted in Scotland, would pardon a Crime Crime committed in England; yet it would not pardon a Crime committed afterwards.

L. C. J. Holt. But observe what he says. Says he, I am by this Pardon made a Free Scotchman: (And it is to be admitted, that the Pardon of Scotland has that Effect). And if, says he, this Pardon has made me as Free a Scotchman as I was before; Ergo, I may come into England, as well as any other Scotchman that was under no Disability.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he is bound by the Laws of England, as he resided here: It has been the constant Practice. He does not pretend that he had King William's, or the present Queen's Licence to come into England; only that he had the Queen's Licence to come into Scotland.

L. C. J. Holt. You hear what he says.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, the several Facts alleged in the Indictment, are admitted to be true; except that the Prisoner was a Subject to his late Majesty; and, that his Return into England since the 14th of January, 1697, was without Licence.

'Tis objected, he was not a Subject of his late Majesty within the Meaning of the Act, because he was a Scotchman.

Whoever is born under the Legiance of the King of England, is a Subject of the King; and 'tis admitted Mr. Lindsay was so born.

It has been likewise objected, His Return was not without Licence.

'Tis not pretended he had such a Licence as the Act of Parliament specifies, and the Indictment mentions; a Licence under the Privy Seal, to return into England.

But 'tis insisted on, That the General Pardon in Scotland does, by Construction of Law, amount to such a Licence.

It can't surely, with any Colour of Reason, be urg'd, That such a Pardon should be construed any farther than a Licence to return into Scotland; and such a Licence would not excuse the Prisoner.

My Lord, this Pardon in Scotland can have no Relation to the Offence in Question. A Pardon in that Kingdom can't extend to any Crime, which by the Laws of Scotland can't be there punish'd. But had that Pardon, which pass'd in Scotland, been under the Great Seal of England, it could have been of no Service to the Prisoner. As a Pardon it could not; because 'tis precedent to the Offence, and it can't by any Implication amount to a Licence.

The Reason offer'd, why it should be so construed, is, That the Offence, whereof the Prisoner stands indicted, is of a complicated Nature: That it consists of two Parts; going out of England into France; and, returning out of France into England. That the first Part of this Offence (his going to France) being pardoned, he can't be prosecuted for his Return.

The Supposition whereupon this Argument is founded, is a Mistake: For after the 11th of December, 1688, any Man might (before the War was proclaim'd) have, without any Offence, gone into France: And therefore, his going thither after the 11th of December, 1688, is no Part of the Crime; but a Description of the Person, whose Return without Licence was enacted to be High-Treason.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, the Prisoner insists on the Benefit of Her Majesty's Proclamation of Pardon in Scotland; which (as has been already taken notice of) bears Date in March, 1703, and cannot extend to pardon a Treason since that Time. The Treason for which he stands charged, was not till December last; then he came into England without Licence of the Queen: He voluntarily went into France without Licence, since the 11th of December, 1688. He came back into England without Licence, in December last; and for that he stands charged with Treason, by Virtue of the Act of Parliament in the ninth Year of the late King. But the Inference he makes from this Pardon, by the Queen's Proclamation in Scotland, is, That he is thereby restored to all the Privileges of a Scotch Subject, and consequently may freely come into the Kingdom of England, as any other of her Majesty's native Subjects of that Kingdom may do. Now the Pardon in Scotland can only extend to exempt him from Punishment for any Crimes committed in that Kingdom; and he can have no Benefit of it for a Crime committed against the Laws and Statutes of England, which is a distinct Kingdom, and govern'd by distinct Laws. And such Inference as he makes from this Pardon, is both against the very Words and Meaning of the Act of Parliament, upon which he stands indicted. The Words are very express and plain: Any of Her Majesty's Subjects, who have at any Time since the 11th of December, 1688, voluntarily gone into France without Licence (as the Prisoner confesses he did) and after the 14th Day of January, 1697, shall return into England, or any other Her Majesty's Dominions, without Licence — shall be judged guilty of High-Treason. He was residing in England after the 11th of December, 1688. He went from England into France; and is returned into England without Licence, since the 14th of January, 1697, and so is within the express Words of this Act. And the Intent of the Act will appear by the Preamble. The Mischiefs and Inconveniences apprehended at the making of this Act, were, That the Freedom of going and coming out of England into France, and from France to England, by the respective Subjects of each Kingdom after the Peace, might be an Encouragement to such of the King's Subjects, who had been engaged in traitorous Designs and Conspiracies against his Majesty, and who might be encouraged to form and carry on treasonable Designs and Practices against the King and the Government, to come out of France into England. The Persons from whom those Dangers were apprehended, were such Persons as are described in this Act; and therefore, for the Safety and Preservation of His Majesty's Person and Government, the Intent of this Law was to prohibit their returning into England, without such Licence from His Majesty under His Privy-Seal.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say? Or have you any thing to reply?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we would save your Lordship's Time as much as might be; but we humbly insist, that our Objections are not answer'd: And it being upon a new Law, and in Case of Life, we pray that the Matter may be found Specially.

L. C. J. Holt. If we see any Reason to doubt it, it shall be found Specially. But what you have said, overthrows Calvin's Case; for you urge, That you are a Subject of Scotland, and so not within this Act of Parliament. But you ought to consider, That as you are a Subject of Scotland, so also you are a Subject of the Crown of England by being a Native of Scotland since the Accession of Scotland to England, which is by the Law of England. And if the Case had been, that you had only departed from Scotland into France, and from thence returned into Scotland, and stay'd there without ever coming into England, the Case would have been much different:

different: For it may be, the Law of England cannot oblige a Scotchman, for any Act by him done in his own Country (though there is no Occasion to give any Opinion of that); but an Act of Parliament in England, may subject any Scotchman to any Penalty, for any Act that he should do in England. Suppose a Scotchman going out of Scotland into France, since the 11th of December, 1688, that shall return into England since the 14th of January, 1697, he seems to be within the Words and Meaning of the Act. But there is no need of determining that Point now: The Prisoner being a Scotchman born, and having been in England for a long Time, and departing from England into France within that Time, and returning into England afterward, is to all the Purposes within the Letter and Design of the Act: For being a Resident in England at that Time, you are to all Purposes a Subject of the Crown of England, as much as any Native of England; and your departing into France, and remaining there for so long Time, and returning without Licence, is the same Danger that the Act of Parliament intended to prevent.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I would not presume to say any thing in Derogation of Calvin's Case: But I say, that tho' a Scotchman may be as a Natural-born Subject of England, yet he may not be within the Meaning of this so penal a Law.

L. C. J. Holt. Certainly within the Meaning, if within the Words and Reason. But there is another Point that you, his Council, have urged in his Behalf; which is, That this Pardon is a Licence to him to return into Scotland. Which in Truth is not; for it is to another Purpose, viz. To pardon and discharge all Treasons and Crimes committed in Scotland; but not give a Licence to return into that Realm: But suppose it to be a Licence to go into Scotland, that will not be a Licence to return into England. The Treason is, to return into the Realm of England, or any other His Majesty's Dominions. Another Matter that you have insisted upon, is, That supposing this to be a good Pardon under the Great Seal of Scotland, it hath pardon'd the Offence of going into France. The Return into England can't be High-Treason; because the Treason consists of two Facts, say you, which are, The departing into France, and, The returning into the Queen's Dominions. Like unto the Case, when one gives another a mortal Wound, of which he languishes, and before he dies, the Stroke is pardon'd; and then the Party dies: Afterwards it will not be Murder; because that Act, which should make it so, is discharged by the Pardon. To this a plain Answer has been before given by the Queen's Council; That going into France since the 11th of December, 1688, is no Offence originally; but only the Return of such Person is made High-Treason, and from that Return doth the High-Treason commence. Therefore such a Pardon, under the Great Seal of England, could not have discharged him from being guilty of High-Treason, if he had returned afterwards.

But, says he for himself (as I apprehend him) That this Pardon hath made him a Free Scotchman, to all Purposes, as if he had never offended. And tho' the Pardon can't have any Operation to discharge him of any Crime committed against the Law of England; yet it hath this Effect, by putting him in the same State of other Scotchmen, to enable him to come into England. It is true, this Pardon puts him in the same Condition, in which other Scotchmen are by the Law of Scotland; but it puts him not in the same Condition that other Scotchmen are by the Law of England. By the Law of England, Scotchmen may at any Time come into England: But the Law prohibits those who are Subjects, and went into France without Licence, to return into England.

They who were born in Scotland, may inherit Lands in England: But if an Alien to England and Scotland be naturaliz'd by Act of Parliament in Scotland; though he is to all Purposes a Natural-born Subject of Scotland by the Law of that Realm; yet not therefore Inheritable to Lands in England, because he is not a Natural-born Subject by the Law of England.

There is another Question hath been stirr'd; which is, That he should have been indicted in the first English County into which he came: For it appears, upon the Evidence, that he came from Scotland. Now Middlesex can't be the first County; but it must be Northumberland: For upon his coming there, the Treason is complete; and his proceeding further into other Counties, can't make it more Treasons than it was before. As to the Case of Felony, stealing Goods in one County, and carrying them into another; it is Felony in every County they are carried into. A Prisoner escapes from a Goal in one County, and then goes into several Counties; it is an Escape in every County into which he comes; which is a Case very opposite to this in Question. Suppose a Man committed for Felony has escaped out of Newgate into Northumberland; may he not be indicted in Northumberland? He came voluntarily into this County of Middlesex; and certainly may be indicted, and tried here. Indeed, if he had been taken in one County, and carried into another County, that would be another Case; because he came there by Coersion.

Mr. Williams. Now, my Lord, in this Case, the Prisoner comes into this County of Middlesex to surrender himself; and coming into Middlesex with an Intention to surrender himself, when a Warrant is out against him, will not be Treason in Middlesex, tho' his first coming into England were admitted to be Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. That does not appear: He says otherwise himself. He says, he heard there was a Warrant out against him; and then he surrender'd himself.

L. C. J. Trevor. I do not think, if he had come into this County to surrender himself, it would have alter'd the Case. If he had surrender'd himself in the first County he came into, he would have been within the Law.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, with humble Submission, if he comes into England, he, by that, commits Treason. But if, after his coming into England, and before he comes into Middlesex, he hears that in Middlesex there is a Warrant out against him; and, purely to surrender himself upon this Warrant, he comes into Middlesex, and surrenders himself in Middlesex; with humble Submission, this Act of Surrendering himself, which the Prisoner does in Obedience, and in Justice to the Process of Law, won't amount to make him guilty of High-Treason in Middlesex.

L. C. J. Holt. This is not the Case. However, we are all of Opinion, that alters not the Case: (For I have consulted my Lord and Brothers). Have you any more to say for the Prisoner? Or has he any thing more to say for himself?

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I have told you what was the Motive that brought me into England; That

That I was to come to my Wife and Children, believing that I might have done it without Trespassing against the Law, because I saw others did so before me. Now if it be taken as a Fault in me, and not in others; that will be very hard, my Lord. If I have offended, it is out of Ignorance.

L. C. J. Holt. Ignorance of the Law is no Excuse: But that may fall under another Consideration, which doth not belong to us. Have you any more to say?

Mr. Lindsay. If I have by my Ignorance offended in this Point, and if you think my Indemnity in Scotland will not avail me, I humbly beg your Lordship will intercede for me to Her Majesty.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Prisoner, David Lindsay, is indicted for High-Treason upon the Statute that was made in the Ninth of King William. The Offence set forth in the Indictment is to this Effect, That he being a Subject of the late King, did, since the 11th of December, 1688, go out of this Realm into France, and that he has returned into England, without Licence under the Privy-Seal, since the 14th of January, 1697; which returning, by that Act is made High-Treason. This Act was made upon the concluding the Peace of Refwick, because then (as the Act recites in the Preamble) the Seas would be open for Commerce between England and France, and that would give an Opportunity to those Persons to return to England, whom the Wisdom of the Nation thought dangerous to the Government, that is, those that had been in the Service of the French King, and others, that by departing the Realm since the 11th of December, 1688. Therefore, to prevent all Danger to the King and his Government, this Act was made, to make such a Return to England by such Persons to be so penal as to amount to High-Treason.

Now, the Question is, whether this Prisoner be guilty. It does appear that he is a Native of Scotland, and also that he was here in England for many Years (I think one of his own Witnesses says about twenty) and did depart since the 11th of December, 1688, and he returned into Scotland since March was Twelve-month, and came into England afterwards about December last, which is also admitted. So that it appears he is in the Words of the Act, and had no Licence under the Privy-Seal.

But that which he insists upon by his Council, is, that he was a Scotchman by Birth, and had an Invitation to return into Scotland, and had the Queen's Pardon, whereby he was pardon'd all manner of Offences. It's true, he admits he was at St. Germain's, but returned into Scotland in order to take the Benefit of that Pardon. He was at first secured by the Government there, but he had the Benefit of the Pardon allow'd him, and was discharged. And then he says, he did desire to come into England, and would not continue longer in France, because he would not be a Papist. That when he was in Scotland, he desired to come into England too, which he thought he might upon the Account of his Pardon in Scotland; and he advised with Council, whether he might safely come into England, and they told him he might, as he says.

The Question is, whether any of these Things will be to his Advantage. First, It is a Law of England, that he is indicted upon; no Pardon under the Great Seal of Scotland can discharge any Crime committed against the Law of England, neither can a Pardon under the Great Seal of England discharge any Crime against the Law of Scotland. But suppose he had had a Pardon under the Great Seal of England before his Return; that would not have pardon'd him in this Case: For his Offence is not in going into France, and coming into England in Time of Peace; but that having so gone, he returns without Licence, that is the Fact that is made so penal. Now a Pardon given before a Man commits any Offence, is ineffectual; the Queen cannot pardon a Crime before it is committed.

But, says he, I am by this Pardon made to all Purposes a free Scotchman, I am restored to all my Capacities that I had lost; therefore, if I have all the Capacities that I had as a Scotchman before, I may come into England. Now that is a Mistake. It's true, he is restored to all the Capacities of a Scotchman, which is to be had by the Laws of Scotland; but a Pardon in Scotland cannot give him those Privileges he had by the Law of England, and therefore cannot discharge him from an Offence committed against the Law of England. Nay, if he had been in Scotland, having escaped after he had been here, that would not have been effectual to discharge him from his Offence against the Law of England. Gentlemen, the Matter is before you, he is a Subject of the Queen of England, he has departed from England since the 11th of December, 1688, and has returned hither without Licence under the Privy-Seal. And if you do believe all this, then you are to find him guilty; but if you do not believe it, you are to acquit him.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in about half an Hour returned into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall speak for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. David Lindsay, hold up thy Hand (which he did). How say you? Is he guilty of the High-Treason, whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels had he at the Time of this High-Treason committed?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Then the Court adjourned till Five of the Clock.

About Five of the Clock the Court met, and the Prisoner being brought, the Court proceeded.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Lindsay the Prisoner hath been convicted of High-Treason, and I pray the Judgment of the Court.

Cl. of Arr. David Lindsay, thou has been arraigned for High-Treason, and thereof convicted, what hast thou to say why Judgment should not pass against thee?

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I refer myself to the Queen's Mercy.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing to plead for yourself, or by your Council?

Mr. Williams. My Lord I did design to have insisted upon a Point in relation to this Statute, upon upon which the Indictment against the Prisoner is grounded; but understanding it has been already under the Consideration of your Lordship, and the rest of my Lords the Judges, and that it has received your Lordship's Determination, I shall chuse to wave it; but this, with Submission, I do insist upon; That it is not shewn in this Indictment that the Prisoner was a Subject of King William at the Time of his going into France, or at the making this Act. Now, as I humbly conceive, the very Words of the Act require, that the Party should be a Subject at that Time. The Words are thus, If any of His Majesty's Subjects, who have after the 11th of December gone into France, if they return without Licence, they shall be guilty of High-Treason. Now by the Words of the Act, it seems requisite that he should be a Subject at the Time of his going into France; or at least at the Time of the making of the Act. So that, with Submission, the Indictment does not agree with the Act of Parliament, unless it be shewn that the Prisoner was a Subject at the Time of his going to France; and no Indictment in any Case, much less an Indictment for High-Treason shall be aided by Intendment.—And in this Case, my Lord, there is the less Room for an Intendment, that the Prisoner was then a Subject, because it is not shewn that the Prisoner was a natural born Subject, or that his Treason was contra naturalis allegiantie debitum. And it not being shewn that he was a natural Subject, it must be supposed he became a Subject by Naturalization, or by Denization, which might be since his going into France.—My Lord, I must own, 'tis said in the Indictment that he was a Subject of King William, but 'tis not said when he was a Subject; so that it may be as well supposed he became so after he went into France, as before; and the rather in regard he is not shewn to be a natural-born Subject. And we take it, that by the Penning of this Law, which says, If any of his Majesty's Subjects, who have gone into France, &c.—it must be meant of a Subject at that Time, or at the Time of his going into France; and it not being shewn that he was a Subject at that Time, we humbly take it that the Indictment is insufficient.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, we say, with great Submission, that this Indictment is not good, because it does not shew that Mr. Lindsay was a Subject of the late King at the time of the making the Act, or any time before. If this Person had become a Subject of the King after the making of the Act, as he might by Derivation, and had returned into England, having been in France in the Time mentioned in the Act, he would not be within the Act. Therefore it was necessary to shew at what Time he was a Subject. It is not laid in the Indictment, that he was a natural-born Subject, nor do I pretend that it is necessary in an Indictment for Treason, because one that owes Local Allegiance may be guilty of Treason. But they ought to have averr'd either that he was a natural-born Subject, and that he shall be intended so always; or else, that he was a Subject at the Time of the making of the Act, otherwise we won't be within the Act; because the Words of the Act seem to tie it up to Subjects at the Time of the making the Act, by the Words which follow, viz. Who have gone into France, &c.

Sir T. Powis. I have look'd both into the Indictment and the Act. One Part of the Objection is, that he is not a natural Subject. That is not to be insisted on, for there is no such thing in the Act; for the Act says, If any of his Majesty's Subjects; and there is no need of laying any more in the Indictment than the Act requires; and it was not intended to be confined to such. The other Part of the Objection is, That it is not alledged that the Prisoner at the Bar was the Subject of King William at the time when the Act was made. Now there is no need of alledging these Words in the Indictment; for the Act runs thus, Therefore be it enacted, that if any of his Majesty's Subjects, who have at any Time, since the 11th of December, 1688, voluntarily gone into France, without Licence from His Majesty King William, or from Queen Mary, shall return: And the Indictment does lay it, that this Prisoner was a Subject of the late King William, and that he is now a Subject to the present Queen; and that he, after the 11th of December, 1688, did go into France. Now sure here is alledged in this Indictment that the Act refers to; that is, That if any Subject, who went into France after the 11th of December, 1688, shall return into England. And the Indictment says, he was a Subject of King William, and that he did go into France after that Time, and did return into England after the Time prohibited by the Act. Here is nothing required in the Act, but what is laid in the Indictment. And it is a very strange Objection to say that we should averr that he was a Subject when this Act was made; this ought to have been shewed on the other Side, if it be otherwise. Here is that in the Indictment which is conformable to the Act, and there is no more necessary, than to describe the Person according to the Act.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have taken that Method in the Indictment that is proper, that is, to pursue the Act of Parliament; we have laid him as the Act describes. Now they say, that it being not shewn that he was a Subject at the Time of his going into France, he is not within the Act. But when a Man is laid in the Indictment to be a Subject, it is a strange Objection to fancy we must mention the Time of his beginning to be a Subject. We have shewed he was a Subject before the making of the Act, and we have shewed he was a Subject after; and he is presumed to have always been a Subject, unless special Matter is shewn when he was not a Subject, as that he was an Alien, and at a particular Time naturalized or made a Denizon; which without Proof will not be presumed; and this Objection should have before arisen from Evidence. It is laid likewise to be contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance, being a Subject of the late King William, and of the present Queen.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, this Exception against the Indictment seems, with great Submission, not to be answered; I go upon the Words of the Act:

If any of his Majesty's Subjects, who have since the 11th of December, 1688, gone into France. My Objection is, That it is not shewn, that at the Time of going into France, nor when the Act was made, that the Prisoner was a Subject; and it not being so shewn, to intend the Prisoner then a Subject, is helping the Indictment by Intendment, which cannot be. And I say there is the less Room for this Intendment here, because this Prisoner is not shewn to be a natural Subject.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, every Word of this Indictment would have been true, if this Gentleman had been an Alien, and become a Subject after the Act was made, and before the late King died.

died. And yet in such a Case he would not have been within the Act: For if he had been a Stranger, and after the Act had been denizon'd, and then had returned into England, having before been in France, that would not have been within the Act, because the Act says, If any of the King's Subjects, who have gone into France, shall return: Which must be meant, that were so before the Act was made: And yet that is all this Indictment says.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a foreign Supposition. Can any Man suppose, that such a Man that has been in France, that he should be naturaliz'd or indenizon'd after such an Act was made? And suppose it were so, that he was an Alien, and happen to be naturaliz'd by general Words; the Act does not say, If he shall be a Subject at his Departure; but if he were in France since such Time, and return after this Act.

He was a Subject to King William, and to Queen Anne; and that he went away since the 11th of December, 1688, and returned into England without Licence.

This is an Indictment formed suitable to the Act of Parliament; it pursues the Words of the Act of Parliament. The Act describes the Person, and sets out what shall be the Offence; that is, one that is a Subject of the King, and has gone away into France since the 11th of December, 1688, and shall return without Licence.

Mr. Williams. It appears not he was a Subject when he went away.

L. C. J. Holt. If any of his Majesty's Subjects, that have gone away since the 11th of December. It does not say, Any that shall go away; but that have gone away after the 11th of December.

Mr. Justice Powel. A Subject is supposed to be a natural Subject, unless he be naturalized afterwards: But now he being said to be a Subject according to the Act, supposes him to be a Subject then.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, we think, with Submission, this is not an Indictment according to other Indictments.

Mr. Justice Powel. It's enough that he is said to be a Subject.

Mr. Raymond. But, my Lord, must there not be a Distinction between a Subject that owes natural Subjection, and commits Treason, and one that only owes local Legiance?

Mr. Justice Powel. You might have shewn that, when you were upon the Evidence.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we humbly think it must be shewn that he was a Subject, at least at the Time of the making of the Act.

Mr. Justice Powel. We must take him to be a natural Subject, unless the contrary appear.

L. C. J. Trevor. We suppose that he was a Subject at the Time of his going out of England; and that the Indictment sufficiently sets forth. If you could have shewn that he became a Subject afterwards, that might have help'd you; but else it signifies nothing.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say?

Mr. Williams. If we have slipt any Thing on Behalf of the Prisoner, which might have been of Service to him, we hope he shall not suffer for any Omission of his Council; and therefore humbly pray, that your Lordship will favour him, and will be pleased to hear him for himself.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, What I have done has been out of Ignorance, and being supported by what other People did. And therefore, my Lord, having come into England by my self, I did not come with any Design of Harm, or to do any Thing contrary to the Law. As I am a Scotchman, it is not to be presumed I can understand the Laws of England: And therefore, if I have done any Thing amiss out of Ignorance, I hope your Lordship will make a favourable Construction of it; and represent my Case to the Queen. And I hope, as Her Majesty has given me the Effects of her Mercy in Scotland, I shall not feel the Effects of her Displeasure in England.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Lindsay, You have been indicted, and upon the Evidence of your own Confession of the Fact alledged against you, and after a great Debate in Matter of Law (which by you, and your Council, was urged on your Behalf) are convicted of High-Treason. That which now remains, is, To pronounce Judgment of Death upon you, which you are to suffer in that Manner which the Law hath appointed. Your Crime is, returning from France without the Queen's Licence; having before gone thither without any Licence from the late King or Queen. That Law which hath made such your Return to be an Offence of so high Nature, cannot (by any considering English Protestant) be thought to be severe: For they who, in the Time mention'd in the Act, chose rather to run into France, than to stay in England; could have no other Inducement, than an Affection to an Interest opposite to the Protestant Religion, and the ancient Constitution of this Kingdom. For they were received, protected, and encouraged by that Prince, who is a dangerous and profess'd Enemy both to our Religion and Government. The Wisdom of the Nation thought it absolutely necessary to keep them out; unless they should either clear their Innocence, or give Satisfaction by their Repentance, that they were fit to be trusted here. For he that should adventure to return, without doing either, must be presumed to come in upon the same Principles, and with the same Purposes, with which he went out: Which must be a constant Danger, even to the Foundation of our Government, which is established upon the Protestant Religion, and the Laws of the Kingdom. As to these Circumstances which you have mentioned to be peculiar to your Case, they fall not under Consideration; since they are not sufficient to justify you in acting contrary to the Law. Of what Consideration they may be to obtain the Queen's Mercy, falls not under our Cognizance; for that is a peculiar Attribute, inseparable from Her Majesty's Royal Person, by whom it can only be dispensed. Our Business is to put the Law in Execution. And you must be convinced in your own Conscience, that you have been convicted on a full Evidence, proving the Fact, which hath proceeded from your own Mouth. We have all heard, and debated that Matter of Law which you urged by your Council in your own Behalf; and are all of Opinion, that doth not avail you; but you are an Offender against an Act of Parliament: And nothing remains now, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law upon you; which is,

That you shall be conveyed from hence to Newgate, the Prison from whence you came, and from thence to be drawn upon a Hurdle to Tyburn; where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and while you are alive to be taken down, your privy Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels to be taken out of your Body, and burnt in your View; your Head is to be cut off, your Body is to be divided into four Parts, and your Head and your Quarters

Quarters are to be disposed as her Majesty shall appoint. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I beg that my Wife and Children may come to me; and that I may have a Minister of the Church of England allow'd me.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have whom you will, according to what is usual in such Cases.

Mr. Lindsay. I desire my Wife and Children may come to me alone, without the Keeper.

L. C. J. Holt. That is not to be permitted, that may occasion Danger.

Mr. Lindsay. I desire they may be lock'd up with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Lindsay, It is a Charge on the Keeper, that he admit them; but so as may not occasion any Danger.

Mr. Lindsay. It is a Trouble to the Keeper to wait on me so long (two or three Hours together) which was the Reason I desired it. And if a Minister come to me, I desire we may be private.

L. C. J. Holt. He will use you with all the Charity that may be; but he must do what is prudent. Nothing that is reasonable, or fit, shall be deny'd you.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I should be sorry, if I desired any thing that is unreasonable. My Lord, I suppose it is my Time now to say any Thing. I shall say only thus much; that is, I well understood what Circumstances I was in: I believe no Scotchman has been call'd in Question upon that Act; and I believed in my Conscience I was not guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. You are guilty of the Fact charg'd upon you; and it was a very reasonable Law.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I own, the Reason was good for making the Act; but that the Reason that I am guilty of the breaking it, I cannot own that.

L. C. J. Holt. You are guilty of the Thing you are charg'd with. All that you can do now, is, To appeal to the Mercy of the Queen: She is the best Judge of it.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I rest upon your Lordship's representing my Case to the Queen.

Her Majesty was afterwards pleased to grant him a Reprieve.

CLXXX. The Trial of JOHN TUTCHIN at the Guild-Hall of London, for a Libel, entitled, The Observator, Nov. 4. 1704. 3 Ann.

The Queen against John Tutchin.

London ff.

HE Information sets forth, That the Defendant being a seditious Person, and a daily Inventor and Publisher of false News, and horrible and false Lies and seditious Libels, and a perpetual Disturber of the Peace of this Kingdom; and wickedly and maliciously devising the Government, and Administration of Justice under our Lady the Queen, to traduce, scandalize and vilify; and our said Lady the Queen, her Ministers and Officers, to bring into Suspicion, and the ill Opinion of her Subjects: The 30th Day of May, in the First Year of her Majesty's Reign, at London, &c. did falsely, seditiously and scandalously, write, compose and publish, and cause to be written, composed and published, a certain false, malicious, seditious and scandalous Libel, entitled, The Observator. In which Libel, (of and concerning this Kingdom, and the Officers and Ministers of the Queen) are contained (inter alia) as follows.

N^o 11. Saturday, the 30th of May, 1702.

"At the same Time we [the Subjects of this Kingdom meaning] "consider the French King's Success in "his Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament the "sad State of our own Country [the Kingdom of England meaning] "which affords so many Instances "of Treachery. If we may judge by our national "Miscarriages, perhaps no Nation in Europe has "felt the Influences of French Gold more than England: And worthy it is our greatest Lamentation, "that our dear Country [meaning this Kingdom] "should be thus weaken'd by Men of mercenary Principles; when Countries inferior to us in Strength "and Riches, are secured from Attempts of this Na"ture only by the Fidelity of their People. What "is the Reason that French Gold has not affected "Holland as well as England; but that their Ministry is such as is entirely in the Interest of their Country, and altogether incorruptible? They prefer "Men that are knowing in their Posts, and are "active in Business: When, in England, we find out "Offices for Men, not Men for Offices. And a "Title of Honour gives a Man a Title to a great "Employment he is altogether ignorant of. By this, "and by preferring of Men by Interest and Favour, "has the Excise, the Customs, and other Branches of "the Revenue intolerably sunk: And by this Means "has the Navy of England, our chief Support, been "hitherto perfectly bewitch'd. And can Lewis spend "his Money better, than in getting Men into Offices in England, who are either false, or ignorant "in the Business, or are his Friends?

N^o 23. Saturday, the 11th of July, 1702.

That the Defendant afterwards, the 11th of July following, another false, malicious, seditious, and pernicious Libel, entitled, The Observator, falsely, maliciously, and seditiously, did write, compose, and publish, and caused to be written and published: In which Libel (of and concerning the Government of this Kingdom, and the Power of the People of this Kingdom) are contained (inter alia) as follows.

"And this is a Prerogative of singular Advantage to the People of England; in that their Representatives are the Judges of the Male-Administration of their Governors; that they can call "them in Question for the same, and can appoint "such to wear the Crown (meaning the Crown of this Kingdom) "who are fittest for Government: "Which

" Which they have often done, and indeed which " is the Privilege of all free People, who are au" thorized by the Laws of God and Nature, to
" chuse their own Governor's."

N^o 19. Saturday the 12th of June, 1703.

That the Defendant afterwards, the 12th of June, in the second Year of the Queen, did write and publish, and caused to be written and published, another false, scandalous, and seditious Libel, Entituled, The Observer. In which said Libel (of and concerning the Royal Navy of this Kingdom, and the Government of the said Navy) are contained (inter alia) as follows: " Take one Time with another, the " Mismanagements of the Navy (meaning the Royal Navy of this Kingdom) " have been a greater Tax " on the Merchants, than the Duties raised by Par- " liament: We never had a better Navy, but the " Wisdom of the Managers thereof is like a ot- " tomless-Pit, past finding out."

N^o 20. Wednesday the 16th of June, 1703.

That the Defendant afterwards, the 16th Day of the said June, did write and publish, and caused to be written and published, another false, scandalous, and seditious Libel, Entituled, The Observer. In which was contained (inter alia, of the said Royal Navy, and the Officers of the said Navy) as follows: " What avails it a Man of Learning and Parts, to " qualify himself for the Service of his Country " on the Ocean? If he has Knowledge enough to " advise Neptune himself, if he has no Interest, he " shall have no Preferment. How much does it " look to our Nation's Disadvantage, to have Men " in eminent Stations in the Navy, who have not " so much as an Idea, a Notion, a Thought of " Naval Affairs? To have Men to superintend the " Building of our floating Castles, who know not " the Nature of any Part of the Management? To " have Men employ'd in the Victualling, who qua- " lify themselves for that Post by learning to write " their Names, which is indeed a Post for a Philo- " sopher bred to the Sea?"

N^o 27. Saturday the 10th of July, 1703.

That the Defendant afterwards, the 10th of July following, did write and publish, and cause to be written and published, another false, scandalous, and defamatory Libel, Entituled, The Observer; in which are contained (inter alia, of one Daniel de Foe, who was indicted the 24th of February, in the first Year of the Queen, before the Justices of Oyer and Terminer at the Old-Bailey, London: And in July following, was convicted upon his own Confession, for composing and publishing a seditious Libel, Entituled, The shortest Way with the Dissenters, or Proposals for the Establishment of the Church, and of the Judgment against him to pay a Fine of 200 Marks, and to stand three Times in the Pillory, and to find Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years) as follows: " Countryman. Truly Master Observer, " I have no very good News for you: Mr. Daniel " De Foe has pleaded Guilty to the Indictment " against him, for writing and publishing the " shortest Way with the Dissenters; and he is sen- " tenc'd to stand three Times in the Pillory, to pay " a Fine of 200 Marks, and to find Security for " his good Behaviour for seven Years. Observ. The " Court could do no otherwise than convict him, Vol. V.

" upon his pleading Guilty; habemus confitentem reum, is very often the Voice of Courts of Judicature, 'tis the Ease of Judges and Juries: If " Daniel De Foe was in Expectation of Coleman's Black-Box, he has found a Pillory instead of it. " I don't trouble my Head about the Custom of giving the Pillory to Authors, which is the Punishment of Bakers. You talk'd just now of turning Author, have a Care of your Candle; you see which is the shortest Way with Authors; " you must all enter your selves into the Regiment of Colonel Foe: The Law of England directs, that " no Man shall be fined ultra tenementum; and I " make no Question, but the Justice of the Court " has fined Mr. Foe answerable to his Estate: His " Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years, " without doubt, was rationally considered, as to " the Legality thereof. For my Part, I am only " acquainted with old Laws of England, the an- " cient Birthrights and Immunities of Englishmen: " This I take to be the Foundation of new Laws."

N^o 17. Saturday the 20th of May, 1704.

That the Defendant afterwards, the 20th of May last, did write and publish, and cause to be written and publish'd, another false, scandalous, and seditious Libel, Entituled, The Observer. In which are contain'd (of and concerning the Defendant, and a Prosecution to be had against him for divers seditious Libels by him, before that Time, compos'd and publish'd) as follows: " Countrym. Master Observer, " there's another Plot against you (meaning the De- " fendant). " Observ. Prithee Man, there's a Plot " against the Queen, and the whole Nation; is it " any Wonder then, that there are Plots against me? " The High-Flyers are now plotting against every " honest Man in England. I'll tell you more of it, " the next Time we meet. Countrym. I fancy some " sort of People plot against you, because you en- " deavour to countermine their Plots against the " Queen and Nation. Observ. You are right " enough; but that shan't hinder me from detect- " ing their Designs, and from opening the People's " Eyes: But prithee, what Plot is this? Countrym. " Why, Sir, it is a Plot preparatory to your Trial; " and if they can't affect this Plot, I suppose you'll " never be tried. They insinuate into the Citizens " of London, that you have lately written very " scandalously, maliciously, and treasonably, and " I don't know how many other Lies, against them " the said Citizens; and by this Means they are " minded to set your Jurors against you. Obs. This " is likely enough; they'll leave no Stone unturn'd, " to suppress the Truth. I understand, I should " have been prosecuted by Bill the last Sessions, but " that the High-Flyers did not like the Jury; nay, " they say they don't like the two Sheriffs, be- " cause they won't pack Juries to find innocent Men " guilty." To the Disturbance of the Peace of this Kingdom, to the great Scandal of the Queen and her Government, and against the Peace of the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, &c.

*Proclamation was made for all Persons to attend.
Then the Jury was called.*

*John Cooper,
Thomas Briscoe,
Alexander Pollington.*

Edward Pinfold being called, desired to be excused.

Mr. Pinfold. My Lord, I desire I may be excused. I do not know Mr. Tutchin, for I never saw him in my Life; but I have read his Observations, and have several Times publicly disallowed them; and therefore some may think I am prejudiced against him.

* Mr. Att. Gen. The Question is * Sir E. Northey. only, whether he was the Author of these Papers? For that is the Matter to be tried.

Mr. Pinfold. I do not know that.

Mr. Mountague. But, my Lord, there may be something more in it, for he publicly disallowed his Papers.

L. C. J. Holt. You must not be excused unless the Queen's Council will.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we challenge him on behalf of the Defendant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Shew your Cause.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, our Cause is, that he himself looks upon himself as not indifferent.

L. C. J. Holt. He says, he has read some of his Papers, and has publicly condemned them, that he did not approve of the Matter contained in them, but he does not know the Author.

Mr. Whitaker. But he said he did not doubt but he was the Author of them.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. He is the fitter Man for a Jury.

Sir T. Powis. He does not say he has disapproved all the Papers he has read, and it may be those were not the Papers now in Question.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, the Matter we are contending for, is, that one that is not altogether an indifferent Person should not be on the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Question is not whether the Papers are criminal, but whether the Defendant is the Author of the Papers; and if this Gentleman knows him to be Author of them, he is proper to be on the Jury: For the Jury are by Law to be of the Neighbourhood of the Place where the Fact is alledged to be done, because they are presumed to know what is done there? And if this be a Cause of Challenge, you may Challenge all People, and so there could be no Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. He can't be challenged, unless he had given his Verdict before.

* Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we * Sir S. Harcourt. can have no Jury in this way they are going. A Jurymen is not to be asked what his Opinion of the Cause is; what he will voluntarily say, he may; and if upon what he says voluntarily he is liable to Exception he may be set aside.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not a Challenge.

Mr. Mountague. Surely, my Lord, he is not so indifferent as he ought to be. He says he has already declared his Opinion publicly concerning Mr. Tutchin's Papers.

Mr. Pinfold. My Lord, I know not well what he is indicted for, but it may be they are those Papers that I have given my Opinion of.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe no Man that has read them, but has given his Opinion of them one way or other; but that is not a sufficient Cause of Challenge.

Mr. Whitaker. Mr. Attorney, I hope you will not contend for one Jurymen.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says, he knows not what Papers he was indicted for, he says only that he has read some of his Papers, and has declared his Dislike of them.

L. C. J. Holt. Draw up your Challenge in Form, and it shall be consider'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. If these Gentlemen think there is nothing in it, what need they put us to this Trouble.

Mr. Mountague. Indeed I believe there is something more than ordinary in it, for I object only to what he himself has said.

L. C. J. Holt. I will have it done that it may remain a Decision in perpetuam rei memoriam. But if you that are for the Defendant will wave it you may.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we must insist on it; they have Jurymen enough.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We can't tell whether we have or no, for you may challenge them all, as well as this Man.

Mr. Mountague. No, I will challenge no body besides; and I challenged him, only because he mentioned himself as not an indifferent Person.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Is it a principal Challenge, or to the Favour?

L. C. J. Holt. A principal Challenge, if any.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He can't challenge to the Favour in Case of the Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. He makes it as a principal Challenge; which must be determined, and you shall have my Judgment when drawn up; it must be a principal Challenge or nothing; for there can be no Challenge to Favour in the Case of the Crown.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are not willing to put you to this Trouble, we will leave it to Mr. Pinfold himself.

L. C. J. Holt. Then ask Mr. Pinfold.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Pinfold, Do you know who is the Author of these Papers?

Mr. Pinfold. I know nothing of it but what is commonly reported. I know not Mr. Tutchin if I see him; I have read his Writings.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we leave it to the Jurymen himself.

Mr. Pinfold. My Lord, I desire to be excused.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we excuse you.

Then the Persons following were sworn on the Jury.

John Cooper,	Mark Proffor,
Thomas Briscoe,	William Grub,
Alexander Pollington,	James Lund,
James Dod,	John Baker,
Isaac Bennet,	Thomas Allen,
Robert Fotherby,	Jasper Waters.

Then Proclamation for Information being made, the Court proceeded.

Mr. Serj. Weld. This is an Information against John Tutchin: The Information sets forth, That he being a seditious Person, and a daily Inventor and Publisher of Lies, and maliciously designing to asperse the Government, and the Administration of it, has composed and published several malicious and scandalous Libels; some of them are relating to the Government, some to the Parliament, some to the Courts of Justice, other of them to the Ministry. I shall not now take up your Time in opening the Words at large, because they are very long, and for that you will have them read to you, when the Witnesses come to prove them. He hath pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. You must recite the Words of the Charge.

Mr. Serj. Weld. The Charge is very long. The Information sets forth, That he did write, and compose pose, and publish a false and scandalous Libel, call'd The Observer, of and concerning the Government. This is laid to be on Saturday the 30th of May, 1702. And the Words therein charged against him, are these: "At the same Time, we the Subjects of England considering the Success of the French King, in his Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament the sad State of our own Country, which affords so many Instances of Treachery. If we may judge by our national Miscarriages, perhaps no Nation in Europe has felt the Influences of French Gold, more than England; and worthy it is our greatest Lamentation, that our dear Country should be thus weaken'd by Men of mercenary Principles, when Countries inferior to us in Strength and Riches are secured from Attempts of this Nature, only by the Fidelity of their People. What is the Reason that French Gold has not affected Holland, as well as England; but that their Ministry is such, as is intirely in the Interest of their Country, and altogether incorruptible: They prefer Men that are knowing in their Posts, and are active in Business. When in England we find Offices for Men, not Men for Offices; and a Title of Honour gives a Man a Title to a great Employment he is altogether ignorant of. By this, and by preferring of Men by Interest and Favour, has the Excise, the Customs, and other Branches of the Revenue, intolerably sunk; and by this Means has the Navy of England, our chief Support, been hitherto perfectly bewitch'd: And can Lewis spend his Money better, than in getting Men into Offices in England, who are either false or ignorant in the Business, or are his Friends?" And the Information further sets forth, That on Saturday the 11th of July, 1702, he publish'd another Libel, call'd The Observer; in which are these Words: "And this is a Prerogative of singular Advantage to the People of England, in that their Representatives are the Judges of the Male-Administration of their Governors; that they can call them in Question for the same, and can appoint such to wear the Crown, who are fittest for Government: Which they have often done, and indeed which is the Privilege of all free People, who are authorized by the Laws of God and Nature to chuse their own Governors." It further sets forth, That June 12, 1703, he publish'd another Libel, call'd The Observer; in which are these Words: "Take one Time with another, the Mismanagements of the Navy have been a greater Tax on the Merchants, than the Duties raised by Parliament. We never had a better Navy; but the Wisdom of the Managers thereof is like a Bottomless-Pit, past finding out." The Information further chargeth, That on the 16th of June, 1703, he publish'd another Libel, call'd The Observer; in which were these Words: "What avails it a Man of Learning and Parts, to qualify himself for the Service of his Country on the Ocean? If he has Knowledge enough to advise Neptune himself, if he has no Interest, he shall have no Preferment. How much does it look to our Nation's Disadvantage, to have Men in eminent Stations in the Navy, who have not so much as an Idea, a Notion, a Thought of Naval Affairs? To have Men to superintend the Building of our floating Castles, who know not the Nature of any one Part of the Management? To have Men employ'd in the Victualling, to qualify themselves for that Post by learning to write their Names, which is indeed a Post for a Philosopher bred to the Sea?" It's farther set forth in the Information, That on the 10th of July, 1703, he publish'd another Libel, wherein, among other things, are these Words relating to Daniel De Foe. "Countryman. Truly, Master Observer, I have no very good News for you. Mr. Daniel De Foe has pleaded guilty to the Indictment against him, for writing and publishing The shortest Way with the Dissenters; and he is sentenced to stand three times in the Pillory, to pay a Fine of 200 Marks, and to find Security for his good Behaviour of seven Years. Observ. The Court could do no otherwise than convict him, upon his pleading Guilty; habemus confitentem reum is very often the Voice of Courts of Judicature; 'tis the Ease of the Judges and Juries: If Daniel De Foe was in expectation of Coleman's black Box, he has found a Pillory instead of it. I don't trouble my Head about the Custom of giving the Pillory to Authors, which is the Punishment of Bakers. You talk'd just now of turning Author, have a care of your Candle; you see which is the shortest way with Authors: You must all enter yourselves into the Regiment of Colonel De Foe. The Law of England directs, That no man shall be fined ultra tenementum; and I make no Question, but the Justice of the Court has fined Mr. Foe answerable to his Estate: His Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years, without doubt, was rationally considered, as to the Legality thereof. For my Part, I am only acquainted with old Laws of England, the ancient Birthrights and Immunities of Englishmen: This I take to be the Foundation of new Laws." And that on Saturday, May 20, 1704, he publish'd another Libel, call'd The Observer; wherein, among other things, are these Words: "Countryman. Master Observer, There's another Plot against you. Obf. Prithee Man, there's a Plot against the Queen and the whole Nation; is it any Wonder that there are Plots against me? The High-Flyers are now plotting against every honest Man in England. I'll tell you more of it the next time we meet. Countryman. I fancy some Sort of People plot against you, because you endeavour to countermine their Plots against the Queen and Nation. Observat. You are right enough; but that shan't hinder me from detecting their Designs, and from opening the People's Eyes: But, prithee, what Plot is this? Countryman. Why, Sir, it is a Plot preparatory to your Trial; and if they can't effect this Plot, I suppose you'll never be tried. They insinuate into the Citizens of London, that you have lately written very scandalously, maliciously and treasonably, and I don't know how many other Lies against them, the said Citizens; and by this means, they are minded to set your Jurors against you. Observ. This is likely enough: They'll leave no Stone unturn'd, to suppress the Truth. I understand, I should have been prosecuted by Bill the last Sessions, but that the High-Flyers did not like the Jury. Nay, they say they don't like the two Sheriffs, because they won't pack Juries, to find innocent Men guilty." The Defendant has pleaded, Not Guilty: But if we prove the Charge, I doubt not but you will find him Guilty.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, I am of Council with Her Majesty. This Information is brought on the Behalf of the Queen, against Mr. Tutchin. I shall not long entertain you about it, because the Matter is short. The Charge is, That he has publish'd several Libels, scandalous and seditious, reflecting on the Government, and the Administration of it, in many Instances given at large. I think the Papers are six in Number; and by and by you will have them more particularly before you. I presume, there ought to be made a Difference between a just Liberty and Licentiousness. This Information is brought, that Men may be warned. The Plea he has made is, That he is not Guilty. The Matter we are to prove is, That he was the Person that did write and compose these Papers, and did publish them, or cause them to be done. My Lord, we shall call our Witnesses: And notwithstanding what you have heard of late from the Defendant, relating to this Trial, I do not doubt but there will be all Justice done. I am sure, on our Side, nothing else is intended. And I doubt not, but if we prove that he did publish these Papers the Jury will find him Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Information is laid against Mr. Tutchin, for a few of his Observers of the many he has writ; sometimes two, sometimes three in a Week. It is a great while that he has done it; and it has been the great Indulgence of the Government, that he has not been prosecuted before. He has been taken notice of by the House of Commons, and been before the Secretary of State; where he has been admonish'd to take care of what he should write: But he would not take Warning. And now he is to be try'd for some of his Papers; wherein it will appear, that he has taken the greatest Liberty, I believe, that ever Man took. Libels used to come out by Stealth, and in the dark; but these have been publish'd openly, with all the Defiance imaginable. You may see how mild the Prosecution hath been, by what he has done since the Beginning of it: He has been writing in such a Manner, to prepare for the Trial, as I think was never done before. A Prosecution of this Nature is of the greatest Consequence: And it may be, I may be blam'd being in the Office wherein I am, that there have not been more such made. Here is the highest Reflection on the Government imaginable. There can be no Reflection on them that are in Office under her Majesty, but it must cast some Reflection on the Queen who employs them. I believe there is hardly one in any considerable Post under the Government, but has been criminated by him: Nothing escapes him. He censures all Mankind; writes magisterially, and defies all Authority, and casts the vilest Reflections on the Government: As if we, who are in the Queen's Service, made it our Business to corrupt Juries. And makes Reflections both on Sheriffs and Juries. These are of the greatest Consequence in the World to the Government, and to every Body. For if such mercenary Writers may have the Liberty to reflect on whom they please, no Man's Reputation can be safe.

Gentlemen of the Jury, The Matter you are to enquire into is, whether the Defendant be the Author, or Publisher of these Libels: That is the Matter you are to try. What the Punishment must be, if you find him Guilty, is in the Judgment of the Court. We will produce our Witnesses; and doubt not but you will do the Queen Justice.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Call John How. (He appear'd, and was sworn). Shew him those Observers. (Which was done; and he look'd them over). Have you look'd over them?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you know who compos'd and brought them to the Press?

Mr. How. I do suppose them to be Mr. Tutchin's: I dealt with no other Man for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Acquaint my Lord and the Jury, how they came to be printed.

Mr. How. About the latter End of March, 1702; I treated with Mr. Tutchin about writing an Observer, to be publish'd Weekly: The first of which was publish'd in April, 1702. And all that have been printed since, I had from him, to this Year.

Mr. Att. Gen. You look'd on these Papers here: Were these printed by the Direction of Mr. Tutchin?

Mr. How. To the best of my Knowledge they were. They were always brought from him to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Agreement made between you about the writing of it?

Mr. How. Yes, it was agreed at first to write once a Week; and I was to give him half a Guinea for it. I have printed in all about 266.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you had frequent Discourse with him about them since? You said, you printed in all about 266: Have you paid him for all?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you had any Discourse with him, wherein he has owned them all to be his?

Mr. How. He has owned them from time to time, till within this Week.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Has he owned himself to be the Author of them?

Mr. How. He always own'd himself to be the Author.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you had any Discourse with him, lest you should come into Danger for it?

Mr. How. Yes, I have had Discourse with him about the Danger: And he has said to me, I own, myself to be the Author: And do not fear; if any Danger happen, you are a Rogue to yourself and Family, if you do not discover me.

Sir T. Powis. Look on these Papers, and see if he deliver'd these very Observers to you: Were these the very same?

Mr. How. Yes.

Sir T. Powis. And was he paid for them by you?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Mountague. I desire to see them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Deliver them to Mr. Mountague.

Mr. Mountague. Take that Observer, and look on it: 'Tis that which they are about to read. [Then Mr. How look'd on it]. How long ago is it that you had that Paper in your Custody?

Mr. How. I suppose this was delivered out of my Shop, to be sent to Mr. Borret.

Mr. Mountague. Do you know you sent that Paper?

Mr. How. Yes, I deliver'd it, and put my Mark upon it.

Mr. Mountague. How long ago?

Mr. How. I do not justly remember it.

Mr. Mountague. If you do not remember that, do you remember the printing of it?

Mr. How. It was done at my House.

Mr. Mountague. When a Copy is brought to you to be printed, do you print that Copy always exactly?

Mr. How. As near as I can, I do.

Mr. Mountague. The Question I would ask you, is; Do you, when you have a Copy, strictly keep to to the Letter of the Copy ? Or do you, as you think convenient, alter it ?

Mr. How. I have alter'd it oftentimes, to make it safe.

Mr. Mountague. Then you do take it on you to alter ?

Mr. How. To strike out a Line, never to alter his Sense.

Mr. Mountague. Do you not insert any Thing ?

Mr. How. Yes, frequently a Word.

Mr. Mountague. Do you not take upon you to insert several Words, and leave out several ?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Mountague. You do. Then I ask you, Are you sure that that Paper is printed without Alteration ?

Mr. How. I do not remember any thing of that.

Mr. Mountague. I ask you, Whether that Paper were not alter'd from what was sent you ?

Mr. How. I cannot swear it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you say that Paper was alter'd ?

Mr. How. Not that I know of.

Mr. Whitaker. Look on the Title ; whose putting down is that ?

Mr. How. He agreed to the Title.

Mr. Mountague. Does the Paper come to you, entitled the Observer, or not ?

Mr. How. I cannot tell whether he ever put it in.

Mr. Mountague. Who put it in then ?

Mr. How. It was agreed between us to call it The Observer.

Mr. Mountague. Does he write the Observer, or did you ?

Mr. How. There is no occasion for the Title, that I know of.

Mr. Mountague. But who writ the Title to it ?

L. C. J. Holt. They ask you this Question : Who was it that put this Title to this Paper ?

Mr. How. I do not know but I might write it in the Paper at first, and so it was inserted afterwards.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it first writ that Title ?

Mr. How. I do not know who did write that, He or I. I did first propose the Title to him.

L. C. J. Holt. Was that Title writ by him or you ?

Mr. How. I do not know, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there an Agreement made between you, that this Paper should be writ once a Week with that Title ?

Mr. How. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he agree to that Title ? And was he privy to it ?

Mr. How. Yes, my Lord, it was agreed upon between us ; and he agreed to write such a Paper, with such a Title.

Mr. Whitaker. Where did you come to this Agreement ?

Mr. How. I cannot tell.

Mr. Whitaker. Was it in London, or Middlesex, or Surrey ?

Mr. How. I cannot tell.

Mr. Whitaker. Where were they printed ?

Mr. How. I printed some of them in Fancchurch-street, about Eighteen ; the rest in Gracechurch-street.

Mr. Harris. Was that Paper alter'd by you, or not ?

Mr. How. I cannot remember whether I alter'd that, or no.

L. C. J. Holt. You say you alter'd sometimes : Did you acquaint him with the Alterations you made ?

Mr. How. Sometimes they have been sent to me ; I knew not where to find him ; and then I have alter'd them my self, rather than be disappointed. At other Times, I have been in his Company ; and then I complain'd, and he has alter'd them. And sometimes he said, You have the Pen ; do you alter them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Can you say, You alter'd a Syllable in these Papers ?

Mr. How. I cannot say so.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Since the first publishing of them, have you not publish'd them in Volumes ?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And who gave Order for it ?

Mr. How. Mr. Tutchin.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Direction had you about this Volume ? [A Volume bound up being in Court].

Mr. How. That Volume was order'd by Mr. Tutchin. He order'd me to bind up three Volumes : One of which he order'd to be deliver'd to Mr. Borret ; which I did not deliver, by reason of a Prosecution at the Old-Bailey.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he order any other Man's Works to be bound up, or his own ?

Mr. How. He order'd me to bind his own, with the Preface.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is that Preface ?

Mr. How. Before the Book : And he owned that, and put his Hand to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you paid for these ?

Mr. How. Yes ; He order'd me to bind up these together, and to deliver one of them to Mr. Borret. Sir T. Powis. Did you pay him for the Preface ?

Mr. How. Yes, and for the Index.

L. C. J. Holt. Who made the Index ?

Mr. How. He did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he write his Name to the Preface, after it was brought to you ?

Mr. How. It was deliver'd to me with his Hand to it ; and he owned it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then he owned all the Observers to be his, by setting his Name to the Volume ?

Mr. Mountague. Where was this Book deliver'd to you to be bound up ?

Mr. How. I do not know, whether in London, or Middlesex, or Surrey.

Mr. Mountague. Recollect where it was that you had this Discourse about a Book.

Mr. How. I do not remember the exact Time.

Mr. Mountague. But you remember the Discourse : And can't you say where it was ?

Mr. How. No, indeed.

Mr. Mountague. The Preface they talk of, was it brought in Writing ?

Mr. How. It was brought, or sent in Writing ; and I printed it from a Manuscript Copy.

Mr. Mountague. How do you know he sent it ?

L. C. J. Holt. What did you give him for that Preface and Index ?

Mr. How. I think it was ten Shillings.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, with Submission, they cannot read this Paper : For if it be read, it must be read as the Paper of Mr. Tutchin. Now, as to this Paper that they produce, we do insist upon it, that is Mr. How's Paper, and not Mr. Tutchin's. For he tells you, That whatever Papers he had, or whatever Directions were given him from Mr. Tutchin, were in Writing. Now if Mr. Tutchin is to be charg'd with a Libel in Writing, they must produce that very Writing, or a true Copy thereof. And another Man's taking a Copy of my Writing, cannot be said to make it my Writing ; especially when it is not prov'd to be a true Copy. So that this Paper, which is printed by

Mr. How,

Mr. How, cannot be charged on Mr. Tutchin. If one single Penman had taken a Copy of it, if he could not be sure it was an exact Copy, it could not be read; much less such a Paper, which goes thro' so many Hands as this has done. And Mr. How says, He did often alter it, according to the best of his Understanding; and therefore that makes it his Paper. For, by a very small Alteration, a Thing may be made a Libel, that was not so before. And besides, it appears by Mr. How's own Evidence, that Mr. How makes an Advantage by the Printing and Publishing of it: And perhaps he makes Alterations, to make it sell the better. That makes it nothing like to Mr. Tutchin's Paper; and therefore they ought to produce that very Paper that was brought from Mr. Tutchin: And this Paper ought not to be read against him.

Mr. Harris. My Lord, he does not swear it is a true Copy; and therefore we cannot allow it to be read.

Mr. Whitaker. He has added the very Title: It is called an Observer; and he has put that Title to it. And he gives you no Account when, or where there was any Agreement made with Mr. Tutchin about it.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was the Agreement made for printing the Papers?

Mr. How. I am not positive where it was; whether in London or Middlesex. I did think it was in Fanchurch-street; but he says it was in the Strand.

Mr. Mountague. Can you be positive it was in Fanchurch-street?

Mr. How. I cannot be positive.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were they printed?

Mr. How. In Fanchurch-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you bind the Book, and put the Preface?

Mr. How. That Book was sent out of my House to be bound; and when it was done, it was sent from my House again.

Mr. Conyers. Did he come to Fanchurch-street, to direct the Printing at any time?

Mr. How. Yes, several Times.

Mr. Weld. Did he agree with you to have them printed and publish'd?

Mr. How. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you the original Papers of these Observers?

Mr. How. I have very few of them now.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to part with them?

Mr. How. I thought there would be no Use made of them, and so I did not keep them: But I have most of the third Volume by me.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, in answer to this Objection, I must say, If this shall prevail in that Strictness, I take it for granted, that instead of restraining Libels, it will be the best and most effectual Way to publish them. For the Author then hath nothing to do, but when a Copy is printed, to destroy the same; and then no Evidence can be against him: Because the Printer will be called on, to know if that which is printed agree with the written Copy to a Letter. If that be so, it will be impossible to come at the Author. It is not an Answer, to say, you may go to the Printer: For tho' he is punishable; yet it is more reasonable to come at the Author. We have given a fair Evidence, that this is the same that was brought to this Man: And they do not make it appear, that he did add to, or diminish any of these Papers. The Printer says, The Defendant has avowed and justifified all that he did for him since the Beginning. That by his Order he collected all those Observers we insist on, in this Volume; which he has owned, and publish'd sufficiently: For here is his Index and Preface. And that he did publish this Volume there is no room to question. We have given as good Evidence of this as the Matter will bear.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have given as good Evidence as can be expected, of a Matter of this Nature. We are prosecuting the Author, and have brought the Printer to give his Evidence; which is all we are able to get: For it is not in our Power to prove, where the Defendant did actually write them. The Printer had no Reason to take care of the original Papers, because when they were printed, they were of no Use. He tells you, the whole Volume was printed, and owned by Mr. Tutchin continually, and by him directed to be made up into a Book, and he paid Mr. Tutchin for writing them from Time to Time. If this be not a sufficient Evidence of his publishing of them, it would be impossible to give any Evidence; for the Author would always take away his Copy, and then he is safe. These were printed and published in London; and wherever the Agreement was made, we may charge the Defendant, where the Papers were printed, pursuant to an Agreement made between him and Mr. How; which makes the Composing and Printing his Act.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, if this be not Evidence, that this Man is the Maker or Publisher of these Papers, his Agreement to have it done, his owning after it is done, and his own Confession, and his being paid for it; if this be not Evidence, nothing is.

L. C. J. Holt. His Agreement to publish that Book, is sufficient to prove that he owned it.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, there is one Thing very considerable; the Discourse he had with this Man. Says he, If you are question'd about it, I am the Author, I gave you the Copy, and directed the printing of it; and you are unjust to your self and your Family, if you do not discover me. My Lord, they make this Objection: We did contract with Mr. How to make an Observer, but he made Alterations in it, as he thought fit; and sometimes he shew'd them to him, and sometimes not. Now it's clear, Mr. Tutchin did give him that Liberty; and he cannot say, that there was any one of these Papers that was altered.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And, my Lord, after there were an Hundred composed, he directs Mr. How to bind them up in a Volume, and puts a Preface and Index to them, and sets his Name to it. Now that is certainly a Publication and owning of them.

Mr. Weld. So far as in that Book goes, there is Evidence that he is the Author and Publisher; and they have objected nothing to it: So that the only Question is concerning the other Observers. Now he says he had leave from the Observer to make those Alterations.

L. C. J. Holt. No, he does not say so. Hark you, Sir, Did you ever add any Thing?

Mr. How. Not that I know of, but a Word sometimes to make it Sense.

Mr. Weld. Did he ever allow you to do it?

Mr. How. He has often said, that Printer was a Blockhead that did not.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, my Objection was singly, as to the reading the Papers, not of the Book. The Thing they offer'd as Evidence, was the Papers; and we say they ought to produce the Originals, which they have not done.

L. C. J. Holt. They offer the Book in Proof.

Mr. Mount-

Mr. Mountague. Then, my Lord, I must beg Leave to oppose that likewise. For this Book is proved to be his, no otherwise, than by the Printer's swearing, that Mr. Tutchin order'd him to bind up three Volumes of his Observers; and the Printer himself has put together these Papers, and Mr. Tutchin has writ a Preface before them; but whether the Papers thus put together were ever examined, non constat: or whether the Bookbinder has made no Alterations, non constat. And it does not appear, that Mr. Tutchin look'd over any of the Papers that are here bound up. So that the most the Queen's Council can make of this Evidence, is this: Here is a Book Mr. Tutchin took to be his Book upon the outward View of it, or at least upon the Credit of his Printer; and therefore every thing in it must be read against him, as his. Surely, my Lord, that ought not to be allowed of. When Dr. Drake was here tried for being the Author of a scandalous Book, it was sworn against him, That upon shewing him one of the Books he was charged with, he owned himself to be the Author of it. But a Question being ask'd, Whether the Book that was offer'd to be read in Evidence against him, was that very Book that had been shewn him, when he owned himself to be the Author? It was answered, No: But it was a Book of the same Impression, and therefore ought as much to be read against him, as the Book he owned. But, as I take it, that Evidence was disallowed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Mountague, you state it wrong, for that Book was read.

L. C. J. Holt. That Book was read, tho' it was not proved as that very Book that was deliver'd. It was the Bookfeller that said the Book was printed by Dr. Drake; but he would not say it was that very Book that was given in Evidence. He took a Book with such a Title: But was this the Book? But he could say, the other Book was never taken away. Now this Book is owned by Mr. Tutchin, by making the Preface and Index to it.

Mr. Mountague. It was a Book of the same Impression with that which Dr. Drake had own'd himself to be the Author of, that was offer'd in Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. He took the Book from the Shop that was read, the other Book was in the Shop.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Bookfeller said he knew who writ the Book, but not who writ the Preface.

Mr. Mountague. But, my Lord, be the Case one way or the other: The Thing we insist on is, That they cannot read the first Papers produced, because Mr. Tutchin has not owned that Paper in particular for his, that is inserted in the Book.

L. C. J. Holt. If the first Paper was printed by his Order, according to the Bargain made between them, it is reasonable it should be read. I do not know, says he, that I made any Alteration here; sometimes I did alter, and sometimes strike out, and made the Expression lower; but I know not that I made any Alteration here; and when I did, I oftentimes acquainted him with it; but that I made any Alteration here, I know not: I printed it by the Copy, and the Copy is lost. Now Mr. Tutchin would have him make up a Volume; and, says he, This Volume I bound up by his Order.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, here is a Paper offer'd, which they cannot prove to be a true Copy; and will you let them read it, because they produce another Paper like it, bound up in a Volume; which, by the way, is proved no otherwise to be his, than by his bespeaking a Set of Observers to be bound up for him?

L. C. J. Holt. It is the same.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I think, with Submission, they may not read any of the Papers, if they have not examined the first Copy sent to the Printer.

L. C. J. Holt. A Man sends a Copy to print, which is a Libel, and the Print is produced that is said to be according to the Copy: There is another Print produced, that agrees with the first, which he hath owned.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I did hope that the Queen's Council would have given an Answer to that Part of my Objection, That these printed Papers are no more than Copies.

L. C. J. Holt. It is more than a Copy. Every Copy of a Libel is a Libel; and every Printer of a Libel is guilty of a Libel.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, it's true, every Copy of a Libel is a Libel; but whose Libel is it?

Mr. Harris. My Lord, it is not proved that he ever perused that Copy.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, Mr. How, was it his Direction to put these very Sheets together, or to make up a Volume of Observers? I do ask you, whether your Direction was to make up a Book of Observers, or to bind up these very Sheets?

Mr. How. He gave me Direction to make up a Set of Observers.

Mr. Mountague. Then you say, it was only to bind up a Set of Observers; and so on your own Head you bound up these Observers. But can you say, he has look'd over all the Papers in that Book, and owned them?

Mr. Serj. Weld. My Lord, here is a Man says, he order'd him to deliver them to my Lord Nottingham.

Mr. Mountague. How long is it since he gave you these Directions?

Mr. How. I believe it was about a Week after the Volume was published.

Mr. Mountague. How long since is it, that the Volume was published?

Mr. How. It was about April, 1703.

Mr. Mountague. How long after did you deliver them?

Mr. How. I deliver'd them within a Week after.

Mr. Att. Gen. There are but two of the Observers we charge the Defendant with in that Book; and therefore we humbly insist on reading of the printed Papers, on the Evidence we have given, which we take to be sufficient to read them without the Book; these Papers being printed after this Agreement was made between them, and bound up by his Directions, he is answerable for them.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I do, with Submission, say it ought not to be read, tho' it be in that Book; for no Man has proved that Paper that is in it to be his. But if they lay any Weight on the owning the Book, the publishing the Book is a new Crime, for which he may be punished afterwards, and he is not charged with it in this Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. If a Man be indicted for being the Author of a Book; being indicted once, he is indicted once for the whole Book.

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord, we are indicted for a single Paper; and that Book is not the Matter of the Indictment.

Queen's Council. My Lord, we have done now. We desire the Papers may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Read them both.

Then the first Observer was read.

Observer, May 30, 1702. "At the same time we consider the French King's Success in his " Bribery

“ Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament the “ sad State of our own Country, which affords so “ many Instances of Treachery. If we may judge
 “ by our national Miscarriages, perhaps no Nation
 “ in Europe has felt the Influences of French Gold
 “ more than England; and worthy it is our greatest “ Lamentation, that our Dear Country should be “ weaken’d by Men of mercenary Principles, when “ Countries inferior to us in Strength and Riches
 “ are secured from Attempts of this Nature, only “ by the Fidelity of their People. What is the Rea“ son that French Gold has not affected Holland, as “ well as England? but that their Ministry is such,
 “ as is entirely in the Interest of their Country, and “ altogether incorruptible: They prefer Men that “ are knowing in their Posts, and are active in Bu“ siness. When in England we find Offices for Men,
 “ not Men for Offices; and a Title of Honour “ gives a Man a Title to a great Employment he “ is altogether ignorant of. By this, and by prefer-“ ing of Men by Interest and Favour, has the Ex“ cite, the Customs, and other Branches of the Re“ venue, intolerably sunk; and by this Means has
 “ the Navy of England, our chief Support, been hi“ therto perfectly bewitch’d: And can Lewis spend “ his Money better, than in getting Men into Of“ fices in England, who are either false or ignorant
 “ in the Business, or are his Friends?”

Mr. Soll. Gen. The next is N^o 23. Saturday,
July 11. 1702.

“ And this is a Prerogative of singular Advan“ tage to the People of England, in that their Re“ presentatives are the Judges of the Male-Admini“ stration of their Governors, that they can call “ them in Question for the same, and can approve “ such to wear the Crown who are fittest for Go“ vernment; which they have often done, and in“ deed which is the Privilege of all free People,
 “ who are authorized by the Laws of God and Na“ ture to choose their own Governors.”

Mr. Att. Gen. Now we will shew these Papers to Mr. How, for these are all that are in the Book.
 (They were shewn him). Mr. How, pray tell us who was the Author of these Papers?

Mr. How. Mr. Tutchin.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know that?

Mr. How. I had them of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you pay him for them?

Mr. How. I paid him for these very Papers.

Mr. Mountague. What, these Papers that are now produced? You never shew’d them to him, did you?

Mr. How. No; but I shew’d him the same Number.

Mr. Mountague. Have you read them to him?

Mr. How. He has owned them all; he has owned them an Hundred and an Hundred times, all of them.

Mr. Mountague. Have you the Copy of these Papers by you?

Mr. How. No.

Mr. Mountague. Did you search for them?

Mr. How. No, I have not.

Mr. Harris. My Lord, if we had seen these Papers, then we might have seen what Alterations were made in them.

Mr. How. I believe he had them back again.

Mr. Mountague. I believe he has not been ask’d to search for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not Mr. Borret send to you about the Original Papers?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you look on what you had?

Mr. How. Those that I had were look’d out.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of them?

Mr. How. I know not, but he might have them back again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Those that you did find, what did you do with them?

Mr. How. Those that I have now, are but Two or Three.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you carry all the Original Papers you had to Mr. Borret?

Mr. How. Yes, all that I know of.

Mr. Mountague. Have you no Copies? Did you not say you were not desired to look for these Obser- vators?

Mr. How. I said, I did not know whether I was ordered to search for these particular Observers.

Mr. Mountague. Did Mr. Borret desire you to look after these Original Observers?

Mr. How. I am not positive.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you deliver all those that you had to Mr. Borret?

Mr. How. Yes, my Lord, all that I had at that Time; but I have had some since.

Mr. Att. Gen. He told you before, That till there was like to be a Prosecution, he did not keep them, but since he did; and now he look’d for what he had, and deliver’d them to Mr. Borret.

L. C. J. Holt. Then Mr. Borret must be sworn.
And he was sworn accordingly.

Sir T. Powis. Mr. Borret, acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, whether you desired Mr. How to look out the Copies of the Observers.

Mr. Borret. I sent to desire Mr. How to look out all the written Copies of the Observers, which he had received from Mr. Tutchin; and he afterwards brought me a considerable Number of them, and said they were all he could find: And I have very carefully look’d them all over, but cannot find any one amongst them that relates to any of those Observers mentioned in the Information, except one, which is in May last, the which I have here in Court.

Mr. Mountague. Did you send to Mr. How, to ask for the Original of these Papers here named?

Mr. Borret. I did.

Mr. Mountague. Will you produce the Papers you have? My Lord, they have taken those Original Papers; and if they were produced, you would see how they are mangled.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they were nothing to the Matter, what did they signify? Only this is a popular Thing, and they must say a great deal.

Mr. Conyers. Read the Observer of the 12th of June, 1703, which contains these Words. (Which the Clerk read, as follows).

“ Take one Time with another, the Mismanage-“ ments of the Navy have been a greater Tax on
 “ the Merchants, than the Duties raised by Parlia“ ment. We never had a better Navy; but the “ Wisdom of the Managers thereof is like a Bot“ tomless-Pit, past finding out.”

Mr. Conyers. Now go on to N^o 20, the 16th of June, 1703. (Which the Clerk read, as follows).

“ What avails it a Man of Learning and Parts,
 “ to qualify himself for the Service of his Country
 “ on the Ocean? If he has Knowledge enough to “ advise Neptune himself, if he has no Interest, he “ shall have no Preferment. How much does it “ look to our Nation’s Disadvantage, to have Men
 “ in eminent Stations in the Navy, who have not “ so much as an Idea, a Notion, a Thought of Na“ val

“ val Affairs? To have Men to superintend the “ Building of our Floating Castles, who know not “ the Nature of any Part of the Management? To “ have Men employ’d in the Victualling, who qua“ lify themselves for that Post by learning to write “ their Names, which is indeed a Post for a Philo“ sopher bred to the Sea? ”

Then Mr. Tanner was sworn, as to an original Record, which he produced about Daniel De Foe’s Trial, to be compared with the Passage to be next read,

Mr. Conyers. Now read the Observer, N^o 27.
Saturday the 10th of July, 1703. (Which was read, as follows).

“ Countrym. Truly, Master Observer, I have “ no very good News for you. Mr. Daniel De Foe
“ has pleaded Guilty to the Indictment against him,
“ for writing and publishing the shortest Way with
“ the Dissenters; and he is sentenc’d to stand three “ Times in the Pillory, to pay a Fine of 200 Marks,
“ and to find Security for his good Behaviour for se“ ven Years. Obfer. The Court could do no other“ wise than convict upon, upon his pleading Guilty;
“ habemus confitentem reum is very often the Voice
“ of Courts of Judicature: ’Tis the Ease of Judges
“ and Juries. If Daniel De Foe was in Expectation
“ of Coleman’s Black-Box, he has found a Pillory “ instead of it. I don’t trouble my Head about the “ Custom of giving the Pillory to Authors, which “ is the Punishment of Bakers. You talk’d just now
“ of turning Author, have a Care of your Candle;
“ you see which is the shortest Way with Authors:
“ You must all enter your selves in the Regiment of “ Colonel Foe. The Law of England directs, That “ no Man shall be fined ultra tenementum; and I “ make no Question, but the Justice of the Court “ has fined Mr. Foe answerable to his Estate: His “ Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years, “ without doubt, was rationally consider’d, as to “ the Legality thereof. For my Part, I am only “ acquainted with old Laws of England, the an“ cient Birthrights and Immunities of Englismen:
“ This I take to be the Foundation of new Laws.”

Sir T. Powis. The last is of the 20th of May last;
Mr. Borret, is the Original of that here?

Mr. Borret. Yes.

Sir T. Powis. Who had you this of?

Mr. Borret. I had it from Mr. How.

Sir T. Powis. Shew it to Mr. How. (Which was done).

L. C. J. Holt. Whose Hand is that?

Mr. How. To the best of my Knowledge, it is
Mr. Tutchin’s.

L. C. J. Holt. Who had you it from?

Mr. How. From Mr. Tutchin, or his Order.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you pay him for it?

Mr. How. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then that likewise was printed under the Title of the Observer?

Mr. How. Yes, Sir.

Then the Paragraph was read.

“ Countrym. Master Observer, there’s another “ Plot against you. Obfer. Prithce Man, there’s “ a Plot against the Queen, and the whole Nation;
“ is it any wonder then that there are Plots against “ me? The High-Flyers are now plotting against “ every honest Man in England. I’ll tell you more
“ of it the next Time we meet. Countrym. I fancy
“ some Sort of People plot against you, because “ you endeavour to countermine their Plots against “ the Queen and Nation. Obfer. You are right

VOL. V.

“ enough; but that shan’t hinder me from detect“ ing their Designs, and from opening the People’s “ Eyes. But, prithce, what Plot is this? Countrym.
“ Why, Sir, it is a Plot preparatory to your Trial;
“ and if they can’t effect this Plot, I suppose you’ll “ never be try’d. They insinuate into the Citizens “ of London, that you have lately written very “ scandalously, maliciously, and treasonably, and “ I don’t know how many other Lies, against ’em
“ the said Citizens; and by this Means they are “ minded to set your Jurors against you. Obf. This “ is likely enough; they’ll leave no Stone unturn’d, “ to suppress the Truth. I understand, I should “ have been prosecuted by Bill the last Sessions, but “ that the High-Flyers did not like the Jury; nay,
“ they say they don’t like the two Sheriffs, be“ cause they won’t pack Juries to find innocent Men “ Guilty.”

Mr. Mountague. Now, my Lord, we take it, there is a Variation between this Paper, and the Information. In the Copy, it is only C.; in the Information, it is Countryman. Now when they describe any Paper, it must be as it is writ; and they cannot say Countryman, when it is but C.

L. C. J. Holt. He writes a Dialogue between the Countryman and the Observer; but now he makes C. for Countryman.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, if they go upon the Libel, they must give it as it is under his own Hand.

Sir T. Powis. That Letter is to be understood Countryman.

L. C. J. Holt. When he used to write C. were you not to write Countryman at large?

Mr. How. At first we were; afterwards as it might be intelligible.

Mr. Mountague. Still we think they have not done enough: They have not proved this Thing sufficiently, by the Witnesses they have called. For, my Lord, we take it, that they must positively shew it was writ within the City. In the Trial of the Bishops, it was proved to be all under their Hands: Yet it was required then, that they might make it appear, that that Paper was writ in the County of Middlesex.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. How, where do you live now?

Mr. How. In Grace-church-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let that Agreement be made where it will, the Publishing was in London; and we may lay the Information here.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did you receive these Papers?

Mr. How. Most commonly they were sent to my House, in Talbot-court, Grace-church-street.

Mr. Whitaker. Have you not fetch’d some of them from Lambeth?

Mr. How. Yes, some of them.

L. C. J. Holt. Suppose a Man draws up a Libel in Middlesex, and there agrees with a Printer who lives in London to print it: He takes it away, and prints it in London, and there publishes it. Now the Question is, Whether he that drew it, is not guilty of Composing and Publishing of it in London? Every Copy is a Libel of it self.

Mr. Mountague. Every Copy is a Libel; and the taking a Copy of a Libel, may be a Publication: But that is not the Thing laid to his Charge; it is Scriptit & Composuit. Now the Writing is in the County of Surrey; there he writes, and there he composes.

L. C. J. Holt. He is charged with Writing, Composing, and Publishing a Libel in London. Tho’

he be not guilty of Writing there, yet he may be guilty of Composing it there.

Mr. Mountague. Now, my Lord, as to the Publishing, the Printing is not the Defendant's Publishing: That affects another Man. Therefore we think they should give some Evidence of his writing these Papers in London.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, As to that, the Word Composuit is proper to relate to the Printing of it: (For the Printers have such a Term as Composing). And that is fully proved to be in London. And for Writing (whether that be a material Thing between us) I take it, that he that does write a Libel, and sends it to London; and there, by his Authority and Directions, it is composed again in another Paper, and printed; that Paper is still his Writing, wherever it goes. However, the other Words come up to the Case fully; because if that which he writes is so published, it may be said to be writ by him, wherever it is so published.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have proved his owning himself to be the Author, and his causing it to be printed in London.

L. C. J. Holt. That is not an Evidence of his writing it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, It is a Proof of his causing it to be printed.

L. C. J. Holt. If he be guilty of a Fact in one County, you cannot charge it in another. But if he caus'd it to be printed in London, no question it will be a Publication here.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Composing and Printing is a Publication; and that we have proved to be done in London, pursuant to his Agreement. And we also charged him with writing the same; and as a Proof of that, we have proved his owning himself to be the Author. If that be not an Evidence of his writing it, we can hardly ever prove that part of the Charge of writing: For he that writes a Libel, will do it alone; and proving the Copies to be received in London, is an Evidence they were writ there first, if the Defendant did not prove the contrary.

Mr. Whitaker. Mr. How swears, he had the Copy from Lambeth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was it composed?

Mr. How. At my House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he there at your House?

Mr. How. Yes; and I had them from him there.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he write any of them there?

Mr. How. Not that I know of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is Mr. Tutchin in the Court?

Mr. Mountague. I believe not.

L. C. J. Holt. Why is he not here?

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, to spare me a few Words in Behalf of the Defendant. I can hardly say I am of Council with Mr. Tutchin, because I have never seen him, but upon recording his Appearance in open Court; and he has not thought fit to send us any Instructions till this Morning, when we were just going down to Westminster. But I do suppose, this Remissness in his Temper, does proceed from his Innocency of the Accusation against him: And he has a Mind to let the World see, how easy it is to make his Defence; since he has pitch'd upon me for his Advocate, and given me so little Time to prepare my self for it. But as short Notice as I have had of this Information against him, thus much I will beg Leave to say to it in general; That it does by no Means come up to what the Gentlemen on the other Side call it, A Charge of Writing and Publishing a false and scandalous Libel. My Lord Coke has given us a Definition, or rather a Description of a Libel: Says he, "Famosus Libellus, seu infamatoria Scriptura, is made either against a private Man, or a Magistrate. If it be against a private Man, it does deserve to be punished; because it is likely to incite all the Family or Kindred of such Person, to revenge the Injury; which tends to the Breach of the publick Peace. If it be against a publick Person, as a Magistrate, it is a greater Offence: Because it concerns not only the Breach of the Peace, but it is a Scandal to the Government. And it matters not whether such private Man, or Magistrate, be dead or alive at the making of such Libel; because the Friends and Relations of such Persons, are incited thereby to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom. By all which Sayings of my Lord Coke, I do humbly suppose, That there can be no Libel, where no Person certain is reflected upon, or scandalized. A Libel that points at no Body in particular, is like a Shot at Random, that seldom does any Mischief. And therefore I do take it, with great Submission, That in this Case, Mr. Attorney should have shew'd us what Person (either publick or private) these Observers have aspersed. My Lord Coke, in another Place, does liken libelling to Poison, which secretly destroys a Man's Reputation, as the other does his Life. But certainly it would be thought a strange Sort of Indictment, to charge a Man with being guilty of Murder; and not mention some one in particular, that has lost his Life through the Defendant's Means or Procurement. Now pray, my Lord, how much does this Information differ from such an Indictment? Here it is said, That the Defendant Tutchin has wrote and published a false and scandalous Libel, of and concerning this Kingdom of England, and the Officers and Ministers of the Queen. But a national Reflection, that equally concerns every individual Person in the Kingdom with the Reflector himself, cannot excite and stir up the People to quarrel one with the other. And to tell me, the Ministers and Officers of the Queen are particularly concern'd, does but give me Occasion to ask, what Officers and Ministers Mr. Attorney is taking care of? For I do not find any Minister of State, or other great Officer, so much as mention'd throughout this Record. A Bailiff, or Constable, is one of the Queen's Officers; and yet very few will think, a Man ought to be punish'd for Scandal, that shall say of such Officers and Ministers, they commit frequent Misdemeanors, and are of mercenary Principles. Would it not have been easy for Mr. Attorney to have assigned the Particulars, if he knows of any body that has been defamed by these Observers? But since the Information sets forth no Particulars, I hope the Jury will take it for granted, that nothing in these Papers can be affixed to any Man's Door: But whatever has been writ, is spent in the Air; and I hope this Accusation will vanish there likewise.

In the next Place, my Lord, I would beg Leave to take Notice of the particular Papers, which have been severally read in Evidence. And the first that has been produced, is one of the printed Observers, agreed on all Hands to have been publish'd so long ago as the 30th of May, which was in the first Year of her present Majesty's Reign. And as to this, the Charge is, That the Defendant has written,

written, compos'd and publish'd it. But how many of these three Particulars have been made out, must be next observ'd. And as to the writing of it, Mr. How has sworn, That there was an Agreement made betwixt him and the Defendant, (but where, he cannot say) that Mr. Tutchin should write a Paper, sometimes once, sometimes twice a Week, of the publick Transactions; and such a Paper has been writ by Mr. Tutchin; but where this Paper was wrote by Mr. Tutchin, or deliver'd, Mr. How cannot swear. However, so far he goes, that from these Papers of Mr. Tutchin he has printed at his House in London, these Papers are now produced. But on this Evidence, I must, with your Lordship's Favour, observe, That there are two different Sorts of Libels spoken of: The one is in Writing, suppos'd to be written by Mr. Tutchin, but God knows where: The other in Print, own'd by Mr. How to be printed and publish'd from the written Paper; which does not appear, and of which no true Copy has been proved. Now we hope, therefore, my Lord, that the Gentlemen of the Jury will rightly distinguish betwixt this first and second Libel, and make a Difference betwixt the Act of Mr. How, and that of Mr. Tutchin. The printed Papers here produced, are stil'd the Observator; so was not the written ones, if Mr. How be to be believed. The printed Observators are sold about, for the sole Benefit of Mr. How; and Mr. Tutchin receives only a small Premium, for the writing once or twice in a Week. Mr. Tutchin only earns his weekly Subsistence, by making Observations in the Country; and it does not appear, that he concerns himself further about the printing or publishing of them. If he gets his Money, Mr. How may do with his Papers as he thinks fit. So that I must humbly insist upon it, That what Mr. How has done within this City of London, can never reach Mr. Tutchin into Surry or Essex. It has been said indeed, and I shall not contradict it, That the bare transcribing of a Libel, will make a Man guilty of libelling: But for this Reason I do say, That Mr. How only has been guilty of making and publishing these printed Observators in London; and Mr. Tutchin, if he be guilty, must be convicted of the making and publishing that, which can be sworn to be his written Observations; especially since it has plainly appear'd, that the Papers written by Mr. Tutchin, have been frequently alter'd by Mr. How, before they were printed off.

And if we consider the Passages that have been produced, the Gentlemen of the Jury will perceive, a very little Alteration will make these Papers quite different from what they are. However, as they be, I hope there is no great Matter in any of them. The first Observator says: "At the same time, if we consider the French King's Success, in his Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament the sad State of our own Country, which affords so many Instances of Treachery, &c." Now, pray who is We in this Case? Says Mr. Attorney, in his Innuendo, The People of England. But I hope an Innuendo shall not make a Man guilty of a Crime, which otherwise can't be affix'd upon him. But supposing this same Paper were in truth written with Relation to England; will any one say, that (no Times whatsoever) this Country has afforded not any Instances of Treachery? And what Part of this Information does so much as fix the time to which the Observator alludes? If all that is here set forth were written of a former Ministry, I do suppose there would not be so much Blame laid on the Author, as if he comes nearer the present Times: So the Time to which these Papers do refer, must certainly be material, and fit to be consider'd of, before any one can rightly judge of this Case. And for want of its being ascertained and determined whether these Reflections may extend, I hope the Jury will not very much regard them.

The next Charge does set forth a wicked Assertion to have been made, de & concernent Potesstat. Populi Anglicani. But we must be in your Lordship's Judgment, whether the Paper that is produced, does make out that Assertion to be just as it's laid. I take it, with Submission, that there is a manifest Variance betwixt the Charge and the Libel. The Charge makes him speak of the Power of the People at large; when the Paper comes to be read that speaks of our Representatives in Parliament. And surely there is a Difference, to say, The People at large can do so and so: and to say, Our Representatives in Parliament can do it. For Instance; The making of Laws is not in the People dispersed over England; but in their Representatives in Parliament, in Concurrence with the House of Lords, when the Royal Assent does likewise concur with them; therefore I think this Charge can't affect us, upon account of this Variance. The next Article then to be taken notice of, is that concerning the Navy.—

Mr. Soll. Gen. But Mr. Mountague says nothing of the Prerogative the People have, that the Representatives are the Judges of the Male-Administration of their Governors; that they can call them in Question for the same, and can appoint such to wear the Crown, who are fittest for Government; which they have often done. He passes by all this scandalous Matter.

Mr. Mountague. I did so, Mr. Solicitor, and I did it on purpose, because I look'd upon it as a Matter not proper for you and me to talk of as Advocates in this Place. And I am apt to think my Discretion in passing it by will be more easily justified, than theirs that shall bring such Points as these upon the Stage to be talk'd on before this Assembly. I must declare for my own Part, that I think the Rights of Princes and the Power of the People too high Topicks for me to meddle with; let others do as they think best. I shall pass over to the next Article concerning the Navy. "Take one time with another, the Mismanagements of the Navy have been a greater Tax on the Merchants, than the Duties raised by Parliament." Now how does this relate only to the Navy-Royal; it is no where said, the Mismanagement of the King's Navy, or the Queen's Navy. And the Word Navy does, in my poor Understanding, signify no more than a Number of Ships got together; and therefore I do humbly conceive, there may be a Navy of Merchant Ships, as well as a Navy of Men of War, 'tis altogether uncertain what Navy the Author does allude to.

L. C. J. Holt. Surely the Navy must be the Navy Royal.

Mr. Mountague. If it must, my Lord, yet nobody can say that we never had any Mismanagements in the Royal Navy, and whenever that has happened, the Merchants of England, in all Probability, have suffer'd for it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think all this Discourse is such as is not to be allowed.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When a Man complains of the Mismanagement of the Government, and then comes after this, and says that the People have a Power inherent in them to call their Governors to an Account: What is this? Does it want an Exposition, thus to possess the People with an Opinion of the Power they have to call the King or Queen to an Account? What does such Things tend to, but to raise in the People an Indignation against the Government?

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, the thing I was insisting upon was, that whatever is here set forth, is not brought within any Compass of Time, and there is no particular Reflection upon any Person whatsoever. Though Mention is made of divers Mismanagements and of several Miscarriages; yet all these things may be said of other Times long since. And therefore, since this Exception goes to all the rest of the Charges in the Information, I shall pass by the other Particulars. And since I have taken up a great deal of your Lordship's Time already, I shall leave the rest to these Gentlemen that are to speak after me.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Will you say they are true?

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord, here is an Accusation that we did write, and compose, and publish these Papers; now it appears that the first Author was often out of London, and that the Copy was often fetch'd from Lambeth, and other Places; and the Witnesses did apply the Title of Observer to every one of these Papers. Now that which they call Libellous is not in the Writing which we did write; and if we did not write it in London, I hope you will not find us guilty of writing and publishing a Libel.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we have not done any thing as to the Printing at all; we had nothing to do with it.

L. C. J. Holt. Were not you concern'd in printing it? I can't imagine how Mr. How came to pay for it else. Mr. How, what were you to give for every Observer?

Mr. How. For about Sixty-six of the last, I paid Twenty Shillings a Time.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you give for them before?

Mr. How. Half a Guinea a Time.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it the same thing to him whether you printed it or not?

Mr. How. Yes; but I would not have given it him, if it had not been to be publish'd.

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord, we are in your Judgment as to this Matter, whether they can find us guilty of a Libel in London?

Mr. Soll. Gen. It was in London.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was the Agreement made?

Mr. How. I did think at first that it was in the City, and I do think so; but he says it was in Surry. The Papers were deliver'd sometimes at my own House, and sometimes in the Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they deliver'd to you to be printed?

Mr. How. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. You said you and he have mended the Papers; has that been done at your House in London, or in the Country?

Mr. How. I do not know which.

Mr. Mountague. Let me ask you one Question: Can you swear to any particular Paper, that he deliver'd that Paper in London?

Mr. How. I do not know where they were deliver'd.

Mr. Weld. It need not be insisted on to find him guilty of all; if they find him guilty of the Publication, that will be enough; and that they cannot deny but he is guilty of that. When it is deliver'd to be printed, it is as much a Publication as the composing of it.

Mr. Mountague. But it does not appear that it was deliver'd in London.

Mr. Weld. But he owned it in London.

Sir T. Powis. He did cause these Papers to be printed in London.

L. C. J. Holt. He deliver'd them to be printed in London: How agrees to give him half a Guinea a Paper at first, and Twenty Shillings afterwards; and surely then he designed to have them printed.

Mr. Mountague. He cares not what he does with the Papers, he was only to have so much Money for them:

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, here they are setting up a Doctrine that will make Libelling safe, so that no Man shall ever be punish'd for it. We have charged him with writing, composing, and publishing a Libel: We have proved the Agreement made with the Printer, be it in London, or out of London, is not very material. Now if there be an Agreement made out of London, for printing and publishing a Libel, wherever that Libel is printed and publish'd, he is guilty; for whatever is done by his Agreement, he is guilty of it. As to the next thing, I am much concerned to hear them say, that which I never before heard urged in any Court, that a Libel is not a Libel unless they assign some particular Person; but I look upon it as the highest kind of Libels to reflect on publick Officers in general; on the Administration of Justice in general. I believe every one knows a Libel is a Libel, tho' particular Persons are not named: If it reflect on Officers in general, as Ministers of State, or Judges or the like. Mr. Mountague would have it, that Reflections on the Ministers of the Crown is not a Reflection on the Queen; and he would have it, that we should have averr'd who these Ministers are that were meant in the Libels. As to the first, certainly they that reflect on the publick Administration of Justice by the Queen's Officers, do reflect on Her Majesty, who places and continues them in their Offices. And to the second Reflection, being in general on the Ministry, we ought not, nor could aver, who in particular he meant in these Libels; the whole Administration under the Queen is reflected on, in placing in Officers in general; in the Management of the Navy, and placing in the Officers thereof; and in the Administration of Justice in the Courts of Justice; and what can be more scandalous? There needs no Averment to explain these, in themselves they appear to be Libels; and I hope such Discourses as have been made on this Occasion for the Defendant, will not meet with any Countenance; but I am surprized to hear it justified here by a Council, That the People have Power to call their Governors to Account.

Mr. Mountague. I did not say so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly what you did say, viz. That you shewed more Discretion in passing it by, than we did in questioning the Defendant for it, and that we wanted Discretion in bringing this Matter on the Stage; could have no other Meaning, but that the Matter was justifiable, but you would not in Prudence do it; which, I must say, is the greatest Liberty I have known taken by a Council.

L. C. J. Holt. I did not hear him say so.

Mr. Mountague. I did not say so; I said it was more discreet to pass it by than take notice of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I will always prosecute any Man that shall assert such Doctrine. My Lord, I think my

my self obliged in Duty, being in the Station I am, always to take Notice of such Discourses as these, which no Council ought to presume to make.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury. This is an Information that is preferred by the Queen's Attorney-General against Mr. Tutchin, for writing, and composing, and publishing, or causing to be writ, composed, or published, several Libels against the Queen and her Government; and all these that are set forth as Libels, are entitled, The Observer, and they are in Number six. The first is said to be made and published May 30, 1702, and in which Mr. Tutchin is charged with having this libellous, scandalous Paragraph against the Government, and the Administration of it. The Words are these, "If we consider the French King's Success, in his Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament the sad State of our own Country, which affords so many Instances of Treachery. If we may judge by our national Miscarriages, perhaps no Nation in Europe has felt the Influences of French Gold, more than England; and worthy it is our greatest Lamentation, that our dear Country should be thus weaken'd by Men of mercenary Principles, when Countries inferior to ours in Strength and Riches are secured from Attempts of this Nature, only by the Fidelity of their People. What is the Reason, that French Gold has not affected Holland, as well as England? But that their Ministry is such as is entirely in the Interest of their Country, and altogether incorruptible: They prefer Men that are knowing in their Posts, and are active in Business. When in England we find out Offices for Men, and not Men for Offices; and a Title of Honour gives a Man a Title to a great Employment he is altogether ignorant of. By this, and by preferring of Men by Interest and Favour, has the Excise, the Customs, and other Branches of the Revenue intolerably sunk; and by this Means has the Navy of England, our chief Support, been hitherto perfectly bewitched: And can Lewis spend his Money better than in getting Men into Offices in England, who are either false or ignorant in the Business, or are his Friends?" This now is charged on him as a defaming the Government, in employing corrupted Officers, or ignorant Officers, when they are not fit for their Places. There is another that has been produced, which is the Second, that hath these Words: "And this is a Prerogative of singular Advantage to the People of England, in that their Representatives are the Judges of the Male-Administration of their Governors; that they can call them in Question for the same, and can appoint such to wear the Crown, who are fittest for Government: Which they have often done, and indeed which is the Privilege of all free People, who are authorized by the Laws of God and Nature, to chuse their own Governors." This is to possess the People, that they may at their Will and Pleasure when they take a Fancy thereto, dispossess the Queen, and set up what Governor they please. These two, and the rest which I shall mention by and by, are given in Evidence. And it seems at first Mr. Tutchin came to Mr. How, the Printer, and there is a Contract made between them two, to print a weekly Paper, and it was to be entitled, The Observer, and he was to have half a Guinea a Time. Mr. Tutchin was to write, and the other was to print; his Printing-House was here in London: Accordingly he enters into this Contract, and from Time to Time has received Copies, and prints them, and has paid Mr. Tutchin for them, and has printed all his Observers, even to this very Day: Afterwards there came two out in a Week. Now it is most plain, that a Contract was made between Mr. Tutchin and Mr. How, for Mr. Tutchin to write and frame, and Mr. How to print. And no body can imagine that Mr. How, the Printer, would give him Money, unless that written Copy were to be printed: But now, say they, was there no Alteration made; but were they printed exactly pursuant to the Copy of Mr. Tutchin? Yes, but these two were not; not but that sometimes I made some Alterations; for says he, when I thought his Expressions were too passionate and severe, I apprehended Danger, and made some literal Alterations. But after this, these two were read, and Mr. Tutchin owned them, and divers others, and ordered him to bind them in a Volume, and he does so, and Mr. Tutchin makes a Preface, and binds it to this Volume. It appears that his own Hand is to it, to the Preface, and was paid Money for them, and Mr. Tutchin owned this Number; so that there is a full Proof that these were composed by Mr. Tutchin, in order to be printed, and they were printed afterwards, and he has received Money for them.

Now there are four more which are charged in the Information, of the same Nature. One is thus: "Take one Time with another, the Mismanagement of the Navy has been a greater Tax on the Merchants, than the Duties raised by Parliament: We never had a better Navy; but the Wisdom of the Managers thereof is like a Bottomless-Pit, past finding out." A fourth Paper hath these Expressions. "What avails it a Man of Learning and Parts, to qualify himself for the Service of his Country on the Ocean? If he has Knowledge enough to advise Neptune himself, if he has no Interest, he shall have no Preferment. How much does it look to our Nation's Disadvantage, to have Men in eminent Stations in the Navy, who have not so much as an Idea, a Notion, a Thought of naval Affairs? To have Men to superintend the Building of our floating Castles, who know not the Nature of any one Part of the Management? To have Men employ'd in the Victualling, who qualify themselves for that Post by learning to write their Names, which is indeed a Post for a Philosopher bred to the Sea?" This also charges the Government for employing unfit Ministers in the Navy. There is a fifth, and that hath these Words. "Countryman. Truly Master Observer, I have no very good News for you: Mr. Daniel De Foe has pleaded Guilty to the Indictment against him, for writing and publishing The Shortest Way with the Dissenters; and he is sentenc'd to stand three Times in the Pillory, to pay a Fine of 200 Marks, and to find Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years. Observer. The Court could do no otherwise than convict him, upon his pleading Guilty; babemus confitentem reum, is very often the Voice of Courts of Judicature, 'tis the Ease of Judges and Juries: If Daniel de Foe was in Expectation of Coleman's Black-Box, he has found a Pillory instead of it. I don't trouble my Head about the Custom of giving the Pillory to Authors, which is the Punishment of Bakers. You talk'd just now of turning Author, have a Care of your Candle; you see which is the shortest Way with Authors; you must all enter your selves in the Regiment of Colonel Foe. The Law of England directs, that no Man shall be fined ultra tenementum; and I " make

"make no question, but the Justice of the Court has fined Mr. Foe answerable to his Estate. His Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years, without doubt, was rationally considered, as to the Legality thereof. For my Part, I am only acquainted with old Laws of England, the ancient Birthrights and Immunities of Englishmen: This I take to be the Foundation of new Laws." And then here is the last which hath these Words. "Countryman. Master Observer, there's another Plot against you. Observ. Prithee Man, there's a Plot against the Queen, and the whole Nation; is it any wonder then, that there are Plots against me? The High-Flyers are now plotting against every honest Man in England. I'll tell you more of it, the next Time we meet. Countrym. I fancy some sort of People plot against you, because you endeavour to countermine their Plots against the Queen and Nation. Observ. You are right enough; but that shan't hinder me from detecting their Designs, and from opening the People's Eyes: But prithee, what Plot is this? Countrym. Why, Sir, it is a Plot preparatory to your Trial; and if they can't effect this Plot, I suppose you'll never be tried. They insinuate into the Citizens of London, that you have lately written very scandalously, maliciously, and treasonably, and I don't know how many other Lies, against them the said Citizens; and by this Means they are minded to set your Jurors against you. Obf. This is likely enough; they'll leave no Stone unturn'd, to suppress the Truth. I understand, I should have been prosecuted by Bill the last Sessions, but that the High-Flyers did not like the Jury; nay, they say, they don't like the two Sheriffs, because they won't pack Juries to find innocent Men guilty."

This is the last of the Libels. Now whatever you admit concerning these, the same is proved concerning the other two, except that of the Volume. These he did receive from Mr. Tutchin, or by his Agent. He also paid Mr. Tutchin upon the same Account that he paid for the rest, and they were printed here in London, and published. Now Mr. Tutchin did not at any Time complain that they were not printed according to the Copies sent. As to the Copies they are lost all of them but one of these four. There are divers others, but they concern not this Information, but one, and that is Mr. Tutchin's Hand, the same Hand as the other Papers, and by that Copy the Paper was printed, and Mr. Tutchin also received the Money for it. So that now you have heard this Evidence, you are to consider whether you are satisfied that Mr. Tutchin is guilty of writing, composing, and publishing these Libels. They say they are innocent Papers and no Libels, and they say nothing is a Libel but what reflects upon some particular Person. But this is a very strange Doctrine, to say, it is not a Libel reflecting on the Government, endeavouring to possess the People that the Government is Male-administrated by corrupt Persons, that are employed in such or such Stations either in the Navy or Army.

To say that corrupt Officers are appointed to administer Affairs, is certainly a Reflection on the Government. If People should not be called to account for possessing the People with an ill Opinion of the Government, no Government can subsist. For it is very necessary for all Governments that the People should have a good Opinion of it. And nothing can be worse to any Government, than to endeavour to procure Animosities, as to the Management of it; this has been always look'd upon as a Crime, and no Government can be safe without it be punished.

Now you are to consider, whether these Words I have read to you, do not tend to beget an ill Opinion of the Administration of the Government? To tell us, that those that are employed know nothing of the Matter, and those that do know are not employed. Men are not adapted to Offices, but Offices to Men, out of a particular Regard to their Interest, and not to their Fitness for the Places; this is the Purport of these Papers.

Now they on his Behalf insist on these Things: First, they say you do not prove any Crime against him in London. Indeed it is not proved that he writ them in London; but the Question is, whether there is not Proof of the Composing and Publication in London? There is Proof that they were sent to Mr. How, in order to print them in London. Now, whether he received them from him in London or no (but suppose out of London) yet if he received them to print them in London, that is a Publication in London. If they scruple that Matter it shall be specially found. If they were delivered to be printed at London, I must leave it to your Consideration, whether you will not find him guilty of publishing them in London. They were some of them printed in Fenchurch street, and others in Gracechurch-street. He knew where the Printer lived, the Contract was made, and he was paid for them. Gentlemen, I must leave it to you; if you are satisfied that he is guilty of Composing and Publishing these Papers at London, you are to find him Guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew, and about a Quarter of an Hour after return'd into Court.

Clerk. Answer to your Names, &c. How say you, Is John Tutchin guilty of the Charge laid against him, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of Composing and Publishing.

L. C. J. Holt. They appeal from my Opinion; they don't find the Writing in London, but they find him guilty of Composing and Publishing in London, that is, supposing he did write them out of London, and deliver them in order to be printed in London.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you find that the Papers, the several Copies of these six Observers were delivered to be printed in London?

Foreman. Yes, guilty of Composing and Publishing, but not of Writing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you find him guilty of the whole Charge, except the Writing?

Foreman. Yes.

Clerk. Gentlemen, hearken to your Verdict, you say John Tutchin is guilty of the whole Information, except the Writing?

Foreman. Yes.

Clerk. And so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

November 13.

Mr. Att. Gen. MY Lord, Mr. Tutchin has given me Notice that he will bring an Appeal in arrest of Judgment; and indeed he has given publick Notice of it, for it is put into the News-Papers.

L. C. J. Holt. Is he here?

Mr. Mount-

Mr. Mountague. Yes, my Lord, he is about the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call him.

Cryer. John Tutchin, Gentleman. (Then he came into Court).

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship to favour me a few Words in Behalf of the Defendant, John Tutchin. He was tried before your Lordship at the Guild-Hall, London, on Saturday was seven-night, for being the Author, Composer and Publisher of some Papers entitled, The Observer; and there is a Verdict enter'd against him, and now he appears to submit to the Judgment of the Court, which he humbly hopes shall not be given against him. For, my Lord, in the first Place I beg Leave to take notice that we think there is Cause why your Lordship should set aside the Trial that has been had; for we look on all the Proceedings upon the Writ of Distringas, on which the Verdict is taken, as null and void. This is an Information against Mr. Tutchin for a Libel; and the Facts laid in the Information are said to have been transacted within the City and County of London. To this Information he pleaded the last Trinity Term, and the Venire Facias was awarded the last Day of that Term, Return. Die Lunæ proximæ post tres Septimanas Sancti Michaelis, which your Lordship knows was October 23, the first Day of the Term, and the Distringas should have issued the very same Day; but it so happens that the Distringas in this Case does appear to have been sued forth October 24, which is a Day after the Return of the Venire, and therefore we say the Distringas is naught, and all the Proceedings thereupon are null, because there is no Award of the Court to warrant this Distringas. In the next Place we say, that the Return, neither of the Venire or the Distringas, are as by Law they ought to be; for the Return of the Venire is Die Lunæ proximæ post tres Septimanas Sancti Michaelis, and the Jury are to be brought coram Domina Regina apud Westm. Die Jovis prox. post; and the Return of the Distringas is Craft. Anim. with an Hab. Corpora coram Regina apud Westm. For both which Reasons we think it naught, because when any Proceedings in Criminal Matters are laid in a foreign County, the Process must be made returnable at a Day certain. Day might be given coram Regina ubicunque.

L. C. J. Holt. You mean at a common Day; and it is so, whenever Indictments are removed hither by Certiorari out of foreign Counties.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we think there is no Difference to be made between the Proceedings in London, and other Counties more remote from Westminster.

L. C. J. Holt. In Informations exhibited by Mr. Att. Gen. in this Court for Crimes done in foreign Counties, 'tis usual to return the Process upon Day certain.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Informations are of the Nature of a Bill.

L. C. J. Holt. Process on an Indictment may be made returnable on a certain Day, if it be found in this Court; but if it be removed hither by Certiorari, it is otherwise.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we take it that the Process that has been hitherto taken out upon all Informations that charge Crimes on Defendants as done out of the County of Middlesex, has been made returnable on some common Return-Day, and not at a Day certain.

Mr. Att. Gen. It has always been allowed to be upon a Day certain, as well as upon a general Return-Day; and it is settled and declared so by the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. I am apt to think the Clerks have gone both Ways.

Mr. Att. Gen. A Man takes a long Day if he will.

Mr. Mountague. We have look'd over many Informations, and the Practice does not appear to have been so. But what does Mr. Attorney say to the first Exception we have taken? Here is a Discontinuance after the Return of the Venire, which was upon October 23, and the Distringas bears Teste viceffimo quarto die Octobris.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, what can you say to that, Mr. Attorney? That very Day the Writ is enter'd there must be a Distringas.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I know not how it came to pass. I believe somebody has done it on Purpose. I desire the Clerk may give an Account of it. I never saw the Writ. I desire Time to know how this has been manag'd.

L. C. J. Holt. There must be a Continuance to that Day; if there be no Continuance, all is fallen.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they come again, we will see how this has pass'd.

L. C. J. Holt. If it be so, the Plea is discontinued, and you must plead de Novo.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, seeing it is in Court, I desire it may be read now.

L. C. J. Holt. What need you make that Reflection? Do you think we will make any Alteration in it?

Mr. Mountague. I hope I may ask that without making any Reflection: I am sure I did not intend it so.

Then the Record was read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come again To-morrow.

Mr. Mountague. Mr. Tutchin, then you may go for To-day; but be here again To-morrow.

L. C. J. Holt. Is the Venire made returnable Die Lunæ?

Mr. Mountague. Yes, my Lord, it is; I look'd upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I will see if it can't be found out.

November 20.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Attorney, will you go on?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are ready, if they will maintain their Exceptions.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we think we have no Occasion to cite many Authorities and Presidents to maintain the Exception, when it is apparent that there is a Discontinuance; the Reading of it makes it appear, that the Distringas was sued out a Day after the Venire, so that here is a Nisi Prius that has been issued out erroneously. The Statute says the Day and Place for taking Inquisitions must be in Præsentia Partium. And 'tis plain, the Day and Place mentioned in this Writ was appointed when the Defendant was not in Court, and therefore is null and void.

L. C. J. Holt. In Præsentia Partium, where is that required?

Mr. Mountague. By the Statute of Nisi Prius, which says, nec alterminetur hujusmodi Inquisitiones coram aliquibus Justiciariis de Banco nisi statuatur certus certus dies & Locus in Comitatu in Prasentia Partium.

L. C. J. Holt. Which Statute do you mean?

Mr. Mountague. The Statute of Westminster the Second, cap. 30.

L. C. J. Holt. Call for that Statute.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire that they will maintain their Exception, for I am in the dark about it, and that they may maintain it by the Authority of the Law, and not only by an ipse dixit, and a Noise in the Town.

L. C. J. Holt. They say the Exception maintains itself.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, let them go on first, and then we will answer them. If they will rely upon this Exception without Authority, then we must pray the Judgment of the Court; but if they will bring Authority for it, we do desire to hear them, and shall give them an Answer.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, if they have any other Exception to make, I desire they may make it now.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Mountague, you have made one Exception, that is, of the Discontinuance of the Process; now, if you have any other Exceptions to make, you may make them now.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, the Exceptions I have hitherto taken, have been to the Trial. I mention'd this, and I mention'd another which I do not insist on; since I understand it has been otherwise settled, that is, about the Return of these Writs upon a Day certain; which, my Lord, I did look upon to have been wrong; because I did not think Mr. Attorney could shew any Precedents of any such Returns to warrant this; for I can find none, and I have searched in the Time of King Charles I. and in King Charles II. and King James.

L. C. J. Holt. If a Suit be commenced in the Common-Pleas by Bill, as if an Attorney shall file a Bill there, the Process is made returnable at a Day certain, and here our Proceedings by Bill are always at a Day certain. Now an Information which is originally filed here, is in nature of a Bill, and the Proceedings therefore may be confined to a Day certain; but if any Indictment be brought hither by Certiorari, the Process must be returned at a common Day, and not at a Day certain. We had this Matter under Consideration before, upon another Occasion, and we thought it very reasonable the Proceedings on Informations here should be the same as the Proceedings by Bill, which are returnable on Days certain from any County of England.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, if that be your Opinion, I have nothing to say to it. I have some Records here in my Hand, some in King Charles's Reign, and some in King James's Time, and all these are made returnable on the common Return, and one of these Records was settled by Sir William Jones. As to what the Officers say, they are divided I find; for some of them have told me, it is quite contrary to what Mr. Harcourt reports the Course of the Court to be.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I dare appeal to you, whether this has not been argued twenty Times.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, let Mr. Attorney shew Precedents.

Mr. Att. Gen. You must shew Precedents.

Mr. J. Powel. It is otherwise when there is an original Proceeding.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Exceptions?

Mr. Mountague. I rely on the first Exception. It lies on Mr. Attorney to answer this Exception.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire they may shew any Case or Resolution of Law, that the Distingas should bear Teste the same Day the Venire is return'd upon. The Distingas is awarded on the Roll upon the first Day of Term; and the Venire is returned the first Day of Term: And at the same Time it is awarded, that there shall be a Distingas, Day is given to the Party; that is the Warrant: For the Distingas and the Teste never appear upon the Roll. If they have any Authority, I desire they may shew it. My Lord, I think we can satisfy you, that it is right; or that it is amendable. This is a Maxim of the Law, There must be Authority.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be the Thing is so plain, as to need no Authority.

Sir T. Powis. I desire to know, whether the Award of the Distingas is right on the Roll, I take it, that the Venire is return'd the first Day of the Term; and that there is thereupon a Distingas awarded returnable, Die Jovis prox. post Crast. Anim. I beg to know, whether it be so or no?

L. C. J. Holt. I have it in my Hand; and I was apprized of that before; and was going to state it. For the Continuance of the Roll is right. The Venire Facias is return'd, Die Lunæ prox. post tres Mich. On which Day, the Attorney appears on the Queen's Behalf; and the Defendant appears likewise. What is then done? Idco præceptum est Vicecomitibus London, quod distingant eos; itaque habeant Corpora eorum coram Domina Regina, Die Jovis prox. post Crast. Anim. Now, on what Day must this Award be said to be? That must be that Day whereon the Venire is said to be return'd, which is, Dies Lunæ prox. post Tres Mich. The Award of the Distingas, therefore, by the Roll, is that very Day, the 23d: But the Distingas bears Date, not the 23d, but the 24th.

Sir T. Powis. Now do they rely on it, that notwithstanding the Roll has awarded it Die Lunæ, yet because the Distingas is dated Die Martis, do they rely on it, that this is to prevail, without any more to be said to it.

L. C. J. Holt. This is the true State of the Matter. Now there is no Discontinuance on the Roll; for it appears on the Roll, that the Distingas was awarded the 23d.

Mr. Broderick. The Objection is, That the Distingas has been sued out without Warrant. They ask for Authorities. I believe we might shew Twenty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire they would cite some Authorities of the Twenty they speak of. I can shew them Cases, where the Distingas's have been Tested out of Term, or upon the Sunday: These are to be set right. I would be glad to see any Authority, wherein it appears the Distingas must be the same Day. I would be glad they would do more than say it.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, before I answer this, I would ask, whether that Roll be the Nisi Prius Roll, or the Plea Roll?

L. C. J. Holt. It is the Nisi Prius Roll.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, the Plea Roll has been made right since I took my Exceptions. The Nisi Prius Roll ought to be a Transcript of the Plea Roll.

Mr. J.

Mr. J. Powel. The Nisi Prius Roll is made out of the other: If the Nisi Prius Roll be good, it is well enough.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, to have a Transcript of a Roll that has been made up since, is not right.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he strikes at the Root of the Court.

Mr. Broderick. My Lord, I would take notice, that it is the Course of the Court, that the Distingas shall bear Date the Day of the Return of the Venire. The Clerks tell me, they never knew it otherwise.

Mr. J. Powel. The Award is right; but you have not taken out a Writ according to the Award of the Court: Whether that will be warranted?

Mr. Att. Gen. They have no Authority, but the Reason of the Thing; and then I think we may give this short Answer: We do affirm, That it is right as it is: But if it were not right, we say it is amendable.

L. C. J. Holt. All the Matter will be to prove that it is amendable.

Sir T. Powis. If need be, we may put the Matter into the right Way: For if the Distingas be not the same Day with the Award, we pray that it may be amended.

L. C. J. Holt. By what Law must it be amended? You are in the Affirmative: If you acknowledge it wants Amendment, by what Law must it be amended?

Sir T. Powis. It is amendable by the Common Law.

Mr. J. Powel. You say it is no Fault; and if it be, it is amendable by the Common Law.

L. C. J. Holt. First let us know whether it needs Amendment? And then next, whether it can be amended?

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, let them shew that it needs Amendment: For if they make Exceptions, and say no more, and we proceed to answer them, then they may come upon us again with new Matter, and so there will be no End.

Mr. Mountague. When we were in the Affirmative in our Exception, we did give some Reasons why we said it is not right.

Mr. J. Powel. The Party was in Court the 23d. Then they awarded the Distingas in his Presence; so that the Nisi Prius was awarded in the Presence of the Party: The Award of it is Die Luna. But here's the Fault: They did not make a right Teste that Day; so that the Fault is, the Distingas that is sued out.

Mr. Mountague. On Monday there is an Award of the Nisi Prius; but on Tuesday it is taken forth. Now we say, that it is not according to the Writ awarded: For the Writ bears Teste the Day after; and upon that Account we say, the Proceedings are null. My Lord, Mr. Attorney asks for Precedents for this: But, with Submission, we take it to be plain, that the Motion made for the amending this Thing, supposes it not to be right.

L. C. J. Holt. The first Question to be debated, is, Whether this be a right Trial? or if not, Whether it be a Discontinuance of the whole? The Distingas bears Date the 24th of October; the Roll is the 23d of October; and there is no such Writ then taken out, but the Day after; so that the Teste is not according to the Roll. When a Writ is not awarded according to the Roll, what the Consequence will be, is another Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg your Lordship's Direction in this Matter. It deserves a great deal of Care; for there has been a great Noise in the Town about it. However, we will go your Way. Whether they begin first, or we, I am very easy.

VOL. V.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not warranted by Award of the Court. This is a Matter of the greatest Consequence to the Government.

Mr. Broderick. Mr. Attorney speaks of a Noise about the Town: I concern not myself about that, nor any further in this Case, than as it may be the Case of every Subject of England.

L. C. J. Holt. He is found to be the Author of the Observators.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do not speak it now upon the Business of this Prosecution; for he is so inconsiderable, that it matters not much how it goes. But if this be not amendable, it will blow up all Proceedings. Every Man must have Justice; and God forbid but he should.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, if it be thought proper, we will go on. Your Lordship observes, what Warrant there was for a Distingas; and that it is rightly awarded on the Roll, which is a Warrant to the Clerk for a Distingas, and by Consequence if the Distingas be not made according to that Award, it is the Misprision of the Clerk. Now if we do admit this to be out of all the Statutes of Amendment (tho' it is fit to be considered whether some Statutes do not warrant it) but suppose it should be out of all the Statutes of Amendments; yet by the Common Law it may be amended.

There were Amendments at the Common Law before any Statute, both in civil and criminal Matters; and these Amendments chiefly regarded the Process of the Court, and such Errors as were occasioned by the Inadvertences or Neglects of the Officers; but especially in the same Term, during which Time the Judges have the Records of the Court in Scrinio Pectoris.

My Lord Coke says so expressly: And so was the Opinion of the Court in Blackmore's Case, in the eighth Report, fol. 156, 157. which is the great Case of Amendments.

That Book says, fol. 156. b. Without question, at Common Law, the Default of Entry of a Continuance, or of an Essoign (which was the Misprision of the Court itself in the Form of the Entry) was amendable by the Court. And the Objection here is, that there is a Discontinuance: And the Instance there given from the Case in 5 Ed. III. fol. 25. is very considerable; where, after a Venire Facias issued, and an Award Quod jurat poniter in respectum, in the Entry whereof there was a great Mistake of the Parties, which made a Discontinuance, and yet amended at the Common Law.

The Instances of Amendments at Common Law, out of the Old Books are many: 22 Edw. III. fol. 7. b. and 10. a. where a Discontinuance was amended. 29 Edw. III. fol. 32. b. a Habeas Corp. Jurator. amended. 7 Hen. VI. 29. Broke, Tit. Amendment, 32. 4 Hen. VI. 16. b. By which Book it appears, that the Judges had Power to amend in many Cases at the Common Law, in the Case of a common Person. And if in the Case of a Subject, much more in the Case of the King: For, by the Common Law, the King had many Privileges and Advantages in legal Proceedings, which a Subject had not: And the King, in his Suits, hath many great Prerogatives. The King may plead one Title, and afterwards wave it, and plead another. He may wave a Demurrer, and afterwards take Issue. And many other Privileges belong to the Crown, of this nature, which a Subject hath not.

long

And particularly in the Matter of Amendments by the Common Law, the King had a Privilege, which a Subject had not.

• An Original Writ was not amendable for a Subject at the Common Law, but in the Case of the King it was.

Therefore in Blackmore's Case, fol. 156. b. it is said, That if a Quare impedit be sued forth on the Behalf of the King, and the Writ is presentare instead of presentare; it may be amended in the Case of the King, after Exception taken; but not so in the Case of a Subject.

And so in Fitz. Amendment, 12, 19, 22, several Amendments at Common Law, especially in the Case of the King.

Another Advantage which we have in this Case is, That we are in the same Term wherein the Disstringas was awarded and made forth.

And in the same Case of Blackmore, fol. 156. b. 157. a. it is said, That at the Common Law, the Judges may amend as well their Judgment, as any other Part of the Record, in the same Term. For during the Term, the Record is in the Heart or Breast of the Court, or of the Judges, and not in the Roll: But in another Term, by the Common Law, Misprisions of Clerks in Process were not amendable by the Court; for in another Term, the Roll is the Record. So says that Book.

But here we are in the same Term: And it is the Misprision of the Clerk in Process, and in the making out a judicial Writ, which is in the Power of this Court, as issuing out from hence, whereas Original Writs issue out of Chancery: And Judicial Writs are often amended, where Originals are not. Vide Brook's Amendments, 20, 22. Owen 62.

But if this were not amendable by the Common Law, it is amendable by Statute.

The first Statutes for Amendments were 14 Edw. III. cap. 6. 9 H. V. cap. 4. and 4 H. VI. cap. 3. which extends to the Amendment of a Letter or a Syllable; but the Judges were wonder'd at in Parliament for their great Nicety, when they ask'd the Question there, whether they might not amend a whole Word; as appears in 39 Edw. III. f. 21. And 40 Edw. III. f. 34. b. they were told that undoubtedly they might.

Now here is nothing to be amended but a Figure: And this Statute being general, seems to extend to our Case.

The Statutes most to our Purpose are 8 H. VI. c. 12. whereby it is enacted, that the Judges may reform and amend all Defects in any Record, Process, Plea, Warrant, Writ, Pannel or Return (except Appeals, Indictments of Murder, and Outlawries for the same; and Additions left out in original Writs, Exigents, and other Writs of Proclamation, contrary to the Statute of H. V.) so that by such Misprision of Clerks, no Judgment shall be reversed or annull'd. And again, the Statute of 8 H. VI. cap. 15. ordains, that the King's Justices, before whom any Misprision or Default shall be found, be it in any Records and Processes depending before them, as well by way of Error as otherwise, or in the Returns of the same, by Misprision of the Clerks, or other Officers or Ministers whatsoever, in minute Matters (such as this is) they shall have Power to amend such Misprision, upon Examination thereof, according to their Discretion; except the Processes and Records of Felonies and Treasons and the Dependancies thereof.

Now by Reason of the particular Exceptions in these Statutes, and by reason that the following Statutes of Jeofail, in 32 H. VIII. 18 Eliz. 21. Jac. I. &c. do not extend to criminal Cases, an Opinion hath been taken up among some Persons, that no Amendment can be made in criminal Matters by any Statute; which is a strange Mistake.

For these two Statutes of 8 H. VI. cap. 12. and cap. 15. being general Laws, and in general Words, they, in Cases not excepted, extend to Amendments to be made by the Judges in criminal Prosecutions, as well as in Civil Causes, without Distinction: And the special Exceptions, after the general Words, are the highest Proofs imaginable. For nothing could be more absurd and vain, than carefully to except, what the Words precedent, without such Exception, would not have reach'd or extended to; and that would highly reflect on the Wisdom of Parliament.

This will appear more fully by the following Series of Authorities, whereby the Judges have amended Discontinuances of this nature; in criminal Prosecutions at the Suit of the Crown.

2 Cro. fol. 502. Harris's Case. An Indictment for a Nuisance was prosecuted against Harris; and a Trial was had, and a Verdict against him. Afterwards it was removed by Certiorari; and upon View of the Record, it was found, that no Issue was joined: For the Clerk of Assize had omitted to enter the Issue, and so the Verdict was without an Issue. And upon Motion, the Court of King's Bench order'd it to be amended; for it was the Default of the Clerk. And this was done divers Years afterwards, and in the Time of another Clerk of Assize. And it was order'd, that the Clerk of Assize which then was (for the former was removed) should amend it; which was done by inserting these Words, Et Richardus Warer (who was the former Clerk of Assize) qui pro Dom. Rege sequitur similiter, &c. And it was there said by the Court, That if such Faults should not be mended, many Trials upon Indictments should be overthrown.

There is another Case in the same Book: 'Tis in 2 Cro. fol. 529. Parker vers. Sir John Curson & Ux. It was an Information against Sir John Curson and his Wife for Recusancy; and the Issue was, Quod præd. Magdalena dicit, quod ipsa non est inde culpabilis; & de hoc ponit se super Patriam, & Attornatus Domini Regis similiter. Upon a Trial at Bar, a Verdict was given against the Defendants. It was afterwards moved in Arrest of Judgment, that there was no Issue joined; for it was only the Plea of the Feme Covert, and no Issue joined, or Plea pleaded for the Husband. And yet in Regnard, the Docket was right, which was the Warrant for the Roll; and the Omission of the Husband was the Misprision of the Clerk: Therefore it was amended in so material a Part, even in another Term.

Another Case is in Cro. Car. fol. 144. Sir Humphry Tufton's Case. A Quo Warranto was brought against the Corporation of Maidstone, for claiming divers Liberties. Judgment was enter'd by Disclaimer; and it was intended to have been only a special Disclaimer of all Privileges, by Pretence of a Charter bearing Date 17 Jac. Regis: But the Clerk in entering the Judgment had omitted those Words, Virtute vel Prætextu Literar. Patent. govern. dat. Anno decimo sept. Jac. Regis: But upon Examination, the Court finding that it was merely the Mis-

Misprision of the Clerk, the Court was of Opinion that it was amendable by the Common Law, as well in the King's Case, as in the Case of a common Person; and in another Term too; for so it was, and it was amended accordingly.

There is a Case in 1 Siderfin. fol. 243, 244. The King v. Percival, Godfrey, & al.

Upon an Indictment for a Riot and a Battery, and Not Guilty pleaded, a Venire Facias was awarded Vicecomitibus of the City of Canterbury; and upon a Trial at Bar, a Verdict was given against the Defendants: And it was moved in Arrest of Judgment, that the Venire Facias and other Process, was directed Vicecomitibus of Canterbury, and the Return was made by one Sheriff only; but the Court amended it, by endorsing upon the Writ, that there was but one Sheriff of Canterbury. And this Amendment was made by the Common Law, and not by the Statutes of Jeofails; altho' it was said at the Bar, that it was amendable within the Statute, because it was not a Case within any of the Exceptions; it being an Information at the Common Law. And the Case of Sherington and Talbot was cited, and the Book of 39 Hen. VI. 40. for the same Purpose. And with this Case in Siderfin, agrees our present Case; for it is not an Indictment or Information upon any Penal Statute, but an Information at Common Law.

Now, if this Opinion, as reported by Siderfin, be Law, then this Discontinuance is plainly made good by the Statutes of Jeofail.

So in the Case of Dolphin and Clark, 2 Cro. fol. 64, 65. The Appearance and Issue were in Hillary Term, 1 Jac. the Venire awarded did bear Teste 23. Jan. 1 Jac. so the Venire awarded before the Issue or Appearance; but yet amended, for the Roll is the Warrant of the Venire, which was right. So where the Teste was upon a Sunday, it was amended: for it was the Default of the Clerk, in the mis-awarding of Process. So if Teste out of Term. So if it be Vicecom. and says not of what County: Or if the King's Reign be mistaken; 2 Cro. fol. 78. Lea v. Lacon. The Roll being right, and a Judicial Process, it may be amended.

So Yelwart. fol. 64. Nevill v. Bates. The Venire fac. was made returnable Quind. Hill. and yet bore Teste 12. Feb. which is the last Day of the Term: And yet, per Cur. it shall be amended in the Date of the Teste, for it is but the Default of the Clerk. And other like Instances there put.

The like in Cro. Car. f. 38. Ayleworth v. Chadwell.

So in Cro. Car. fol. 90, 91. Moor v. Hodges. The Issue was in Trinity Term; and the Venire and Disstringas were of Days in Easter Term before; and yet amended: For the Roll of awarding the Venire Facias was well enough; and the misdating the Venire Fac. which is a judicial Process, shall also be set right.

So in later Cases, Trin. 2. Jac. II. the King v. Edes. The Defendant was convicted of a Misdemeanor, upon an Information exhibited per Robertum Sawyer, &c. The Continuance was, Ideo dies datus est prefat. Sam. Astrey; resolved it might be amended.

And Hill. 3. & 4. Jac. II. the King v. Holmes. Upon an Information for a Riot, and the Defendant convicted; the Mistake of Ostabis Martini, instead of Ostabis Hill. amended.

We are here in a much stronger Case. The Defendant hath been found Guilty upon a fair Trial: And the Preamble of the Statute of 32 Hen. VIII. takes notice, That the setting aside of Verdicts, for Discontinuances and other Misprisions, is a great Slander to the Common Law and Judges. The Venire and Disstringas are duly awarded upon the Roll; and the making the Teste of the Disstringas 24. Oct. instead of 23. Oct. is a plain Misprision: It is in a judicial Process; and it is in the same Term. And we humbly insist upon it, That it is amendable, both by the Common and the Statute Law. For according to my Lord Coke, in Blackmore's Case, f. 156, b. 157, a. it is hard to say, what the Court cannot amend in the same Term. For, says he, at Common Law, the Judges might as well amend their Judgment, as any other Part of the Record, in the same Term. For during the Term, the Record is in the Breast of the Court, and of the Judges, and not in the Roll. And therefore we pray this Misprision may be amended, if it stand in need thereof.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, because this Matter has been press'd with so much Warmth, I must beg Leave to observe some few Things, in Answer to what has been said.

This is a Thing that not only concerns this single Prosecution, but it concerns all the Prosecutions for the Crown; and in all Cases, not only Criminal, but Civil. And, my Lord, if the Statutes of Amendments extend not to any other Cases but what they urge, the Case of the Crown is worse than that of the Subject. It is worthy of Consideration, what Things are amendable by Common Law; for if the Crown be left to the Mercy of the Clerks, it cannot but be of very ill Consequence. Therefore I hope we may take the Benefit of the Common Law.

My Lord, I would beg Leave to recite some few Precedents, to shew how the Common Law formerly stood. And the first I shall take Notice of, is the Preamble of the Statute, 32 Hen. VIII. cap. 30. There it is said, The staying of Judgment after the Verdict, is a great Scandal to the Common Law, and the Ministers of the same. And, my Lord, there is another Thing to be consider'd; That admitting the Common Law stood as it did before, there is a great Difference between the Proceedings of the Crown at the Common Law, and Civil Cases. The Crown had many Privileges at Common Law, which the Subject had not. And it will sound very harsh, that the Crown shall be left without those Helps by the Statute of Amendments, when so many of the inferior Subjects did not want the Help of them. For it is impossible this should not be thought of in Parliament, that some Care should be taken for the Crown in those Matters where it needed.

Now there is, in all our Books, Notice taken of a greater Privilege that belongs to the Crown, than to the Subject. There shall not be a Demurrer to the Evidence in the Case of the Queen, without her Council's Assent; yet in the Case of a Subject, there may be a Demurrer to the Evidence. So the Crown may either insist on a Demurrer, or waive it, and take Issue at Pleasure.

There is this likewise: Before Judgment, in a Criminal Case, the Queen may amend, but the Subject not.

Also by Hardress Reports, fol. 504. before Judgment, no Discontinuance may be in the Queen's Case, altho' the Issue was tried. The Attorney takes Issue to one Part; and it is pleaded, that this is a Discontinuance to the other. Now there can be no Discontinuance before the Verdict. And that Book goes further, and says, That the want of Continuance in that Case, cannot be objected before Judgment, &c. And in 2 Buls. 35. an Indictment is said to be amended even after Verdict.

Now there is great Reason, that such Misprisions in Writs at the Queen's Suit shall be amended by the Common Law. And in Fitzherbert's Abridgment, Tit. Amendment, Placita 22. if the King bring any Writ which wants Form, &c. it shall be amended. But it is otherwise in the Case of the Subject. So says 8 Coke expressly, fol. 156. An Original Writ is not amendable in the Case of a common Person, but it is amendable in the Case of the King.

Now it has been the constant Practice, that these Privileges have been preserved to the Crown. The Queen may at any time amend her Information after Trial, but a Subject cannot.

These Privileges have been preserved to the Crown, even at the Day of Trial: And many Mistakes of Clerks, in Informations and Indictments, have been so amended. This is a Right of the Crown by the Common Law.

In the next Place, my Lord, I would observe, what is the Matter we are going to amend. It is not what alters the Party's Defence. It alters not the Issue, or Trial; nor is it any thing that tends to his Prejudice: And by the Common Law, that may be amended, which is not a Prejudice to the Party.

The Defendant has a Day given by the Roll; and the same Day the Distingas is awarded, he appeared: Every one must own, there was no Prejudice to him, whether the Distingas be of one Teste or another. 'Tis true, there is the Year-Book, 20 Hen. VI. fol. 18. which is also in Brook's Abridgment, Tit. Amendment, Placit. 4. There was a Misnomer in the Capias and subsequent Process, and in the Exigent: And the Court held, that the Capias, &c. might be amended, but not the Exigent; because of the Prejudice, if one might be outlaw'd on such Process, to which he never appear'd; and therefore it might not be amended for that Reason. But this Case stands clear of all Objections of that kind. He had a Day to appear, and make his Defence: He came in, and did appear accordingly; and no Prejudice happen'd to him.

Now, my Lord, as to the Exception they make, I must beg Leave to say, it can be of no Weight. I agree, the Award of the Distingas must be according to the Writ of Venire: But, with Submission, I observe not the Necessity that the Distingas should be Teste'd the same Day. No Authority of Law requires it, and by reason it should be otherwise. For suppose the Award is made by the Court the first of January, the Clerk has all that Day at least to make it. For after the Court has made the Award, the Award is to be drawn up and delivered to the Clerk to make the Writ, and it cannot be supposed to be made at the same Time as the Award is. The Court awards one Day, and the Distingas is made the next Day, which is as proper and convenient a Time as can be; I see nothing in the Reason of the Thing against it.

My Lord, the Authorities they cite, that where Process issues another Day, and not the same 'tis awarded, do not prove it a Discontinuance; and many Cases are otherwise; as an Award to give Notice of Trial, &c. Also there is a Book of Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium 20 G. & Brook Title Discontinuance 59. which says, if the Plaintiff does not assign Error the same Term, then it is a Discontinuance. Now tho' a Writ of Error is returnable at a Day certain, yet he has all that Term to assign Error; but if he omits it a whole Term, it is a Discontinuance.

My Lord, I do not see but this is a regular Prosecution on a Writ not liable to Exception. There is another Book, 21 Ed. IV. that says, There shall be the same Day given to the Jury by the Distingas: but I see not the Necessity that the Teste should be that Day, Brook Discontinuance, 53. At the Return of the Venire Facias the Defendant was essoyn'd, and the Essoyn adjourn'd: Now the Habeas Corpus shall have the same Day as the Essoyn had by Adjournment, and so not the same Day with the Return of the Venire; for, says the Book, you shall continue the Venire to the same Day of Adjournment; but that does not shew that the Process shall be issued that Day, but rather the contrary. Now in this Case there is all done that is necessary, the Process is continued, the Jury is adjourn'd to that Day that it is by the Roll, the Parties are continued to that Day. I know no Case that shews a Necessity of the Writ bearing Date the same Day but one, and that I think is against them: 'Tis the Case of Bradley and Banks, in Yelverton 204. and that was in an Appeal, and that it was so, there was a Discontinuance in an Appeal, if there be any Time between the Return and the Capias, tho' the Defendant hath appear'd, yet all the Process are discontinued; for in that Case the Teste ought to be the same Day as the Process was. Now if that were a general Rule, it would be against us; but that was founded on a special Reason, and does them no Service. For all Appeals are to be without Intermission, and if they are intermitted any Time, the Appeal is lost; for the Common Law is not alter'd by the Statute of Gloucester, therefore there can be no Imparllance after Appeal; for if an Imparllance be thereon, it is a Discontinuance, and therefore that Case will be of no Authority to them.

But there is a Case in Crook. Eliz. (N. B. The Case intended seems that of Rogers vers. Bird, Cro. Eliz. 572. sed vide ib. 433. contra.) where this Process is taken notice of as good, and that is, that the Process is very next Day. There a Venire Facias was awarded Craft. Trin. the Distingas was issued the Day after, and by that it ought to be so; and the Return was amended, and the Process was the next Day after the Return. Now that being so particularly stated, seems to be an Authority that it may be so.

L. C. J. Holt. How does it appear to be a Day after?

Mr. Att. Gen. The Venire Facias was Craft Trin. the Distingas was Die Veneris, &c. which was the Day after. (Quare Cro. El. 433.)

Mr. Broderick. In a Criminal Case it is not allow'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do not tell you whether it was a Criminal or a Civil Case, but the Exception was taken notice of, and it was amended; but this I only premise. Now, my Lord, with great Submission, I don't know that there is any Necessity (it being a Process at the Suit of the Crown) to have it Tested on any Day certain; for it seems to be well on any Day. If it be in the same Term, and Notice having been given to the Jury, and they and the Party appearing thereon, I cannot see why it may not be well. In Criminal Cases the Course of the Court is to amend Errors (of Form) in Indictments and Informations the very Day of the Trial, and that has always had its Weight in Criminal Prosecutions; but, with Submission, if it be not right, it is to be made right; if it be a Mistake of the Clerk, it may be amended. If you award a Writ, it is the Clerk's Duty to make it out; and if he mistakes in Form, or varies varies from his Instructions, &c. all these Matters are amendable by the common Law, and therefore need not the Aid of any Statute. But I cannot give up that neither; for the Crown has certainly the Benefit of the Statutes of Amendments, and I think Coke is of that Opinion too, on the Statute of 14 E. III. That Statute is general, and to say it comes only to Causes between Party and Party, and not to Causes of the Crown, I cannot understand, for there is nothing in it that leads that way. And yet because it speaks of Causes between Party and Party, this Rule has been laid down, that it extends not to the Crown; this Rule has indeed prevailed: But where a Statute is in general, and the end of it is to suppress Fraud, according to all the Rules laid down for expounding Statutes, the Crown ought to have the Benefit of it. It is to take off the Scandal of the Law, and the Ministers thereof, as the Statute 32 H. VIII. says. Now the Stat. of 14 E. III. is general, that by the Misprision of a Clerk no Process shall be annulled or discontinued by mistaking a Letter or Syllable, but as soon as it is perceived it shall be amended. Now I think there is no Reason to be given why it should not extend to Processes of the Crown as well as of the Subject, unless they thought the Subject only wanted it. I do not understand why a general Law may not extend to the King, as well as the Subject. Now as this Statute is general, I mean the Statute of E. III. so there is the Statute 16, 17 Car. II. Cap. 8. which is likewise general, and yet it has been always taken to concern the Crown, as well as the Subject. And why not one Statute as well as the other I cannot conceive. Now, my Lord, we are not without good Opinion that the Benefit of the Statute 16 and 17 Car. II. does belong to the Crown. 'Twas the Opinion of the Lord Chief Justice Hales in the Case of the Lord Fitzwater, there the Venire was directed to one Place, when it should have been to two; and the Question was, whether this could be help'd by the Statute of 14 Car. II. He adher'd to that Opinion, and the Jury thereupon gave their Verdict. It was indeed set aside; but Judge Hales always abode by that Opinion. And so is first Sydesfin 148. The King against Wright. There it is said the Statute of Jeofails does extend to it; and even by the Rule in Blackmore's Case the Statute does extend to it; For there, says my Lord Coke, that Statute does not extend to Appeals, or Indictments, Pleas of the Crown or any Proceedings thereon, for they are excepted. That is his Opinion, where they are excepted, it does not extend to them. Now all Pleas of the Crown are not excepted, but only Appeals, Indictments, &c. and therefore Informations on particular Statutes are not excepted. Now on the reading of the Act, no Pleas of the Crown are excepted, but only Appeals and Indictments; therefore my Lord Coke's Opinion must be, that that Act extends to all Things that are not excepted therein, and consequently to this Case. In Dyer f. 153. there is indeed another Question, whether it be a Discontinuance in the King's Case on the Statute of 32 H. VIII. (Vide Dyer 353.)

Now if he make a Query on that Statute, I cannot imagine why he should not have doubted in other like Cases. But when he came after to Fol. 346, 347. in an Information on the Statute of Usury, the Book says the misconveying of Process and the misjoining of Issues, are amendable by the Statute of Jeofails, and accordingly Judgment was given against the Defendant, notwithstanding divers Errors in the Proceedings; so that the Judges were of Opinion in that Case, that the Statute did extend to Cases of the Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. The Judges there did not directly consider the Statute of Jeofails, 'twas but an Opinion obiter.

Mr. Att. Gen. These are the Words of the Book, Tandem propter Statutum de Jeofails que parle de misconveying de Process, &c. Judgment was given against the Defendant. But I shall have Occasion afterwards to take notice, that a great deal of the Practice of the Courts goes on the amending of the Returns. That Statute is for amending of Returns, and I think we are within the Statute, or if not, That the Common Law will help us: But be that as it will, we are now on the first Point; and I think it is amendable by the Common Law; and I think I can give you an Account of much greater Amendments made by the Court at Common Law, than this which we now ask. Now for Blackmore's Case, if we had left it there, we might have done it by that Case; for it appears by the 8th Rep. 156. b. without doubt there were Amendments by Common Law; and my Lord Coke gives Instances of it. Now I yield it was there in a civil Case; but I think no Man can pretend that at the Common Law there were any Rules to distinguish between Cases of the Crown and Cases of the Subject, unless the Crown had a much greater Power to amend than the Subject had; and that so it was, appears by many of our ancient Books. And there are Authorities in the Statute Law likewise that the Crown could amend further than the Subject. For Coke in Blackmore's Case says, That Variance of the Writ from the Original was amendable by the Common Law, and any part of the Record in the same Term; for that during the Term it is in the Breast of the Judges, but Misprisions of Clerks in another Term in Processes were not amendable by the Court. But I shall plainly shew, that Misprisions of Clerks were amendable at Common Law in Cases of the Crown; and this is prov'd by all the old Authorities. The old Books say, they shall be amendable in the same Term, and we are now within the same Term, and so hope we shall be deliver'd from that Question. Now that Rule of my Lord Coke, and the Reason of it, extends to criminal Cases as well as civil, and both Cases are within the Power of the Court to amend. For if a Fine be set within the Term, the Court may in the same Term amend it or discharge it. This is allow'd to be in the Power of the Court by the Common Law in the Case of the Crown. In Trinity Term, vide 4 Mod. 395. between the King and Walcot, there was an Error in the Writ of Attainder, and an Exception was taken, and it was amended in the same Term. For the Court finding the Form of Entry to be erroneous, they did the same Term order the Record to be razed, and made a Rule for the next Term; and this was done by the Power of the Court at Common Law. For while the Process and the Record is in the Breast of the Court, they have a Power by the Common Law to make a new Judgment.

My Lord, the next Matter I would observe is, That all Misprisions of Clerks, or their Assistants in the Caption of the Judgment, may be amended in the same Term. For that there is Saunders Reports f. 209. Faulkners Case. If an Indictment be mistaken in the Style of the Court, &c. the Court may amend any Thing to make the Caption right, first Sydesfin 259. King against Glover, and this was to amend a material Point. There is the like Case in 2d Croke. These are criminal Cases. It was an Inquisition taken apud — it was not said in Portibus Londini. The Clerk of the Peace was order'd to amend it. And in Jones's Rep. Stafford's Case, first Abridgment 196, there there was an Error in the Reversion of an Attainder. The Certificate was, that he was arraign'd the 18th of March, and convicted the 20th of — In that Case Judge Barclay was of Opinion it might be amended by Common Law, and the Lord Coke agreed; but Judge Jones was of another Opinion, and he gave it for a Reason, especially where the King had signified his Pleasure of desiring it; and afterwards it was not amended: But two Judges were of Opinion it might be amended. In Palmer's Rep. 480. in Plums Case, there was an Indictment in Essex, and it is Exactus est ad Comitatum, without meum, and a Certiorari was awarded to the Coroners, to certify whether it was exact ad Com. meum, and amended accordingly. So 7 E. IV. 15. The Nisi Prius was Mens. Mich. and the Roll was Quinden. Mich. and that was amended. Now this seems likewise to be warranted by the Statute of E. III. and whether that Statute extend to it or not, yet the other Statutes extend to all.

For the old Books, I would only trouble you with some Cases that were before the Statutes of Amendments; and there 'tis plain, both as to civil and criminal Actions, it was the same thing. For in both Cases it was frequently amended; so in 5 E. III. 25. an Entry of a Continuance was mistaken, and it was amended by the Court: So in the Case of Chambers against Barrow — 430. there was a Scire Facias obtained, and it was returnable Sexto and the Entry is Septimo. This upon a Demurrer was objected, and that all was thereby discontinued; it was answer'd, the Court might do it at all Times by the Common Law, and this may be amended by the Common Law.

My Lord, this is an express Authority for us, that the Process is amendable at any Time before the End of the Term, and the Judgment is in the same Term. In the Book 9 Ed. III. Placita 3. The Default in Process may be amended at any Time before Judgment; wherever the Roll is contrary to the Writ, it shall be amended by it. After Issue join'd, the Distingas was awarded, where no Tales was awarded the Clerk found the Award of the Venire Facias; and there it is said it is amendable, being in the Breast of the Court.

Sir Bro. Title Amendm. Placita, 62. The Original was in Suffex, and the Prosecution in Essex; yet 'twas held amendable, and no Discontinuance. These are all by Common Law. So 40 E. III. Placita 13. and Brook's Amend. Placita 17. There was a Writ issued against three: Two appear'd; and one made Default; against whom Process issued, and the next Day he appear'd; and this was amended because it was amendable by Common Law. Likewise Fitzberbert's Amend. 6. There was a Variance by the Default of the Defendant, and it was amended, and it was after a Default. So 39 E. III. In the Record it was — and in the Nisi Prius it was — and it was amended. Now there is a modern Case, Croke Eliz. 222, 256, &c. in the Venire one of the Jurors was called Samuel Sutton, and in the Distingas Saul: But it appearing to be the Misprision of the Clerk, and that the Writ was right, they held it was amendable by Common Law. And Brook's Amend. Placita 27. the Count or Declaration was ad damnum an hundred Pounds, the Nisi Prius was to the Damage only of an hundred Shillings, and the Court ordered the Nisi Prius to be amended, as being only the Misprision of the Clerk. Now that goes a great Way, for the Teste there had no Writ to try it; but yet that is adjudged to be amendable. And so in that Book Placita 24. and in divers other Places. So that it hath been always observed in common Practice as amendable, as being Vitium Clerici, Brook's Placita 26 and 29. Fitzberbert 16, 17 and 29. These are all Cases at Common Law, and so far will justify the Amendment in our Case. And in Fitz. Amend. 43. There is a Case to shew, that where there is a Prejudice of the Party an Error may be amended, a Distingas is return'd, where there was a Default in the Teste and the Jurors Names. The Teste, &c. was amended, for they took it before the Roll was made up. There is another Case the 40th of E. III. the Process was discontinued after the Appearance of the Defendant, and it was amended. There is likewise 44 E. III. (For I meddle not with those since the Statutes of Amendments). There was a Writ awarded against M. and G. the Process was against M. only; and afterwards it was amended; and there it is said both the Roll and the Writ may afterwards be amended, and they were amended accordingly.

My Lord, I cite these Cases to shew that Amendments were made by the Common Law, and the Statutes cannot make any Alteration, tho' they should not extend to the Crown. I believe there are not in the old Books many Instances of Proceedings by Information; but that seems a great Argument to me, that this Nicety that hath crept into these Proceedings are not by Common Law; in our old Books they are very little taken notice of; but it seems these Exceptions were not taken then, if they had we should have found them; but the Books are quite otherwise. Now if the Amendments were allowed at Common Law, I believe none can distinguish and say, That it shall not be amended in our Case, for I think they cannot be distinguished.

There are some other modern Cases wherein greater Things have been done. First the Case of Sir John Ashby, that has been cited (ante 677.) that it is an Amendment of a Judgment that was entered by Disclaimer. In the Nisi Prius it was right, but all was left out in the Judgment. And it was objected that it was not amendable, because it was not in the same Term, and that none of the Statutes of Amendments extended to such Cases; yet upon Examination it was amended, because it was only a Misprision of the Clerk by mistaking his Book, there it was thought to be in the Power of the Court by Common Law to do right. Then in the Reversal of the Attainder of the Lord Stafford, there were Proceedings in Court fourteen or fifteen Years; but by Neglect of the Clerk there were no Foot-steps of any Thing appear'd, and yet there was a Rule for a Record to be made, whereby there was a Judgment of Reversal enter'd. Now this Court did think they had a Power to set the Records right, and they gave them leave to make a Record, in order to make a Reversal of that Attainder: And if it may be done against the Crown, no doubt it may be done for the Crown, for that it is but setting Things right. There have been other Cases cited, as Harris's Case in Cro. Jac. 502. post. 704. and that was a very extraordinary Amendment. It was an Indictment for a Nuisance. Not Guilty was pleaded indeed, but the Clerk who entred it join'd not Issue, and the Verdict was against the Defendant, and no Issue join'd; that was omitted; but the Return was allow'd. Now if we had done so, we should have had a great Noise about it. But here the Court allow'd Amendment to be made; and it was amended, as being done by the Clerk's Negligence, and this in the Time of another Clerk: And these Words were inserted for it.

And it was said, if such Faults should not be amended, many Courts would be deprived of their Jurisdiction. And I am sure, if the Courts will not not amend these Matters, it will overturn many Trials.

There is another Case: 'Tis in Crooke James, 529. Parker vers. Sir John Curson & Ux. And that was a Trial at Bar. The Issue was enter'd, Et prædict. Johannes Curson & Magdalena veniunt, & prædicta Magdalena dicit, quod non est inde culpabilis; & de hoc ponit se super Patriam, & Attornatus Domini Regis similiter. After the Trial at Bar, it was amended by the Docket; and there it was only, Quod J. Curson, Mil. & Magdalena Ux. ejus, placitant non Cul. which was only a short Memorandum: Which, I think, goes a great way further than what we labour for.

There is that Case too, 1 Siderfin. 243. between the King and Godfrey. There the Award was Vicecomitibus, when it should have been Vicecomiti; for there was but one Sheriff: But upon Examination, they found it was the Misprision of the Clerk; and they set it right.

L. C. J. Holt. They indeed set it right; but how? Not by Amendment: But it was inserted as a Memorandum on the Roll, and there was but one Sheriff.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with Submission, that's as well: For we do not do so much; for that was done after the Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. There was no altering the Writ.

Mr. Att. Gen. If we should ask the Court to alter what we did before the Trial, it would be said we should have mov'd it before, and not after. Now to enter that after the Trial, was much more than we ask.

There is another Case which had the Opinion of the Court, the Case of the Warden of the Fleet; where you were of Opinion to amend, &c.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not amended yet.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I cite it as an Authority, that you would have amended it, if you had any thing to amend it by.

L. C. J. Holt. I did not tell you what I would have done.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord I was not in Court, but I heard it was so. If it was not, I was misinformed. There was a Commission taken out against him, as being guilty of several voluntary Escapes, and a Day was given to appear at the King's Bench the 8th of January. The Appearance was the 20th of January; but the Record was not enter'd itself till the 3d of February following; so that there was a perfect Discontinuance.

This was not seen at first; but on Consideration of the Court, they found it out; and the Council moved the Court to see it right. The Court made a Doubt of their Power; but they enquired when it came in, whether in time or not; and what Minutes were for it. It seems the proper Minutes were not to be found. Now that being so, it would be strange for the Court to make any Amendments, without any Copy to amend by. If the Clerk's Man had come in, and produced the Minutes, I take it, the Sense of the Court was, that they would amend it; tho' that was agreed to be a Discontinuance.

Now I cite that Case, not that you did amend it; but would have done it, if you had any thing to amend it by: And there was a Discontinuance of the Party. Now if they could have amended that, this may be done here for a much better Reason. There was a Discontinuance, both before and after the Trial. I think we have much stronger Reason for Amendment, than was in that Case: Tho' I must say, as to that Case, the Bar were of Opinion, that the Clerk might have enter'd it as on that Day, and ought to have done it; and therefore they thought it was amendable. And if that were true, no question it was amendable. But however the Opinion of that Case was, it is an Argument to me, that the Court would have amended it, had they any thing to amend it by: For it was the Opinion of this Court it is amendable. But I think that Case is no Authority for them: And whether that be done by the Help of the Statute or no, is not material: And the Court would have amended it, if it had been the first Day of the Term.

This I take to be the Opinion of the Court; and that they did not amend it, because they had no Authority to amend it by.

There is one Matter more, which is, That this Slip is the Fault of the Clerk: For that the Mistaking of the Writ is the plain Act of the Clerk; and in all the Cases it has been held, Acts of the Clerk to be amendable by the Common Law: And for that there are a thousand Cases. This is in Point of Law.

I would beg Leave to cite a few Authorities in Crooke's Eliz. 'Twas agreed, a Venire Teste'd out of Term, is a Misprision of the Clerk.

L. C. J. Holt. There are abundance of the like Cases.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe a Thousand, therefore I will not cite them.

We submit to your Lordship, whether it be right, and wants no Amendment: Or if it be not right, whether it be not amendable by Statute or Common Law. And I hope we shall have the Benefit of the Verdict.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, There has been so much said already, that I shall say very little. I shall only cite two or three Cases. The Question is only this: Whether a Misprision of the Clerk, is not amendable in the same Term? For that we have 10 Ed. III. 20. there was an Error amended of 63 for 59. I think all the other Cases have been mentioned already. The 5th of Ed. III. has been cited, and it is strong. I have thought it always sufficient, without any Statute of Amendments: And those that have been amended by Common Law, will be Authorities in this Case. Now that the Court have always taken on them, as their Duty to amend the Faults of the Clerks in any Entry, or Process, or Continuance, the Books are full in it; and I hope it will be amended here.

Mr. Broderick. I pray your Lordship's Favour, to spare me a few Words on the other Side. I see so much Warmth in this Case, that I must beg Leave to preface something, before I speak to the Point of Law.

Mr. Att. Gen. You might have wav'd that.

Mr. Broderick. The Occasion of my saying that, was, That Mr. Attorney said, There had been a Noise about the Town concerning this Exception. And that a whole Party—

Mr. Att. Gen. There has been so—

Mr. Broderick. I would not be believ'd to concern myself any otherwise for this Man, more or less, than for any other Client. Nay, what I am concern'd in, and have to say at present, doth concern every Subject in England, as well as Mr. Tutchin.

But

But when 'twas said, That there was a Discontinuance in the Case of the Warden of the Fleet, which, after the long Transaction of that Cause, was not observed by the Council for him; and that they were clearer-sighted for the Observer; I could not take that otherwise, than as meant to myself, who was Council for the Warden of the Fleet, and am now for this Defendant. I confess, I did not observe that Fault in the Case of the Warden of the Fleet (nor ever had a perfect Copy of that Record, to enable me to do it): And I must own at the same time, that I had not the Fortune to make the Discovery in the present Case. The Exception was taken before I was any ways concern'd in the Cause: And when 'twas made, I thought it a good Exception; and made no Difficulty of accepting my Fee to speak to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I had another Meaning in it. I knew not that Mr. Broderick was Council for the Warden of the Fleet.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I believe Mr. Broderick is afraid of my Fate in this Case: I have been very much reflected upon for being Council in this Case; and it has been spread about all the Counties in England, by Dyer the News-writer, That I broach'd seditious Principles at the Trial, and was reprimanded by your Lordship for it: And I believe Mr. Broderick is afraid of the like Scandal.

L. C. J. Holt. You must not be afraid of Scandals. Dyer is very familiar with me too sometimes: But you need not fear such a little scandalous Paper of such a scandalous Author.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I am not much concerned at it, seeing it comes from him.

Mr. Broderick. I must agree, That this is a Point of great Concern to the Crown; because all Prosecutions for the Crown may be affected by it, as Mr. Attorney General said: But on the other Side, I beg Leave to say, That (whatever the Person now before the Court may be) it is of great Concern to the Subject too: For the Rule in this Case, will be a Rule in the Case of every other Subject of England; so that the Concern is great on both Sides.

I must beg Pardon of the Court, if, in answering off-hand to very learned and elaborate Arguments, from the short Notes which I have been able to take of them, I happen to be disorder'd in Method: I must take Leave to offer such short Observations upon them, and give such Answers to them, as I can at present; as my Memory suggests the Objections to me, tho' not in the same Order in which they were deliver'd. But I will use my Endeavour, not to omit the taking some short Notice of the general Heads, under which I apprehend all the Objections will fall.

I would observe (which I think would be an Answer to a great deal that has been said on the other Side) That our Law-Books make a very great Difference between the King's Prosecutions in his own Name, as a Civil Right, and Prosecutions wholly in his Capacity of King, as he is Head of the Commonwealth; and in the Exercise of his Royal Office, to affect the Subject with, or punish him for Crimes thereby charged upon him. I agree, the Cases cited by Sir Thomas Powis and Mr. Attorney General, of Amendment of the King's Writ of Qu. Impedit, and some others; and that the Common Law gave greater Indulgences to the Crown, in the Prosecution of its Civil Rights, than to any Subject. The King was known to be employ'd in the Concerns of the whole Kingdom; to have the Care of all his People upon him: Whereas the Subject had only his personal and private Affairs to look after. And 'tis no wonder that the Law should adjudge, that great Allowances were to be made to the Crown, as to its own particular Rights; That it should not be tied up to so strict Rules as the Subject, who was supposed to attend his own Affairs only. This is the Reason generally given, why the Crown had such a Prerogative, that greater and more favourable Allowances should be made in its Suits, than in those of its Subject.

But it has hitherto (as far as I have been able to observe) been taken, That the Law was very nice and tender in all Prosecutions, that aim at the charging the Subject with Crimes and Penalties. It seems to be a new Light, sprung up of late, which has discover'd, that there is a greater Necessity for that Privilege in Criminal Prosecutions, than in Civil. The Opinion of the successive Ages, which have made favourable Acts for amending and curing of particular Defects in Legal Proceedings, seems to have been much otherwise. In many of these, all Criminal Prosecutions, of all kinds, are expressly excepted: And where they are not, I must say I have not heard yet quoted; nor can find any Case of Authority, where those Statutes were interpreted to extend to Prosecutions for Crimes. I perceive, the Council for her Majesty in this Cause, have in their Arguments relied very much upon Amendments made by the Common Law. I can't pretend to be now prepared to run through each particular Case: In general, it cannot be denied, that several Amendments were made, by a Power that the Court had at Common Law; but we think there never was any which came up to this Case. And indeed, if all the Amendments in the Multitude of Cases that have been cited in these elaborate Arguments, are allowed as good at Common Law; it would make one wonder, where the Necessity was of making an express Statute, for the Amendment of a Letter or Syllable (and of the nice Doubts upon that) or of the other subsequent Statutes of Joefails and Amendments. The Court, to me, by these Authorities, would seem to be arm'd with a sufficient Power to have done the Business, without the Help of any Statute.

Tho' her Majesty's Council rely principally upon the Statute of 8 Hen. VI. yet in regard they do not wave, or give up the Aid of the Statute 32 Hen. VIII. (For Mr. Attorney takes notice, that there is a Quare in my Lord Dyer (Dyer 353) Whether the King, in an Information of Intrusion, should not have the Advantage of that Act? And he has cited Lord Dyer, 346. of an Information Qui tam, &c. to be within the Act: And that Lord Hales, in Lord Fitzwater's Case, held, That 'twas reasonable, that Criminal Prosecutions should be aided) I think it will be very proper to consider how the Law has been taken upon that Statute: And to see whether the Reason of those Cases, won't go as far backwards as to the Statute, 8 Hen. VI. The Words of the Statute, 32 Hen. VIII. C. 30. are not expressly restrain'd to Actions or Suits between Party and Party; though the Word Party be mentioned in the Statute, both as to the Plaintiffs or Demandants, as to the Tenants or Defendants. And the enacting Clause is, That from thenceforth, after Issue try'd for the Party Plaintiff or Demandant, or for the Party Tenant or Defendant, in any Manner of Action or Suit at the Common Law; the Judges should proceed to give Judgment in the same, notwithstanding any of the Mistakes Mistakes therein mentioned, in like Form as if no such Default or Negligence had been. It is true, as Mr. Attorney has cited it, that 'tis left a Quare, as it stands printed in my Lord Dyer, which was in the 18th Year of Queen Elizabeth: But even in that very Case, 'twas held, 22 Eliz. that the Statute did not extend to it: As appears in 1 Rolls Reports, fol. 447. as well as by Blackmore's Case 8. Cro. 163. where 'tis expressly said, That the Statute 32 H. VIII. extends not to Pleas of the Crown. And this Point is expressly agreed by the whole Court, in Sherington Talbot's Case, 1 Cro. 312.

A Venire Facias bearing Teste out of the Term, and an Issue tried upon it, is a Misconveyance of Process, salved after Verdict, by those Words in the Statute of 32 H. VIII.

So a Venire awarded, which bears Teste on a Sunday, is adjudg'd to be aided within those Words.

Yet in Theobald and Newton's Case, Style 307, there was a Suit upon the Statute of Inmates; and the Disfringas bore Teste on a Sunday, and out of Term. Exception was taken to this after Verdict, and held not to be aided by the Statutes of Jeofails. I thought it necessary, by mentioning the two former Cases, to state which of the Statutes it was, which would have remedied the Fault, if the Statute had extended to the Suit itself; because the Reporter (which is no Wonder in him) so far mistook the Sense of the Court, as to omit the material Statute, and to mention the 18th of Eliz. and 21. Jac. in neither of which Laws there are any Words which reach the Case; tho' in this Act of 32 H. VIII. there are.

And in Lord Fitzwater's Case, cited by Mr. Attorney, tho' my Lord Hales does say, The Case of the King will often stand in need of the Amendment of a wrong Venire; and therefore he was of Opinion, to bring him within the Statute of 16 and 17 Car. II. which has very extensive Words; yet he allows the Distinction between his Criminal Prosecution, and Civil Action; as appears in 3 Keb. 485, 519.

In Percy's Case, 21 Car. II. 1 Vent. 17, 35. an Information of Forgery at Common Law, laid the Forging to be of a Release at Sherborn; and the giving it in Evidence, to be at Dorchester. The Defendant was convicted by a Jury de Vicineto of Dorchester only: 'Twas adjudg'd to be a Mis-trial; and a new Venire was awarded. For the King, 'twas laboured to support the Trial by the Word Suit: For, say they, the Information is Secuta Domini Regis; so that the Word is extensive enough to reach this Prosecution: And 'tis plainly out of the Exception, which excepts no Information, but those upon Penal Statutes. But the Court held, Any Information, tho' at Common Law, was not remedied by the Words or Intent of the Act.

In the principal Case of Sherington Talbot, 1 Cro. 311. Jones, 320. 2. Ro. Ab. 619. Information, in nature of a Quo Warranto, for claiming Liberty of free Warren in three Villis, in the Forest of D. Defendant disclaims in the Forest, and in all but one Vill; and says, That that Vill is Parcel of the Manor of S. and prescribes for free Warren in his Manor; Issue on that Prescription, and the Visne is from the Vill, not from the Manor; held to be mistried, and not aided by any of the Statutes of Jeofails: Tho' not within the Exception; because the Statutes do not extend to the King's Case. He not being named. The then Judges thought this a Reason; which will equally extend to the King's Case, upon the former Statutes of Amendments. And Mr.

Noy, a very learned Predecessor of Mr. Attorney General's, did not venture to carry the Point further for his Master, than to a Peradventure he might have the Advantage of those Acts, in case of a Quare Impedit, or the Civil Right, where the Suit is in the King's proper Name, and not by his Stile of King only.

Nothing is more plain, than the Difference which the Law makes between Cases where the King prosecutes his Right in his own Name, as for a Civil Right, and where the Prosecution is in his Capacity of King, and in the Exercise of the Royal Authority. If the King (Henricus Rex) brings a Quare Impedit, and dies before Judgment, the very Writ abates; because Henricus Rex, who was named by his proper Name, ceases to be. But if the Prosecution be pro Domino Rege, tho' the King in individo be dead, yet Dominus Rex in genere not being dead, the Information or Indictment shall stand, to be prosecuted by the Successor. Yet all Process upon them, wherein his own Name is used, and not his Name of Kingly Office only, shall fall; because the particular Person is dead.

According to this Distinction, I do agree, That where the King sues in his own Name for a Civil Right, his Suit has more Favour allow'd to it than that of a common Person. And so far goes the Case in Blackmore's Case, 8 Cro. 156. before-mentioned, cited by Sir Thomas Powis; That a Writ of Quare Impedit, which was presentere for presentare, was amended; being the King's Case. Tho' had it been the Case of a common Person, it could not have been amended: For no original Writ was at Common Law amendable in the Case of a common Person. But that an Information or Indictment ever found Favour beyond, or equal with a Civil Action, I never heard before; nor find any Authority quoted to warrant it now. I would take Leave to mention the Case, 13 Car. II. in Scan. Hardress, 217. (9) Pitober and Jones: 'Twas an Information upon the Act of Navigation for importing Spices, being the Growth of Asia, Africa, or America, from Holland beyond the Seas, not being the Place where such Goods were first and most usually shipp'd for Transportation, contra Formam Statuti. The Defendant pleaded, he did not import them contra Formam Statuti, and Issue upon it; and Verdict against the Defendant. He moved in Arrest of Judgment, That 'twas not laid, that these Commodities were not of the Growth of Holland. To this 'twas said, That the Verdict would help that, it necessarily implying it: For that they were laid to be of the Growth of Asia, Africa, or America, and imported from Holland; which shews those were distinct Places: And the Defendant could not else have been found guilty, contra Formam Statuti. Yet, after long Debate, the Exception was held to be a good one, and the Judgment was arrested.

I must observe, That the Council for the Informer in this Case, had not the Courage so much as to hope for Aid from, or mention the Statutes of Jeofails in this Case. They cite there Johnson's Case, 2. Cro. 609. and Cholmley's, P. 1. Cro. 464. where in Criminal Prosecutions reasonable Intentments after a Verdict, are allowed at Common Law. But tho' nothing was wanting in this Case, but an Averment that Holland was not within Asia, Africa, or America (which must necessarily be proved at the Trial, else the Defendant could not have been convicted) they either did not know, that the want of an Averment of a thing necessary to be averred, if Issue be taken upon another Point, is aided as a Mispleading, by the Statute 32 Henry VIII. (tho' the Cases of it are numberless); or they did not think there was any Colour for offering to extend that Statute to a Penal Law, with regard to the Interest the King has in the Prosecution, tho' a common Person was the Informer; and tho' there is no Exception of Informations on Penal Laws.

As to the Cases cited on the other Side, of Amendments at the Common Law by the King's Prerogative; I must rely upon the Difference I have already taken between Criminal and Civil Cases; and that there are not any Instances of Amendments in Criminal Prosecutions. As to several other Cases, which have been cited by the other Side, of Amendments upon Returns to Certiorari's, Returns upon Writs of Error, &c. Those, with Submission, will not come up at all to the present Case. When a Record is certified upon a Certiorari, &c. the Parchment annexed to the Writ, is supposed to be the real original Record; and that remains in the Court here, and is become by the Return a Record of this Court. Where, by the Course of the Court, 'tis enter'd upon a Roll here, if in the Entry it varies from that that is the true Record, it is the Duty of the Court to take Care, that the Mis-Entry be rectified; and the Record, which is transcribed here, made agreeable to the Original. The rectifying such Mis-Entries, or Mis-Copyings, are not Amendments of Faults in a Record (for that faulty mistaken Entry is not really the Record) but making true Entries of the Record. And upon the like Reason was the Mistake rectified in Sir H. Tufton's Case, 1. Cro. 144. where there was a Consent of the Parties for entering a Judgment by Disclaimer, by Virtue or Pretence of Letters Patents, bearing Date 7 Jac. which Words were inserted in the Paper-Book, by the Attorney General's own Hand; yet omitted by the Clerk, in the entering it upon the Roll: There, upon great Examination, and Consideration of the Circumstances, all Parties consenting, that Mis-Entry was corrected; being, as the Book says, no more than when a Special Verdict is mis-enter'd; which is rectified by the Notes of the Clerk of the Assize. But it is very much insisted on, That the Statute 8 H. VI. C. 12. shall extend to this Case, because there are particular Criminal Prosecutions excepted therein, of which this is not one. I do not find that there has been one Authority cited, when it was ever held, that that Law extended to any Pleas of the Crown. And I take the uniform Opinion of near three Centuries, since that Statute, to be against it.

Mr. Attorney relies much upon the Case of the King against Percival and Godfrey, and others, Sid. 244. where the Venire for the trying the Defendants, upon an Indictment for a Riot, was directed Vicecomitibus de Canterbury, and returned by R. S. Vicecomes; the City having in truth but one Sheriff: There, upon Examination of the Sheriff himself upon Oath, in Court (who swore that City had but one Sheriff) there was an Amendment. But what was that? Not of any thing that was the Act of the Court: But the Sheriff adds to his Endorsement upon the Writ (when he had answered single) There that was not any other Sheriff; as it appears in the same Book, and in 1 Keb. 900 (17) 901 (75): And this the Court held to be well, upon the Authority of the Book of 39 H. VI. f. 40. where a Writ was directed Coronatoribus, and returned by one Coroner only, yet held to be well: For, say the Court, we won't take notice there are more Coroners than one. And so Just. Wyndham said, in this Case, We shall intend but one Sheriff, unless more appear; 1 Keb. 901.

A good Part of Mr. Attorney's Argument seems to tend to the making it not necessary, or at least disputable whether it be necessary, that the Disfringas should be Teste'd on the same Day that the Award is. Won't that Argument turn another way than 'tis intended? If it be a doubtful thing, whether it be right or not; I doubt it will be an Error in Judgment, like the making out an improper Writ in the Debet and Detinet, where it should be in the Detinet only: And then, tho' it is a Default of the Clerk, 'twill not be such a Default as will be within the Aid of the Statute, if that should be held to extend to the Case. If it were a doubtful thing, it can't be said he had a certain Rule to walk by: But he ventur'd upon his own Judgment, in which if he has chanced to mistake, 'tis not amendable as a thing of course. But in truth, if it were to be enquir'd into, I believe 'twould be found not to be an Error in Judgment in the Clerk, but a Mistake of a Matter of Fact, in taking Sunday to be the first Day of the Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. That will not alter it.

Mr. Broderick. There has been another Case cited; the King and Walcut; where a Reversal of an Attainder was pronounced, and the Judgment of Reversal actually enter'd up; yet being done by Surprise, the Entry of the Reversal was set aside, and razed out of the Record. Surely that cannot be an Authority for any. There the Entry was wholly irregular, contrary to the Rules of the Court: For the Judgment of the Court is not complete, till the End of the Term.

L. C. J. Holt. 'Tis in the Breast of the Court during the whole Term.

Mr. Broderick. And if any one within the Term, without the Direction of the Court, will enter a Thing as the Act of the Court; shall not the Court have a Power to reform that Irregularity, and do themselves right? This is not an Amendment of a Record, but a Reforming of an ill Practice; a preventing of an Attempt to make that an Act and Record of the Court, which really is not so. Neither does my Lord Macclesfield's Case bear any Proportion to this.

There is no Question but that a Court, which is intrusted with the Custody and Preservation of the Records wherein other Persons are concerned, may take care upon any Mischance; and that they have a Power to put things into their right State: As in case of Fire, or any inevitable Accidents, the Court, incident to their Trust of the Custody of the Records, and by the Authority they have to do Right and Justice to all Persons, must have a Power to supply such Losses.

As to the Case of the Warden of the Fleet, there was no Amendment made: But if there had, it would not have come up to this Case. I may, I am sure, safely affirm, that the Court did declare, That was not to be esteem'd a Criminal Prosecution; in regard there was not to be a Judgment to punish the Party, but the Proceeding was only to transfer the Estate to the Crown by way of Forfeiture.

The Council who have argued for the Queen, have not cited any one Authority, of an Amendment in a Criminal Case, within the Statute of 14 E. III. or 8 H. VI. C. 12. or proving, that those Statutes extend to Cases of that kind: But they call upon us, since the Words seem to be large enough to reach both (especially those of 8 H. VI. where there there are some particular Criminal Prosecutions mention'd and excepted) to produce some Authority, to establish the Distinction between Criminal and Civil Cases. We think the daily Practice in Civil Cases, and the want of a single Instance in a Criminal one, carries a strong Argument, if we could go no further: But I think we do not want an express Authority in this Point too. Orde and Morton, Trin. 11. Jac. I. Ro. Ab. 201. There a Writ of Venire Facias out of the B. R. was Venire Fac. duodecim, &c. coram Nobis apud Westmonasterium, ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia: But the Roll was well, omitting the Words apud Westmonasterium. 'Twas adjudg'd the Writ might be amended by the Roll; for 'tis but Matter of Form. This was a Default in the Body of the Writ, and amended by the Statute of 8 H. VI. as a Default of the Clerk.

Yet Brigs and Thompson's, &c. Tel. 60. 111. In an Information upon the Statute 21 H. VIII. against Spiritual Persons taking Farms, the Award of the Venire Facias upon the Roll was right, returnable ubicunque, but the Writ itself was returnable coram nobis, omitting ubicunque, and so it did not answer the Award upon the Roll. This certainly had been amendable in a Civil Plea; but the Report tells us, that Judgment was staid upon it. And, my Lord, I will beg the Liberty to make this Observation upon the Case of the King against Percival and Godfry (which is so much relied on). There are some Cases of so odious a Nature, and move such Indignation, that there is a Danger of Things being pass'd over unobserved, which would not have been admitted in another Case. That was the Case of one of the King's Messengers, employed in His Majesty's immediate Service, barbarously insulted and abused in his Inn at Canterbury, by the Defendants and a great Rabble of People: As the Offence was very flaming, the Repentment of the Court ran high; and they thought it reasonable to do in that Case, what perhaps in an ordinary one they might not easily have done: Yet what was then done, is now to be cited for a Precedent in every Criminal Case whatsoever. I must say the same in this Case; whatever my Client is charged with, the Rule given in his Case may affect every Man in England, who shall hereafter be charged criminally: And therefore I doubt not your Lordship will very well consider of it.

I hope, my Lord, I have given some Answer to most of the Things that have been insisted on; and that upon the whole Matter, this Mistake will not be accounted a Thing amendable by Law.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, in Answer to what has been said, I shall not preface what I have to say with any Apology for being of Council with Mr. Tutchin, tho' I have been egregiously misrepresented in what I did, as Council for him at Guild-Hall. I know your Lordship is no Respecter of Persons, but will have the same Regard to one Defendant as another.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am not concern'd at any Thing that has been written or printed about that Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. We will take no notice of that.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, as to what Mr. Attorney-General and Sir Thomas Powis have said, I beg Leave in the first Place to take notice wherein it is we agree, and in what we shall differ. First, we agree that this Cause is a Cause of the greatest Consequence. Mr. Attorney tells your Lordship, it concerns all the Proceedings of the Crown; and I hope

I may be pardoned if I say, it is of no less Concern to the Defendant and the Subjects of England. I would therefore pay that Respect to the Court, not hastily to speak to a Point of this Moment, but shall desire to have Time to look on those Cases that have been mentioned.

L. C. J. Holt. If you will do this, you may consider the Statute of H. VI. for those Words are general, and not relative either to Civil or Criminal Cases in particular. It remedies the Mischief between Plaintiff and Defendant generally.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Broderick has not taken notice of that Objection that my Lord Coke takes notice of, Because they are not excepted, therefore they are included.

L. C. J. Holt. I would have you consider why it is not within the Words of the Statute. It is as plain that it is the Fault of the Clerk as can be; he had the Roll before him, therefore it must be the Mistake of the Clerk. The Award of the Writ is the Act of the Court, and that was the 23d; now this Writ did bear Date the 24th, and I believe we did not award the Writ the 24th, therefore it is to be judged they mistook the Time of the Teste. For the Record says the 23d, and this Writ says not till the 24th. Now why should not this be within the Statute of H. VI. for it is the Misprision of the Clerk? And then the Question is, whether that Statute does not extend to this Matter.

Mr. J. Powel. I do indeed question whether any Statute of Jeofails extends to it; but this Statute does not, as appears by 8 Coke, because they are excepted. There are Indictments of Felony and Treason that are excepted. Now that this is a Misprision of the Clerk, is plain, because he had the Award of the Court.

Sir T. Powis. I think all agree it was perfectly a Mistake, and that makes it a disputable Case; I do not stand on it as if it were right, but grant it was a perfect Mistake; and then that Objection is clear, that Criminal Matters are not within the Statutes of Jeofails, and it is certain most of them are excepted, viz. Indictments, in this Statute of H. VI. where it is said what are excepted, &c. 'Tis true you cannot amend what are excepted, where the Party was in Danger of Life; but it leaves out in inferior Matters; therefore it seems, that whatever was said of Criminal Matters, was intended of the greater Criminal Matters, and so was the Opinion in the Case of —

L. C. J. Holt. That was a Civil Cause, but we thought we could not amend it: For it would be contrary to our Duty as Judges, to alter a Record. And therefore we refused even in Point of Scandal in that Case; also on Examination we found that we could not amend it, contrary to Truth.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, we had not in that Case any thing to amend by; but here we have a Roll to direct us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship indulge them from Time to Time to put it off, we shall never have done.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I am not prepared to answer what has been said, for I did not expect this Motion would have been made.

Mr. Att. Gen. That we may be once at an End, I would fain hear what they have to say, and whether they have any more Exceptions.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Exceptions to make?

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we have no more Exceptions to the Matter we are now upon, which is setting aside the Trial. You know, Mr. Attorney, there are two Things incumbent on a Defendant's Council. One is, to set aside the Trial if he can, and that is the Thing we are now upon: The other is, to move in Arrest of Judgment. Now Mr. Attorney well knows 'twill be a Waiver of our Motion for a new Trial, to stir any thing in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. He that makes Exceptions, should be prepared to give all his Exceptions together.

Mr. J. Powel. This is not a Motion to set aside the Trial.

Mr. Mountague. Yes, my Lord, it is to set aside the Trial; not to arrest Judgment being given upon the Verdict.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, if they have any more Exceptions to offer, I desire they may let us have them now.

Mr. J. Powel. If there be an Error in the Writ there must be a Disfringas de novo, there must be a new Disfringas only issued, you cannot make it a Discontinuance of the whole Proceedings; but there must be a new Award of a Disfringas, the Error wherein is the Cause of Exception; if we should give our Opinion that it is not amendable, we should try him next Week.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they should lay down all their Exceptions together.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I know you do not expect in this Case any thing should be done otherwise than what is usual in all other Cases. Now I appeal to Mr. Attorney, if it be not the constant Course here, to move first for a new Trial; and if you object any thing in Arrest of Judgment, it is generally said, you have waved your Motion for a new Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. No, that is not so.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we are now in your Judgment, whether this Man shall be tried again, or not? And if we shall happen to prevail for a new Trial, then it will be a Disadvantage to our Client to have told our Exceptions to the Information, for then Mr. Attorney will pray to amend.

L. C. J. Holt. You are so far in the right, if indeed here were a Verdict ——— that is unquestionable, that is your proper Time to move in Arrest of Judgment; but if this Verdict be not right, it is too soon to make Exceptions to the Information. Then we shall tell you what we have to do.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am content they should keep their Learning to themselves; but, my Lord, if they will not do that, I hope you will not give them further Time.

L. C. J. Holt. We shall give them but till To-morrow.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Mountague, it is a strange Thing that you shall make an Exception, and not be ready to maintain it; at this rate any Prosecution whatever may be hung up and delayed. If this be the way, we must give you the less Time.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I shall entirely submit to what the Court shall think fit to order; but 'tis now pretty late in the Day, and your Lordship knows 'tis a Sitting this Afternoon in Middlesex, and To-morrow is another Sitting in London, where I am already retained to be, and I know not how late your Lordship may keep us in both Places: Your Lordship seldom discharges us till late at Night, and it will be impossible for me to look into the Authorities which have been quoted, much less to consider of any thing that will be fit to offer in Answer to both these learned Arguments, in a Matter which I must profess is altogether new to me.

Mr. J. Powel. There are Amendments made every Day.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I hope I shall shew you it has not been done yet, in any such Case as this, neither can it be done, with Submission.

L. C. J. Holt. You should have prepared for it. I will tell you a Case at Hicks's-Hall, where I myself took the like Exception, but it was over-ruled by Sir William Smith, the then Chairman of the Sessions. In an Indictment against —, for a wrongful Entry, &c. there was a Mistake in the Time of the Entry alledged, &c. And they amended the Fault by the Statute of E. VI.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I hope you will give them but till To-morrow.

Mr. Mountague. I hope you will not press that, Mr. Attorney, who have been so lately a Nisi Prius Practicer.

Mr. J. Powel. You are not press'd in it; none can imagine you came here in this Case, and that you were not provided to defend it. I hope you are as ready as Mr. Broderick; he is but your Assistant, and yet he was ready.

Mr. Mountague. It will be impossible for me to be more ready To-morrow. I will rather go on with it now, than do it To-morrow. This is a new Motion, and I did not in the least expect it.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is no new Motion, I believe none would believe but it would be made.

Mr. J. Powel. Why can't you be as ready as Mr. Broderick is?

Mr. Mountague. I do not pretend to set myself upon the same Level with Mr. Broderick: Tho' he be ready to give an Answer extempore to the Arguments that have been made, I hope your Lordship will indulge me with a Day or two more to consider of what has been said, since the Question now before the Court is of that Concern to all the Subjects of England. My Lord, I desire we may have but till Thursday next, and by that Time I will undertake to be ready.

Mr. J. Powel. When you make an Exception, you ought to be ready to defend it.

Mr. Mountague. It was impossible for me to foresee what Course the Attorney General would take to obviate the Objections I have made. I must own, I did not expect this Motion for an Amendment; I thought of that the least of any thing, because I never knew the like Attempt in a Criminal Prosecution. And since Mr. Attorney General has been pleased to countenance the Exception I have taken, with a Week's Consideration of it; I ought in Civility to pay as much Respect to the Arguments he has made in Answer to it. And therefore I must beg a little Time of your Lordship, as well to shew my Respect to Mr. Attorney General, as to discharge my Duty to my Client.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire none of your Respect.

Mr. Mountague. I hope, Mr. Attorney, you are not angry because I would pay Respect to you.

Cur^r. Well, take Time till Thursday.

November 23. 1704.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Attorney, have you any thing to move?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I attend here only upon the Account of Mr. Tutchin.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Who is for Mr. Tutchin?

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I am of Council for Mr. Tutchin, and I am To-day to shew your Lordship Cause why the Motion made the other Day by the Council for the Queen to amend the Teste of the Writ of Distingas cannot be allow'd. And since the Court hath been pleas'd to indulge me with a little Time to think of the learned Arguments that have been made both by Sir Thomas Powis, and Mr. Attorney General; and to look into the Authorities which have been cited, I hope I shall take up less of your Lordship's Time than if I had been put to answer extempore to the several Matters that have been insist'd upon. For I must beg Leave to say, that upon Consideration of what was then offer'd, I do find that a great many things that were then said, do not carry that Weight along with them as I did then apprehend. And tho' I do not question but every thing that can be thought of has been said for the obtaining such an Amendment, yet I have the Satisfaction at last to find that there is but one Case, and that is what your Lordship was pleas'd to mention, of the Judgment of Sir William Smith, that looks like a Precedent for this Amendment. My Lord, in speaking to this Matter, I shall not trouble the Court with many new Citations out of Fitzherbert and Brook's Abridgment, Title Amendment; for I perceive the Gentlemen on the other Side have looked over the Bed-Roll of Cases which are to be met with there, and find that they have taken notice of every thing that will make to their Purpose; my Business therefore shall be, closely to apply myself to the Consideration of what they on the other Side did insist on; and I hope I shall be able to shew to your Lordship that nothing they have said will warrant this Amendment.

But before I enter upon the Argumentative Part, I must beg Leave shortly to state the Case itself, and shew how it now stands before the Court; and if I mistake in giving an Account of the least Matter of Fact, I desire Mr. Attorney General would interrupt me so far as to set me right; for if we do not agree in the State of the Case, our arguing will be to very little Purpose.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is the Record that is in Dispute, it is not Matter of Fact.

Mr. Mountague. Mr. Attorney, there is something of Fact besides the Record, which is now before the Court. This Information was exhibited in Easter Term last, and the Defendant pleaded to it in Trinity Term; and Issue being then joined, a Venire Facias was awarded, and made returnable the first Day of this Michaelmas Term. On that Day (the Roll says) all the Parties did appear; but none of the Jury came, and thereupon the Court did order, that a Distingas should issue, and be returned hither, Die Jovis proxime post Crast. Animarum: On the Return of the Writ of Distingas, which is now before the Court, the Defendant appear'd in Court, and by his Council took Exception to the Teste of this Writ, because it was not issued as the Roll hath awarded, on the Day he was present in Court, which was the 23d Day of October, but on the next Day, which was the 24th Day of October, when he is supposed to be out of Court; so that the Award has plainly not been complied with, and therefore the Writ which is now before the Court was taken without any Authority from the Court, and the Trial cannot be supported, because the Day and Place mentioned in the Distingas, was not appointed per formam Statuti, in the Presence of the Parties. For these and other Reasons, it was pray'd in his Behalf, that all the Proceedings upon this Distingas should be vacated.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Day is right when the Persons are to appear, and the Award of the Nisi Prius is as it should be.

Mr. Mountague. The Return is Die Jovis prox. post Crastin. Animarum, as it is in the Roll, but the Teste of the Writ is the Day after it was awarded.

L. C. J. Holt. The Award is right.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we own the Award is right on the Roll.

L. C. J. Holt. But the Question is, whether the Teste of the Writ be as it should be?

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, the Writ that is now before you being Teste'd on the 24th of October, cannot be said to be taken out upon any other Day than the 24th of October, and in that it is not pursuant to the Roll. Upon the taking of this Exception, Mr. Attorney was surprized, and could not then say much to it; but desired time to enquire how it came to be so.

Mr. Att. Gen. I could have said as much to it then, as after four Days; it became you to have been as ready.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, Mr. Attorney is a little too hasty for me in this Matter. I intend to do him right, if he'll have Patience to hear me out.

L. C. J. Holt. Come to the Point.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is a popular Argument, and spoken ad captandum Populum.

Mr. Mountague. Mr. Attorney did ask some time to have this Matter enquired into, and that Request was agreed to: And upon Examination it appears that this Writ was actually taken out after the first Day of the Term; and the Clerk being doubtful with himself how to make the Teste, ask'd the Master how to Teste it, and he directed it to be Teste'd the 24th of October; and upon this arises this Motion. The Gentlemen that are of the Queen's Council pray that it may be amended, and the Question is, whether it can be set right; and with Submission, I think it cannot, and that no such Obliteration ought to be made, though the Defendant were found guilty of six times as many Crimes as he stands now charged with. I must agree with Mr. Attorney, in what he says with relation to the Consequence of the Determination of this Point, that it will be a Precedent that will affect all the Proceedings of the Crown in all such Cases. And this it is that makes it to be a Matter of wonderful Consequence to the People, as well as to the Crown; for tho' under the present Administration of Affairs innocent Men may think themselves very safe, yet no body can be sure in after-ages that they shall not fall under violent Prosecutions; and then Slips and Mistakes may be of Service. My Lord, hitherto I may say, all Advantages of this kind have been allowed to Defendants in Criminal Cases; and upon this Occasion it may be observed, that even Actions Qui tam upon Penal Statutes, have always been excepted out of the Statutes of Jeofails; and from hence, I think, arises an Argument a Fortiori, that the Jeofails of Clerks in Prosecutions more penal, are not to be amended. Sir Thomas Powis, in his Argument, did, as I remember, insist upon these two Propositions, and as I take it, he was seconded in them by Mr. Attorney; First, That the Teste of this Writ is amendable by the Common Law: and if not that, Secondly,

It

It is to be amended by the Statutes of Amendments, either by that of 14 E. III. or that of 8 H. VI. And two Reasons were given for this Opinion; First, Because it appears to be a plain Mistake in the Clerk; and Secondly, because they come to move for the Amendment in the same Term wherein the Writ was sued forth and returned.

Now, my Lord, in Answer to both these Reasons and Assertions, I hope I shall make it appear in the first Place, that this Teste cannot be altered, either by the Common Law, or by the Statute Law: And in the next Place, I hope to shew your Lordship that the making the Teste of this Writ to be upon October 24, is not purely a Slip in the Clerk, but does proceed from the Nescience of him that was advised with about it. And altho' this Motion for an Amendment be made the same Term the Error has been committed in; yet it is not in the Power of the Court to set it right.

As to the first of these Particulars, I shall readily agree with Sir Thomas Powis and Mr. Attorney General, That by the Common Law many Things were to be amended without the Help of any Act of Parliament; but the Thing that I deny, and which, with Submission, hath not yet been proved by any Authority that has been quoted, is, That no Error in the Teste of any Process that does issue out of the Court and is returned back again by the Sheriff, can be alter'd by the Rules of the Common Law, and I hope by and by to make it appear, not by any Act of Parliament neither. My Lord Coke in Blackmore's Case, Lib. 8. Fol. 156. b. 157. a. does say, as has been observed, that the Judges by the Common Law may amend the Entry of their own Judgment, or any other Part of the Record, the same Term; but he does not there say, that they may amend any Writ made out and returned by any Officer or Minister of the Court. And the Reason given why they may amend their own Judgments and the Continuance enter'd upon the Roll is, because such things as they themselves do, are said to remain in their own Breasts till the End of the Term: But surely the Actions of another Person, his Disobedience to the Order of the Court, can never be look'd upon as an Act of the Judges. And I cannot see how a Writ taken out in Pais which is never in Court till it be brought thither by the Hands of the Sheriff, can be said to remain in the Breasts of the Judges. The Instances of Amendments by the Common Law which are given by my Lord Coke, are in the Entries of Essoigns and Continuances, and such like Misprisions del Court Mesme: As for Instance in 5 E. III. Fol. 25. W. brought a Præcipe against B. who vouches C. to warranty, and he enters into the Warranty and pleads to Issue, and a Venire facias is awarded, and the Jury is afterward put in respite, and the Entry of that upon the Roll was in this Manner, jurata inter B. and C. that is between the Tenant, and the Vouchee poniter in Respectum, and so it appears on the Roll, whereas it should have been inter W. the Demandant, and C. quem B. vocavit ad Warrantum. Now this was look'd on as the Clerk's Mistake in the Entry of the Order of the Court, and so it was amended, Coke's 8th Report, f. 157. b.

Now, my Lord, with Submission, this Case and all the rest of the Cases that have been mentioned for Amendments at the Common Law will only justify an Amendment of the Roll. And indeed had there been an Error in the Entry of the Award of the Distingas, I should rather think that amendable than this; for 'tis certainly more reasonable that the Court should intermeddle with their own Acts than with the Acts of another. Till this Writ was return'd, annex'd to the Nisi prius Roll, the Court had nothing to do with it. And now this Writ is before the Court, your Lordship is only to judge, whether it be pursuant to your Award or not; if it be not made right, it must be imputed to the Fault of the Person that made it out; and the Court can never be said to be in Fault, if the Clerk employ'd makes out a Writ contrary to Direction; and if the Party concern'd suffer by such Mistake, he may thank himself for employing such an Agent. But Sir Thomas Powis says, that this Amendment is pray'd on Behalf of the Queen, whose Prerogative it is to have many Advantages in Pleading, which the Subject shall not have. My Lord, with Submission to better Judgments, I conceive that for this very Reason the Queen's Council have the less Reason to pray an Amendment. For since they have other Prerogatives to have recourse to, they ought not to ask this besides. Your Lordships will often hearken to us when we move for new Trials in Actions of Debt upon a Bond where the Verdict and Judgment are conclusive: When you will not give Ear to such a Motion in Ejectment, where the losing Side may have fresh Actions if they will. But, my Lord, not to rely altogether on this Answer, I shall add this one Word further, that according to my small Observation these Advantages in Pleading do not belong to the Throne in the Pleas of the Crown, but in such Actions as Quare impedit, and the like. As to the particular Instances that have been mentioned, I conceive they do not come up to the Case in the Question. The first Case which I have taken down as cited by Sir Thomas Powis, is Brook's Abridgments, Title Amendments, f. 32. and that is, That if Judgment be enter'd otherwise than the Truth is, it shall be amended in the same Term, because the Record is, in les Cores des Justices mesme le term & nemy in le Roll. This Case is one of the Authorities taken notice of in the 8th Report, to warrant the Amendments of the Acts of the Court, but does not in the least relate to the Amendment of Writs and Process which are sued out and executed in Pais.

The next Case was 4 H. VI. f. 16. which is only, whether he that casts an Essoign for a Tenant in a Formedon shall be permitted to take Exception to the Writ which appears to be vicious. The Demandant there was the Ward of the Crown, and he that cast the Essoign for the Tenant, took Exception to the Writ. The Exception was this; That in the Style of the King he is said to be Dux Hibernie instead of Dominus, and he would have had the Writ for that Reason to be quash'd. And there Martin demands whether the Writ shall not be amended sicome le Roy mesme soit parte, and the Case concludes with quare Legen.

As to the Case of Fitzherbert, Title Amendment f. 19. that is what my Lord Coke takes notice of in Blackmore's Case, when he says, that in a quare impedit brought for the King, the Word presentere was put instead of presentare, and it was held that it should be amended, but how does the Book say it was amended? Why the Writ itself was brought into Chancery, & la suit Amend. Now I take that to be tantamount to the issuing of a new Writ. Most of the other Cases mention'd out of the old Year Books, are relating to Amendments in Civil Cases, and therefore I shall spend no more Time in taking notice of them particularly.

My Lord, the next Thing to be considered is, Whether any Statutes do direct such an Amendment as this ; and I hold they do not. Indeed the first of these, which is 14 E. 3. Chap. 6. is pretty home ; the Words are, that by the Misprision of a Clerk in any Place wheresoever it be, no Process shall be annull'd, or discontinued, by Mistake in writing one Letter, or one Syllable, too much, or too little ; but as soon as it shall be perceived by Challenge of the Party, or in any other Manner, it shall instantly be amended in due Form. Now here are as large Words to fit the Purpose, as Mr. Attorney can desire, and if he were now to frame an Act of Parliament, I don't know how Mr. Attorney could make it fuller ; and I must confess, if I were to argue this Point within a Year after the making of such an Act of Parliament, I should reckon my self to have a difficult Province to maintain, that this Misprision does not come within the Purview of such an Act : All therefore that I shall say to it is, that it is now a great many Years since this and all Statutes of Amendments have been made, and no one adjudged Case as I know of, does say, that criminal Proceedings are within the Purview of this Statute. Mr. Attorney General, as I remember, did, in his Argument admit that this Statute of 14 E. III. Chap. 6. did not extend to criminal Cases.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deny that ; I did enforce it.

L. C. J. Holt. I do not remember he did admit that.

Mr. Mountague. Then I acquit him of it, and to shew him that I meant him no wrong by supposing he said so, I will mention some Authorities that are express in this Point.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did enforce that Statute by subsequent Statutes, particularly by the Statute of 8 Hen. VI. Chap. 12. for there the Word Process is included.

Mr. Mountague. Perhaps Mr. Attorney General did so ; but if he had admitted it, he would not have been in the wrong, if my Lord Coke be in the right in what he says. For in the same Case of Blackmore, fol. 157. speaking of the Extent of the Word Process, he says, " This Statute must be understood to mean Process in all Actions, Real, Personal, and Mix'd ; and not Process in Pleas of the Crown." And my Lord Coke does not here assign it for a Reason, because they are excepted ; for in this Statute of 14 E. III. C. 6. there is no Exception : And therefore speaking of this Statute, he could not say, Pleas of the Crown are there excepted ; yet he is positive this Statute does not extend to any other Process, than what issues in Actions, real, personal, and mix'd. Now what can be the Reason, that Process in all criminal Cases should be excepted out of this Statute, by the Interpretation of the Judges in all Ages ; when the Words are so full, that no Process whatsoever shall be annull'd by any Misprision, wheresoever it be ? Truly, I can't conceive otherwise, but that the Judges in all Ages have thought it reasonable, all Advantages should be allow'd to People under such Prosecutions.

Mr. Attorney General did seem to give another Reason, That the Crown not being named, was a great Argument that it did not want the Aid of such an Act of Parliament ; but that the King had a Right by the Common Law to make Amendments. And for this he cited Hardress, fol. 504. That before Judgment, there can be no Discontinuance in the Case of the King ; and 2 Cro. fol. 211. Beecher's Case. Now if this be so, as he would have it, that all Process in the King's Case is amendable by the Common Law, and all other Process by this Statute ; how comes there to be any Occasion for my Lord Coke to caution us about the Extent of this Act of Parliament, by saying, it extends to Process in Pleas real, personal, and mix'd ; but not in Pleas of the Crown ? What does it signify, whether this Process be amendable at Common Law, or by the Statute, if it be amendable ? But on the other Side, one may strongly infer, that if no Process were amendable before the Statute 14 E. III. and that Statute says, all Process hereafter shall be amended ; it was then fit for my Lord Coke to tell us, That tho' these Words in the Statute seem very extensive, yet it has been the Opinion of all Ages since, that no Process, but what issues in Actions real, personal, and mix'd, are meant by it.

I do take it therefore, with great Submission to Mr. Attorney, that the right Inference to be made from this Notamen of my Lord Coke, is to caution the Reader not to conclude over-hastily, from the Comprehensiveness of the Words of the Statute, that Process may be amended in criminal Cases. That way his Admonition may be of Service : But the other way with great Respect to his Memory I speak it ; it will signify little. As to the Case of Beecher, and the other Quotation out of Hardress, nothing more can be infer'd from them than what already has been taken notice of ; that after the Term they may enter Continuances before Judgments. This appears by the Case in 3d Levin. 430. where all the Cases cited by Mr. Attorney to this Purpose are taken Notice of.

Now we come to the next Act of 8 H. VI. The Words of which Statute, as I apprehend, Mr. Attorney did strongly rely on : For there, says he, are Exceptions of Appeals, Indictments of Treason, and of Felonies, and of Outlawries for the same ; and nothing is said of Informations ; and the King's Judges have thereby Power to amend all that they think the Misprision of any Clerk, in any Writ, Warrant of Attorney or Panel in Affirmance of Judgments. Now the Answer that I would offer to this Statute, is, That the Words in the enacting Part, are not larger than the Words are in the 14th of Edw. III. that is, they are not larger as to this Purpose. The Words indeed of this Act are, That all Misprisions of Clerks, in all Writs, shall be amended. The Words in the Act of Edw. III. are, That all Misprisions, in all Processes whatsoever, shall be amended. And I take the Words, all Process whatsoever, to be as extensive to the present Case, as to say, All Writs shall be amended. Therefore I cannot see, from the enacting Part, why one Act, to wit, that of Henry VI. should include criminal Proceedings, when that of Edw. III. does not include them. Thus much for the enacting Part.

Now I shall take Notice of the Exceptions. There are indeed some Things mention'd to be excepted out of the Purview of this Act of Henry VI. which are not excepted out of the former in Edward III's Time ; as Appeals and Indictments : But I think they were put in ex abundanti Cautela, to shew, that the Law-Makers did not intend to include criminal Proceedings. And tho' some Particulars are only mention'd ; yet I hope the Rule of Expressio unius, shal't hold in the Exposition of Acts Acts of Parliament, to exclude every Thing else that is not named.

By Littleton, Sect. 21. it appears, there are many Estate Tails, besides those that are particularly mention'd by the Statute of West. 2. de Donis Conditionalibus. And there are many Offices not within the Purview of the Statute of 5 and 6 Edw. VI. Chap. 16. that are of more Consideration than the Park-Keeper's Place, which are not mentioned in the Exceptions of that Statute, against the buying and selling Offices. And therefore I can't think any great Weight is to be laid upon the Statutes mentioning Appeals and Indictments; especially since the Opinion of all Ages, since the making the Statutes of Amendments, seems to concur against extending the Power of amending to criminal Cases.

My Lord, It would be an endless Thing to enumerate the several Indictments and Informations, that have been quash'd within the Compass of my Memory, by reason of Clerks Mistakes. I shall instance but in one, and that is the Case of the Queen and Frankling; where no longer ago than the Beginning of this Term, your Lordship and the whole Court quash'd an Indictment, because the Clerk had writ in the Caption, Præsentant Existit, instead of Præsentat Existit. Here was but a Letter to amend: And this must plainly be the Clerk's Mistake, not his Fault in wanting Skill in such Case. But I take it, the Case now before the Court is of a different Nature. The Testeing of this Writ the 24th of October, cannot be accounted a Slip of the Clerk, but did proceed from wrong Advice. And this is the third Thing I propos'd to speak to: If this Writ with the Teste had been entered upon the Roll, and transcribed only thence to deliver to the Sheriff; perhaps the varying from the Day mentioned in the Roll, might be accounted a Slip of the Clerk: But when this Writ was made out, it was certainly a Day after the Time it ought to have issued; and upon Advice ask'd, it was directed so to be Teste'd. So this is not a Slip.

If it be insisted upon, That this Mistake happen'd thro' Forgetfulness of the Day the Term did begin on; to that I must answer, That all Knowledge is said to be nothing but Reminiscentia. If a Man forget any Thing that he has read or heard of, he may be said to be as ignorant of that, as if he had never known it. Now it plainly appears, that they who were advis'd with about the Teste of this Writ, did not then know on what Day the Term did begin, and therefore Teste'd the Writ the 24th, instead of the 23d. I must therefore, in Behalf of my Client, insist upon it, that this Error proceeds from the Nescience of the Adviser, and not from the Slip of the Writer. And this Point will set us clear of all the Statutes of Amendments, if they did extend to criminal Cases.

As to the grand Case of Harris, reported in Crooke James, fol. 502. that has been so very much relied on, I hope, upon Consideration, it will not appear to be so great a Goliath as it was represented to be. There was an Indictment for a Nuisance remov'd hither by Certiorari; and the Record that was transmitted, was found imperfect, in a Point which was inconsistent with the Verdict: For in Truth the Plea of Not Guilty was omitted. And what did the Court do hereupon? Why, they sent for the Clerk of Assize, in whose Time the Record was filed below; and he was order'd to amend that which was come hither by the Certiorari, and set it right: I suppose, by making it agree with the original Proceedings, which remain'd upon the File below. Now, does Mr. Attorney think this is like the Amendment he would make, supposing all in Harris's Case were rightly done? Does Mr. Attorney think, that this will justify the Amendment now propos'd? Which is, indeed, making this Writ to be another Writ than it is: For a Writ that is Teste'd on the Monday, does as much differ from a Writ Teste'd on a Tuesday, as one Day differs from another. And I take it, with Submission, that the Amendment now pray'd, will alter this Writ, as much as the Amendment that is so much taken notice of by Justice Ingham, 2 Rich. III. fol. 10. did the Amercement in that Case. There was an Amercement recorded of Thirteen Shillings and Four-pence; and because it was a poor Man's Case, it was afterwards agreed to make it Six Shillings and Eight-pence. There was a Diminution in the Sum. And here Mr. Attorney would have a Diminution of a Day.

L. C. J. Holt. Was that done judiciously, or clandestinely?

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, How it was done, does not appear: But it is said to have been done out of Pity and Commiseration to the Poverty of the Defendant. And yet that Amendment was look'd upon to be illegal.

Mr. J. Powell. That was not done by the Court.

Mr. Mountague. It comes to be mentioned in King Richard III's Days, upon a Question that was put to the Judges by the King, when they were together in the Star-Chamber: "What if a Justice of Peace shall procure an Indictment, not found by the Jury, to be filed among other Indictments, as if it really had been found by the Grand Jury; what Punishment ought to be inflicted upon him hereupon?" They take notice of that Obliteration that had been made in a Record by Justice Ingham, and of the Punishment he underwent for it.

But to come to the present Case. Suppose it were Teste'd the 14th Day of October, instead of the 4th; would Mr. Attorney then say it were to be amended? Suppose the Return was out before the Teste of this Disfringas, that would come nearer to Gage's Case in the fifth Report. There was a Writ of Covenant, Teste the 24th of April, and made returnable the 15th of April. The Lord Coke indeed says in his Reports, It is a Misprision in the Clerk, that is amendable. But your Lordship knows, in his own Book of Entries, Fol. 250. Part 9. the contrary to that appears; and that it was not permitted to be amended.

Another Thing they have said, is, That this Writ shall be amended by the Award of the Roll in Court. But, with Submission, there is nothing there to amend the Teste by. We know there is a right Order of a Disfringas on the Roll; but that will not help an Error in the Teste of the Writ issued forth: And for that I will cite a Case out of Crooke's Eliz. fol. 825. Carew. v. Marler; and another Case was tried before your Lordship in Michaemas Term, in the 11th of King William, between Child and Harvey. There the Disfringas was made returnable Die Jovis prox. post tres Septimanas Sanctæ Trin. instead of Sancti Michaelis: So the Day of the Return happen'd to be the same Day that the Cause was to be tried upon, before your Lordship, at the Nisi Prius.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. It was actually tried at another Day.

Mr. Mountague. We came afterwards to the Court, and pray'd the Distingas might be amended by the Award on the Roll, which was right Die Jovis prox. post tres Septimanas Sancti Michaelis: But the Court denied our Motion; and we were forc'd to take out a new Venire Facias, and try the Cause again.

The next, great Case is that of Curson, which is in Crooke James's Reports, fol. 529. There is an Information upon the Statute of Recusancy, against Baron and Feme; and the Declaration demands 220*l.* for ten Months Recusancy. But the Wife was charged for being absent thirteen Months from Church. There the Wife only pleaded Not Guilty; and after a Verdict, this Mis-joining of the Issue was amended by the Docket. How agreeable to Law this Case is, must be left to your Lordship's Consideration. There less is demanded, than (of the Plaintiff's own shewing) appears to be due: For 'tis laid, that she had been absent thirteen Months, yet 220*l.* is only demanded; so it does not appear how the rest was satisfy'd. And besides this, it may be observed, that Mr. Hugbes, who has abridg'd the three Crookes, in his Abridgment of this Case, has not thought this Resolution worthy his taking Notice of.

L. C. J. Holt. A good Authority indeed! Did you know him?

Mr. Mountague. I did not know him; but I have heard him accounted a learned Man: And he did not, belike, think this Point worth his remembring. Whether he had any Scruple in the Case, I know not; but he omits it.

Then there is the Case of Sir Humph. Tuston, in Crooke Charles, 144. There was a Quo Warranto brought by Sir Humph. Tuston against the Corporation of Maidstone; and there a Judgment is enter'd by Disclaimer, with Consent of Parties, says the Book. And that Disclaimer is afterwards amended, and made of less Consequence than it was before. But how was that Amendment made? Why, upon the Certificate of the Attorney General, that he with his own Hands had inserted in the Paper-Book from which the Record was transcrib'd, the Words which the Clerk had omitted. Now upon this Case I may observe, That the Judgment had been enter'd by Consent, though the Amendment pray'd was to the Disadvantage of the Crown: Tho' that Amendment was pray'd in the Case of a Quo Warranto, which is in Nature of a Civil Action. Tho' Mr. Attorney General did consent, yet a Difficulty was made in doing it. For all which Reasons, I do humbly conceive, that that Case is for me, rather than against me: Especially since so great a Man as Mr. Noy does there assert, That none of the Statutes of Amendments extend to Cases of Quo Warranto, or Suits where the King is Party. Now tho' this Saying of Mr. Noy's were only as he was of Council for those that oppos'd the Amendment; yet this must have been look'd upon as a strange Assertion, by the Judges at that Time, if they had been as clear of Opinion as Mr. Attorney is, that the Statute of Hen. VI. did extend to criminal Prosecutions. And the learned Judge that reports that Saying of Mr. Noy, would hardly have let it pass, without taking some Notice that the Law was otherwise, if he had thought so.

As to the Case of 1 Siderfin, fol. 244. it was answered by your Lordship the other Day: For tho' the Writ is Vicecomitibus, where there was but one Sheriff: Yet the Return is help'd by a Suggestion that was enter'd, that there is but one Sheriff.

The Cases out of Dyer, 353, 346. have been taken notice of by Mr. Broderick; and the Query is, Whether any Discontinuance in Casu Regine be aided by any of the Statutes of Jeofails? Now I cannot but think, that the Makers of those Laws would have taken as much care to except Criminal Informations, as well as Actions Qui tam, if there had been Occasion. And to shew your Lordship, that none of these Statutes do extend to Informations at the Common Law, I would mention a Case out of 1 Vent. f. 17. It is Perry's Case. There in an Information for a Forgery: There happen'd a Mis-trial; and it was adjudg'd that it could not be help'd by any of those Statutes. The Error was, That the Defendant is charg'd to have forg'd a Lease in Sherborn, and to have given it in Evidence at Dorset: And the Venire was awarded only to Dorset. And this Case puts me in mind of the late Case of Paul Tracey; where the Trial was set aside, because the Defendant himself had sued out a wrong Venire; tho' the Prosecutor there, at the same Time, had sued out a right one, in order to have try'd him thereupon, if he had not put in his wrong Writ.

L. C. J. Holt. How was that Writ?

Mr. Mountague. The Venire was to the Parish of St. Clement's Danes only; whereas it should have been to the Parish of St. Giles's in the Fields as well.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it try'd on that Writ?

Mr. Mountague. The Trial was had upon the Writ the Defendant had taken out, and for that Reason set aside.

As to the other Case, in 1 Siderfin, fol. 259. the Case of the King against Glover, an Amendment was made of an Inquisition post Mortem; but that is of no Consequence. For in all these Cases, that Inquisition is to be travers'd afterwards: And the Jury, when they deliver such Inquisitions in, are ask'd, Whether the Clerk shall not have leave to amend any Defect in Form, or false Latin; and it is always allow'd, provided nothing in Substance be alter'd. And in this Case of Glover, the Amendment was of a Matter of Form: For the Inquisition said, the Deceased seipsum submersus fuit; but did not say he threw him himself into the Water.

The Case of Sampson, in 1 Jones 420. tho' it has been cited on the other Side, yet I take it to be a strong Case on our Side. That Case plainly shews, that it was the Opinion of the Judges, that there was no such Thing as an Amendment of Indictments by Common Law. Both Jones, and Keeling, who (I suppose) was Clerk of the Crown, do affirm, no Precedent can be shewn of any such Amendment made. And therefore I may question the Authority of Harris's Case, which is said to be adjudg'd Mich. 16. of K. James's; and this Case of Sampson was in the 14th of K. Charles I. And there Jones says expressly, That if a Record be certify'd by the Clerk of Assize that is faulty, it cannot be amended, either by the Common Law, or by the Statute Law.

My Lord, I doubt I have taken up too much of your Time. There are other Cases that have been mentioned out of Brook and Fitzherbert; but I hope none of them will any ways affect the present Case. I have taken notice of those which I think the most material; and I hope I have made it appear, that the Error in the Teste of this Writ can neither be amended by Common Law, nor by the the Statute Law. And that this Mistake of a Day is not only a Slip of the Clerk, but an Error in Judgment: And I humbly pray, there may be no Rule made for an Amendment.

Mr. Parker. My Lord, Mr. Mountague has spoken fully to the particular Cases that have been offered on the other Side: Therefore I will not go thro' them again: But I beg Leave to take notice of some general Heads, from which they have argued, and to which most of their Cases are reducible; and to distinguish them shortly from the present Case.

1. In the first Place, I take it, that the Cases of Captions of Indictments, removed hither by Certiorari, and amended the same Term they are brought in, come not up to the present Case. For the Certiorari commands the Return, not of a Copy of the Indictment, but the very Record it self; And the Indictment return'd, is, in Judgment of Law, the individual Parchment that was in the Court below. And so it is in Writs of Error: Except Writs of Error to the Court of King's-Bench in Ireland; and in that Case, the Books take notice, that only a Transcript is to be sent, by reason of the Hazard of losing the Original by the Danger of the Seas: And in case the Transcript arrive here safe, it is then said to become, in Consideration of Law, the very Record. And tho' it be found expedient, for the Convenience of keeping the Records, and is now become the general Practice in other Cases, to make a Transcript in another Parchment, and file that; yet if in transcribing there be a Mistake made, your Lordship will amend it, if it be discover'd in the same Term: For, in truth, that's not amending the real Indictment, but only amending the Return of the Justices to whom the Certiorari was directed; and providing that a false Indictment be not foisted in amongst the Records, instead of the true. Which cannot justify the mending the very Writ it self; the Thing prayed in the present Case.

2. Their Cases of Amendments of Judgments in the same Term they are given, and so of other Inrolments of what's done in Court, will not make any Thing in this Case. The Reasons given in those Cases, are, That the whole Term is, in Judgment of Law, but one Day: And the Judgments and Determinations of the Court are, that whole Day, in the Breast of the Court. And these being only Amendments of what themselves do in Court, which is not compleat till the Term be ended; they are not so ty'd up by the Clerk's hasty Entry of it, but that the Thing may be alter'd as they see Cause. But this is not applicable to a Writ which has pass'd the Seal of the Court, and thereby receiv'd all the Sanction it can have, and has then issued out to a proper Officer, and is by him return'd back to the Court. The Term is, in the Judgment of Law, but one Day, with respect of what is the Act of the Court and passes perfectly in the Court. But it is impossible to say, without manifest Absurdity, that the Term is to be consider'd as but one Day, in respect of a Writ that is issued out one Day in the Term, to command Jurors to appear at another; or that the Day when the Officer comes into Court, to give an Account of his Obedience to a Writ, is the very Day of issuing it. And therefore a Distinction is to be made between Things done in Court, which are incompleat during the Term: And the Court's giving Directions to an Officer out of Court by Writ, which is perfect, and gone out from them in order to be obeyed.

3. I should think likewise, that the Cases they have mention'd, of the Favour allow'd the Crown, do not come up to this Case; because, tho' in Suits for the Recovery of Right, there be great Favour allow'd to the Crown; and by the Statutes of Amendments and Jeofails, much Indulgence is given to the Subject, for the Recovery of Right; yet it is not so in Prosecution of Criminals, which is a Matter stricti Juris: And no Argument can be drawn from the Favour shewn in one Case, to infer, that the like Favour is to be allowed in the other; for they stand on quite different Grounds.

4. I think, with Submission, in the next Place, that the Instances of Amendments of Process, where nothing is done upon it, but barely to entitle the Party to some Process farther; as of a Capias, in order to an Exigent, &c. will not come up to this Case, where the Writ is executed and returned, and the Trial had upon it.

In the Case of Rogers and Bird, that was cited on the other Side, 3 Cro. 572. there was a Venire Facias returnable Die Sab. prox. post Octab. Trin. but on the Roll, it was awarded returnable Cro. Trin. And because that was the Authority for making it out, it was amended in the Return; because the Trial was not had upon it, only it was return'd in order to the Disfringas. But Popham there expressly says, that if the Trial had been upon the Venire Facias, it were erroneous, and would not have been amendable.

Mr. J. Powel. Where is that, Sir?

Mr. Parker. 3 Cro. 572. There is likewise the Case of 34 H. VI. 20 Brook's Amendments, Placit. 10. There were twenty four Jurors returned upon the Venire Facias, and in the Habeas Corpus one of them omitted: And there the Opinion of the Court was, That they should make out a new Habeas Corpus. And tho' there it was plainly the Mistake of the Clerk, that mentioned only twenty three, instead of twenty four; yet the Court was of Opinion that it could not be amended, but they must begin again where the Fault was made. 19 H. VI. 39. A Juror was return'd upon the Venire Facias, by the Name of J. Hod; and in the Disfringas he is named J. Hord; and upon him the Sheriff return'd Nihil, &c. And there was a new Habeas Corpus awarded. Which Cases seem to prove, that where there is something done upon the Process, more than a mere formal Return, that it is not amendable within the Statutes of Edw. III. and Hen. VI. which were both of them made before these Cases.

5. In the next Place, I beg leave to observe, That there is a Difference between such Cases as have been cited, where the Thing was really done right, but by Mistake enter'd wrong; and this Case, where really it was not done right. As where upon a Disfringas a right Juryman is really sworn, but set down by a wrong Name, the Name shall there be amended; because the Thing done was really right, only the Mention of it wrong. But in this Case it cannot be said, that the Disfringas was really taken out right. The Writ was awarded the 23d of October, on which Day they would have it bear Teste: But it is not pretended that it was really taken out till the next Day, when it it now bears Teste.—And as to what has been already offer'd, that the Nisi Prius ought to be awarded in Præsentia Partium; and therefore not upon any other Day than the 23d, when the Venire Facias was returnable, and the Parties in Court: I might here, I hope not improperly, add this farther; That that must be understood, that the making of the Writ should be in the Presence of the Parties: For the Entry upon the Roll, tho' commonly called an Award of the Writ, is really an Entry of a Writ supposed to be then actually made; it is not so properly a Direction to the Clerk to make a Writ, as an Entry or Memorandum upon the Roll, or a Recording that there is a Command to the Sheriff, to distrain the Jurors to appear at a certain Day, &c. And therefore if the Nisi Prius is to be awarded in the Presence of the Parties, the Writ is to be made in their Presence.

Mr. J. Powel. Do you mean, that they should be in the Crown-Office?

Mr. Parker. The Writ is in Judgment of Law issued in Court, tho' actually wrote and sealed in the Office; and if Teste'd of that Day, is understood to be made in Court that Day; which is in Presence of the Parties; that being the Day given 'em in Court, and their Appearance then enter'd. And we apprehend, that the Court does not command, by the Entry of the præceptum est in the Roll, but by the Writ. The Sheriff, who is absent, cannot be commanded by the Roll, but by the Writ which is sent to him: Therefore the Court then commands, when the Writ is made: And therefore the Entry upon the Roll, præceptum est Vic. is an Entry that there is such a Command, which this Writ, on which this Trial was had, cannot be, because it bears Teste after. But this is only by the by: For however taking the Entry as an Award of the Writ, yet the Writ must be taken out as the Court awards it, and when the Court awards it; or else it is without Warrant, and void. Indeed if it should in Fact be made at a subsequent Day, and not actually wrote and sealed the same Day it is awarded, yet if it bear Teste upon that Day, your Lordship will not enquire into that Matter: But finding such a Writ was awarded, and that it appears by the Teste to issue the same Day; will presume it did really issue that Day, and that it is right. But the Writ being here awarded the 23d, and bearing Teste the 24th; if it did not issue the 23d Day, to alter the Teste, so as to make it appear to issue that Day, were to make it contrary to the Truth.

This we take to have some Resemblance to the late Case of the Warden of the Fleet; where your Lordship was against altering the Day of bringing in the Record, when the Alteration would have been against the Truth of the Fact. And to make the Amendment here desired, would be to make the Writ appear to have issued the 23d of October; when the Writ it self imports it was the 24th; and this was the Truth of the Fact.

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord, I beg the Favour of a Word or two on the same Side: After so much has been said for the Defendant, I shall only mention a Case or two, to shew that such an Amendment as this has not been allow'd by the Statute of 8 Henry VI. Cap. 12. in any Civil Action between Party and Party.

28 Hen. VI. 3. There was an Action of Debt, and the Parties were at Issue: The Venire was re-turn'd; upon which the Plaintiff had a Habeas Corpora with a Nisi Prius: And instead of saying in the Habeas Corpora, in Placito Debiti, it was made in Placito Compoti, &c. on Motion in Arrest of Judgment. The Council for the Plaintiff desir'd to amend this, after Verdict for the Plaintiff: The Court did indeed not give any Rule, as appears by that Book, only that they would consider of it; but nothing was done further, as appears by that Book just after.

In the Case 34 Hen. VI. 20. In an Action of Debt brought by the Prior of St. Bartholomew's, the Parties were at Issue, and a Venire return'd; and on the Return of the Venire, there were twenty four Persons return'd: But in making out the Habeas Corpora, the Clerk omits one of the Names of the twenty four. This appear'd to be the Misprision of the Clerk. He had the Venire and the Return before him; as the Clerk had here in the Case now before your Lordship. He had the Roll and the Venire; but this was held not to be amendable: And this was in few Years after the Statute of Henry VI.

I shall mention another Case in 2 Siderfin 7. 12. A Writ of Capias ad faciend. for a Debt, was made returnable a Day after the Term. It appeared to the Court, the Attorney for the Plaintiff had given the Clerk that made the Writ, true and right Directions to make it returnable the last Day of the Term; but though it was his Misprision, yet the Court would not amend it: So it is adjudged in that Case.

I shall not mention any more Cases; but answer the Case of Plume, in Palmer 480. cited by the Queen's Council. I have had particular Occasion to look into that Case this Term, in a Cause which hath been in the Paper this Term. We did search for that Rule express'd in Palmer's Reports, in order to amend an Outlawry after Judgment, in an Action of Debt in the Common Pleas; but on producing that Rule, the Court of Common Pleas did not take it as an Authority to amend our Outlawry, which wanted an Amendment in the Return of the Exigent.

L. C. J. Holt. What was that Amendment?

Mr. Whitaker. Ad. Com. meum, the Book says: And upon this, says the Book, they did grant a Rule, to award a Certiorari to the Coroner. The Rule mention'd in Palmer was search'd for; and, as I am inform'd, my Client did produce it in the Common Pleas; and yet they would not let us amend our Outlawry: And my Client, for want of an Amendment of the Return of the Exigent, is likely to lose an honest Debt by the Reversal thereof.

The Council for the Queen have relied on the Statute of the 8th of Henry VI. that this Fault of the Clerk is amendable within that Statute. By the Books I have cited, the Misprisions of the Clerks, tho' in Civil Actions, have not been allow'd to be amendable. Above two hundred Years are past, before any Thing of this kind was done, to amend such a Misprision of a Clerk as this is, in criminal Cases.

How far the Queen's Council would go on with Amendments, I cannot tell: But in the Case cited by the Queen's Council, Sampson's Case, 1 Rolls 196. there was the same Mistake of a want of Continuance; as in this Case. No Man can believe, the Clerk of Assize knew not what Days the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery did sit, and continue their Sessions on such Commissions. And yet, on a Writ of Error to reverse that Judgment (in Sampson's Case) being brought, the Court of King's Bench would not amend this apparent Misprision of the Clerk of Affize's want of Adjournment from Day to Day.

This Matter of amending in criminal Proceedings such a Misprision of a Clerk as this is that is now desired, has not been thought of since the Time of the 8th of Henry VI. until now. And if the Queen's Council can shew no President in all this Time, wherein such an Amendment, even in a civil Cause, by virtue of the 8th of Hen. VI. hath been, much less in a criminal Case. I humbly hope, your Lordships will not let them amend this Writ of Distringas.

SIR T. Powis. My Lord, having heard what has been said on the other Side, I beg Leave to trouble you a little by way of Reply.

Mr. Broderick and Mr. Mountague make a Distinction, which they think will govern this Case. They say, that the Crown has a great many Privileges, beyond what the Subjects hath, where the Case concerns Civil Rights: But they will not allow the same Privileges to the Crown, where there is a criminal Prosecution. I know of no such Distinction. For if this Privilege belongs to the Crown, in the Case of the Revenue; surely the restraining of Crimes is much more for the publick Benefit: And by Consequence, the same Reason that gives the Crown a Privilege in a lesser Matter, ought to carry it further in a greater Thing.

In the next Place, they do admit, that all the Acts of the Court may be amended; as being in the Breast of the Court, during the same Term. And they deny not, but that the Judgment of the Court, which is the highest Act of the Court, may be revers'd, or any way alter'd or chang'd in the same Term, without any Danger of building Clock-Houses. And can any one say, that if these highest Acts of the Court may be alter'd, that the Acts of their Clerks may not be alter'd? That the greater Things may be done, but not the inferior, when there is a pure Mistake?

No Man can but think it strange, that a Mistake of a Clerk may not be alter'd; but a Mistake even in the Judgment of the Court may.

We come next to another Distinction. They say, an original Writ may be amended in the Case of the Crown; as in the Quare impedit, in Blackmore's Case. For which they assign two Reasons: First, It was a Writ of the Crown, for Recovery of a civil Right; for it was a Quare impedit, And secondly, The Judges observing the Fault in the Writ, did (as it seems) carry it to the Court of Chancery, and there it was amended. From whence they would infer, as if it were a new Writ. But that cannot be supposed; for it was agreed, that it was the same Writ amended, and not a new Writ.

Now see if that will not come to our Case. For if the Court of Chancery could amend a Quare impedit, as coming from thence; cannot this Court amend a Writ that comes from hence? Here we are in the Case of a judicial Writ that comes from hence; and therefore it may be amended here, as well as that could be amended in the Court of Chancery.

But the great Matters endeavour'd to be avoided, are the two Acts of Parliament of Edw. III. and Hen. VI. for the Cases cited: I will not go over them again. And I do believe it is very true, what these Gentlemen insist on: That it has been the common Opinion, that these Acts, or other Acts of Amendments, do not extend to Cases of the Crown. And, generally speaking, it is right; because all the later Acts of Amendments except Prosecutions on Penal Laws: And the Statute of Henry VI. has so many Exceptions in criminal Matters, that a Mistake might from thence arise, that all are excepted.

It is certainly true what my Lord Chief Justice Vaughan says, fol. 169, 170, 419. That upon doubtful Words of an Act of Parliament, that are dark and dubious, an ancient Interpretation, submitted to for a long Time, is fit and reasonable to be relied on in a doubtful Case. But a thousand Resolutions, against a plain Act of Parliament, cannot prevail. Tho' it would be good Reason, well to consider such a Law, and to weigh it well; but no such Resolutions can alter the Act.

Here are two Acts of Parliament: That of Edward III. is in general Words of All: And how can any one say then, that it shall mean and extend only to Some?

As to the Act in the 8th of Henry VI. to say that the Words shall not go to every Thing that is not excepted, is to overthrow all Rules of Construction. They have offer'd nothing against that Statute; but that it has been thought it did not extend to these Cases.

The Case of Siderfin, shews, that we do not advance a mere new Notion, with respect to that Act. Therefore, I say, we have the Acts of Parliament on our Side; We have the Privilege of the Crown on our Side: The Award of the Roll is right, and with us; and the Error was purely the Mistake of the Clerk: For no Man can think it otherwise.

We have this likewise on our Side, That we desire it may be amended in the same Term. For as the Court can set right their own Judgment in the same Term, much more what is the Act and Mistake of the Clerk.

Therefore we insist upon it, That our Cases we have cited, are of good Authority for us; and we hope we shall have an Amendment, if it be necessary.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we humbly hope, that notwithstanding what these learned Gentlemen have urged, our Assertions by Law and Authority will prevail; and that this Mistake is amendable.

What has been said before by Mr. Broderick and Mr. Mountague, they have laid it down for a Rule, That there is a great Difference between the Privileges belonging to the Crown in Matters of a civil Nature upon the Statute, and criminal Prosecutions: And that all those Favours for the Crown, were only for Matters relating to the Right of the Crown in civil Cases, and not what belongs to the Crown in its politick Capacity. Tho' Mr. Broderick did not consider: For sure, by the Common Law, there was a greater Latitude for the Crown in criminal Prosecutions, than for the Subject.

In Cases of Treason, they had no Benefit of Council; and that was far more to their Disadvantage, than in civil Cases. It's true, that Inconvenience has been regulated by the late Statute, That in the Cases of Treason, the Party may have a Copy of the Pannel and Indictment. But you see what what the Difficulties were formerly in criminal Prosecutions for the People: All they had to do, was merely to plead Guilty or Not Guilty. I think that answers their Objection as to that.

Now there is in the next Place to be consider'd, what Mr. Mountague says, That no Error in Process was amendable by Common Law; and cites Lord Coke for it. He should have gone on with that Citation; for it is certainly otherwise. 8 Coke 156, says, Their own Acts are amendable by the Common Law, in the same Term; but at the Common Law, the Misprisions of Clerks in another Term, were not amendable. But we are in the same Term; and sure they are amendable before Judgment. And Lord Coke tells you, they are amendable in the same Term.

Now Mr. Mountague has gone a great way. He agrees, if it were a Misaward of the Roll, you would amend it, but not the Writ. Now for that the Law is quite contrary: If you are wrong in the Roll, you cannot set it right; but if it be in the Writ or Process, you may amend it by the Roll. Now here the Roll is right; and we desire the Writ may be amended by it.

If it had been in the Roll, I cannot tell whether we should have applied to amend that. For if you have any thing amiss, you cannot amend it, but by something to amend it by. But it may be amended in Case of the Crown, better than in that of the Subject. And tho' Mr. Mountague says, you may make use of them in Civil Cases, but not in Criminal; yet we make use of this Argument, that the Crown has a Privilege more than the People. We rely on that; tho' Mr. Mountague says, That is not to be relied on.

In the next Place, Mr. Mountague says, This is within none of the Statutes of Amendments, either of Edward III. or of Henry VI. And that my Lord Coke says, fol. 157. b. That the Statute of Edw. III. does not extend to the Pleas of the Crown. And therefore Mr. Mountague's Opinion is, to go quite through, and exclude this Case from all the Statutes of Amendments.

Now I can give an Argument, why it should not be amended by the Statute of Hen. VI. tho' by the Statute of Edw. III. it is amendable. But why is it not amendable by the Statute of Henry VI. Cap. 12, and 15, which go further than the Statute of 14 Edw. III. does?

I do agree, there is an Objection against the Statute of Edw. III. For there is the Word Party, which seems to imply civil Cases only. But even by that Statute, so soon as the Slip appears by Challenge, or any other way, it shall be amended. The Lord Coke might well on these Words make a Doubt, whether the 14th of Edw. III. did extend to amend Cases relating to the Crown: But the Opinion of Coke in the Statute of 14 Edw. III. is absolute; but the other of 8 Hen. VI. is with a Reason. And why is it? Because it is excepted. Now they should have shewn us some Reason, why the Statute of Henry VI. Cap. 12. should not extend to Amendments in Cases of the Crown.

And there is not that Objection to the Statute of Hen. VI. Cap. 15. For it follows the Words of the Statute of Edw. III. and says, That no Man shall have, &c.

Now Mr. Mountague says, the Exception was put in ex abundanti; and it may be intended they were but Instances of like Cases. Now I have hardly ever heard, that Instances of Treason and Felony should extend to other Cases of an inferior Nature: There is no Reason to carry it further than what is express'd. So that we think these Statutes stand for us; and are applicable to all Records, as well for the Crown, as any else.

Mr. Mountague says, They have the Opinion of all Ages against it. But, my Lord, I deny that; because there were Exceptions in many Statutes before and after the Statutes of Jeofails, that were not consider'd: But when they come to be consider'd, this must be determined by considering the Words of the Statute; and not by general Opinions, taken up without Consideration.

There was in Cro. Car. 25. a Case on the Statute 32 Hen. VIII. where the Question was, If Assignees of Copyhold Lands were within that Statute? And till a little before the Revolution, it was a received Opinion, that the Assignee of a Copyholder was not within the Statute of Henry VIII. And there is a Case in Yelverton, 223, wherein it was so resolved: But when that Statute came afterwards to be considered, it was settled here, and has prevail'd ever since, that the Statute did extend to it; tho' before it was the prevailing Opinion that it did not. And accordingly the Practice has since been. So that Opinions that pass sub Silentio, that is, without Consideration, may be alter'd when they come to be stated and consider'd. And therefore I hope this Point will not prevail.

My Lord, I agree that this Thing is of very great Consequence: For if their Plea be allow'd, it will follow, that Criminals will escape for little Slips in all Cases. And I know that even in Perjury, and other Crimes, few that have been convicted, but have got off; by Reason of Errors in the Proceedings, tho' I have seen a great many convicted thereof. This is a great Inconvenience and Mischief: And sure Criminals are not to be the Favourites of the Law.

But as to these Prosecutions, there is another Consideration: That it is more for the Honour of Justice to have the Advantage to lay aside this Slip, than to suffer a Criminal to escape. But however, every one must have Justice: And if we rely on the Statute of Henry VI. no Construction can avoid it.

Then Mr. Broderick cites the Case of ——— Where it is said, that the Statutes of Jeofails do not extend to Cases of the Crown. Now sure that is not a Reason: It is contrary to all the Reasons of Statutes. Where Statutes are to promote Justice, the Crown is bound as well as the Subject; it is for the publick Good. Now Mr. Broderick has cited a Case against that; and that is in Styles, fol. 107. (Vid. Fol. 307) the Case of Theobalds and Newton. There that Case was on the Statutes of 18 Eliz. and of 21 Jac. Now it's plain they had no Consideration of any thing else: And why? Because in Prosecutions on Penal Statutes, the Court often rely on Exceptions: But however the Authority goes no farther, but they rely on the Exceptions. Now if they had said it was excepted by the Statute of Henry VI. and that all the Books go on it as excepted by that Statute; if they say it is excepted by the Statute of Hen. VI. would that be taken as an Objection to the Statutes of 18 Eliz. and 21 Jac.? No; it is a Mistake.

He has also cited Yelverton, fol. 60. Brigg's and Thomson's Case. Now there was an Information on the Statute of 21 Hen. VIII. against a Clergyman, for farming Lands; and a Venire was awarded returnable ubicunque: But the Venire itself, and and the Disstringas, were made returnable coram nobis, &c. which was said to be erroneous. An Exception was taken, and per Cur' Let it stay. But it appears not that it was considered.

These Authorities are no Authorities. The first is not within either of those Statutes we are now upon: And the other was never determined by any thing, as appears in the Case. And there is a great Difference between the Statutes on which they were founded, and our Case.

Mr. Mountague has gone a new Way. He would have this to be not a Misprision of the Clerk; because he is afraid that a Misprision is amendable: For the Clerk had enquired, whether the Writ should be Teste'd the 24th of October; so that he says it is a Forgetfulness, or Negligence, but not a Misprision.

Now I would fain know what he means by that? Whether all Forgetfulness of the Clerks, is not a Misprision of the Clerk? That is, any Negligence, whatever it be, it is the Misprision of the Clerk. Coke says, It is a Misprision of the Clerk, under the Word Negligence: And Negligence and Misprision are by him frequently put for the same thing. See 8 Co. 159. b. 160. b.

So upon one Part of it; that is, suppose the Clerk steal it away; he says, that is under the Word Misprision; and an involuntary Negligence of the Clerk, is a Misprision. So this Clerk's Negligence is a Misprision, because he did not look on the Almanack and the Roll. These are Misprisions by the Statute of Henry VI.

As to the Cases that have been cited, Mr. Mountague has answered but some of them.

As to that of Percival and Godfrey, Siderfin, fol. 43. he says that was not such an Amendment, but a Suggestion of the Roll. But if the Roll could amend that which is a stronger Amendment, to present a Verdict; the rectifying of that makes it stronger for us, than it would be otherwise.

He says, as to Harvey's Case, he denies it to be Law: But I believe the Authority of the Judges is to be prefer'd before his Opinion.

And then for the next Case, Parker and Curson, he questions that Opinion, because not taken notice of by Hughs. Now I believe the Judges that reported it, did understand it better than he that abridg'd it. But whether he understood it or no, it alters not the Case.

And then for Tuiston's Case, he says it is a Civil Case. But my Lord, it is a Criminal Case. A Quo Warranto is brought: They must plead Not Guilty to the Usurpation. So that these Cases are under the same Consideration as this is.

Then there is the Case of King and Glover: That was, where a Coroner was to amend an Inquisition of Murder: But it was not proved that he did murder himself, &c.

Mr. Mountague admits, the Jury may amend Matters of Form: But in that Case, when it is brought into Court, it is not the same Verdict as before.

He cited the Case of — and Harvey: But your Lordship gave him another Reason for that Case.

And for the Case of Paul Tracy, that Point was never determined.

L. C. J. Holt. The Venire Facias never mentions the Time of, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now that is not within the Statute of Henry VI. So that we have nothing to do with it.

And as to the Case of Dyer, fol. — that does not concern the Statutes of Jeofails. And in Fitzberbert's Case, the Court was of Opinion, they could not amend, by reason of the Exception. Whereby they shew plainly, they thought the Statutes would have extended to that Case, had it not been particularly excepted.

I do not observe any other Matter, but that of the Nisi Prius. If the Writ must be made out in the Presence of the Parties; they say, that immediately when the Persons appear, the Writ is to be issued. But that is impossible, and contrary to Reason and Authority.

We think, on these Reasons we have troubled you with, we have the Law on our Side. Only one thing I must beg Leave to answer to what Mr. Broderick says as to Percival's Case: It was a crying Thing, and it might be an extraordinary Judgment. Where Judgments are given, they are to go according to the Course of Law: Justice is to be done to all. And as no extraordinary Method is to be made use of against a Criminal, so none is to be used to save him.

My Lord, we think the Statute of Henry VI. does allow such an Amendment as we desire; and that no Statute does restrain it: And therefore, I hope we shall be allowed to amend this Error.

There is one Matter more. Lord Coke, in his 8th Report, 163. a. says, The Statutes of Henry VIII. and that of 41 Eliz. do not extend to Pleas of the Crown; because they are excepted in the Act Eliz. and that of Henry VIII. does not extend to 'em.

We agree with the Lord Coke in every Thing, that the King can't amend by that of Henry VIII. tho' there is no Exception: And the Reason is, because it speaks only of Suits between Party and Party. And the other Statute of 18 Eliz. is not large enough, extending only to Treason or Felony, because they only are excepted.

My Lord, We think we have my Lord Coke's Authority with us, and even the very Words of the Act of 8 Hen. VI. And tho' this Case has not been so fully consider'd before; yet we hope it will be consider'd now; and that we shall be allow'd this Amendment.

Mr. Broderick. I thought not to have said any thing more: But because I have been named two or three times by Mr. Attorney, I desire —

Mr. Att. Gen. The Reply is ours.

Mr. Broderick. My Lord, I beg Leave to explain myself in something that has been misunderstood. I think I did not say what I am charged with. Mr. Attorney tells you I said, that none of the Queen's Prerogatives extend to criminal Prosecutions.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say, you said, there is great Difference between civil and criminal Cases: And that the Queen's Prerogative is intended only of Amendments in civil Cases, but not applicable to criminal Prosecutions.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Broderick said it did extend to Amendments in Civil Cases, but not in Criminal.

Mr. Broderick. And I do make a Difference between 'em. For in criminal Prosecutions by the Crown, an Amendment can't be: But in the Case of a Quare impedit, which is a civil Case, there it might.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Reply is ours; and they ought not to break in upon us.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. If you will say any thing as to what has been mistaken, you may. The Case of Sherret and Talbot is not to the Point: That was an Amendment, not in Behalf of the Crown, but of the Subject; and in a Civil Case. 'Twas in a Quo Warranto; wherein if the Subject take a limited Disclaimer, and the Officer on the Roll enter a general Disclaimer without Limitation, God forbid but that should be amended. But then, even on the King's Side, if the original Indictment be right, and the Plea Roll be mistaken; sure the Plea Roll shall be rectified by the Indictment; and the Plea is to be made according to that.

The Cases of Tufson and Harris are strong Cases. In that of Harris there was an actual Trial; and yet no Issue joined. He was indeed indicted as Criminal, and the Issue was enter'd; Et de hoc ponit se super Patriam, but without any Joinder thereupon, and so no compleat Issue. 'Tis true, in capital Cases, they are free to join Issue or not: But in other Criminal Cases 'tis otherwise; there must be a Joinder. And as to the Case of Tufson, that was an Amendment that went very far. That was an Information for Recusancy against the Husband and Wife for Recusancy of the Wife. The Wife comes in, and she alone (whereas it should have been the Husband and Wife) pleads Not Guilty; and Issue join'd thereon: And it was mended by the Docket: for that was right. It has been held, that the Statute of Hen. VI. did not extend to Criminal Matters; as Lord Coke (in Blackmore's Case) is expressly.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, he gives the Reason of that Exception.

L. C. J. Holt. Now the 8th of Henry VI. has this Exception: And in Stiles, 304. no mention is made of the Statute of 8 Hen. VI. but that was by reason they thought it would not help them. And then the Query is, Whether this Case be within that Exception, and (as in Civil Cases) may be amended? But this is a Case of a different Nature; and I will not say any thing now in the Point of this Case, because of the Consequence: Tho' I suppose it is not excepted by the Statutes: And I believe you don't desire our present Opinion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, I desire the Opinion of the Court in this Case; and I think it is of great Consequence to us to have it now.

L. C. J. Holt. If you insist on it, I must see if I can form an Opinion; but I would willingly defer it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I lay it before you with Submission.

Mr. J. Powel. It is a new Thing, and taken up against the current Opinion. Perhaps they might take it on Lord Coke's Opinion; and did not examine it, as they should had done.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Coke does not say so himself.

Mr. J. Powel. No: But because he says it is excepted, they gave Credit to his Words, and did not examine into the Business: And I believe that was the Foundation of this Opinion. But if you think it is amendable in the same Term, because the Court may amend their own Judgments the same Term; you must speak to that Point.

I do not know that they can amend their own Judgment in this Term: Though indeed, if it be amendable at all, it is amendable this Term. Besides, I should make no Difficulty but that it is a Misprision of the Clerk; and it was his Negligence not to do it by the Warrant. And if this were in a Civil Process, I believe it might be amended in any other Term: But this being in a Criminal Matter; and the current Opinion being that none of the Statutes did extend to Criminal Matters, it ought to be well consider'd; for the current Opinion is a great Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no doubt of it, it ought to be consider'd; but it is fit for me to desire your Opinion.

Mr. J. Powis. I believe these Statutes were never so scann'd before; and I believe this Matter has been more search'd into now, than ever it has been before. But it has been the general Opinion, that none of the Statutes of Jeofails did extend to Criminal Cases: That may arise, because all the Statutes take in so large a Compass. All Indictments and Informations, and no doubt the latter Statutes, do not extend to such Cases. And the Opinion might arise from that.

But now this Statute of the 8th of Hen. VI. has Exception of Felonies and Treasons, and none else; and you cannot extend the Exception further. It is a Case of Difficulty, but it arises from the common Opinion; otherwise we might give our Opinion now without Difficulty: For the Words are as clear as may be; and it is against Reason, to except Things that that Statute did not except. But being a Thing that is not so particularly confin'd to this Term (for the Statute mentions nothing of Terms) if it be amendable, it may be amended in another Term.

But indeed, for Matter of Judgment, because the Judgment must be in the same Term, in the Case of the Amendment, we may as well do it in this Term: And we may take some Time to consider of it, and tell you what our Opinion is.

Mr. J. Gould. I shall not now say any thing in this Case, but reserve myself entirely till the Court give their Opinion.

But as to that Case you were citing, Perry's Case, the Case was Perry and Munday; for I was of Council in the Case. There was an Information against Perry and Munday for forging a Bond: They laid their Forgery at Sherborn. The Publication was at Dorchester; and the Venire was Dorchester. The Verdict was for the King. They brought an Arrest of Judgment afterwards; and the Question was debated on the Statute of 16 and 17 of K. Charles II. whether this were not within the Statute. Now they are agreed, that that Information, because at Common Law, was without the Purview of the Statute.

L. C. J. Holt. That was an Information upon a Penal Law. They question'd whether it was within the Purview of the Statute; and they thought it was not help'd by any Statute. That shews the Opinion of the Lawyers: They thought it not within any of the Statutes of Jeofails; and the Verdict was set aside.

Mr. Broderick. Yes, my Lord; and the Court awarded a new Venire Facias.

L. C. J. Holt. There is a great Regard to be had to Practice. There were great Men at the Bar at that Time; and they did not think at that Time that it was within the Statute.

As to what you say of Copyholds, it has indeed been held, that the Statute did not extend to an Assignee of Copyhold Lands, or to a Covenant on the Alienation of the Copyhold by Lease.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was here argued that —

L. C. J. Holt. It was my Opinion, that all Statutes extend to Copyholds, if it be for the Benefit nefit of the Copyholder, and not one Jot to the Prejudice of the Owner: And therefore the Resolution of Jobbin's Case was that we went on. You must stay till the last Day of the Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think we have shewn that it is amendable by the Statutes; and if not so, by the Common Law. And we have all Points with us.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, I doubt it will be insisted on, that in another Term it cannot be amended.

L. C. J. Holt. Move us the last Day of the Term. It is certainly the Misprision of the Clerk.

November 28. i. e. The last Day of Michaelmas Term.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, we come in the Case of the Queen and Mr. Tutchin, if your Lordship be ready to give your Opinion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Tutchin (who appeared).

L. C. J. Holt. I must desire you to stay in this Matter till the first Day of the next Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we did expect your Lordship would have given your Opinion now.

L. C. J. Holt. For my Part, I should rather desire Time till the next Term: But if you are not willing to stay till then, you must take such an Opinion as we can give.

Mr. Att. Gen. I submit to what your Lordship shall determine.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be, I may be then of the same Opinion I am now; but then I may defend my Opinion better. I would only put it off to the first Day of the next Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I have laid the Matter before you; and I acquiesce in what you shall think fit.

Sir T. Powis. Upon the Observation of Blackmore's Case, where Lord Coke says, the Court cannot amend Misprisions of Clerks in Process in another Term; if we have not Judgment this Term, we shall lose that Advantage.

Mr. Att. Gen. There are two Points in this Case: One is, that it is amendable by Common Law; the other, that it is not excepted by the Statute of Henry VI.

Now my Lord Coke says, Error in Process is amendable in another Term. But we submit to the Court: I press nothing.

Mr. J. Powell. Coke say so: But I believe no Man will say, that ever a mistaken Writ was amended in another Term. Therefore he must intend the subsequent Proceedings, or Process: It may be the Proceedings of the original Entry on their Award, that may be amended in another Term; and Coke must mean that. There have been Entries of Awards amended in another Term; but the Mistake of a Writ was never amended in another Term, that I can find.

L. C. J. Holt. If we put it off to the next Term, and our Opinion should be against the Amendment, he can be try'd in that Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I submit it to you.

Mr. J. Powell. We cannot now give so full Reasons; yet I have enter'd my Opinion in the Case.

Mr. J. Gould. I was sometime of Opinion, that it was amendable by the Statute; but really looking on the Cases that have been cited, that is, the Cases that are in Pleas of the Crown, it is not amendable by the Statute of Henry VI. I say, I formerly thought it might be amended by Virtue of the Statute: But upon Perusal of Blackmore's Case, &c. it seems to alter my Judgment. But notwithstanding, I hold, that at Common Law it may be amended. For what means all the Cases that are now extant; the Cases of Informations, as the Case of Sir Humphry Bond, &c.?

The Case cited by Telverton, in 2 Bulstrode 35. is very strong. There were two indicted for Felony, and found guilty. The Judge saw that it was in the singular Number, and stay'd Judgment: And they moved afterwards in another Term; and there, by the Judgment of nine or ten Judges, it was amended; and the Men were both hang'd.

Why now, it must be by the Statute Law, or by the Common Law, that it was amended in that Case. By the Common Law, I say, it is amendable.

There is a Case in Raymond's Reports, 440. It is an Indictment on a Certificate of a Justice of Peace, that Inglefield, being a reputed Papist, had refused to take the Oath of Supremacy, &c. Upon Not Guilty pleaded, the Jury found the Commission in hac verba, &c.

It was objected, That the Certificate was not found under Seal of the Justices, but only in hac verba: And they did amend it.

This is the same Case. And I take it, that such a Fault, as does not alter the Issue, nor the Trial, or Crime, is a Thing that is amendable.

Now there is Sir John Curson's Case, in 2 Cro. It is a strong Case. There is an Information against him and his Wife for Recusancy. The Wife only pleaded Not Guilty. The Question was, Whether this were right? And whether they should amend it? And it was resolved, that it should be amended.

The Case in Siderfin, that is (1 Siderfin, 243.) the Case of Percival and Godfry, I do not doubt, for my Part, but it is amendable; and take it as strong as this is. They were indicted for a Riot: A Venire Facias issued Vicecomitibus Cantuariæ; and it was return'd by one Sheriff. They examin'd into the Truth of the Case, and they found there was but one Sheriff: And the Question was, Whether this was amendable? And it was resolved it should be amended; and also that it was amendable at Common Law.

I must confess, I do not see that there is any Reason in the World against it. There is but only one Case that seems to be against it; that is the Case of Theobald and Newton, Styles 307. There indeed, by Rolls Opinion, it was not amendable, &c. But that is only a single Opinion.

And as to the Case between the King, and Read and Dawson (it should have been two Cases) there 'twas held, That the Statute of Jeofails does not extend to Informations of Intrusions; and yet it was ruled, that it should be amended.

Indeed, my Lord Hales, in Keble, 191, 215. [He means Twisden; Vid. Keble, 191, 198, 215.] did hold, that it was amendable within the Statute; and that the Amendment would stand in need of it: But it was ruled contra; and that it needed not the Help of the Statute of Jeofails. And I must needs say, if the Case of Bradley and Banks, in 2 Croke, 283. and in Telverton, 204. were not in the way, I think the Writ had been good enough; for it is a Continuance from Day to Day, tho' the Teste is the 24th, and the Award the 23d.

Now

Now, in my Mind, an Award the 23d, of a Writ, the 24th, is a perfect Continuance. And the Case of Bradley, &c. as it is in 2 Croke, 283. does not contradict this; tho' indeed that Case of Bradley, as it is in Yelverton, is contrary; but that seems mistaken. So that I do think, on the whole Matter, it is amendable at Common Law.

Note, Powis accorded with Gould, that it was amendable; but Powel argued contra, that it was not.

L. C. J. Holt. I should have been glad to have had Time till next Term, to consider of this Matter: For tho' I am satisfied in my Opinion, yet perhaps I may not give others that Satisfaction concerning it, as I might have done if I had had a longer Time.

I am of Opinion, That this is not amendable, neither by the Common Law, nor by the Statutes.

First, It must be admitted, that this is a Fault in the Writ, in a Point that is material: That is, The Teste, which should have been Die Luna, the 23d of October, and it is the 24th: For the 23d is the Day that the Defendant has in Court on the Return; and that being the Day he has in Court, the Teste of the Writ to continue the Process should have been that very Day.

Now I do not understand what my Brother Powis says, That there is no Interval between one Day and another. I would fain know, if a Day be appointed for a Man to appear on; and then he has another Day given him, when he appears not: As, if a Man appears the 23d of October, and there is a Day given, the 24th; will not this be a Discontinuance? No question but it is: Because he being in Court the 23d, and having no Direction the 23d when to come again, he is out of Court. Then shall you give another Day behind his Back? That cannot be in Reason. His Day in Court is the 23d of October; and that Day he should have another Day appointed. He has a Day in the Roll, but not in the Writ: That is issued behind his Back, the 24th; at which Time he is not in Court. Then if this be so, here is a Writ issued behind the Defendant's Back, and without any Award of the Court: For the Award is, Die Luna prox. post tres Septimanas Sancti Michaelis, which is the 23d of October; then there is a Præceptum est that Day. Now when this Writ issues the 24th; is this Writ warranted by the Roll? No, it is not; but another Sort of Writ, different from that which the Court awarded: Therefore being another Writ than what was awarded; where is there any Authority for it? Or how can the Jury be distrain'd upon it?

The Writ that issued the 24th, is another Writ: For there is a material varying between the Writ that issues, and the Award of the Roll; one is the 23d, the other is the 24th.

The Day of the Writ is material: And when it bears Teste, it is in the Judgment of the Law a Writ of that very Day; as it was adjudged in the Case of Owen vers. Baily, 17 Ch. 2. in a Trover and Conversion.

A Defendant, that is condemn'd in Debt and Damages, sells his Goods bona fide, between the last Day of Trinity Term and the first of August. After he had sold his Goods, the Plaintiff takes out a Fieri Facias, Teste'd the first Day of Trinity Term; which was before the Sale, tho' taken out after; setting forth, That the 4th or 5th of July, he had seized these Goods in the Hand of the Vendee;

VOL. V.

Tho' the Writ was not taken out actually in Trinity Term, yet bearing Date then, and the first of August the Goods were sold; yet the Writ being Teste'd the first Day of Trinity Term, 'twas held not amendable; and that the Hands of the Vendee were bound by it.

Now this Writ here is, in the Judgment of the Law, issuing out of this Court the 24th of October. If we should amend this, what Alteration should we make? We must make it another Writ: For a Writ that issues out of this Court the 24th, cannot be a Writ that issues out the 23d; and if we amend it, we make it as different as possibly can be.

Now why should we amend it? As we now take it, by the Statute of Henry VI. the Writ is good in it self; but it is not, as the Court awarded it. The Meaning of the Statute was not to amend mistaken Writs, but Mistakes in Writs: The Statutes meant nothing but that. Not that you should amend a Writ that was good in it self, and fit it to your particular Purpose.

Now here is a Writ executed in the same Term: Yet to make this Trial to be good, what must you do by this Amendment? You must make it to be another Writ: For you must make the Writ, even contrary to Truth, to be the 23d, which was the 24th: And therefore it cannot be made good; nor can the Trial be made good. You would make it the 23d, where it is indeed the 24th; and so you would change the Nature and Substance of the Writ. Is not this a material Variance, and different from the Award of the Court?

Before the Statute of Jeofails, if it had been in a Civil Case, it is help'd by the Statute of the 8th of Henry VI. because it is a Discontinuance of Process, it is help'd by that Statute; but that Statute extends not to this Case. I would fain know, whether there has been any Amendment, in any Case of this Nature, since the Statute of Henry the VIth? It's true, Teste's of Writs have been often amended; but that was, where it was a void Teste; as on a Sunday, or out of Term; or where it is impossible, as after the Return, &c. That is a void Teste, if it bear Date on a Sunday, or in the Vacation.

In Civil Cases it is amendable; because it is the Fault of the Clerk by mistaking a Day; as in making it on a Sunday, or in a Vacation-Time: There may be Reason for it; and it may be amended by the Statute of Henry VI. because plainly a Mistake of the Clerk. And on this Reason is that Case in Yelverton, 64. and the Case of Bradley and Banks, 204. There was a Venire returnable one Day; and the Teste of the Distringas was of the same Date, and the same Day with the Teste of the Venire; and that was held amendable, because it is impossible you shall distrain before the Return of the Venire; and the Distringas bore Teste the same Day with the Venire: So that the Teste was repugnant to the Writ it self; and therefore the Writ is naught in it self, because it was to distrain a Jury that was not summon'd. But the Law has always been, That if upon the Return of one Writ, there is to be another Writ awarded; that other Writ must be Teste'd on the very Day upon which it was awarded, and the Return of the former.

And that Case of Bradley and Banks, in 2 Cro. and Yelv. is very strong to this Purpose. There the Person came in on the Exigent, and pray'd Oyer of the Writ and all Mesne Process: And therein appeared a Gap, the first Process being returnable Dacino sexto Octobris, and the Appeal being returnable Quindena Sancti Michaelis, that is, the 16th of October, were well. But the alias Capias goes out Teste'd the 23d of October, which being seven Days after the Return of the former, that was wrong; for it should have borne Teste the 16th of October, then it had been right; but being the 23d, there was a Gap; and therefore it was held a Discontinuance.

And this is the Practice of the Common-Pleas, tho' not so much observed here in this Court, in Writs of Enquiry of Damages: But enquire of them in the Common-Pleas, and they will tell you, the subsequent Process ought always to bear Teste the Day of the Return of the former Writ. If you go to a Capias, either in Outlawry, or to distrain a Man; the second Distingas is always Teste'd the Day of the Return of the first; and the third is always Teste'd the Day of the Return of the Second: And if it bear Teste the next Day, all Process is discontinued.

Ay, but you say, it is a Mistake of the Clerk. It is so: But we are to judge of the Thing it self, whether it is by way of Negligence, or for want of Skill. For aught I know, it may be for want of Skill, that it is Teste'd another Day: But every Clerk does not know this. Nay, some have pretended to know, that it need not bear Date the Day of the precedent Writ's Return. Why then might it not be an Error in Skill? If he thinks it a right Writ, and says it must be Teste'd the 24th, this is want of Skill; and then it is not amendable. And then this being a wrong Writ, the Teste is material; and its being Teste'd the 24th, is a Mistake so material, that if it had been a civil Case, I should have been against the Amendment; and therefore much more in this Case, I think, it ought to be quash'd, and a new Venire awarded.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Court decide it, I cannot tell what to say.

Mr. J. Powis. What have you to say?

Mr. Att. Gen. The Court is divided, and there it hangs.

L. C. J. Holt. I would not be understood otherwise than thus: I do not say, this Case is within the Statute; but I look on it to be so material a Variance, than it is not amendable.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Court being divided in their Opinion, I know not any Rule to stop Judgment.

Mr. J. Powis. I know not how far it may go in criminal Cases. That which sway'd with me, was, to see so many bold Amendments in many Cases; that went with me very far; and which were said to be done by Common Law.

What I said as to coming the next Day, I did not rely on it: Tho' it did seem to alleviate the Thing. But I was so tender in the Case, that I did think it might be better to have a new Trial. I have held, in my Opinion, with my Lord Chief Justice Holt and Mr. Justice Powel a great deal. I was tender before in the Point: And I do join with my Lord Chief Justice Holt and Mr. Justice Powel, that there ought to be a new Trial, and a new Distingas.

Mr. Att. Gen. With a Rule, I submit; but without a Rule, I would have signed Judgment.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, We move to set aside this Trial, because it is irregular.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you make a Rule, we need not dispute it.

Mr. J. Powel. Judgment goes of course, unless you stop it.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no Rule to stop it: And then I can sign my Judgment.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, tho' the Court can make no Rule for an Amendment, because the Judges are divided about that Point; yet I humbly conceive, your Lordship, and the rest of the Judges do agree, that the Writ, as it now is, is naught; and therefore I hope you will let us have a Rule to stay Judgment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Attorney, They have been moving to have a new Trial.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Twould be a Breach of Duty in me, not to sign my Judgment, if you don't make a Rule while it is under Consideration.

L. C. J. Holt. Here was Leave given to move in Arrest of Judgment; and there is no Rule for signing Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no Rule to stop it.

Mr. Mountague. What is the Rule that was made upon my first Motion?

Clerk reads, Die Martis proximo, &c.

Mr. Mountague. We take it, that tho' the Court be divided about the Amendment; yet since there can be no Amendment, the Writ being naught, we ought to go to a new Trial.

Mr. J. Powel. By all Means, go to a new Trial.

Mr. J. Powis. It is in a Case that was never so much look'd into before.

Mr. Att. Gen. If we must have a new Trial in this Case, we are in a worse Case than I thought we were; for we are to begin Process again. But if a Rule be made, we must submit.

Mr. Mountague. There was a Rule made at the Side Bar, upon my Motion there, That all Things should stay.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was not a Place to move for a Rule.

L. C. J. Holt. That is to stay in statu quo they were then. There is no Rule for Judgment to stay.

Mr. Att. Gen. If on Motion to arrest Judgment, the Judges of the Court are divided, I have heard it said, that Judgment may be enter'd.

Mr. J. Powis. I said at the Beginning, I was inclinable to have a new Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. I know not what you mean. You said, you were inclinable to have it amended: I would have it amended, if I had followed my Fancy.

Mr. J. Powel. If my Brother has changed his Opinion, he may: For we have been arguing, that we may change our Judgments.

L. C. J. Holt. You have any Time to-day to move it again. Put us in mind of it: I may change my Mind too, it may be.

Mr. J. Powis. I judge not how it may go in criminal Matters: But all are of Opinion, that it should not stand as it does.

L. C. J. Holt. The Court is divided that it should be amended; but not that it is well as it is: And that is Mr. Attorney's Motion, to alter what is to be amended.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Attorney makes no Motion for a Rule; but would have it stay as it does.

L. C. J. Holt. That it may remain in statu quo.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you cannot agree in your Judgment, I submit it to you, whether I may not enter Judgment for the Queen, tho' it be not amended.

Mr. Mountague. We hope Mr. Attorney shall not not be permitted to sign Judgment in this Case: For tho' 'tis true, that there can be no Amendment, because the Court is divided; yet I do not apprehend that it is right as it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Court be divided, no Rule can be made.

Mr. J. Powis. Let there be a new Trial.

Mr. Mountague. Mr. Attorney, The Court would have a new Trial: And I think you had better do so.

Mr. Att. Gen. I want none of your Directions.

Mr. Mountague. I may take notice of what the Judges say.

L. C. J. Holt. And he will make use of what we say, as far as is convenient for him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But Mr. Mountague must not pretend to give Directions, what I am to do.

Mr. Mountague. I don't give you Directions; but I hope I may take notice of what the Court says.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Attorney, We believe you don't want their Advice.

Mr. Att. Gen. But they are very ready to give it.

Mr. Mountague. I only took notice to Mr. Attorney, how far the Court was agreed: And only moved that the Rule, which I did conceive was pronounced by the Court, might be taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. You moved to no Purpose.

Mr. Mountague. I take it, that Mr. Justice Powis is for a new Trial.

Mr. J. Powis. Yes, I am so. It is a nice Case, and has never been consider'd fully before.

Mr. Mountague. I hope now we have done.

Mr. Att. Gen. If I hear what Rule the Court makes, I shall submit.

Mr. Mountague. I hear the Pleasure of the Court is, that the Rule shall be for a new Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. You must have a new Venire Facias.

Mr. Att. Gen. That cannot be, with Submission: A new Venire we cannot have.

L. C. J. Holt. You must have a new Trial. The Jury have given their Verdict; whereas they appeared to a wrong Writ, and so the former Trial is not warranted.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think they are warranted to appear by the Return of the Venire; and that we must go back, but where the Fault is, which is only but where the Disfringas is made out: So that a Disfringas de novo is to be for the same Jury. But I will meddle no more in it, without particular Order.

L. C. J. Holt. Do what you will; we will give you no Direction. We quash this Trial.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, If you quash this Trial, then we are to begin again.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Court is of Opinion that there ought only to be a new Disfringas issued, and we can go back no further; I am afraid we shall never come right.

Mr. J. Powel. The Difficulty is in right awarding the Disfringas, because it does not bear Date with the Return of the Venire. But then consider where you are: If you bring him on a new Trial, he can challenge any one that has given a Verdict before.

L. C. J. Holt. It is a Disfringas to summon that Jury, but it is without Teste: And that Jury having given their Verdict, they are not to serve again.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am sure, according to Authorities, they must begin where the Fault was.

L. C. J. Holt. I should have thought the Venire de novo had been proper: For this Disfringas bearing Teste out of Time, and that being erroneously executed, there ought to be a new Disfringas, which is to be founded on a new Venire.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you do quash this Trial, I suppose your Lordship will make some Award for a new one.

L. C. J. Holt. We leave it to you.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot enter it.

Mr. J. Powel. We must grant a Venire de novo, which we cannot do without quashing this Verdict; and that is the way to try him again.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I am far from thinking I can alter your Rule; but I can't tell how to follow it.

L. C. J. Holt. What we do is ex abundanti, more than we are bound to. We can leave you to do what you can: The taking out the Venire and Disfringas, are Things of course.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think there is a Necessity to explain my Meaning. I don't pretend to direct what you must do; but you must direct what is to be done: I cannot award a Venire.

L. C. J. Holt. It is taken out of Course. You may award that as well as the first, if it may be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. How can that be done, seeing you quash the Disfringas?

Mr. J. Powel. That is the Award of the Court, and does not hinder you from taking out a new Venire.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot do it without the Court. When you quash this, you must award another.

L. C. J. Holt. We do award it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I remember in the Case of Fitzwalter, when they quash'd the Trial, they order'd a new one should be had, &c.

L. C. J. Holt. If we make an Award, and you don't like it, you will not comply with it: Therefore we leave you to take it out as you will.

Mr. Att. Gen. You must order a new Venire; I cannot award a new one else.

L. C. J. Holt. You must have a Venire Facias.

Mr. Att. Gen. That must be the Judgment of the Court then. For if I award it, it must be by Order of Court.

Mr. J. Gould. You had better declare de novo.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am fearful of what I do. I hope the Court will discharge me.

L. C. J. Holt. When a Trial is quash'd and set aside for any Irregularity of the Trial, that Jury is discharged: All the Pannel is discharged, and there must be a new Pannel.

Mr. Att. Gen. How will that appear?

L. C. J. Holt. If it appear that the Disfringas did not issue as it ought, every thing shall be enter'd at large on the Rule: That the Disfringas did not issue till the 24th of October; therefore they will consider, that the Verdict shall be set aside,

Mr. Att. Gen. And that we shall have Leave to go to a new Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. Presumptum est.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please to make the Rule then, I submit.

L. C. J. Holt. We will advise how to make the Rule.

It was never afterwards thought proper to try him again.

Whereupon the Lords of Her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council did Nominate and Appoint, the Earl of Loudoun, Lord Belhaven, Lord Arnistoun, Sir John Home of Blackadder, and John Cockburn younger of Ormiston, to be Assessors to the foresaid Judge; and assist and vote with him in the Trial, at the Procurator-Fiscal's Instance, against Captain Thomas Green, Commander of the Ship the Worcester, and others of his Ship's Crew, before the said High Court of Admiralty; for their being guilty of Piracy, and other Crimes; and that to the final End and Decision thereof; as an Act extracted and signed by the Clerk of Council, extant in the Records of the said High Court, bears.

Follows the Court of Justiciary of the High Court of Admiralty, with the whole Trial, as it proceeded before the Judge of Admiralty, and the Assessors above appointed.

Alexander Higgins, Advocate Procurator-Fiscal to the High Court of Admiralty, of the Crimes of Piracy, Robbery, and Murder, in manner after-mentioned, viz. That by the Law of God, the Laws of Nations, of this, and of all well govern'd Realms, the Crimes of Piracy, Robbery, and Murder, are prohibited, under all highest Pains; and that by the Laws of this Realm, the said Crimes are prohibit are guilty, * Art and Part of the said Crimes, or one or other of the same, in so far as the said Captain Thomas or his said Crew, having sailed from England, in the said Vessel the Worcester, upon Pretence of Merchandizing towards the East-Indies; the fore-said Captain, and his said Crew belonging to the said Vessel, did, upon one or other of the Days of the Months of February, March, April, or May, in the Year 1703. rencounter, or meet with another Ship or Vessel, sailed by its own Men or Crew, upon the Coast of Malabar, near Calcutte; and the said Vessel bearing a red Flag, and having English or Scots aboard, at least such as spoke the English Language; the said Captain Thomas Green and his Crew, after some * Intercommuning with them, did, without any lawful Warrant, or a just Cause, attack the said other Vessel, or Ship, while expecting no such Treatment; and invading her first by their Sloup, which they had manned with Guns and other Arms for that Purpose, they fell upon the said other Vessel in an hostile Manner, by shooting of Guns and otherways; and after some Time spent in Fighting against her by their Sloup, and partly by the approaching of the said Thomas Green's Ship the Worcester, they overcame, and boarded the said other Vessel, and having seized their Men, they killed them, and threw them overboard, and then carried, or caused to carry away the Goods that were aboard the said other Vessel, to their said Ship the Worcester; and then disposed upon the said Ship, by felling her a Shore on the said Coast. Which Crime, being a wicked Piracy committed by Surprise in Parts so remote, and probably with all the Caution the Committers could use for concealing thereof, and for preventing Discoveries, comes now to be discovered in the several Parts and Circumstances of the Action, and by such as were present thereat; which being all conjoyn'd, does make up and infer the fore-said Crime objected, and are as follows, viz. That the fore-said Rencounter and Fight betwixt Capt. Green and his Crew, and the said Vessel the Worcester, and the fore-said other Vessel taken by her, happen'd on the said Coast as above: Likeas, at the same Time, one or more of the said Ship the Worcester, her Crew being on Shore, and at some distance from the Sea, heard the said Shooting, which brought the said Persons to the Shore, where they, at least the Chyrurgeon of the said Ship the Worcester one of them, saw her riding at a good Distance from the Shore upon her Birth (as they speak) and having the other Ship at the Stern, as it were tied or towed to her, as being the Vessel they had master'd or overcome, as said is.

Likeas, the said Chyrurgeon did see the Boat belonging to the said Ship the Worcester coming ashore from her, and the Chyrurgeon † demanding at such of the Crew as were † Asking. in her, what had brought them ashore: They answer'd that they had been Busking (a Sea-Term used for fitting and trimming a Ship for fighting) and they had drunk, spilt, or staved all their Water, and they were come for a new Supply: And when a little Time thereafter the said Chyrurgeon went aboard the said Ship the Worcester, he perceived the Deck thereof lumber'd and cover'd, and in a confused Manner, with Balls, Boxes, and Goods; whereof when he asked the Reason, John Madder, one of the * Panels, and a principal Actor in the Engagement, answer'd, Damn you, what have you to do to enquire, meddle with your Plaster-Box. And when the Chyrurgeon went down to his Station and Chest, he called for one of the Blacks Antonio Ferdinando, and one Duncan Mokay now dead, and another in order to dress them; but when he asked what way they came by their Wounds, they declined to answer; whereupon the Chyrurgeon refusing to dress them, if they would not tell him how they got their Wounds, the said John Madder came to the Chyrurgeon in a Passion, and asked what was his business to ask so many Questions, when he did see the Wounds so plain before him, calling him a Blockhead for not dressing them; and at length the Contest was so warm betwixt the said Madder and Chyrurgeon, that Madder charged him to ask no more Questions, and he charged the Men wounded, not to answer a Word: And further ordered him back to the Shore, which the Chyrurgeon was forced to comply with; where the Chyrurgeon meeting with Francisco de Olivera the † Linguister, asked † Interpreter. him whether he saw any of the Worcester's Men that had carried the fore-said Ship so taken into Keilon River, and the Linguister answered, that he had not, but that they were some of the Worcester's Company, who as soon as they had brought her in and made her fast, took their Boat and went directly on Board: The Ship taken being carried into Keilon River as said is, where she was left with her Yards and Top-masts down, all unrigged: And the said Linguister told the Chyrurgeon further, that one Coge Commodo complained he had bought the said Ship taken too dear; whereby it appears that the said Ship taken by Violence, was sold in manner aforesaid. Likeas, for further Evidence of the said Piracy, since the Time that John Reynolds one of the Pannels was seized with the rest, for his Accession thereto, there was found a Letter wrote to him by one Sarah Newlands, bearing Date January the 6th, wherein she tells him, That tho' he had been basely wicked, yet she should be sorry to hear he were guilty of any thing that might bring him to the Gallows; and therefore advises him to confess; adding, that in his own Letter which she had seen, he says, That some of their Men had basely confessed (which says he) implies that they were guilty. And when Reynolds was questioned upon his Letter, he acknowledged that he had wrote a Letter to his Wife the said Sarah's Sister, which had occasioned her writing the said Letter to him; and thereupon he produced the Copy of the said Letter to his Wife, which agrees with what Sarah says, as the said Copy and Sarah's Letter both put in the Clerk of the Admiralty's Hands, to be seen by the Pannels, bear. And further, George Haines one of the Crew of the said Worcester, since his coming to Scotland, and when at Bruntisland, being asked by one James Wilkie, Taylor, † Burgess of Edinburgh, some Day in October last, about his Brother Andrew Wilkie, who went Chyrurgeon in Captain Drummond's Ship, if ever the said Haines had seen the said Andrew Wilkie in his Voyage, he flew in a Passion, and said, what Devil was his concern with Captain Drummond? Upon which James Wilkie forbearing a little till he should be calmer, asked the said Haines, whether he had heard or seen any Scots Ship coming to or from the East-Indies during their Voyage? Haines answered, that when they were upon the Coast of Malabar, a Dutch Ship informed them, that one Capt. Drummond, commanding a Scots Ship, and having a Sloop in Company, was turned Pirate. Upon which Haines and they manned their Ship to be in readiness, but saw him not; only a little thereafter Haines added, that he had in his Custody, the Time the said Ship the Worcester was seized, which he would not have fallen into the Seizer's Hands for twice the Value of the Ship, but that he had thrown it over-board; adding further, that there was still in the Ship what would never be found by the Seizers, unless they pulled her Board from Board, tho' he knew where the Thing lay. Likeas, when after the said James Wilkie departed, one Anna Seaton in Bruntisland, did at his Desire further enquire at Haines about Captain Drummond's Ship; he answered, that he saw they had a Design to pump him, but that they should not be the wiser of him: At all which Passages, Kenneth Mackenzie * Inhabitant. * Indweller in Cannon-gate was a present Witness. And the said Anna Seaton did further tell the said Kenneth Mackenzie, that when she expostulate with Haines for his being in Passion, as said is; he answered, that he knew more of Captain Drummond than he would tell at that Time; and that if the said Andrew Wilkie was with Captain Drummond, he would not be seen again. And further, the said Anna Seaton heard the said Haines own and declare their said Wickedness; and she and William Wood, one of the Gunners of her Majesty's Artillery, with one John Hendersen † Writer in Edinburgh, being in September last, in Anna Seaton's Mother's House, after having drunk one Health or two; the said Haines, who was there present, fell in a melancholy Fit, and express'd himself, That it's a Wonder, that since we did not sink at Sea, God doth not make the Ground to swallow us up for the Wickedness that has been committed during the last Voyage, on Board of that Old Bitch Bels, pointing to Captain Green's Ship. And further, the said Haines said, That if what the said John Madder had done in the said Voyage were well known, he deserved as much as his Uncle Madder met with at Amsterdam, who was there burnt in Oil, for attempting to burn their Ships. And when at another Time, the said Anna Seaton told Haines, that she had an old Sweet-heart who went away with Captain Drummond, and would gladly hear some Tidings, whether he was dead or alive; the said Haines, who was then a * Suiter to Anna Seaton, assured her, she would never see him again, if he was in Drummond's Ship. And for a further Confirmation of the Truth of the said Piracy, when a Committee of Council was sent to Bruntisland, to cause Search and unload the said Vessel, it was found by the Skip-pers and Seamen employed, that the Goods aboard her were not stow'd as Merchant Goods used to be, but were found in the Hold in such Confusion, as if taken by Piracy, and no otherways. Likeas, when the said Ship the Worcester was seized, the said John Madder being question'd about Captain Drummond's Ship, he took out of his Pocket, or at least shew'd in his Hand, the Seal of the African Company, which he could never lawfully have got. By all which, they being joined and connected together (as a Discovery of such a Wickedness practised in such remote Parts, and so industriously and obstinately endeavour'd to be concealed, deserves to be) the same in all the Points and Circumstances thereof, at least such, and so many of them as are † relevant, and are offered to be proven by a cumulative Probation, do plainly amount to such a plenary Evidence, as may fully convince all impartial Men, that the aforesaid Captain Green and his said Crew, are all and each of them guilty, Art and Part, of the fore-said Crimes of Piracy, Robbery, and Murder, or one or other of them above charg'd; which being found by a Verdict of an † Assize before the Judge of the Admiralty, and the Lords Assessors appointed by the Lords of the Privy-Council, the forenamed Persons, and each of them, ought to be punished by Sentence of the said Court, with the Pain of Death, and Confiscation of their Moveables, to the Example and Terror of others, to do or commit the like in Time coming.

* Persons indicted.

Taylor* Seaman there, and John Bannantine Seaman there; all of Captain Thomas Green Commander of the said Ship his Crew: You, and ilk one of you are accused and indicted at the Instance of Mr. Alex. Higgins Advocate, Procurator-Fiscal to the High Court of Admiralty, of the Crimes of Piracy, Robbery and Murder, in Manner after-mention'd, viz. That by the Law of God, the Laws of Nations, of this, and of all other well-govern'd Realms, the Crimes of Piracy, Robbery and Murder, are prohibite under all highest Pains: And that by the Laws of this Realm, the said Crimes are prohibite, under Pain of Death, and Escheat of Moveables. Nevertheless, it is of Verity, that Captain Thomas Green Commander of the Ship called the Worcester, now in Bruntisland Harbour, and his Crew, are guilty, Art and Part, of the said Crimes, or one or other of the Seamen, in so far as the said Captain Thomas, or his said Crew, having sailed from England in the said Vessel the Worcester, upon Pretence of Merchandizing towards the East-Indies, the foresaid Captain and his said Crew belonging to the said Vessel, did upon one or other of the Days of the Months of February, March, April or May, in the Year 1703, rencounter and meet with another Ship or Vessel, sailed by its own Men or Crew, upon the Coast of Malabar near Calecute; and the said Vessel bearing a red Flag, and having English or Scots aboard, at least such as spoke the English Language, the said Captain Thomas Green and his Crew, after some intercommuning with them, did without any lawful Warrant, or just Cause, attack the said other Vessel or Ship, while expecting no such Treatment; and invading her first by their Sloop, which they had manned, and furnished with Guns and other Arms for that Purpose; They fell upon the said other Vessel in an hostile Manner, by shooting of Guns and otherways; and after some Time spent in fighting against her by their Sloop, and partly by the approaching of the said Thomas Green's Ship the Worcester, they overcame, and boarded the said other Vessel, and having seized their Men, they killed them, and threw them over-board, and then carried, or caused to carry away the Goods that were aboard of the said other Vessel to their said Ship the Worcester, and then disposed upon the said Ship, by selling her ashore on the said Coast. Which Crime being a wicked Piracy, committed by Surprize in Parts so remote, and probably with all the Caution the Committers could use for concealing thereof, and for preventing Discoveries, comes now to be discovered in the several Parts and Circumstances of the Action, and by such as were present thereat: Which being all conjoyned, does make up and infer the foresaid Crime objected, and are as follows, viz. That the foresaid Rencounter and Fight between Captain Green and his Crew, and the said Vessel the Worcester, and the foresaid other Vessel taken by her, happen'd on the said Coast as above: Likeas, at the same Time, one or more of the said Ship the Worcester, her Crew being on Shore, and at some Distance from the Sea, heard the said shooting, which brought the said Persons to the Shore, where they, at least the Chyrurgeon of the said Ship the Worcester one of them, saw her riding at a good Distance from the Shore upon her Birth (as they speak) and having the other Ship at her Stern, as it were tied or towed to her, as being the Vessel they had master'd or overcame, as said is. Likeas, the said Chyrurgeon did see the Boat belonging to the said Ship the Worcester coming ashore from her, and the Chyrurgeon demanding, at such of the Crew as were in her, what had brought them ashore? They answered, that they had been Busking (a Sea-Term, used for fitting and trimming a Ship for fighting) and that they had drunk, split or staved all their Water, and they were come for a new Supply; and when a little Time thereafter the said Chyrurgeon went aboard the said Ship the Worcester, he perceived the Deck thereof lumber'd and cover'd, and in a confused Manner with Balls, Boxes and Goods; whereof when he ask'd the Reason, John Madder one of the Pannels, and a principal Actor in the Engagement, answer'd--Damn you, what have you to do to enquire, meddle with your Plaster-Box. And when the Chyrurgeon went down to his Station and Chest, he called for one of the Blacks Antonio Ferdinando, and one Duncan Mackay now dead, and another, in order to dress them; but when he asked what way they came by their Wounds, they declined to answer: Whereupon the Chyrurgeon refusing to dress them, if they would not tell him how they got their Wounds; the said John Madder came to the Chyrurgeon in a Passion, and asked what was his Business to ask so many Questions, when he did see the Wounds so plain before him? Calling him a Blockhead for not dressing them. And at length the Contest was so warm betwixt the said Madder and Chyrurgeon, that Madder charged him to ask no more Questions, and he charged the Men wounded not to answer a Word: And further, order'd him back to the Shore, which the Chyrurgeon was forced to comply with. Where the Chyrurgeon meeting with Francisco de Olivera their Linguister, asked him, whether he saw any of the Worcester's Men, that had carried the foresaid Ship so taken, into Keilon River? And the Linguister answered, that he had not; but that they were some of the Worcester's Company, who, as soon as they had brought her in, and made her fast, took their Boat, and went directly on board: The Ship taken being carried into Keilon River, as said is, where she was left, with her Yards and Top-Masts down, all unrigged. And the said Linguister told the Chyrurgeon further, That one Cogo Commodo complained he had bought the said taken Ship too dear; whereby it appears, that the said Ship taken by Violence, was sold in Manner foresaid.

Likeas, for further Evidence of the said Piracy, since the Time that John Reynolds, one of the Pannels, was seized with the rest, for his Accession thereto; there was found a Letter wrote to him by one
 Sarah

Sarah Newlands, bearing Date the 6th of January; wherein she tells him, That tho' he had been basely wicked, yet she should be sorry to hear he were guilty of any thing that might bring him to the Gallows: And therefore advises him to confes; adding, That in his own Letter, which he had seen, he says, that some of their Men had basely confessed; which, says she, implies, that they were guilty. And when Reynolds was questioned upon his Letter, he acknowledged that he had wrote a Letter to his Wife, the said Sarah's Sister, which had occasioned her writing the said Letter to him: And thereupon he produced the Copy of the said Letter to his Wife, which agrees with what Sarah says; as the said Copy, and Sarah's Letter (both put in the Clerk of the Admiralty's Hands, to be seen by the Pannels) bear.

And further: George Haines, one of the Crew of the said Worcester, since his coming to Scotland, and when at Bruntisland, being asked by one James Wilkie, Taylor, Burgefs of Edinburgh, some Day in October last, about his Brother Andrew Wilkie, who went Chyrurgeon in Captain Drummond's Ship; if ever the said Haines had seen the said Andrew Wilkie in his Voyage? He flew in a Passion, and said, What Devil was his Concern with Captain Drummond? Upon which, James Wilkie forbearing a little, till he should be calmer, ask'd the said Haines again, Whether he had heard or seen any Scots Ships, coming to or from the East-Indies, during their Voyage? Haines answered, That when they were upon the Coast of Malabar, a Dutch Ship inform'd them, That one Captain Drummond, commanding a Scots Ship, and having a Sloop in Company, was turn'd Pyrate: Upon which Haines said, they mann'd their Sloop to be in Readiness, but saw him not: Only a little thereafter Haines added, That he had in his Custody the Time the said Ship the Worcester was seized, which he would not have fallen into the Seizer's Hands for twice the Value of the Ship; but that he had thrown it overboard: Adding further, That there was still in the Ship what would never be found by the Seizers, unless they pull'd her Board from Board, though he knew where the Thing lay.

Likeas, when after the said James Wilkie's Departure, one Anna Seaton did, at his Desire, further enquire at Haines about Captain Drummond's Ship; he answered, That they had a Design to pump him, but that they should not be the wiser of him. At all which Passages, Kenneth Mackenzie, an Indweller in Cannongate, was a present Witness. And the said Anna Seaton did further tell the said Kenneth Mackenzie, That when she expostulat with Haines for his being in a Passion, as said is; he answered, That he knew more of Captain Drummond than he would tell at that Time: And that if the said Andrew Wilkie was with Captain Drummond, he would not be seen again.

And further, The said Anna Seaton heard the said Haines own and declare their said Wickedness. And she, and William Wood, one of the Gunners of Her Majesty's Artillery, with one John Henderson Writer in Edinburgh, being in September last at Anna Seaton's Mother's House; after having drank a Health or two, the said Haines, who was there present, fell in a melancholy Fit; and expres'd himself, That it's a wonder that since we did not sink at Sea, God doth not make the Ground to swallow us up, for the Wickedness that has been committed during the last Voyage on Board of that Old Bitch Bess; pointing to Captain Green's Ship. And further, the said Haines said, That if what the said John Madder had done in the said Voyage were well known, he deserved as much as his Uncle Madder met with at Amsterdam; who was there burnt in Oil, for attempting to burn their Ships. And when, at another Time, the said Anna Seaton told Haines, That she had an old Sweet-heart who went away with Captain Drummond, and would gladly hear some Tidings whether he was dead or alive. The said Haines, who was then a Suitor of Anna Seaton's, assured her, she would never see him again, if he was in Drummond's Ship.

And for a further Confirmation of the Truth of the said Piracy, when a Committee of Council was sent to Bruntisland, to cause Search and unload the said Vessel; it was found, by the Skippers and Seamen employ'd, that the Goods aboard her were not stowed as Merchant Goods used to be; but were found in the Hold in such Confusion, as if taken by Piracy, and no otherways. Likeas when the said Ship the Worcester was seized, the said John Madder being question'd about Captain Drummond's Ship; he took out of his Pocket, or at least shewed in his Hand, the Seal of the African Company; which he could never have lawfully got.

By all which, they being joined and connected together (as a Discovery of such a Wickedness practised in such remote Parts, and so industriously and obstinately endeavour'd to be concealed, deserves to be) the samen, in all the Points and Circumstances thereof; at least such, and so many of them as are relevant, and are offer'd to be proven by a cumulative Probation; do plainly amount to such a plenary Evidence, as may fully convince all impartial Men, that the foresaid Captain Green and his said Crew, are all and each of them guilty, Art and Part, of the foresaid Crimes of Piracy, Robbery and Murder, or one or other of them above charged. Which being found by a Verdict of an Assize before the Judge of the Admiralty, and the Lords Assessors appointed by the Lords of Privy Council; the forenamed Persons, and each of them, ought to be punish'd by Sentence of the said Court, with the Pain of Death, and Confiscation of their Moveables; to the Examples, and Terror of others, to do or commit the like in Time coming.

† Time of Prosecution. Her Majesty's Advocat for the Pursuers craved, that the † Dyet against Captain Thomas Green and others, contained in that Indictment with him, might be continued.

It was objected by the Pannel's Procurators, that the Dyet could not be continued against them; being contrair to the Act of Parliament for preventing wrongus Imprisonment, and contrair to an exprels Clause therein.

It was replied for the Pursuers, that the Act of Parliament is opposed; which only requires the Dyet of the Trial to be fixed within sixty Days after Intimation, which was done; but then allows to the Pursuers to insist, and to the Judge to determine by a final Sentence, within forty Days, if before the Lords of Justiciary, and thirty Days, if before any other Judge.

* INFORMATION

* Plea, or Brief.

For Mr. Alexander Higgins, Procurator-Fiscal of the High-Court of Admiralty:

A G A I N S T

Captain Thomas Green, Commander of the Worcester, and his Crew and Complices.

* Indictment. T Here being two * Libels raised before the High-Court of Admiralty, and the Lords Assessors appointed by the Lords of Privy-Council, both at the Instance of the said Mr. Alexander Higgins; but the first against Henry Keigle, Carpenter in the Ship called the Worcester, now in Bruntisland Harbour; Samuel Urlane, his Mate; George Haines, Stewart of the said Ship; Daniel Stringman, Cook in the said Ship; Samuel Wilcocks, Chyrurgeon's Mate; George Glen, Seaman there; Henry Barnes, Seaman there; Alexander Taylor, Seaman there; and John Ballantyne, Seaman there: And the second against the said Captain Thomas Green, Commander of the said Ship the Worcester; Captain John Madder, Chief Mate of the said Ship; John Reynolds, Second Mate of the said Ship; Thomas Linstead, Assistant to the deceased Supercargo of the said Ship; James Burn, Boatfswain of the said Ship; James Simpson, Gunner of the said Ship; Andrew Robertson, Gunner's Mate; John Brucklie, Seaman there; and George Kitchen, Seaman there; all Prisoners.

Both the Libels being the same, the Tenor thereof prefix to the Information is verbatim conform to the Indictments on the preceding Pages, in the Court holden the Fifth of March, 1705, and whereto this refers.

When the * haild forefaids Pannels * whole were brought to the Bar, and the said Libels read against them; the Procurator-Fiscal declared, That he insisted first upon the first Libel, viz. against the saids Henry Keigle Carpenter, Samuel Urlane, George Haines, Daniel Stringman, Samuel Wilcocks, George Glen, Henry Barnes, Alexander Taylor, and John Ballantyne; and after some Debate moved by the Pannels Procurators, that the Pannels having used the Method prescribed by the Act of Parliament, to bring themselves to a Trial within sixty Days, they ought now all of them to be insisted against; and it being answered, That all that the Act of Parliament required was, That a Day should be fix'd for the Trial within sixty Days after the Charge given for that Effect, the same was done, and also the whole Pannels so far insisted against, that their Libels were read, which fully satisfies that Part of the Act; and that as to further insisting, prosecuting and concluding, the Act of Parliament allowed forty Days further before the Commission of Justiciary, and thirty Days before any other inferior Judicature: So that the Procurator-Fiscal might very well proceed against these contained in the first Libel this Day, and continue these contained in the second Libel till the next Court-Day. The Lord High-Admiral repelled the foresaid Alledgeance made for all the Pannels, and allowed the Procurator-Fiscal to insist against these in the first Libel, the foresaid 5th of March, and continued the Dyet against these in the second Libel, till the 7th of the said Month.

It was then alledged for these in the first Libel, No Process, in regard the Crimes charged were libelled to have been done in the East-Indies in Malabar, far without the Scotish Seas, nor was there any Accuser either of the Owners of the Ship and Goods, or of the nearest of Kin of the Persons alledged, Murder'd; so that the Admiral was in competent to this Trial; For the competentia fori (Competency of the Court) * in Criminals, being founded either in the locus delicti (the Place where the Crime was committed) or in the locus domicilii (the Place of Habitation of the Pannels) or in the locus originis (Place of Birth) neither of these could be subsumed upon in this Case: The Pannels Englishmen and Strangers, and the Crimes libelled to have been committed in

* Criminal Cases.

in the East-Indies, as said is. And
 * allowing. * esto, that the Crime of Piracy may be tried any where, where the Pirates are found, yet that is only where the accused are notoriously such. And farther, tho' the Pannels could

† Court for criminal Cases.

could be only accused before the † Commission of Justiciary, and not before the High Admiral, whose Jurisdiction on extends no further than the Seas within the Com-pafs of her Majesty's Sovereignty.

To all which it is answer'd by the Pursuer. 1. That though the Competency of the Judge in Criminals be ordinarily said, to be found either in loco delicti
 (the Place where Crime was committed) or in loco domicilii (Place of Habitation of the Delinquents) or in loco originis (the Place of their Birth) yet there is a superior Consideration, and that is the locus de- prehenfionis (Place where they were taken) where the Criminal is found and apprehended, which doth

† Justify or make good.

doth found the Judges Competency, nisi ibi reus deprehendatur (except the Criminal be apprehended there). And so it is that here the Pannels were and are apprehended, which happening in the Cause of Piracy, a Crime against the Law of Nations, and which all Mankind have an Interest to pursue, wherever the Pirates can be found :
 The Procurator-Fiscal's Interest to pursue is thereby manifest, and the Pannels being here apprehended, cannot decline the Admiral's Jurisdiction as incompetent. 2. As to what is alledged, that the Pannels are not libelled to be habitual and notorious Pirates, but on the contrary, had and do produce a Commission, which frees them of that Suspicion.

It's answer'd, That Piracy being † mentioned in the Indictment. † libelled, as to the Particular charged, even habitual Piracy is thence presumed ; but a single Act of Piracy libelled doth both give the Pursuer a sufficient Title and Interest, and likewise founds the Admiral's Jurisdiction, in respect the Pannels charged for Piracy are here found. And 3. The Lord High-Admiral is most proper for this Cognition and Trial, because by the † Lord Chief Justice.

Act of Parliament, 1681, he is declared to be † Justice-General upon the Seas, which albeit it be limited inwardly towards the Land, yet outwardly is not limited ; so that the Lord High-Admiral is there declared to have the sole Jurisdiction in all Maritime and Sea-faring Causes, Foreign and Domestick, whether Civil or Criminal, within this Realm, and over all Persons, as they are concerned in the same, which as to the Seas and all Maritime Crimes whatsoever, makes the High Admiral Justice-General, as said is, without Limitation ; and therefore it is in vain for the Pannels to pretend, that if their Cause be cog-noscible here, it must at least be tried before the Commission of Justiciary, since the Lord High-Admiral is in this Case fully vested with the Justice-General's Power ; and as for what may be the Custom of England, it doth not concern, nor can be any Rule for us.

* considered.

† declining the Jurisdiction of the Court.

And the Lord High-Admiral and Assessors having * advised the Debates, they repelled the Declinator †, and found the Court competent.

‡ Summoned or brought to the Bar.

Thereafter it was alledged for these in the first Libel, That they were convened ‡, as having been of Captain Green's Crew, and his Complices in the Crimes libelled ; so that he being their Commander and Captain, they could not be put to answer, unless the Captain himself was insisted against ; seeing first, it was obvious, that he being their Commander and Captain, ought first to be answerable. And second,

 That they being under his Command, could not be charged for any thing alledged done by them as his Crew, unless he were first tried, seeing that he might have Defences both for himself and them, which probably they could not make for themselves.

To which it was answered by the Pursuer, That the Captain and his Crew were not † brought before the Court. † convened for any thing alledged acted by him as their Captain, and by them as his Crew, but were all convened as Complices and socii (i. e. Fellow-Crimi- nals) and Partakers of the foresaid wicked Crimes of Piracy, Robbery and Murder ; which Crimes as they could be warranted by no Commission or Character the Captain did or could pretend, so could they be as little warranted by their Condition of being subject to him as his Crew ; for here the Saying holds, That they were all hic socii & facinus quos inquinat aequat, (i. e. they were Fellows in this Case, and being defiled with the said Crime, were in that Respect equal). As also the other

Maxim, That † Wrong has no War- † Injustice.

rant ; and therefore, seeing that neither the Captain's Character, nor their Condition as his Crew, could be pretended as a Defence either to him or them ; and that the Libel of the foresaid Crimes did charge them all, as being socii, and together involved therein ; and that without Question, in the Case of such an Accusation for such horrid Crimes, every one must answer for himself ; the Alledgeance could not be † re- † regarded.

spected. Besides that it was evident, that if Captain Green, and these in the second Libel, were all confessing and pardon'd ; yet the first Libel against these of his Crew therein contained, would still lawfully proceed ; and Captain Green himself, and those joined with him in his Libel, might be made use of as Witnesses against these contained in the first Libel. By all which it was evident, that the Trial ought to proceed against these in the first Libel, without respect to the foresaid dilatory Defence. This being the dilatory Defence objected against the first Libel, and answered above ; and the † perempto- † positive.
 ry Defences against both Libels being common and coincident, for the more clear Method ; the dilatory Defence proponed also for these contained in the second Libel, with the Answers thereto, are hereunto subjoined.

The Dilatory then proposd for Captain Green, and others (in the second Libel) was, The fore-said John Reynolds was convened and † impannelled with him ; where- † indicted.

as it was acknowledged by the Pursuer, that Reynolds was ashore the Time of the Piracy, and other Crimes libelled to have been committed by Captain Green, and the rest of his Complices ; whereby Reynolds appeared, even by the Pursuer's Acknowledgment, to be innocent.
 Like as Captain Green and the other Pannels, had raised an † Exculpation, † a Form of Law for vindicating any Person. and therein had cited Reynolds for a Witness : So that according to the Method practised in Criminals, Captain Green and the other Pannels had good Ground to demand, that Reynolds might be first tried, and so purged from being Socius Criminis (a Fellow-

† Condition. Fellow-Criminal) and put in † Case to be a Witness, for the Captain and the other Pannels, to prove their Grounds of Exculpation. For there could be nothing more reasonable, as it was also ordinary, than that when a Pursuer did raise a Libel against several Persons (whereof some were innocent, and might be Witnesses for the other Criminals and Pannels) these other Pannels might justly crave, that such as they alledged to be innocent, might be first tried and purged, and so made capable to be Witnesses; since otherways any malicious Pursuer might include both the Defenders and all their Witnesses in one Libel: And thus by making the Witnesses Socii Criminis (Fellow-Criminals) in the Libel, prejudice the Defenders of all their Evidences and Defences.

To which it was answer'd for the Pursuer, That he acknowledged, that when such a Course was taken, to include both Actors and Witnesses in one Libel, with a Design to make the Witnesses (which the Actors were to use Socii Criminis, Fellow-Criminals) and so to deprive the Actors of their Defence, and the Probation thereof; these Actors might, and were allowed to † condescend upon those whom they intended to use as Witnesses, and at the same Time to propose a Ground of Exculpation for them; and so crave that they might be first tried upon the foresaid Ground, to the effect that if thereupon acquit, they might be in Case to be Witnesses. But this could never be pretended to by any of the Pannels: For an antecedent Trial of such of their Socii as they alledged were innocent, and to be their Witnesses unless at the same Time the Pannels did condescend upon the Ground of their Innocence, or upon the Ground of their Exculpation, whereupon they desired them to be first tried: For otherways there could be nothing more groundless, and (in effect) manifestly tending to elude all Criminal Proceeding against Complices of the same Crime, than to allow any of them at Random to crave others to be first tried; and so the Trial to proceed of one single Person after another, until all should be † affoizied. Whereas the true and plain Method was, and is, That the Pursuer insists against such as he pleases, either singly or jointly; and unless some ‖ Speciality be alledged, why the Trial of one should proceed before the Trial of another, it never was, nor could be left to the Arbitriment of the Pannels. And thus it was practised in all the Instances alledged by the Pannels, of trying such as were impannelled for Socii Criminis (Fellow-Criminals) to be first purged, in order to be Witnesses, viz. That the same was never allowed, unless some Ground of Exculpation was positively alledged for clearing of their Innocence. And therefore, unless Captain Green, and the other Pannels, will positively offer to prove, that Reynolds (whom they would have first tried) was alibi (elsewhere) and not present in the Action; their arbitrary Demand of having him tried in the first Place, without any Reason assigned, cannot be regarded. Which Debate being heard, the Lord High-Admiral and Assessors † superseded to give Answer, until the Defenders should give in their other Defences, and all should be informed upon together.

These being the Preliminary Defences, separately proponed by the Persons convened in the first and second Libels; the following Defences were proponed in common, by the Defenders in both Libels.

And 1. That the Libel was informal and insufficient, as being too general and indefinite. And 2. That it did not † condescend upon Day and Place. And 3. That the Qualifications whereupon the Relevancy appeared to be founded, were wholly ‖ irrelevant. And 4. That the additional Conclusion was groundless and unwarrantable.

† name.

‖ insufficient, or not to be sustain'd.

And as to the first of these Defences, it was alledged, That the Libel was informal and insufficient, as being too general and indefinite; not condescending upon the Name and Designation of the Ship † wrongously attacked, nor upon the Persons and Designations of these alledged to be murdered, nor upon the Quantity and Quality of the Goods alledged to be robbed and spoiled: All which ought to be done, seeing that Criminal Libels ought to be certain, and not general and indefinite; whereby also the Defenders might be prejudged of Defences, that might arise to them upon a particular Condescendance. As for Example; if the Name and Designation of the Ship were condescended on, they might prove the same Ship to be yet existing: And so of the Persons alledged murdered, they might prove them to be yet alive: As also, that the Goods alledged robb'd, were yet extant, and lawfully disposed on by their Owner.

† wrongfully.

To which it was answered by the Pursuer, That he opposed his Libel, which was libelled as definitely as the Thing would allow: For it being libelled, that the Pannels did, without any lawful Cause or Warrant, attack a Ship sailed by her own Crew, and having her own Cargo aboard, and that they over-master'd the said Ship in hostile Manner, and murder'd the Men, and robb'd their Goods. These were certainly Crimes manifest in themselves; and if the Pannels had acted them in such Manner, as to destroy the Ship and the Men, and embezled the Cargo, so as no farther Knowledge could be had thereof, it was only an Aggravation of their Villany and Wickedness, but could never hinder the Accusation to proceed; seeing that whatever the Ship, or Men, or Goods were, it was certainly Piracy, Robbery and Murder, to attack a Ship † hostilely, and to destroy the Men, and rob the Goods. And further, A Condescendance was not at all in this Case necessary, seeing that any such Condescendance could be no Ground of Exculpation. For whether the Ship was of such a Name and Designation, or of another; or whatever the Men and the Goods were, yet the Crime was still the same; viz. To attack and invade a free Ship, without any Cause or Warrant, and to kill her Men, and rob her Goods.

† in hostile Manner.

And further; It's very well known in our Criminal Practice, that Robberies and Depredations are sustained, albeit neither the Quality of the Goods nor their Owners be condescended on: And, in effect, the Pannels their Defence of Indefiniteness upon the Ground foresaid is such, that if even in the Road of Leith, before Hundreds of Spectators from both Coasts, one Ship should attack another, and hostilely invading her, should destroy her Men, seize her Goods, and sink the Vessel, without suffering either Vessel, Men, or Goods to be known; there could be no criminal Libel upon it; because forsooth, tho' Hundreds see the whole Action, yet it could not be more definitely libelled; save that the Commander and Crew of the one Ship attack'd the other hostilely, and destroyed her Men, and seized her Goods, and sunk her without further Condescendence; which were most absurd. And therefore, the Libel, as it's libelled, both as to Ship, Men, and Goods, attack'd, murder'd, and robb'd, without any just Cause or Provocation, is both sufficiently definit and most relevant.

And whereas the Defenders alledged, this Indefinit libelled should the rather be rejected, because that the Pannels were clothed with Commission; which tho' they did not plead to exculpat the particular Charge brought against them, yet was always a Ground of Presumption that they acted lawfully; unless the contrair were made appear, by a particular Condescendence.

It was answered, That nothing did charge the Pannels more home than the pleading of this Commission; in so far as first, They neither could, nor durst plead it, to exculpat the Piracy, Murder, and Robbery charged. 2. It did not so much as make any Presumption for the Pannels; because the very Tenor of the Commission obliged them to keep a particular Journal of whatsoever Vessel they should attack hostilely; and their Journals were produced by themselves, and no such Thing appeared in their Journals. And therefore it was manifest, that their Pretence of a Commission, is only the more wickedly to cover their Villany; since they can alledge nothing acted suitably to their Commission, but that their own Journals † Refutes. † redargues them.

The second Defence alledged by the Pannels in both Libels, was, That the Libel was still defective and imperfect, wanting Day and Place; in so far as the Place was generally designed the Coast of Malabar, which is of a long and vast Tract; and the Day was one or other of the Days of February, March, April, May, which is indefinite, and as good as no Day. And Day and Place were not only requir'd to be condescended on by our old Law † Quon. † A Book so called.

attach, but the Condescendence is also necessary for the Defender's Exculpation; seeing that if Day and Place were condescended on, he might then prove himself alibi (elsewhere) and so elude the Libel, which now he cannot do.

To which it was answered, That the Condescendence in the Libel, as to Day and Place, is sufficient; because the Facts objected are thereby declared.

2. Day and Place are never essential to a Libel, except where either the Nature of the Crime, or its particular Specification requires it; for then indeed it must be distinctly and positively libelled. As if a Man either charge another, or aggravate his Crime, by its being a Breach of the LORD's Day; then the LORD's Day must be condescended on. Or if a Man libel another for beating, or drawing his Sword within the King's Palace; where the Place is also essential. But as to other Crimes, which of their own Nature are Crimes at all Times; for what can the mention of Day or Place signify in such Crimes, as at all Times, and in every Place, are Crimes without Exception. And such are the Crimes libelled. But,

3. If it be said, that the condescending on Day and Place, is necessary to afford the Defender his just Exculpation of alibi (being elsewhere): It's answer'd, That in that Case, the Defender may put the Pursuer to condescend on Day and Place, for proving his Exception of alibi (being elsewhere) as said is. But then, in common Sense and Law, it must be upon this Condition; That the Defender acknowledge the Crime charged to have been committed; and only endeavours to exculpat himself by offering to prove alibi (being elsewhere) and that more pregnantly than the Pursuer offers to prove his Indictment. For what Sense or Reason is there, that the Pursuer should be put to condescend positively on Day and Place, in Crimes that are Crimes at all Times, and every where; unless it be for this very Reason, that the Defender acknowledging the Crime, offers to purge himself by the Exception of alibi (being elsewhere)? And therefore, since Day and Place are libelled in such a just Latitude, as may declare the Facts and Crimes charged; and that the Defender, on the other hand, doth not acknowledge the Facts and Crimes themselves, and offer to clear themselves by the Exception of alibi (being elsewhere) there needs no further Condescendence. And this is the constant Opinion of Lawyers, and the perpetual Custom of our Practique.

The third Defence proponed for the Pannels, was, as to the Qualifications of the Libel, That they were no ways relevant, nor could be regarded to infer the Conclusion of the Libel, in as much as, 1. There was here no corpus delicti, visible Effect or Subject of the Crime, offered to be proven, which is always necessary, and principally where the Crime is offered to be proven per presumptiones & indicia, by Presumptions and Tokens: For there cum constat de corpore delicti, when the Subject of the Crime is visible, this sustains the Presumptions, and gives the indicia, Tokens or Signs, their just Weight.

To which it was answered, That the Pannels Procurators appear to be in a mistake, either as to what is the corpus delicti, the Subject of the Crime, or as to what is meant by it: And for clearing of this Point, it is to be considered, the Crimes are of two Natures, some cum effectu permanente, with permanent Effects, as the killing of a Man, or the burning of a House; in which Cases, the dead Body, and the Rubbish, are permanent Effects: But other Crimes have no such permanent Effects, as treasonable Plotings, Falshoods, Blasphemies, and the like, where indeed there is no such corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, as in the former Crimes; but here all the Crime consists in facto & animo, in the Fact and Way of doing it; and the Fact, tho' transient, yet if doloſe, unjustly done, makes the Crime. And therefore, according to this Distinction, the corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, is never requisite to be proven, but in the foresaid Crimes that leave permanent Effects; and neither then also, unless the Crimes be libelled with these Effects: For if it should be libelled, for Example, that a Murderer not only killed, but burned the Body to Ashes, or drowned it in the Sea, there would be no farther need to prove this corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, but only to prove the Fact of killing, and killing doloſe, unjustly, in which indeed the Essence of the Crime consists. And thus in Confessions, as well as in Libels; if a Man confesses a Murder, and yet the Body murdered no where appears; then the Confession is not rashly to be laid hold upon, because it may proceed from Design, or Melancholy: But yet even in this Case, that that the Confession should bear not only the Murder, but the destroying of the Body murdered, by Fire or Water, as said is, then all the Enquiry would be, whether the Fact of Murder be proven or not? Which Things, if applied to our present Case, where it is expressly libelled, not only that the Pannels invaded the Ship by Piracy, but that they threw the Men murder'd over-board into the Sea, and also sold the Ship; all the Enquiry that remains is, whether this Fact was so done or not? And the Libel is most relevant, tho' neither Ship or Men appear. And yet farther, if the Pannels Procurators will still be † dull or un- so † grassier as to require a corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, when it's reasonable. expressly libelled, that the Effect of the Delict was destroyed and put out of the Way, they may satisfy themselves, that the Goods robbed are still extant, and were found on board of Captain Green's Ship: And therefore 'tis plain, that in this Case, and to sustain the Indicia, Tokens and Qualifications libelled on, there needs no farther either Condescendence or Proof of the corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, which was industriously destroyed.

But, secondly, It was objected, That all the Qualifications are insufficient and remote, and at best but probable: Whereas the known Rule is, that Crimes must be proven either per Testes, by Witnesses above Exception, or per documenta clarissima, very clear Proofs, or per indicia indubitata, undoubted Tokens: None of which hold in this Case; for as for the Indicia, Tokens, there is not one of them, but take the same singly, as the hearing of Shooting on the Shore, the seeing the Ship Worcester, having another lying at her Stern, the Boats coming ashore for Water, and the Crew saying, they had been a Busking, & sic de ceteris, and so of the rest; but take them singly, and they may all have a good and innocent Construction: Nor can it be said, that jointly they become stronger, and fortify one another, as single Arrows easily broken when apart, yet cannot be broken in a Sheaf, because that all the Qualifications and Indicia, Tokens in the Libel, with the foresaid Constructions, may be put upon them, the Constructions will still take off the Face; besides that, it's well known, that there are some Indicia only probabilia, some Tokens only probable, and that the Law requires Indicia indubitata, undoubted Signs; it being still the safer Side to spare doubtful Innocents, than to condemn only presumed and probable Guilt. To all which is to be added, That's the common Opinion of Doctors, that Presumptions can scarce ever conclude ad penam ordinariam, to ordinary Punishment, but at the most only ad penam arbitriariam, to Punishment at Pleasure of the Judge: And Mackenzie in

† A Book so his † Criminals, says, "Presumptions called. "are only founded on may be's, which "may not be; and to allow Crimes

 "to be proven by Presumptions, would leave
 "Judges to be Arbitrary." So that the common Opinion runs against Presumptions. But,

To all this it's answer'd, That yet it is clear Law, that Crimes may be proven per indicia indubitata, by undoubted Tokens, which in Law are no more than violent Presumptions, quæ fidem extorquent, that force a Belief: But the Truth is, That in this Case the Pursuer hath not only indicia indubitata, undoubted Tokens, but likewise positive Witnesses, and also Documents in Writing; which all being conjoined, do make a satisfying Evidence, and fix a clear Conviction; which is the utmost Design of Probation.

But secondly, it's most certain, both † Practice. in Law and † Pratique, that many Crimes are only discover'd and proven per presumptiones & indicia, by Presumptions and Tokens; and that the Doctors in several Crimes, especially these more atrocious, as Treason, Piracy, Forgery, and the like, where Wickedness endeavours most industriously to hide itself, do allow and approve Probation per Indicia, by Tokens, as most necessary for the punishing of these Crimes. It were needless to multiply the Citations both from the Law and Doctors, that might be adduced in this Case, as l. 3. § 2. D. de Testib. where the Rescript bears, Quæ argumenta ad quem modum probandæ, cuique rei sufficiant nullo certo modo satis definire potest: "The Arguments

 "to be used, and the Manner of proving every "thing sufficiently, can't certainly be defined, and so forth: and so concludes, Non utiq; ad unam probationis speciem cognitionem statim alligari debere, sed ex sententia animi tui, te æstimare oportere, quid aut credas aut parum probatum tibi opinaris. Item. l. 22. cod. ad legem Corneliam de falsis, ubi falsi examen inciderit tunc acerrima fiat indagatio, argumentis testibus scripturarum collatione, aliisque vestigiis veritatis, &c.

"You are not to be tied in taking Cognizance of "a Matter to one Method of Probation, but you "must act according to your own Judgment, and "consider what you are to believe, and what you "think not fully proved. Item, &c. when the Fal"shood of a thing is to be enquired into, then a
 "most strict Search is to be made, by Arguments,
 "Witnesses, comparing of Hands, and other Signs
 "of Truth, &c." By which Law it's plain, that Indicia & Presumptiones, Tokens and Presumptions, have place, and may make full Faith; and how can it be otherwise, since first, it is certainly the Interest of Mankind that Crimes be punish'd. 2. It's no less certain, that Crimes endeavour to cover themselves. 3. That Proof or Probation is only to make an Evidence for Discovery. 4. That the End and Standard of this Discovery, and of all Probation, is the satisfying Conviction of the Judge that has Power to punish. Now if most Crimes be committed without Witnesses, and yet do otherways appear certainly to be committed; and if this Certainty arise from Presumptions, and be withal satisfying, it is just the same as if the Crime was proven by many Witnesses. And thus Matheus de Criminibus, Tit. de Probationib. cap. 6. per totum, and Gail. lib. 2. Obs. 149. Numb. 9. where he reasons most justly upon Probation by Presumptions, where there is a Difficulty by Reason of the Want of Witnesses; and still brings the Matter to this true Period, That whatever way Faith be fully made to the Judge, either per Testes, or per Indicia, or per Presumptiones, either by Witnesses, Tokens, or Presumptions, the End of Probation is attained, and so the Evidence sufficient.

The Procurators for the Pannels alledged, That this were to make Judges too arbitrary; but tho' it hath indeed been the Care of all Lawyers to prevent Arbitrariness, yet it's most certain, that where Evidence doth only rise as Providence offers, and Circumstances concur, the Arbitriment of the Judge must take Place, and the Safety of Mankind doth precisely lie here in the Integrity and Discretion of the Judge, helped indeed by some Rules of Law, but no ways bounded or fix'd to precise Rules, which the Matter will not bear. And therefore we see, that even in the most certain Manner of Probation, viz. by Witnesses, and the highest Law of it, that in the Mouth of two or three Witnesses shall every Thing be established. There is still an Arbitriment insinuate as to the Discretion of the Judge, or otherways the Law would not have said, two or three three, but would have fixed the Number precisely; whence it is most certain, that in all Probation there is an Arbitriment of Discretion, and that tho' this Arbitriment may be bounded by some Rules, yet the ultimate and true Standard of all Probation, is the satisfying Conviction of the Judge, according to his best discerning.

These things then premised, viz. That a Proof may be sufficient, per Indicia & presumptiones, by Tokens and Presumptions, the Application to the present Case is plain; for where the Procurators for the Pannels would take off the Qualifications, as separately inconcludent, and at best probable, it is clearly captious; it being certain that many Indicia, Tokens, conjoined and connected, as in this Case, may make a sufficient Evidence, and that here quæ non prosunt singula multa juvant, i. e. "Those Things which taken singly, are of no Effect, yet many of 'em together are." And thus, if first the Probation that shall be offered, of the hostile invading the other Ship, by the Pannels be laid down and thereto added the Surgeon's Declaration of other Circumstances, with all the other Qualifications in the Libel, they will certainly force a Faith and full Persuasion upon all rational Men, tho' separately they cannot have that Weight; one Witness proves not, yet two prove, and in some Cases two are scarce sufficient, but three are beyond Exception. If then even in Witnesses there be a mutual and fortifying Concurrence, the same must also be admitted in Presumptions & Indicia. So that upon the whole, the Pursuer craves no more, than that every Man that hears this Libel, and shall hear its Proof, lay himself fairly open, without any Prejudice to the Light arising naturally from the Matter itself, and its Circumstances, and the Proofs and Confirmations thereof, as they are set down in the Libel; and if he do not wilfully resist, he will certainly be satisfied to a full Conviction.

There are indeed hidden Crimes, and such as are said to be of * difficult Probation, and the most atrocious, as Treason, Assassinations, Piracy, Forgery, are ordinarily most hid; and Doctors say with Reason, that their Presumptions ought to be examined, acerrima indagine, with the strictest Scrutiny; but all this should be far from impressing any with the Prejudice, as if a satisfying Evidence may not be found in these Cases. And therefore since all pleaded by the Pursuer, is, that first his complex Probation per Testes & Indicia, by Witnesses and Tokens, may be fairly received. 2. That concurring and coming together, they may be allowed their just Weight. And 3. That if that just Weight, and the Evidence that attends it, be satisfying, it may be held as concludent. It's clear as the Sun-Light, that no Stretch is intended, but Justice fairly prosecuted: And tho' in this Case of such an extraordinary Crime, and where so much Evidence appears, the Pursuer might even, according to the Claim of Right, press the Supplement of Torture, yet he contents himself to insinuate, that tho' this may be both just and necessary, yet he is hopeful, the Force of his Evidence may otherways prevail.

The fourth Particular is the additional Conclusion; but as to that Conclusion, it is so natural in itself, and so well fortified by the Authority of Doctors, and so certain, not only in the Case of Counterband, but even of other forbidden Good, that nothing needs be added; for since every Pirate is presumed to have the Ship and all in it at his Command, as his own; and since the Ship is certainly the Instrument, as well as the Goods are presumed to be the Effect of Piracy, it follows naturally, that the Confiscation of both Ship and Goods should be a Part of the Pains concluded.

In respect whereof, &c.

Here follows the Laws, and some other Quotations used in the Debate, where they are also English'd in their proper Places.

L. 2. §. 2. Ejusdem quoq; Principis extat rescriptum ad Valerium verum de excutienda fide testium, in hæc verba: Quæ argumenta ad quem modum probandæ cuique rei sufficiant, nullo certo modo satis definiri potest, sicut non semper, ita sæpe sine publicis monumentis cujusque rei veritas deprehenditur, alias numerus testium alias dignitas & auctoritas, alias veluti consentiens fama confirmat rei de qua quæritur fidem, hoc ergo solum tibi rescribi possum summatim, non utique ad unam probationis speciem cognitionem statim alligari debere, sed ex sententia animi tui, te æstimare oportere, quid aut credas aut parum probatum tibi opinaris.—"The true Rescript of that Prince to Valerius, about enquiring into the Credibility of Witnesses, is also extant as follows. What Arguments are sufficient to prove any thing, cannot certainly be determined; for tho' not always, yet it many times happens, that the Truth of a Matter is found out without publick Monuments. Sometimes the Number, sometimes the Dignity and Authority of the Witnesses, and at other times common Fame confirms the Truth of the thing in Question. I can only therefore enjoin you, in short, that in your Enquiry, or Examination into a Matter, you are not to be tied to any one Sort of Proof; but you must judge according to your own Conscience, what you think to be proved, or not proved to you."

L. 22. C. ad Legem Cornelium de falsis. Ubi falsi examen inciderit, tunc acerrima fiat indago argumentis, testibus, scripturarum collatione, aliisque vestigiis veritatis: Nec accusatori tantum questio incumbat, nec probationis ei tota necessitas indicatur; sed inter utramque personam sit Judex medius: Nec ulla interlocutione divulget quæ sentiat; sed tanquam ad imitationem relationis, quæ solum audiendi mandat officium, præbeat notionem: Postrema sententia, quid sibi liqueat proditurus:—"When you are to enquire into the Falshood of Evidence, you must make the strictest Inquisition that's possible, by Arguments, Witnesses, comparing of Hands, and other Signs of Truth. Neither must the Accuser only be question'd, or the whole Charge of the Proof be laid upon him: But the Judge must act an indifferent Part betwixt the Plaintiff and Defendant; and by no means divulge his Opinion, but give both Parties the Hearing, and at last pronounce according to his own Judgment."

Matheus de Criminibus, Lib. 48. Dig. Tit. 15. de Probationibus, Pag. 675. Itaque si cum uno illo Teste nulla concurrant argumenta, nequaquam audiendus erit: sed cum Paulo dicendum in Lege duo 30 d. de Testam. tut. non Jus deficit, sed Probatio. At si argumenta alia concurrant, audiendus: Non enim necesse est unum Crimen, uno & eo Probationis, genere ostendi, veluti testibus tantum vel tabulis, vel argumentis. Possunt & diversa genera ita conjungi, ut quæ singula non nocerent, ea universa tanquam grando reum opprimant. L. 3. Sect. 3. ejusdem d. de Testib. Hoc est, quod aliis verbis dicitur plures Probationes imperfectas posse conjungi.—"Therefore if with that one Witness there

“there be no concurring Arguments, he is not at all to be regarded: But we must say with Paulus, in Lege duo 30 d. de Testam. tut. The Law is not defective, but the Proof. But if other Arguments concur, he is to be regarded: For it is not necessary that one Crime be made evident by one manner of Proof only; as by Witnesses, by Writing, or by Arguments only: For several Sorts of Proof may be so conjoined, that those which taken alone, would not affect the Criminal, yet being put all together, come upon him, and overwhelm him like a Storm of Hail.” L. 3. Sect. 3. of the same D. concerning Witnesses; “That is, as it is expressed in other Words, several imperfect Proofs may be join’d together.”

Gail Obs. 66. Num. 12. P. 416. Et regulariter Testes singulares plenam Fidem faciunt, quando aliquid ingenere probandum est: puta Titium esse infamem aut furiosum, quo licet singulares sint respectu actuum, tamen si ratione finis convenient, integrè probant.—“And regularly single Witnesses make full Proof, when any thing is to be proven in general; for instance, that Titius is an infamous Person, or a Madman: For tho’ the Witnesses be single in respect of the Acts, yet if they agree in the End, the Proof is full.

It may be easily granted, that regulariter Indicia debent esse indubitata, ad condemnandum reum: “That regularly Presumptions ought to be uncontrovertible, when a Criminal is to be condemn’d upon them.” But at that same time it must always be owned, that there are Crimes excepted from the Rule, by the general Opinion of the Doctors; such as Crimen Læsæ Majestatis, & Crimen Assassinii, Treason and Assassination; of which last Sort, the Crime of Piracy is the most atrocious. And therefore Giurba, in Concil. 22. Num. 5. saith, Sed Assassinii qualitas homicidio adjecta, novam constituit Delicti Speciem:—The Quality of Assignment added to Murder, forms a new Sort of Crime. Num. 17. In Assassinio omnia procedant quæ in Criminibus exceptis:—In Assassination, all things are to proceed as in excepted Crimes. And Num. 18. Assassinii Crimen, ob illius Atrocitatem æquiparatur Crimini Læsæ Majestatis:—The Crime of Assassination, because of its Atrociousness and Enormity, is made equal to Treason. And then Num. 22. he concludes, That in Probatione Assassinii, probabilia sufficiunt Argumenta:—In the Proof of Assassination, probable Arguments are sufficient. And Mascard, de Probationibus, Conclus. 1228. Num. 77. In Crimine Assassinii probabilibus Argumentis probari potest: Assassination may be proved by probable Arguments. And Num. 78, 79, 80, and 83. he names the other atrocious Crimes, where the like Probation is sufficient; and in that same Conclusion, Num. 51. Quod ex multis Indiciis simul junctis, resultat plena Probatio etiam ad quem criminaliter condemnandum:—Many Presumptions joined together, make full Proof to condemn any Man in a Criminal Case. And Quest. 8. Num. 8. Probatio per Evidentiam omnibus est potentior, & inter omnes ejus generis major est illa, quæ sit per Testes de visu:—Proof by Evidence is the strongest of all Proof, and especially by Eye-Witnesses. And Conclus. 831. Num. 4. Probatio per Conjecturas & Indicia, in his quæ difficilia sunt probata, & clandestinè committuntur, habentur pro evidenti & clara Probatione:—Probation by Conjectures and Presumptions, in Things hard to be proven, and clandestinely committed, are held to be good and evident Proof.

tion by Conjectures and Presumptions, in Things hard to be proven, and clandestinely committed, are held to be good and evident Proof.

Carpzovius, Quest. 223. Num. 57. Secus tamen Res se habet, si plura Indicia concurrant & conjunctim reum aggravent, quorum unumquodque per testem singularem probetur; nam una Presumptio aliam jurat, plurimæque Indicia conjuncta fidem faciunt:—But the Matter is otherwise, if many Presumptions concur, and load the Defendant; of which any one may be proved by a single Witness: For one Presumption strengthens another; and many of them joined together, make Proof.

And in the Trial of John Swintown for murdering of his Wife, there was no direct Proof by Witnesses; but the Libel being qualified, the Proof was by a young Girl of 14 or 15 Years, who left John Swintown and his Wife alone in the House, and went to the Smith’s Shop to enquire for Letters; but returning, found the Door shut, and therefore went away for a little Space; and then coming back and knocking, her Master opened, and she perceived some Red, like Blood, upon his Shoes. And when she came in, she found her Mistress dead in the † Spence; † Battery. which was all she could say. And then another Man declared, that he saw John Swintown go from his House to a † Stank, and there wash † Ditch. his Shoes. Which Indicia, Presumptions, being joined with the Proofs of their ill Agreement, and frequent Quarrellings before, did determine the † Assize. † Jury. And tho’ it was strictly objected, that in the Mouth of two or three Witnesses, every thing should be established; and that in the aforesaid Case there was no direct Witness at all, far less two or three; and that even the aforesaid Circumstances were only proven by single Witnesses; yet the Assize found that Evidence in the Presumptions and † Indicia laid together, † Tokens. that they brought in their Verdict proven; and Swintown thereafter confessed, and was executed.

And in effect, unless that Indicia and Presumptions be sustained, and even single Witnesses for proving these several Presumptions and Indicia; which is called a Cumulative Probation, when all the Witnesses and Testimonies concur in idem Crimen, & ad eundem Finem, in the same Crime, and to the same End, Crimes, and these the most atrocious, would escape unpunished.

And therefore, upon the whole, it is most certain, when Presumptions, Qualifications, and Indicia concur, and make a full persuasive Evidence; the Probation should be held for as fully sufficient, as the most direct Witnesses; since all that the Witnesses can do, is only to make full Faith in the Matter, which may be otherwise supplied, as said is.

As to the additional Conclusion, it may be † noticed, that Molloy, de † observed. Jure Maritimo, Lib. 1. Cap. 3. Señ. 19. Pag. 60. saith, That when a Merchant procures Letters of Mart or Reprize, and then delivers the Commission to Persons to endeavour a Satisfaction; if such Persons commit Piracy, the Vessel is forfeited without Controversy.

INFORMATION for Captain Thomas Green, Commander of the Worcester, Captain John Madder, his Chief Mate, and others; against Mr. Alexander Higgins, Advocate, Procurator-Fiscal of the High Court of Admiralty.

THE said Captain Thomas Green, Captain John Madder, and others belonging to the Ship called the Worcester, being pursued at the Instance of the said Mr. Higgins, Procurator-Fiscal, before the High Court of Admiralty, and the Lords Assessors appointed by the Privy Council; for the Crimes of Piracy, Robbery and Murder, conform to two Criminal Indictments, raised at the Instance of the Fiscal. The Case being fully pleaded before the Honourable Judges of Admiralty, and the Lords Assessors; both the Accuser and Accused were ordained severally to inform, as Use is in such Cases.

The Criminal Indictments being holden as repeated, which [†] coincide both as to the Conclusion, and Media concludendi, way of concluding; and denied it is needless to repeat some preliminary Defences that were proponed, seeing it seemed just to the Honourable Court to repel the same: And therefore the Pannels proceed to their Defences, whereupon they were ordained to inform. These are of two Sorts; First, [†] Dilator; and Secondly, ^{||} Peremptor.

And first, it was proponed for Henry Keigle, Carpenter, and others of the Pannels in the same Indictment with him, That they could not be put to answer, unless the Captain himself were first insisted against; because they being his Crew, and under his Command, they could not be charged with any thing done by them, unless he were first tried.

It was answer'd for the Pursuer, that they were not [†] convened for any thing alledged acted by their Captain, and by them as his Crew; but that they were convened as Socii, Fellow-Criminals, and Partakers of the Crimes libelled; which could be warranted by no Commission nor Character the Captain did, or could pretend to: And that they were all charged as being Socii, Fellows, and involved together in one Crime; and so every one must answer for himself.

It was replied for the said Henry Keigle, and the other Pannels with him, that the Pannels are libell'd against as the Crew of the Worcester, under the Command of Captain Thomas Green; and that under his Command they did attack a Ship, &c. So that they are here libelled only as Complices, and Accessaries to the Crime alledged; and therefore, according to the Principles of Law, the principal Delinquent ought to be first try'd; especially where the Captain was in Custody, and might be brought to his Trial; and that by the Commission produced under the Great Seal of England, superscribed by King William, the said Thomas Green, was clothed with a Power, authorizing him to attack and suppress Pirates, which is a Military Power, and consequently implies an Authority and Command over the Crew of the Ship, to give ready Obedience in all these Matters: So that the poor Pannels, who are of the Crew, have all Reason in the World to contend, That the Captain, whose Actings in these Matters they could hardly well debate, should first pass the Trial upon the Crimes alledged; who might, by Virtue of his Commission, and otherways, [†] exculpate, and defend himself against the Crimes libelled; and consequently, all the Crew that were in Subjection under him.

This Defence the Pannel might perhaps plead, to a further Extent to absolve them entirely; but at present they conceive, it can hardly be denied, the Captain should first undergo the Trial. And there is a great Difference betwixt Socii Criminis, Fellow-Criminals, which are either independent upon one another, or if associate under one Head, as Banditti and Pirates usually are (which is illegal and unwarrantable Authority taken up) and Persons accused as Socii Criminis, Fellow-Criminals, who by Legal Authority are subjected to the Command of others: In which Case, if the Person trusted with the Authority, has transgressed or abused it; if it does not plead an absolute Exemption from the Punishment of the Transgression, at least it should have this Effect, That the Head and Chieftain should be obliged first to his Defence; which it is hoped the Honourable Judges will find just and reasonable.

The other dilatory Defence, proposed for the Captain and others in the second Libel, was, That whereas John Reynolds, second Mate, was convened and pannelled with him, as also some others, as Socii Criminis, Fellow-Criminals, whom the Captain and other Pannels had cited as Witnesses in their [†] Exculpation; it was both ordinary and absolutely necessary, that these Persons so cited for Exculpation, should be first tried; to the End, that being purged of the Imputation of any Crimes, they might be capable to be Witnesses, for proving the Defences of Exculpation, that the Captain and other Pannels did propose and insist upon, for the Vindication of their Innocency.

It was answer'd for the Fiscal, That he owned, when both [†] Actors and Witnesses were included in one ^{||} Libel, of Design to deprive the Actors of their Defences; the Actors might, and were allowed to condescend upon those whom they intended to use as Witnesses: But then at the same time, they were obliged to propose a Ground of Exculpation for them, and so crave that they might be first tried upon the fore-said Ground; otherways they could not, without such a special Condescendance, [†] intervert the Form of Trial. And there could be nothing more groundless, tending to elude all Criminal Proceedings against Complices of the same Crimes, than to allow any of them at random to crave others to be first tried; and so the Trial to proceed of one single Person after another: Whereas the true and plain Method were, that the Pursuer insist against such as he pleases, either singly or jointly. And unless some [†] Specialty be alledged, why the Trial of one should proceed before the Trial of another; it never was, nor could be left to the Arbitriment of the Pannels. And therefore unless the Captain will offer to prove, that Reynolds, and others whom they would have first tried, were alibi, elsewhere; their arbitrary Demand of having them tried in the first Place, without any Reason, cannot be regarded.

It was answered for the Captain, and the other Pannels, That their Demand upon this Point was most consonant to Reason, Law and Form, in Criminal Procedures: That Exculpation, which tends to the Proof of Innocence, and Freedom from Guilt, was most favourable; because it is still presumed, till the Crime be proved. And therefore it is, that Witnesses who are not regularly admitted for proving of a Crime, because of some Exception, will be allowed to prove the Defender's Innocence. And upon this Account it is, that several things in Form are remitted in Exculpation: And there is nothing more material for Defence of Persons accused, against the Prosecutor (who ordinarily is prejudged and prepossessed) to guard them against all the indirect Methods that may be taken by the Pursuer; to preclude the Accused from the usual Means of proving of their Defences, than what is now demanded. And since none can be more proper Witnesses for proving a Pannel's Defence (as for Instance, Moderamen inculpatæ Tutelæ, i. e. the Rule of blameless Self-Defence, as Persons said to be present) therefore a violent Pursuer might, in such a Case of Design to preclude the Pannel from his Defence, cite those present as accessary. Upon which Account it is, that both Reason and Law provides, that if the Pannel does offer to prove a relevant Defence, by the Socii Criminis, Partakers of the Crime accused with him; the Pursuer must necessarily first proceed to the Trial of these Socii, Partakers, who otherways would have been led as † habile Witnesses; to the End that being purged, they may be yet habile. This is so plain in Reason, and has been look'd upon as the constant Practice in all Criminal Procedures in the Justiciary Courts of Scotland, that it is admired the Fiscal should make any Opposition to it.

† Legal or good.

He so far owns in his Pleading, that it is Form and just upon the Matter; but would shift it in this particular Case, unless the Pannels would alledge and † found upon a particular Ground of Exculpation, and offer to prove and instruct the same, as that their Socii, Companions, cited as Witnesses, were alibi, elsewhere; but this is altogether without Foundation. For in all criminal Prosecutions, the Accused are not put to prove their Defences, because the denying of the Libel is a Defence sufficient of itself; and if the Libel be not proved, the Pannel goes free by the Rule Actore non probante absolvitur reus, the Plaintiff failing in his Proof, the Defendant is absolved, so that when there are Persons accused as Socii Criminis, Fellow-Criminals, who might be very habile Witnesses for exculpating the rest, if they did not lie under the Imputation, when their Trial is first required, that they may be purged of the Imputation, there is no Necessity to propound † Making void the Indictment.

for them any special Defence, † eliding the Libel; seeing the very Denial of the Libel is enough, and their Innocence is presumed, except Guilt be proved. And if the Fiscal will have the Captain, and the other Pannels, to condescend upon what Ground their other Socii, Companions cited as Witnesses, should be acquit; they need say no more, but that they ought to be acquit, because the Libel is not true. And is there not the same Reason to acquit Pannels, because the Libel is not proved; and consequently, to render them habile Witnesses for other Persons accused, as if the said Persons were acquit upon a Defence proponed, eliding the Libel; whereby it plainly appears the Answer given is strained, and does mightily increase the Suspicion against the Fiscal, that he has indicted the Witnesses cited by the Captain, and the other Persons in their Exculpation, of purpose to preclude them from their Means of Defence; and the rather, that the Pannels appeal to the Honourable Judges, if it was not owned by the Pursuer in the Debate, that Mr. Reynolds was ashore at the time of the pretended Attack; besides that, the Libel bears the Chyrurgeon, and others of the Crew, were ashore the time of the pretended Action, which frees the Pannels of all Calumny. There can be innumerable Instances given before the High Court of Justiciary in criminal Matters, that where there are several Complices indicted, if any of them have Grounds of Exculpation, which they can prove by others of the Pannels, their Trial proceeds first. This is plainly asserted as uncontested by Sir George Mackenzie, in his Book of the Laws and Customs of Scotland, in Matters Criminal, Tit. Excul. Par. 9. nor does he make any Distinction, or requires that any special Defence should be condescended upon for purging Socii Criminis, the Fellow Criminals, to render them habile Witnesses. The Rule is plain in the Prosecution of † Delicts, † Crimes. before Civil Courts, in order to repair Damages, that if more Persons be cited, as Co-rei ejusdem delicti, guilty of the same Crime, and that some of them are necessary Witnesses for proving the Defences proponed for others; the Proof must first proceed against these. And so it was found by the Lords of Session the 24th of February, 1662. Mackartney against Irving, much more ought it to be in criminal Cases, as lately in the Case of Refs, of Auchnacloch, against Captain Monre, before the Lords Justiciary. Nor is there any Inconvenience from what is alledged, that this should tend to elude all criminal Proceeding against Complices, and occasion the lengthning out of the Trial, to proceed to one single Person after another; for as no time is to be grudged in the Enquiry of such Matters, which concerns the Life of Man, so the Pannels do not propound this preliminary Defence to protect or delay the Trial, and therefore are satisfied, that not only Reynolds, but their other Socii, Companions, indicted, who are likewise cited in their Exculpation, go to the Trial at one and the same Time. The Captain, and other Pannels with him, do plainly argue thus; Either Reynolds, and the other Persons cited in the Exculpation, are guilty or not; if they be guilty, it ought to be found so, for till that be, they are presumed innocent; if not guilty, what Law or Reason is there to preclude them from being Witnesses for the Captain, and the other Pannels Defence; or what Law is there that can oblige them to condescend upon, and propound a particular Defence eliding the Libel, when the Libel is not owned to be true, and that the Pannels have all denied the same? So it is hoped the honourable Judges, and the Lords Assessors, will not preclude them from the ordinary Privilege, which, hitherto, has not been denied to any Pannel.

For if this was allowed, a violent Pursuer might prevent Probation, and render it impracticable. For, suppose one Man kill another in Self-Defence, two Gentlemen walking can testify this; but to prevent the Probation of inculpata tutela, unblameable Self-Defence, they are cited as Parties; and they can prove by other two Persons, at a greater Distance, their alibi, being elsewhere, which when the Pursuer gets notice of, they are made Parties also; and so so in infinitum. So that the said violent Pursuer might prevent all Probation, if the Defender were obliged to alledge alibi, being elsewhere, for the Witnesses of his Exculpation.

*The * peremptory Defences proposed for the whole Pannels in both Libels, as totally excluding the same as †† Irrelevant, are as follows.*

* Positive.

†† Not good or sufficient in Law.

1. THAT the Libel was irrelevant, as being general and indefinite, not condescending upon the Name, Designation, or any other Sign or Evidence, by which the Ship alledged to be seized might be particularly distinguish'd, nor yet the Persons Names alledged to be murdered, or to whom the Ship and Goods robbed did belong; which seemed to be absolutely necessary in all such criminal Indictments, not only as a Requisite in Form, but in Equity and Reason; without which, Persons accused should be in great Hazard from general and indefinite Libels, and precluded from their Means of Defence, which otherways are obvious, when the Accusation is certain, special, and pointed.

It was answered by the Pursuer, That he had libelled as definitely and closely, as the thing would allow; for it being libelled, that the Pannels did, without any lawful Cause of Warrant, attack a Ship, sailed by her own Crew, and having her own Cargo aboard, and that they over-master'd the Ship, in a hostile Manner, and robb'd the Goods: These were certain Crimes manifest in themselves, and if the Pannels acted them in such a Manner, as to destroy the Ship and the Men, and imbezled the Cargo, so as no further Knowledge could be had thereof, it was only an Aggravation of the Crime, and could not hinder the Accusation to proceed; nor was any † Condescendance here necessary for Exculpation; for of whatever Designation the Ship was, and whatever the Men and Goods were, yet the Crime was still the same; and that it was known in our Practice, Robberies and Depredations are sustained, albeit neither the Quality of the Goods nor Owners be condescended upon; and in effect, the Pannels Defence of Indefiniteness is such, that if in the Road of Leith, before hundreds of Spectators, one Ship should invade another, destroy her Men, seize her Goods, and sink the Vessel, whereby none of all these could be condescended upon, there could be no criminal Libel upon it, because of the Defence of Indefiniteness, which were most absurd.

It was replied for the Pannels, That what was said, did not take off the Objection of the Indefiniteness of the Libel, which by our Form and Law can be the Ground of no criminal Accusation; for in all such Procedures, debet constare de corpora delicti, the visible Effect or Matter of the Crime ought to appear: that is, that such a Ship is taken by Piracy, such Men murdered, and the like. It is inconsistent with the Nature of a criminal Accusation, that Men should be alledged to be murdered, Ships seized, and these not condescended upon, and by our constant Practice it is so required: Nor can it be instanced, that ever any such indefinite Libel was sustained. There are no Questions whatsoever that are more nice than these concerning the Life of Man, and therefore the Englisman Coke, 7 Rep. Calvin's Case, observes, that an Indictment should be most curiously and certainly penn'd; and the Old Books of the Majesty, requires several Things to be specially expressed, as the Name of the Parties, Day, Year, Place, Cause of Complaint, and Damage; and as it is necessary in Form, so this Form has been founded upon just Reason, for otherways these Inconveniences should plainly follow from general and indefinite Libels.

First, A Person indefinitely accused of a Crime, as for Example of Murder, without expressing the Person alledged to be murdered, can never be safe from an Abolution or Acquittal in Courts; for how can he oppose his

|| A Law Book so called.

† His being acquitted by the Court.

† Sentence Abfolvitute to a special Accusation that afterwards may be raised, seeing he cannot make the one meet the other. And if Captain Green, and the other Pannels, shall be now * Affoizied, this should not be a good Defence to them, neither in Scotland nor England, if they should be afterwards criminally pursued, for attacking a Ship, and murdering of Men, specially condescended upon, because it is not clear, that the present Indictment, as drawn, did concern these special Accusations; and therefore Accusations of that Nature should be so special, as that afterwards the Accused be not brought to any further Disturbance. 2. The Reason why such Accusations should be special and definit, is, That the Pannels be not precluded from the obvious Defences, that tend to elide the Libel; as here in this Case, if the Libel were special and circumstantiate, and some Designation given of the Ship and Crew, it might be in their Power to prove the obvious Defence, that such a Ship was at the Time libelled, in such another Part of the World; that such a Ship was either cast away by Storm, or taken by Pirates in such a Place; or that the Ship is yet extant, and the Crew alive: From all which, the Pannels are precluded by a general and indefinite Libel; and therefore Law has fixed the Forms in these Cases, that such Accusations be not vagrant and loose.

* Abfolved.

It will not be denied, but that the Time and Place must be expressed: The same Parity of Reason obliges to a special Condescendance of the Party injured, Damage sustained, as relating to such particular Persons. And the above-cited Sir George Mackenzie, in his Title of Libels, and the Forms thereof, does set down, That if the Defender crave the Pursuer to express the Day, because he offers to prove alibi, being elsewhere; then the Judge should force the Pursuer to express the Day, or else the Defender would be precluded from proving his Innocence. The same Reason is, that the Pursuer here should be particular, as to the Ship alledged to be seiz'd, &c. because the Pannel might offer to prove that that Ship was alibi, elsewhere, at the time: And many more Defences arise from the condescending upon the Corpus delicti, the visible Effect of the Crime, than from the Circumstance of either Time or Place. And this is not laid down conditionally, that these are not the Requisites of a Criminal Indictment; except first the accused propone their Defence, verbi gratia, alibi, for Instance, elsewhere: But it is laid down as a Rule, That these are the Requisites of all Criminal Libels; and the Reason given is, That the Pannels be not precluded from their Defences: So that it is not more † noticed, whether in this or that particular Case this Defect is pre-† observed.

judicial, because Necessity has first induced the Form; and then this Form turns to be a Law in all such Cases. And the forecited Sir George Mackenzie, in the same Paragraph, thinks it so far a Requisite of a Criminal Libel that the Crime should be particular † subsumed, that he brings it as an Argument why it should be so, that it is declared by the 148th Act Parl. 12 K. James VI. That a Libel bearing common Repeating, or Foretelling, in the general, shall be relevant, without condescending on the Time or Way of committing the same; and therefore concludes, that seeing this was an Act dispensing with the regular way; Exceptio firmat Regulam in non exceptis, an Exception confirms the Rule in Things not excepted. And hence it is not a good Argument, that the Pursuer has libelled as definitely and closely as he could in the present Matter: For better an Inconvenience should be suffered in a particular Case, than that a dangerous Preparative be laid down, of admitting indefinite and general Criminal Libels, whereby poor Pannels may be precluded from their Means of Defence. And this will serve to obviate the Argument drawn from a very infeasible Chance, supposed to fall out in the Road of Leith; which as proposed, will likewise be otherwise circumstantiate as to a positive Probation, and not founded upon Conjectures and Presumptions, as this Case is.

† instanced, or argued from.

Nor can the Fiscal altogether excuse his indefinite Libel, seeing the Means was not wanting of his coming to the Knowledge of the Ship, if it be true what is libelled; seeing the Ship was not sunk, but sold to a particular Person; and by some Evidence of the Ship, the Crew might likewise have been known.

3. As Law and Form require such Libels to be definite and special, so more especially in this Case; because Captain Green was clothed with a Commission under the Broad Seal of England, which empower'd him to act in Hostility against all Pirates: And therefore a general and indefinite Libel, upon attacking and seizing a Ship in his Case, would seem very improper: For the Presumption must run in his Favours, That if any Acts of Hostility were done by him, they must be presumed in Prosecution of his Commission. This is not pleaded as a separate Defence to elide the Libel; nor is it pleaded to have given him full Liberty to have ranged impune, with Impunity, but as a Specialty in this Case; that as it is a Defect in all Criminal Libels to be general and indefinite, so much more in this Libel, he being † attack.

clothed with a Commission, and having Power to † assail. And therefore the Presumption runs in his Favours; except the particular Ship were condescended upon, known to be a Merchant and Trading Ship, and consequently he out of his Duty in attacking the same. And therefore it is frivolous to object, that the Commission obliged him to keep a particular Journal of whatsoever Vessel he should attack hostilely; seeing the attacking of any Vessel whatsoever is denied and the Argument from the Commission only pressed to this End, That no indefinite Libel of attacking Ships, is relevant against a Person clothed with a Power to attack in certain Cases; and which the Accuser was so far convinced of, that for supplying that Defect in his Libel, he in his Pleading and Information, is pleased to condescend upon this special Qualification, and Mark of the Ship attacked, that she was a free Ship; which therefore he is obliged to prove.

The Pursuer was at the Pains to defend his Libels from an Objection, as if they had wanted time and Place. The Pannels did indeed conjoin this with the other; That as the determining the Time and Place seem to be absolutely requisite; so likewise the Condescendance upon the particular Names, and Designations of the Ship and Person, both being equally and necessarily required, that Pannels be not precluded from their just Defences. And the time libelled comprehending the Space of four Months, being too indefinite; it is likewise reasonable in such a Case, that the Accuser should be more special; which the Pannels humbly remit to the Honourable Admirals, and Lords Assessors.

The Second Peremptory Defence proposed for the Pannels, was, That this being a Libel founded upon several Qualifications and Presumptions, the same was no way relevant, to infer the Conclusion of the Libel. A Proof of Crimes from Presumptions, is very hazardous: And hence it is, that some foreign Nations do not condemn to Death upon Indicia, Tokens, but make them only Ground to † put to the Question. † Torture.

And many Lawyers are of Opinion, that the ordinary Pain of Death is not to be inflicted upon a Proof arising from Indicia, Tokens, tho' never so pregnant. Of this Opinion is Pharinasius, a great Criminalist, and many others; and so is Brunemanus, ad L. ult. Cod. de Prob.

But in the next place, whatever the Diversities of Opinions and Practices of Nations may be in this Point, yet it is certain, where Indicia, Tokens, are taken as a Proof, in order to Punishment by Death, they must be such as amount to a full Proof, and leave no Room for any Scruple or Doubt. This cannot be better express'd, than in the Words of that Excellent Constitution of Theodosius the Emperor, L. ult. Cod. de Prob. Sciant cuncti accusatores eam se rem deferre in publicam notitiam debere, quæ munita sibi idoneis testibus, vel instructa apertissimis documentis, vel Indiciis ad Probationem indubitatis, & luce clarioribus expedita:—Let all Pursuers take notice, that when they bring a Matter into Publick Judgment, it ought to be supported by proper Witnesses, or plain Proofs, or undoubted Signs and Tokens, as clear as the Sun at Noon. And it will plainly appear from the Libel, that the Qualifications therein narrated, are not such Indicia, Tokens, as that excellent Constitution requires; indubitata, undoubted, apertissima luce clariora, most evident, clearer than Sunshine. There must always Difference be made: Some have a probable Shew, and incline the Mind of the Judge; and yet cannot go the Length of a full Proof. L. 5. in Principio Pand. de Pænis—Sed nec de Suspicionibus debere aliquem damnare; satius enim est impunitum relinqui facinus nocentis, quam innocentem damnare: Nor ought any Man to be condemned upon Suspicion; for it is better that a guilty Man pass unpunish'd, than that an innocent Man should be condemned. Indicia & Præsumptiones, Tokens and Presumptions, have much easier Place, where constat de Corpore delicti, where the Subject of the Crime is visible; because this helps to sustain the Presumption, and gives indeed the Indicia, Tokens, their just Weight. But these, in such a Case as this, ubi non constat de Corpore delicti, where where the Subject of the Crime is not certain, are hardly receivable, seeing they want to be applied to a particular Crime.

This so necessary a Qualification of a Criminal Libel, ut constet de Corpore delicti, that the Subject of the Crime should be visible, the Pursuer endeavoured to evade, by distinguishing betwixt Crimes that are cum effectu permanente, have permanent Effects, and such as have no permanent Effects. In the first, the Corpus delicti, visible Effect of the Crime, was necessary, not in the latter; and therefore † subsumes that in the Cases libelled, there could be no permanent Effects; because all are libelled to be destroyed, and put out of Reach: But plainly this Distinction is against the Pursuer; because certainly Piracy, Robbery and Murder, are such Crimes, as have permanent Effects.

By the Corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, is not meant, that the Subject of the Crime must be so extent, as to fall under the Senses; but that the Loss sustained is felt and known. As for Example: In the Crime of Murder, though the Body cannot be reached, yet the particular Loss is known: It is notorious the Queen wants a Subject; Friends want a Relation, whom they can point out: In Piracy and Robbery, Merchants want their Ships and Goods: So that the Loss is felt and known, tho' (de facto) the Subject cannot be pointed out. Whereas in this Case, no such particular Evidences can be given: None can complain of any particular Loss, either Queen or Subject. And this is the true Meaning of what is Corpus delicti, a Subject of the Crime. And whatever be the Import of the Objection against the Libel, yet it is certain, to alledge Qualifications as the Proof of a Crime, ubi non constat de Corpore delicti, where the Subject of the Crime does not appear, is most incongruous. Add granting, as the Pursuer does further contend, that he has libelled a Corpus delicti, a Subject of the Crime; in so far as he has libelled a Criminal Fact, and Deed of Piracy, Robbery and Murder; which still being general, is not that Corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, that Law requires. Yet it was never heard, nor can there be any Lawyer whatsoever adduced, that owns the Corpus delicti, Subject of the Crime, can be made out of Presumptions and Qualifications. When once it is known that a Crime is committed, it may be owned that Indicia indubitata, undoubted Tokens, such as Law requires, may be a Ground to fix the Guilt upon particular Persons; because there the Certainty of a Crime committed, does negatively inforce and give Weight to the Presumptions adduced: But when it is not known that a Crime is committed, and that this is first to be made out; it is positively contended, this cannot be but by a positive Probation of concurring † habile Witnesses: For Presumptions may be apt to fix a Guilt, quando constat de Corpore delicti, when the Subject of the Crime appears, or that the Fact was done, but not before.

In the third Place, the Presumptions libelled are very far from being of that nature, as to be concluding to a Conviction; and of that Certainty and Clearness as Law requires. All Probations in Criminal Cases should be infallible and certain; and if there be any Meaning put upon Presumptions founded upon for proving a Crime, other than to infer a Crime; that is to be laid hold upon, according to the manifest Principles of Law and Humanity.

Now the Qualifications libelled, are either such as not only can bear an obvious Sense, different from what is imposed, but even a probable one; or are such as are vagrant Expressions and Hear-says, importing little or nothing, and cannot be applied to the Crimes libelled.

1. The Chyrurgeon his having heard Shooting at a Distance, while in the mean time he saw no Engagement; can easily be applied either to Shooting from other Ships, or Shooting upon Salutation, &c.

2. That he did see the Worcester riding in her Birth, and another Ship (as it were) towed to her Stern. 1. It is only Conjecture, being at such a Distance. 2. It is improbable, because it is not the ordinary way; and hazards the Ship falling foul of one another, in such common Roads; which might be a Ground to the Chyrurgeon's Mistake at such a Distance.

3. That he did see the Goods lying lumber'd upon the Deck when he came aboard. 1. It is usual in Coast-Trading, that the Goods are brought by Sloops, and so laid upon the Deck till they be stowed. 2. This might be occasioned by the Ship's drawing Water. And to what concerns the Word Busking, and bringing Water from the Shore, it is taken notice of in the Exculpation.

4. That when the Doctor enquired what was the Occasion of the Goods lying in Confusion, Captain Madder should have answered, Damn you, &c. might proceed from the said Captain Madder's being in a Passion, and concerned for the Goods being damaged, and a Tarpauling-Temper, very usual among Seamen.

5. That the Chyrurgeon did dress two wounded Men; first, one is dead, another is not named in the Libel; and the Black as the two other also, might have got their Wounds by fighting among themselves, which is not unusual; and the rather, that they appeared unwilling to tell the Chyrurgeon, of purpose to conceal their Quarrel from the Captain.

6. As to what is alledged to have occurred betwixt the Doctor and the Linguister, First, It is only Hear-say; in the second Place, there might be a Ship sold to Coge Commodo, but not taken by Captain Green, and it is improbable he would have bought any Ship taken by Piracy upon that Coast.

7. What is libelled about Reynolds and his Sister, their missive Letters, is far from being any Qualification: For, First, Reynolds's Letter is only a † Double. It is strained to † Copy. put such a Gloss upon the Expression (basely confess) to imply a Guilt, and a Guilt confessed; seeing the Words may easily bear the Meaning of a false Accusation, and is explained by a subsequent Expression, That he would rather die innocent, than accuse any Man falsely; and in the Beginning of the Letter, declares, he knew nothing of the Matter.

8. What relates to Haines his Intercourse with Anna Seaton, and others, are nothing but general and ambiguous Expressions, from which nothing can be gathered of the Crimes libelled, and infers no more, than that he was using some Stratagems to gain his Mistress.

And as to the Expression of the Wickedness committed aboard their Ship, it may easily relate to other Crimes, which are but too frequent in such Voyages; as also, as to what was done aboard after the Ship was in the Harbour; and as to the libelled Expression used by Haines against Captain Madder, der, as the same is general and indefinite, relating to no particular Crime, so this might arise from some particular Pique and Prejudice against Captain Madder: As to what follows

* about.
* anent the Condition of the Cargo, when the Committee of the Council unloaded the Ship, it is sufficiently taken off in the Exculpation.

Lastly, As to what is libelled anent the African Company's Seal: First, It will not be pretended, that the Company were in use to give their Seal to any Ship whatsoever trading by their Commission. 2. If any had casually gotten the Seal, there are an hundred Ways whereby the same might have come to the Worcester's Crew without Piracy. And 3. The Seal found aboard, and which is lying in the Clerk's Hands, which has a Ship for its Crest, might have given Occasion to this Mistake.

It being plain, that the Qualifications libelled, are not of that Import to give a full Conviction; the Pursuer's Argument adduced from the End of Probation, which is to find out the Guilt, and convince of the Truth, may be plainly taken off; that there is no such convincing Proof, as can fully and certainly determine any Judge, but, at most, resolves in a conjectural Proof, never to be admitted to take away the Life of Man.

The Pursuer allows, that if every one of the Circumstances should be taken separately, they would not be sufficient; but being taken jointly, and according to the Series of the Thing, they amount to a full Proof and Conviction; and this is the Nature of all cumulative Probations; which is not to be disjointed, Quæ non profunt singula multa juvant: The Pursuer does likewise adduce Arguments and Authorities for a cumulative Probation to be of this nature, that there needs not two concurring Witnesses for every Circumstance. In answer to which, the Pannels do still plead, there is a great Difference to be made betwixt Cases where previously, constat de corpore delicti, the Subject of the Crime appears, and that Presumptions are only fixed upon to find out the Guilty; and these Cases, where in general a Crime is libelled, altho' Presumptions may be admitted in the first, yet never in the other, as is already observed. 2. In all Cases, Presumptions must be such as leave no room to doubt, and must not only have a Probability with them, but a concluding Certainty, which does not give Ground to Suspicion, but plainly and firmly convinces; which certainly cannot be inferred from the Qualifications libelled; all which either can bear a different Construction, or are such vagrant Hear-says, and indefinite Expressions, as amount to no certain and special Crime. 3. Such Presumptions cannot be conjoined, which particularly taken, are either of small Weight, or amount to very little, or that they can probably bear another Sense and Meaning, as has been demonstrated. And, 4. As to the Conjunction of a cumulative Probation, there is a Difference to be made betwixt Crimes that are continued, and where the Proof may be had from the Reiteration of the Acts, and those other Crimes which consist only in Fact or Deed.

In the first, a cumulative Probation may be admitted; as in a Libel of Bribery, one Witness may be admitted for one Fact, another for another, and so a third, which may conjoin, altho' there be not two concurring for every particular Fact, if there be other concurring Evidences and Arguments: But where there is one positive Fact libelled, this does not so easily admit of a cumulative Probation, especially which is always to be taken along, where the Crime is not specified and determined, as in this Case, and that the ipsum corpus delicti, the Subject of the Crime itself, is still to be made out: So that the Texts of the Law, and Authorities made use of by the Pursuer, may be easily cleared, that either they relate to Civil Cases, as l. 3. par. 2. digest. de testibus, where there must be a Preference of a Civil Right of the one to the other: Or if the Texts and Authorities relate to Crimes, the Indicia, Tokens, allowed by them, must be indubitata & luce clariora, undoubted, and clearer than Sun-shine; and presupposes a Crime committed, & corpus delicti, the Subject of the Crime, and tends only to fix the Guilt. And it is positively denied, that there is any Law, or Lawyers, allowing any cumulative Probation to prove a Crime in general, ubi non constat de corpore delicti, where the Subject of the Crime does not appear; and this is a Speciality in the Case of the present Pannels; and the Honourable Judges and Lords-Assessors, are earnestly intreated to consider it; which does really distinguish them from the other Case mentioned by Lawyers; all which relates to * Delicts actually committed, and that the Presumptions deduced, tend only to fix the Guilt: But when a Crime is alledged in general to be committed, and no special Condescendance upon what Subject, upon whom, and against whom, Presumptions there are not sufficient, without concurring habile Testimonies; even supposing such a general indefinite Libel could be relevant, against which there are abundance of Arguments already given; for unless a Fact be proved, even Confession is not sufficient to fix a Guilt, as must be acknowledged by all; much less Presumptions, except the Fact be once known.

* Crimes.

The Grounds of Exculpation.

As the Pannels are confident, the Lords Judges will not find the Libels so general and so qualified, relevant to infer the Pains of Death: So for further clearing their Innocence, they offer the Grounds of Exculpation following, which are either instantly instructed, or offered to be proved.

And this may be laid down, which cannot be denied, that Presumptio non delicti excludit presumptiones delicti, the Presumption of a Crime not committed excludes the Presumption of a Crime; to which Purpose, Carpz. Part. 3. §. 123. Num. 69. and in the same Place, in dubio semper in mitiorem partem est presumendum. In a doubtful Case we must always take the more charitable Side; where he cites Multitudes of Lawyers.

1. There is no Reason to suspect the Pannels of the Crimes libelled, being Persons of entire Fame, without any Imputation as to their antecedent Life.

2. That they were under a Charter-Party, commissioned to a Trading Voyage, and Insurance made upon Ship and Cargo, which does remove all Suspicion of Piracy, seeing such do ordinarily associate, and out-rig themselves for that End.

3. A strong Argument of the Pannels Innocence as to Piracy, is, That they were upon their Voyage homeward, to make Account to their Fraughters and Owners of their outward Cargo and Returns; of all which they have exact Journals and Accompts, and upon their coming to Frazenburgh gave Advice to their Owners of their Arrival, which was insert in the Publick Prints from London, as is usual, and likewise sent a Packet over Land from Frazenburgh to the African Company in Scotland, from Mr. Innes, their their Correspondent in the East-Indies, which is not to be supposed a Pirate would be intrusted with: Whereas, when such turn Pirates, it is usually for their own Profit, and so not only rob others, but begin first with their Owners, and are not found to return to make any such Accounts, which is a stronger Proof of the Pannels Innocence, than any Circumstance libelled to the contrary.

4. Menochæus de presumptionibus, lib. 5. Præf. 59. treating of the Presumptions of Innocence, lays down two very pregnant. First, That if the guilty Person could flee and did not, that very Presumption washes away the Guilt; and gives Account of a Case out of Lucian de amicitia, that Antiphibus and Demetrius being accused of Sacrilege, were dismissed by the Prætor, because when they could have fled, they did not. A second, when the accused Party offers himself to the Judge, it is a strong Presumption of his Innocence, since the Innocent fear nothing, and the Guilty have always the Punishment before their Eyes: Both these favour the present Pannels; for the Rumour was spread, and came to their Ears some Weeks before they were imprisoned, and yet none of them offered to flee; and one Ballantine being at full Liberty amongst his Friends the Time of the † Incarceration of the rest, did of his own accord offer himself to Prison.

5. That the alledged Confession made by the Chyrurgeon, must certainly labour under some Mistake, because, altho' he mentions the Attack to have been at Callicut, and that he heard the Ship was sold at Keilon, which are at least fifty Leagues distant: And altho' he was aboard all the Time, yet he makes no mention how the Ship was brought along, or any thing relating to it.

6. It is offered to be proven, that the Black who is alledged to be wounded in the Action, was not aboard forty-eight Hours before the Worcester failed from the Coast of Malabar. And further, that the Black declared when he came aboard, that he got the Wound in his Arm by the Bite of a Snake. And further, it can be instructed by Chyrurgeons, that the Wound, as it well appears, is more probable to have been got that way than by Gun-shot.

7. Whereas it is libelled, That the Ship was attacked by the Worcester's Sloop upon the one Side, and her coming up upon the other:

It is impossible a Piracy of that nature could have been committed upon the Coast of Malabar; and not certainly known in England long before the Arrival of the Ship, such is the exact Correspondence, especially as to such Matters; nor could the Captain either have traded upon the Coast, or been received by the Factories and Governors there, if he had committed any such Piracy; whereas it is offered to be proven, that after the Time libelled he was ashore kindly entertained, exchanging Letters with the Governor of Anjango, and had Instructions and Recommendation from thence to the Governor of Fort-William upon the Coast of Bengal, whether he was obliged to go for refitting his Ship, and stopping the Leak, which he could not conveniently do at Malabar, because of the want of Timber, Cordage and Money to be taken up upon Bottomry.

8. It was asserted by the Fiscal in the Time of the Trial, that the Action lasted two Days and a half, which is a most improbable Story; for either the Night would have separated them, or the Ship attacked might rather have run a-shore, than fall into the Hands of the Pirates.

9. That the Word Busking, libelled as a Term signifying a Ship preparing to fight, has a quite different Construction in the ordinary Acceptation among Seamen, and signifies, bearing close upon the Wind by a press Sail.

10. It is offered to be proven, that their Water was itaved on the Coast of Malabar in a Storm, and not by Busking, as it is libelled.

11. And to † redargue the Circumstance libelled, that the Goods were † Refute. not right stowed; it's acknowledg'd the Ship was six Months in a Harbour at Bengal, after the libelled Engagement, and there loaded and unloaded: So that they had all Opportunity to stow the Goods as they thought fit, and certainly they were stowed as such Goods usually are, which cannot be press'd without Damage.

12. That the whole inward Loading does not amount to a Value beyond what might be reasonably expected from the outward Cargo, in a Trading-Voyage to these Places.

And lastly, That in January preceding, the Time of the alledged Action, there was a Protest taken by the Pannels against the Governor of Cochin, for not allowing the Ship Worcester to be refitted there, which she extremely needed before she could return to Europe; and so was in no Capacity, either to fight or take a Ship, as is libelled, in the Months of February, March, April, or May thereafter; and was a Ship sheathed with Lead, and therefore altogether unfit for such Action; as also a slow Sailer, and has not the least Mark of any Gun-shot upon her.

So that upon the whole Matter, The Qualifications libelled being so weak and conjectural, and the Presumptions of Innocency so strong upon the other Hand; it is confidently expected, that the Honourable Judges and Lords Assessors will reject the Libel, and let the Pannels go free; which they expect from the Justice of the Nation, and the † Humanity with which they are in † Courtesy. use to treat all Strangers.

An ANSWER to the Fiscal's Citations. With the Counter-Citations for the Pannels.

THO' the Doctors differ about the Force of Presumptions, and the Effect of Probation, ab Indiciis & Argumentis, from Presumptions and Arguments; yet they all agree, that Parallels drawn from Civil Causes to Criminal ones, are not universally to be admitted. Now the Fiscal cites L. 3. §. 2. de Testibus, for evincing that Presumptions, Indicia & Argumenta, Tokens and Arguments, are to be received.

This Law is taken out of the Fourth Book de Cognitionibus, written by Callistratus; the which Book only treats of Civil Cases, as is manifest from the Title of that Book, dispers'd in the ff. and † congested by Labittus, to † collected. which I refer. Wherefore this being a Rescript of the Emperor Hadrian, in a Civil Cause, can never be applied in a Criminal one.

The next Citation is, L. 22. C. ad l. Cor. de falsis, which is a Rescript of the Emperor Constantine to the Governor of Rome, about a forged Writ. Now as the Law says, such Forgeries can only be discover'd by † Collation † Comparing of Hands. of Writs, Arguments infer'd from thence, and Witnesses. And it is well known,

known, that in our Law we have two † Disproving. Ways of † Improbation; the Direct, and the Indirect. Now to apply that to the Crime of Robbery or Murder, which must be proven * liquidissime, and not by † Writs, seems very ‖ anomalous.
 * most clear.
 † Writing.
 ‖ irregular.
 Besides, Crimes, according to their different Nature, must be diversly proven; some by Ear-witnesses, as Blasphemy, Heresy, Cursing of Parents, &c. Others by Eye-witnesses; as Robbery, Murder, &c.
 And the Witnesses competent for proving the one Crime, are not so in the other.

The third Citation is out of Antonius Matheus de Criminibus, ad Lib. ff. 48. Tit. 15. C. 3. N. 4.
 The Fiscal cites the latter End of this Section; but omits to set down what the Author refers to in the C. 6. of that Title; the doing whereof will serve for an Answer. The Position is, Unus Testis non est audiendus; at si Argumenta alia concurrant, audi-endus est: One Witness is not to be regarded; but if other Arguments concur, he is to be regarded.
 Now these Argumenta must be taken out of the
 C. 6. of that Title. Argumentum nihil est aliud, quam
Ratio quæ rei dubiæ facit fidem; & est vel necessarium, vel contingens. Necessarium, cujus Consequentia ne-cessaria est; veluti coivisse eam quæ peperit, furtum fecisse, qui rem furtivam efferens deprehensus est. Contingens, cujus Consequentia probabilis est; veluti, cædem fecisse, qui cruentatus est: “An Argument is “ only a Reason which proves a doubtful Thing;
 “ and is either necessary, or contingent. That is a “ necessary Argument, whose Consequence is ne“ cessary: As for Instance, That she who has brought “ forth a Child, has certainly known a Man; or that “ he who is taken in the Fact carrying off stoln “ Goods, has certainly committed Theft. A con“ tingent Argument, is that whose Consequence is “ only probable: As for Instance, That the Man “ who is bloody, has committed Slaughter.” The necessary Argument obtains in Criminal as well as in Civil Cases; but the contingent one, which the Lawyers call a Presumption, is not of such Force.
 However, our Author is of Opinion, that Contin- gentia Argumenta quanquam singula fidem non faciant, plura tamen conjuncta crimen manifestare possunt. Rem evidenter designant. Simile est illud, Clodius cum

The Citation from Carpzovius’s Criminal Practicks, Q. 123. N. 57. is imperfectly excerpted: For I shall give no other Answer, than what is in the same Place, from N. 55, to N. 59. Probantur etiam Indicia ad Torturam per unicum Testem, in casu quo plura Indicia simul concurrunt, super quibus Testes examinati diversimode deponunt; ac unus de uno, alter de alio, tertius etiam de alio testificatur: Tum enim omnium Testificatio simul juncta, verisimiliter facit de Reo, qui propterea sub Tormentis interrogari potest. Eisi enim hac de re non omni ex parte Interpp. conveniant, nec desint qui Assertionem hanc simpliciter rejiciant:
Testesque bosce, ut singulares conjungendos non esse autument, eo quod singuli Testes baudquaquam fidem faciant. Verissimam tamen est, plures imperfectas Probationes in Causis capitalibus conjungendas esse ad ple-nam Probationem faciendam, quoad effectum torquen-di: Quod communiter Dd. placuisse, licet namque unicum indicium ab uno Teste probatum, semiplenam Probationem & Fidem, ad Quæstionem de reo habendam non faciat: Secus tamen res se habet, si plura Indicia concurrant, & conjunctim reum aggravent, quorum unumquodque per Testem singularem probetur. Nam una Præsumptio aliam adjuvat; plurimæque Indicia conjuncta Fidem faciunt. Quod ipsum tamen non aliter accipi velim, quam bisce tribus concurrentibus. Primo, Ut Testes sint omni exceptione majores & idonei, ac Vitæ probatæ. Secundo, Ut deponant super Indiciis proximis delicto, non etiam super valde remotis

remotis Indiciis. Tertio, Indicia super quibus Testes isti singulares deponunt sunt plura, & talia quæ reddunt animum Judicis quasi certum quod Reus deliquerit: Quorum alterutrum si deficiat, nullum in Jure habeant Effectum. "Presumptions make Torture lawful, when there is but one Witness, in a Case where several Presumptions concur, upon which Witnesses being examined, swear in a different Manner, and one witnesses as to one Presumption, another as to another, and a third concerning a third. Then all their Evidence being joined together, makes the Charge against the Person probable, who therefore may be examin'd by Torture. For tho' Interpreters don't all agree in this Point, and that some of them do absolutely reject this Opinion, and think these Testimonies are not to be joined, because single Witnesses don't make Proof; yet it is a certain Truth, that in Capital Cases several imperfect Proofs are to be joined together, in order to make a full Proof as to the Effect of Torture. This is the common Opinion of the Doctors; for tho' one Presumption prov'd by one Witness, does not make half Proof in order to examine the Prisoner by Torture; yet the Matter is otherwise, if several Presumptions concur jointly to charge the Prisoner, of which any one may be proved by a single Witness; for one Presumption strengthens another, and many of them joined together make up a Proof. But I would not have this to be understood to be so, except when those three Things concur: 1. That the Witnesses be above all Exception, proper in the Case, and of a good Life. 2. That they swear as to Circumstances immediately relating to the Crime and not as to those which are very remote. 3. That the Presumptions upon which those single Witnesses swear, be several and such as in a Manner may satisfy the Judge, that the Prisoner is guilty of the Crime. But if any of those Things be wanting, they can have no Effect in Law."

The Presumptions in Swintown's Case were not in the Indictment, but in the Probation, and seem to have been very pregnant and near, whereas these libelled against Captain Green are most remote.

But to put this Matter in its true Light, the Honourable Judge and Assessors are desired to remember, That Presumptions never respect the Delict, or the Corpus delicti, but the Delinquent, and the Person of the Accused: For as Menoch. de Presumpt. L. 1. §. 8. N. 2. very well says, Præsumptio versatur circa id quod gestum est, sed ignoratur qualiter gestum; a Presumption relates to the Thing done, but not to the Manner of doing it. Now, in the Opinion of all Lawyers, Delictum debet esse manifestum, a Crime ought to be manifest. Julius Clarus, Sententiarum Lib. 5. §. 4. Sciendum est autem quod in omnem Casum nunquam debet Judex procedere ad aliquem actum, nisi prius illi constet Delictum ipsum fuisse commissum. "But you must know, that a Judge in no Case ought to proceed to any Act of Court, except it appear to him before-hand that the Crime was committed." And in that Place, illustrates this Doctrine by Examples, and the Authority of other Lawyers, to which I refer. His Sentiment in the End of that Question being, Et ubi constet Scelus non intervenisse, silebit Processus: And where it appears that no Crime has been committed, Proceedings must stop.

So that ubi constat de delicto, where the Crime is certain, the Doubt and Controversy arises about the Delinquent, so as it is uncertain who is the Person guilty, or the Committer of this Crime, whether it be Robbery, Piracy or Murder. Those who admit of Probation, per Indicia & Argumenta, by Presumptions and Arguments, distinguish these into Proxima & Remota, near and remote; and to each of them give a different Effect in Law. Capr. §. 120. N. 6. Indicium definitur argumentum delicti perpetrati demonstrativum, seu Indicativum. Idem, §. 121. N. 1. Indicia propinqua ac certa, quorum unumquodque per se sufficit ad Torturam. Hujus generis Indicia non verisimilia ac probabilia sed certa, non levia aut perfunctoria sed urgentia; non dubia aut æquivoca, quæ multipliciter interpretari queunt, sed concludentia, & ad Delictum inferentia sunt, & Crimini quasi inæarent, ita ut iis apparentibus, nihil nisi Rei Confessio deesse videatur. And N. 14. & seqq. ut Indicium semiplenæ Probationis per se solum sufficiens & Idoneum sit ad Torturam, tria requiruntur, 1. Ut Testis ille unicus sit omni exceptione major. 2. Ut hic Testis deponat de actu immediato, quod fieri intelligitur, si Testis suæ assertionis rationem per sensum corporeum rei convenientem reddat, quod nempe ipsemet Delictum ab accusato perpetrari viderit vel presens interfuerit. Quare, Si Testis non de ipso crimine deponat, sed de aliquo actu ad delictum proxime accedente, Indicium sufficiens non facit. Sicuti nec illius Testimonium idoneum ac sufficiens est, qui deponit de Delicto quod in oculos cadit, & rationem reddit de alio sensu. 3. Ut Testis verbis dilucidis & indubitatis de Crimine testificetur. "A Presumption is defined to be a demonstrative or declarative Argument of a Crime committed. §. 121. N. 1. "Near and certain Presumptions, of which every one is sufficient of itself to justify Torture. Presumptions of this kind, ought not to be likely or probable, but certain; not slight or trifling, but urgent; not doubtful or equivocal, that may admit of many Interpretations, but concluding, really inferring the Crime, and so inseparable from it, that those Presumptions appearing, there seems to be nothing wanting but the Confession of the Criminal, & N. 14. and following. "To make the Presumption of half full Proof sufficient to justify Torture, there are three Things required. 1. That that one Witness be beyond all Exception. 2. That the Witness swear as to the immediate Act, which must be understood, that the Witness give for the Reason of his Assertion, some bodily Sense proper to the Thing; as for Instance, that he saw the Crime committed by the Prisoner, or was present at the Time: Therefore if the Witness don't swear concerning the Crime itself, but concerning some Act that comes next the Crime, it is not a sufficient Presumption. So neither is his Evidence proper and sufficient, who swears concerning a Crime that is the Object of Sight, and gives an Account of it from some other Sense. 3. That the Evidence concerning the Crime be in clear, and not doubtful Expressions." After which our Author gives Examples; and it is to be observed, That these Indicia, Presumptions, are requir'd in order to torture; for they are not, in this Author's Opinion, sufficient to condemn, unless they be Certissima, Indubitatissima, & Luce Meridiana Clariora, most certain, undoubted, and as clear as the Sun at Noon, in which Case they have the Effect of a complete Probation.

The Indicia remota, remote Presumptions, which are also term'd, Dubitata, Semiplana, quæ rem veram esse arguunt, non semper sed plerumque tantum, unde etiam non dicuntur simpliciter certa in- dicia, sed verisimilia & probabilia, seu veluti certa Indicia: “Doubtful, half full, which don’t always argue the Matter to be true, but almost always; whence it comes, that they are not simply called “certain Presumptions, but likely, probable, or “almost certain Presumptions.” And these cumulatively and in great Number concurring, may bring a Person to Torture, but never to Condemnation.

Now, by applying this general Doctrine to the Indictment, it is Juris Incontraversi, uncontravertible Law, that the Delictum, Crime itself, cannot be proven per Indicia & Presumptiones, by Tokens and Presumptions. And as to the Pannels, tho’ a Delict Crime were proven per Teste omni exceptione majores, by unexceptionable Witnesses, yet it will appear, That the Circumstances libelled, do not deserve the Name of Indicia, Presumptions; and tho’ they should be allowed that *Compellation, yet they are Remotissima, very remote, and by consequence can have no Effect as to Condemnation.

As to the additional Conclusion, that the Ship and Cargo should be *escheated, the Fiscal cites a wrong Place, and supposes the Case to be what it is not: But seeing he values Mr. Molley’s Authority so much, his Opinion in this Matter, as express’d in the same Treatise, C. 4. §. 21, 22. is thus: By the Law Marine, if Goods are taken by a Pirate, and afterwards the Pirate attacks another Ship, but in the Attempt is conquered, the Prize becomes absolutely the Captors, saving the Account to be render’d to the Admiral; and it is accounted in Law a just Caption of whatsoever may be got or taken from such Beasts of Prey, be the same in their own or in their Successor’s Possession. But then an Account ought to be render’d to the Admiral, who may (if they happen to be the Goods of the Fellow Subject of the Captors, or of Nations in Amity with his own Sovereign) make Restitution to the Owner; the Costs and Charges, and what other Things in Equity shall be decreed to the Captor, first considered and deducted.

§. 22. By the Statute 27 Edward III. cap. 13. If a Merchant lose his Goods at Sea, by Piracy or Tempest (not being wreck’d) and they afterwards come to Land, if he can make Proof they are his Goods, they shall be restored to him in Places guildable by the King’s Officers, and six Men of the Country.

This Law hath a very near Relation with that of the Romans, called de Usucapione, or the Atinian Law; for Atinius enacted, That the Plea of Prescription or long Possession, should not avail in Things that had been stolen, but the Interest that the right Owner had, should remain perpetual: The Words of the Law are these, Quod surreptum est, ejus rei Aeterna auctoritas esset. Where by Auctoritas, Authority, is meant Jus Domini, the Right of the Proprietor remains perpetual, tho’ a Thing be stole.

Mr. Alexander Higgins the Pursuer, for Probation, adduced the Witnesses after deponing, viz.

* C O m p e a r e d Antonio Ferdinando, Cook's Mate of the Ship the * Appeared.
Worcester, which was commanded by Captain Thomas Green, aged twenty-four Years, or thereby, unmarried; with Captain George Yeaman, Merchant in Dundee, sworn Interpreter: And the said Antonio Ferdinando being solemnly sworn, ‖ purged of partial Counsel, examined and interrogate upon the Libels, or Indictments. And being interrogate if he believed in GOD, and if he was a Christian: Depones, That he believes in GOD, and that he was born of Christian Parents, and is a Christian himself. And being interrogate upon the Indictment, depones, That at Callicoiloan, upon the Coast of Malabar, the Deponent did come aboard the Sloop belonging to Captain Green's Ship called the Worcester; at which Time the Deponent did enter to the Service of Mr. Loveday, Purser of the said Ship; and the Deponent cannot be positive of the Time of his coming aboard, but believes it was about two Years and a half since; and went in the said Sloop from Callicoiloan to Keilon, from thence to Cocbeene, and from Cocbeene to Calecut, and from that to Tillicberry: And depones, That upon the Coast of Malabar thereafter, he did see an Engagement betwixt the said Sloop, the Ship the Worcester, and another Ship sailed by White-Men, speaking English, and the said Ship did bear English Colours. And being interrogate by the * Pannels, what were the Colours the * Prisoners.
 said Ship did bear: Depones, That they were of White, Red and Black, like to these that the said Captain Green's Ship did bear; and that first the said Captain Green, the Merchant, and Mr. Loveday, went aboard the said Strangers Ship,

* Master of a Ship. † Of, before a Place, in the Scots Dialect, denotes the Place to be the Estate of the Person nam'd.
 ‖ i. e. Solemnly sworn, that he would tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth; that he had no Prejudice or ill Will against any of the Prisoners at the Bar; that he got no good Deed, or Promise of good Deed, for giving Evidence against them; nor was suborned, advised, or directed how to swear, or what he shall say in this Trial.

and stayed for about the Space of a Glass, and then returned aboard the Worcester, and then did man the Sloop of the said Ship the Worcester, with about 20 Men, whereof were Captain Green himself, Mr. Loveday, and the Supercargo, the Carpenter and Gunner, and that the Gunner's Name was James Simpson, whom the Deponent knows, and points to at the Bar; and that there were four Guns and two Pattereroes aboard the said Sloop; and thereafter Captain Madder came aboard of the Sloop, and that they did engage the said other Ship for the first and second Days, and upon the third Day the said Ship was boarded by those in the Sloop, who when they came aboard, did take up those of the Crew of the said Ship from under Deck, killed them with Hatchets, and threw them over-board, and that Captain Green, Captain Madder, and James Simpson the Gunner, were three of these who went aboard and killed the Men: And depones, That the Ship the Worcester came up during the said Engagement, and did fire at the said Ship, but these in the Worcester did not board her: And the Deponent believes, that the Men who were killed and thrown over-board, as said is, were about ten in Number; and depones, That there were but few Goods aboard the said taken Ship, which were carried aboard the Worcester, and amongst the rest he † remembers.

† minds of some China Root: And depones, That the said Ship which was taken, was sailed by some of the Crew of the Worcester, and carried to Callicoloan, and there sold, and that the said Ship was not tied with a Tow to the Ship Worcester: And the Deponent knows not what Men were killed aboard the Sloop or Worcester, or if any were killed, but the Deponent himself was wounded in the Arm, and which Wound he now shews to the View of all. Depones, That Captain Madder told the Deponent, that if ever he did tell any Person, either white or black, of the said Engagement, that he the said Captain would kill the Deponent, and heave him overboard. Depones, That † now.

the Upper-Coat which the Deponent

† presently wears, was found aboard of the said taken Ship, and which the Deponent has kept since that Time. Depones, That during the said Engagements, Haines, Bannantine, Bruckley, Wilcocks, Burn, Robertson, Glen and Taylor, eight of the Pannels, were aboard the Ship the Worcester; and that Keigle, Kitchen and Linstead were aboard the Sloop with Captain Green, Madder and Simpson; and believes that Reynolds was then ashore at Callicoloan: And depones, That the said Ship was sold to a King in Malabar, and that the Man who bought the said Ship bears a Malabar Name, whose Servant is called Coge Commodo: And depones, That the said Engagement happened between Tillicherry and Calecut, upon the Coast of Malabar: And depones, That he cannot positively tell how many Guns the taken Ship did bear, but thinks they were about twenty, small and great: And the Deponent believes, That the Engagement happen'd about a Month after the Deponent went aboard of Captain Green's Sloop; and cannot be positive when the Ship the Worcester, did engage the said taken Ship, whether first, second, or third Day. Depones, That the Engagement was by way of a running Fight. Depones, That he knows not who did sail in the said taken Ship to Callicoloan. Causa Scientiæ, the way how he came to know this, the Deponent was aboard the said Sloop during the Time of the said Engagement, and saw and heard, as he has deponed; and this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD. Depones, He can write after the Malabar Character; and this Deposition is also signed by the said Captain George Yeaman, the sworn Interpreter.

Antonio Ferdinando.

ROB. FORBES.

Compeared Charles May, Chyrurgeon of the Ship the Worcester, commanded by Captain Green, aged twenty-six Years, or thereby, unmarried; who being solemnly sworn, purged of partial Counsel, examined and interrogate upon the Libel: Depones, That he was aboard of Captain Green's Ship the Worcester, and went from England with her; that when the said Ship went to the Coast of Malabar, the Deponent was set ashore at the Ibeck, which is the Landing-Place, and from thence went up some Miles to Callicoloan; and some Time thereafter, about a Fortnight, the Deponent did hear the Firing of Guns as at Sea, and did meet with Coge Commodo, who was Merchant to the said Ship, and bought some Things from them, with Francisco de Olivera the Linguist of the said Ship, who had come that Day from the Ibeck, and that the Deponent asked him what mean'd the Shooting; and that the said Coge Commodo, and Francisco de Olivera, answered the Deponent, That the Worcester had gone out, and was fighting at Sea with another Ship: And depones, That the next Morning the Deponent came to the Shore, where he did see the Ship the Worcester riding in her Birth, that is, much about the same Place where she had lyen before, and that the said Place was about four Miles from the Shore. Depones, That there was then another Vessel riding with the Worcester at her Stern. Depones, That about some Time thereafter, in the same Morning, the Deponent did see the Long Boat of the Worcester coming to the Shore in a great Haste; and that when the Boat landed, the Deponent asked the Men what was the Matter that brought them ashore, it not being ordinary for Boats to come over the Bar, by reason of a great Sea: And the Men answered, That Captain Madder had sent them ashore for a Pinguetla (which is the Name of a certain kind of Boat) with Water, because they had split and staved all their Water aboard, and that there had been Busking all Night, which the Deponent understood meant, that they had been at fore Labour and Fatigue, as if their Ship had been driven from her Anchor, and bearing up again. Depones, That he did not speak at that Time with the Men in relation to any Fight, but that the said Men told him, they had brought a Ship in with them; and that the Deponent made no stay at the Shore, but returned immediately to Callicoloan, where his Patients were. Depones, That five or six Days thereafter, the Deponent went aboard the Worcester for some Medicines which he wanted for the Use of his Patients; and that when he came aboard, the Deponent saw the Deck of the Worcester lumber'd with Goods, and five or six Chests also, and some Bales of Goods; and that the Deponent did then say to Mr. Madder Senior, What have you got there? You are full of Business. And that Mr. Madder did then curse him, and bid him go mind his Plaister-Box. And depones, That the Deponent was afterwards informed, that the Ship which was riding at Stern of the Worcester, was sold to Coge Commodo, the Ship's Merchant at Keilon River;

River; and the said Ship was brought there by a Part of the Worcester's Crew who immediately left her so soon as they had brought her to an Anchor, or otherways fixed her.

* Interpreter. Depones, That the * Linguister likewise told the Deponent, That Coge Commodo complained, he had bought the Ship too dear; and that he said, he had bought one the Year before cheaper, tho' four times the Value. Depones, That some time thereafter, the Sloop came down the Coast; and that Antonio Ferdinando was sent ashore to the Deponent at the Ibeck; and that the said Antonio Ferdinando, the Black, was wounded in the Arm: And that the Deponent

* Plaiſter. did take off the * Dreſſing of the said Wound, and found it to be a Fracture; and that it look'd as if the Wound had been occasioned by a Gun-shot. And that the Deponent asked the said Antonio Ferdinando, the Black, who had dressed the Wound, or set his Arm? And that the said Black did tell the Deponent, That he was set ashore at Cochin, and there dressed by a Dutch Chyrurgeon. And depones, That some Time thereafter he went aboard the Worceſter, and called for the said Black, and any other Persons that were ill; and there came to him to his Chest, Duncan Mackay, and another (which the Deponent thinks was Edward Cuming, but cannot be positive) and that these Persons were also wounded; and that the said Black was likewise there. And Depones, That he did ask his said Patients how they came by their Wounds? And that Mr. Madder hearing the Deponent ask Questions, he came to the Deponent, and bid him ask no Questions; and likewise charged the Patients to answer the Deponent any Questions upon their Peril. And the Deponent then said to Mr. Madder, that he had no Command over him; and that Mr. Madder answered, That he would go to one who had Command over the Deponent: And that the said Madder went up accordingly; and thereafter returned, and ordered the Deponent immediately ashore; and the Deponent was accordingly carried ashore in the Pinguetta, that was lying by the Ship's Side. Depones, That all this which the Deponent has before deposed upon, did fall out about the Months of January or February, 1703 Years. Depones, That while the Ship the Worceſter was going up the Coast of Malabar, Mr. Linsseed, one of the Crew was left at Keilon, which was near seven Leagues, or about twenty one Miles from Callicoiloan; and that the said Linsseed was left there with one Hammond, to take care of some Part of the Cargo which was to be put aboard of the Ship. Depones, That he did not see the said Mr. Linsseed at Keilon; but only heard that he was left there, and remained there, as the Deponent heard, till the Ship came back. And Depones, That the Shooting which the Deponent heard, was before the Ship came back, as he has already deposed. And Depones, That thereafter, during the Voyage, he never heard the Crew, or any of them, talk of their taking a Ship. Depones, That whilst the Deponent heard the said Shooting, Mr. Loveday and Mr. Otlay were ashore at Callicoiloan: And depones, That when the Worceſter sailed from England, the Crew was about 35 or 36 in Number. Depones, That while the Deponent was aboard, the Ship went no further up than Callicut: And depones, That the Reason how he knows Mr. Hammond and Mr. Linsseed were ashore at Keilon, was, that he heard the Supercargo desire the said Persons to go ashore, and take care of some Part of the Cargo. And depones, That he was but two or three Hours aboard after he heard the Supercargo give the said Order; and saw not the said two Persons (Hammond and Linsseed) go ashore. And depones, That it was in the Ship the Worceſter's going up the Coast of Malabar, that the Deponent heard the Shooting. Depones, That upon that Coast the Ship sprung a Leak, and did from thence sail to Bengal, in order to have the same helped: And depones, That he knows not how many Leagues there was, betwixt the Place where the Leak sprung, and Bengal; but that it was about five Weeks Sailing. Depones, That he knows not the Reason, why the Ship was not brought into some Place on the Coast of Malabar, for being refitted. Depones, That when the Deponent came aboard at Callicoiloan, that the Ship weighed Anchor, and sailed to Cochin, and from that to Callicut, and thereafter came back the same Way. Depones, That there were some Goods put aboard the Ship from Callicut, but none at Cochin, as the Deponent remembers. And further depones, That when the Deponent returned, he found Mr. Hammond and Mr. Linsseed ashore at Keilon. Causa Scientie patet. The Way how he comes to know this is evident. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

Depones, That upon the Coast of Malabar, while the Deponent was aboard of the Worceſter, he heard some Shooting of Guns from aboard the Worceſter, to the Number of Six, or thereby: And that the Deponent, in the mean time, was chained and nailed to the Floor of the Fore-Castle in the said Ship; and he heard no other Shooting from any other Ship. Depones, That two Days after the Deponent heard the said Shooting, he saw some Goods brought aboard the said Ship the Worceſter; and which Antonio Ferdinando, the other Black, told the Deponent, were brought from another Ship which they had taken: And likewise the said Black told the Deponent, that at the same Time Captain Madder had given some Rack, id est, Brandy to the Men. And at the same time, the other Black told the Deponent likewise, That there were ten Men of the Crew of the taken Ship kill'd, when she was taken. And that the said Black did let the Deponent see a Plaister on his Arm, upon which he said he had got a Wound by a Shot, while in the Sloop taking the other Ship: And that he told the Deponent, that the said Ship was taken by the Sloop belonging to the Worceſter: And that the Deponent neither heard of, nor did see any other wounded Men. Depones, That he does not know where they were sailing, after he heard heard the Shooting; but he was told by the other Black, that they were failing to Callicoiloan: And the said other Black did forbid the Deponent to tell any Person whatsoever of the said Engagement. And the Deponent does not remember how long it is since he heard the said Shooting of Guns. And depones, That Antonio Ferdinando, the other Black, told the Deponent all these Matters upon the Coast of Malabar: And that the said Antonio came aboard the Ship the Worcester, when they were going to Bengal. And depones, That while he was chained to the Fore-Castle, he knows not who were aboard, or who were ashore: And that he was so chained for the Space of two Months; and that he was so chained to the Fore-Castle about ten Days before he heard the said Shooting: Causa Scientiæ patet. At which the said Haines fell in a Passion, and said, D—n me, what have I to do with Captain Drummond? Depones, That the Deponent seeing Haines in such a bad Humour, forbore for some time to speak about his Brother or Captain Drummond: But after that they had taken some Cups about, and that the Deponent thought Haines in a better Mood, the Deponent asked the said Haines, If he had not heard of, or seen any Scots Ship coming to or from the East-Indies? Depones, That Haines then said, That while their Ship was upon the Coast of Malabar (where they had taken in a Black, whom Haines pointed to, and bad by him at the Time) a Dutch Ship informed them, That one Captain Drummond, commanding a Scots Ship, was turned Pirate; and that thereupon they manned their Sloop, and made themselves ready, in case they should have been attacked. But Haines added, That they did not see the said Captain Drummond. Depones, That the said Haines did likewise say, That he had in his Custody, at the Time the Ship the Worcester was seized in the Road of Leith, that which he would not have fallen in the Seizers Hands for twice the Value of the Ship. And depones, That the said Haines likewise added, That he threw it overboard after the Ship was seized; saying, Let them seek it now in the Bottom of the Sea. Depones,

That while the Deponent was discoursing with the said Haines about the Worth of the Ship; the said Haines said to the Deponent, That it would not be found to be so rich as it was expected: But that there was still in the Ship that which would never be found by the Seizers, unless they pulled her Board from Board: And that the said Haines said, He knew very well where that thing lay. Depones, That his Mother having gone to the other Room to Mrs. Seaton, the Mistress of the House; she desired the said Mrs. Seaton to enquire of Haines concerning her Son, the Deponent's Brother; and that Mrs. Seaton said, That Haines was a † Suiter of Anne Seaton, her * courted. And depones, That the same Night the Deponent heard Mrs. Wilkie intreat the said Widow Seaton, to endeavour to get an Account from any of Captain Green's Crew, of her Son, who had gone Doctor aboard of the said Captain Drummond's Ship: And having returned next Morning, the Deponent heard Anne Seaton, Daughter to the said Widow Seaton, tell, That Haines had said to her, that they had a Design to pump him; but what he had said, he had said. The Probation being ended as above, and the † Affize ordained to enclose, some of the Affizers moved, that that Part of the Judges and Assessors ‡ Interloquitor, whereby they find the Crimes of Piracy, or Robbery, or Murder, as libelled, being proven by clear and plain Evidence, || relevant, &c. to be explained as to these Words, being proven clear and plain by Evidence, if the same did require, that the said

Crimes of Piracy, or Robbery, or Murder, should be proven by two or three Witnesses, directly proving the foresaid Crimes: Or, if it were only required, that the Crimes of Piracy, or Robbery, or Murder, as libelled, being proven by a clear and plain Evidence, as to the cumulative and concurring Presumptions, whereby the same were alledged to be inferred, altho' two concurring Witnesses should not be found as to every several Presumption, were sufficient: The said Judge and Assessors declared their Meaning to be in the Terms of Law, viz. That tho' there were not a direct Probation of the Crimes libelled, per idoneos Testes, vel instructa apertissimis documentis, by proper Witnesses, or made good by plain Proofs; yet if the Crimes did appear by the Qualifications and Circumstances, as they were libelled, to be made out per indicia ad probationem indubitata & luce clariora, by undoubted Presumptions as clear as Sun-shine, albeit every Circumstance and Qualification were not proven by two direct Witnesses, the same should be held for a clear and plain Evidence.

Thereafter, according to the Custom observed in Criminal Courts and Processess, That the Advocates for the Pursuer, and for the Pannels, are allowed † hinc inde to speech the Affize, and resume and lay before the Affizers, the Libel, with the Interloquitor past thereon, and apply the Probation led for proving thereof on the one Part, and on the other to resume the Defences for the Pannels, and to take off as much as possible, the Weight of the Probation for their Defence and Exculpation; Sir David Dalrymple, her Majesty's Solicitor, one of the Assistants to the Procurator-Fiscal in this Criminal Pursuit, spoke to the † Affize in † Jury manner following.

† On both sides, in their Turns to speak to the Jury.

Gentlemen of the INQUEST.

YOU have before you Indictments against the Pannels upon very atrocious Crimes, and these Indictments have been sustained relevant, as libelled by the honourable Judge-Admiral, to be proven by clear and plain Evidence. But for your further Satisfaction, at the Desire of some of your own Number, made openly in Court, the Judges have declared, That by these Words, Plain and clear Evidence, they do not confine the Affize to two concurring Witnesses, but have left to you what Evidence is necessary to make Faith according to the Nature of the Crime, to your Conviction.

Your Business then, Gentlemen, is to apply or compare the Probation with the Indictment, and to return your Verdict distinct, concerning what you think proven or not.

It is a Happiness that this Trust is in the Hands of Persons so discerning and faithful, and therefore the less needs be said, either for clearing the Nature of the Crime, the Manner of the Discovery, or for summing up the Evidences: But to comply with the Custom of such Trials in this Kingdom, and for preventing the Mistakes into which the Lawyers on the other Part seem to lead you: Forgive me if after a * Sederunt of twelve Hours spent in † leading of the Probation, I detain you a little longer in Recapitulating what has past, with some few Observations, I hope not improper, before || enclose.

* Hearing.

|| withdraw.

As to the Crimes contained in the Indictment, it is obvious how heinous they are, and how hateful they render the Persons who are truly guilty in the Eye of the Law: A Pirate is in a perpetual War with every Individual, and every State, Christian or Infidel. Pirates properly have no Country, but by the Nature of their Guilt, separate themselves, and renounce on the Matter, the Benefit of all lawful Societies: They are worse than ravenous Beasts, in as far as their fatal Reason gives them a greater Faculty and Skill to do Evil: And whereas such Creatures follow the Bent of their Natures, and that promiscuously Pirates extinguish Humanity in themselves, and prey upon Men only, especially upon Traders, who are the most innocent. The Crime of Piracy is complex, and and is made up of Oppression, Robbery, and Murder, committed in Places far remote and solitary. And indeed if GOD had not, in a most wonderful way, brought the Crimes whereof the Pannels stand accused, to Light, they might have escaped unpunished in this World, to their own eternal Destruction, and to the great Loss of such who may be amended, or prevented by the Example of their Punishment. But altho' the Abuses now complained of, happened in the vast Ocean, and at no less Distance than the East-Indies, and that the Actors were tied by

† Arbitrary Command of their Captain.

obvious Reason to Secrecy on their own Account, and were bound by a † regulous Command, not to reveal or answer Questions: And besides all these, it is most probable there was a most impious Oath interposed, as uses to be in such Cases, and which has more Force to restrain Men of such desperate Principles and Practices, than all the Ties of Religion or Nature: Yet GOD, in his Providence, has let in Light upon these dark and cruel Crimes, as it were by meer Accident: For I presume, you are not ignorant, that the first Notices of this Matter proceeded from Words which were dropt in Passion, or expressed by the Weight of Guilt, concerning the Wickednesses which have been done aboard the Worcester during the last Voyage. These, and some other Grounds of Suspicion which appeared upon better Enquiry, were the Occasion of the Information given to the Government, and how cautious the Lords of Her Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, have been in examining the Matter before any Prosecution was appointed, I persuade myself that you and the whole Nation know, and are satisfied. And now that the Probation has been solemnly led in Presence of the Court, and of the great Number of all Qualities who have been present; I doubt not it will appear to you and all Men, who will suffer their Reason to act freely, that these Informations have been too well founded.

The Indictment, as it concerns the Facts libelled, consists chiefly of two Parts. The first concerns a Murder and Piracy happening upon the Coast of Malabar. The second concerns Circumstances which help to give Light to that Piracy, and which Circumstances have happened since the Arriving of the Worcester into this Country.

As to the first, Gentlemen, You have a Testimony of the first Witness Antonio Ferdinando, who deposes, He came aboard of the Worcester upon the Coast of Malabar, and that about a Month after, he saw an Engagement betwixt a Sloop belonging to the Worcester, and another Ship sailed by White Men, speaking English, and bearing such Colours as Captain Green's Ship did bear; and that the Captain and some others of the Worcester's Crew, went aboard the Stranger's Ship, and stayed about the Space of a Glass; that upon their Return to the Worcester, the Sloop was mann'd out with twenty Men, of which Number were the Captain himself, with Madder, Simpson, Keigle, Kitchen, and others; that the Sloop was mounted with 4 Guns and 2 Patteraroes; that the Sloop engaged the Stranger's Ship, and that there was a running Fight for 3 Days, during which Time the Worcester came up and fired at the said Ship, and that upon the third Day, the said unfortunate Ship was taken (and what is fearful even to repeat) the Crew being about Ten, were murdered and thrown over-board; that the Goods were brought aboard of the Worcester, and the taken Ship was sailed with a Part of the Worcester's Crew to Callicoiloan, and there sold to Coge Commodo; that the Deponent himself was wounded, the Scar of which Wound was shewn to you, Gentlemen, and the Court; and that he was commanded to keep Secrecy under the biggest Peril, and that the very Upper-Coat which he wears (and in my Judgment, appears to be Scots † Rugg) was a † Coarse Cloth. Part of the Spoil.

As to this Testimony, Gentlemen, there are several Things very observable, such as the † Stayedness, Simplicity and Constancy of this Witness, who, in many Examinations before the Council, and Committee of Council, has uniformly given the same Account which he has now deposed before this Honourable Court; not in the same Form of conceived Words, but materially the same, tho' the † Interrogators have been changed: † Questions. And I think, it adds to the Weight of his Testimony, that ye are Witnesses how it was † emitted, while he was † Given. under heavy Sicknefs, and forced to lie down at the End of the Table.

2. It is observable, that this Witness Antonio Ferdinando had no Accession to the discovering of this Matter, nor was at all an Informer: But the Matter being enquired into, he did plainly and honestly acknowledge from the Beginning, as he has now deposed: Neither was the Story first told at Leith, nor since the Pannels arriving in our Harbours: But it appears by the Testimony of Antonio Francisco the other Black (who shews a great Inclination to favour Captain Green and the Pannels) that Ferdinando gave him the same Account in Substance upon the Coast of Malabar: And this is further confirmed by Stringman the Cook, who told in several Examinations before the Council, that shortly after the said Stringman came aboard on the Coast of Bengal, Ferdinando who was his Mate, gave him the like Account of the Story: So that it is morally evident, that this Account of the Crime was not invented with any View of a Trial against the Captain and his Crew.

3. It is worthy your Notice, that Captain Green had been aboard of the unfortunate Ship taken, as a Friend, and had Opportunity to spy, that the Crew being but about ten, were too weak to man or defend a Ship of 20 Guns, which, no doubt, emboldned him to undertake the Wickedness complained of.

It is observable, That the several Parts of Ferdinando's Testimony are fortified by concurring Proofs. As first, by the Books found aboard, it appears, that the Sloop was furnished with Arms in the Month of February libelled, and that the Arms were such as the Testimony mentions. 2. He shews you the Scar of his Wound upon his Arm; and as he deposes, that he got it in the Engagement, so the Chyrurgeon deposes, That he not only saw it, but that shortly after the bearing of the Shooting, he had taken the † Dressing from † Plaster. off the Wound, and found it a Fracture, and that it look'd like a Gun-shot, and that the Black came to his Chest a few Days thereafter to have it dress'd aboard. 3. The Testimony of Ferdinando is also confirmed by the Depositions of Francisco and Mr. May, as to two very notable Articles, viz. The bringing of the Goods aboard about that Time: And by the Testimony of the said Mr. May, as to the Ship taken, riding at the Stern of the Worcester. 4. Captain Madder's severe Commands for observing of Secrecy, is not only deposed upon by Ferdinando the first Witness, but also by May the Chyrurgeon, very circumstantially: When Mr. May asked an innocent Question, as one should think, upon seeing the Deck lumbered with Goods, Mr. Madder answers, cursing him, and bids him mind his Plaster-Box. When May goes to his Chest, there came three Men to be dressed of their Wounds, of which the Black was one. May asks them how they came to be wounded, but Madder had followed, and commands Silence on their Peril; but Mr. May persisting in his Enquiry, Madder goes to the Commander, and brings a positive Order to answer no Questions: Thus Ferdinando and May concur as to the Command of Silence. Now, I put it to your Consciences, Gentlemen, if ye think this Mystery was used to cover a common Accident; or if, rather you are not satisfied, that, joining the Testimony of Ferdinando with the Wounds, and the Silence so rigorously imposed, the Goods brought aboard, the riding of the taken Ship at the Stern of the Worcester, they do not evince the Certainty of the Piracy and Murder libelled, as far as the Nature of the thing can admit.

To these, Gentlemen, ye would be pleased to join in your Observation, That it is owned and demonstrated, from the Books taken aboard of the Worcester, that there sprung a Leak in the said Ship on the Coast of Malabar; and that it had been most natural for the Pannels to have carried their Ship to Goa, or to Surat, which was within Ten Degrees Sailing, or thereabouts; yet the Pannels did chuse, rather than continue on that Coast, to run along in a leaky Vessel, a dangerous Course, round the Peninsula, and the Island Keilon, to the Bottom of the Bay of Bengal, a Course of about Seven or Eight hundred Leagues. But that Fatigue and Risque was small, when compared with the Danger of repairing their Ship on a Coast, where their Crimes might be more easily discovered. 2. It is remarkable, that the Books found aboard, and now lying before you, contain the full Instructions given to Captain Green and his Company, from their alledged Owners, which have something mysterious from the very Beginning. I have had little † Opportunity.

|| Observe.

† Occasion to peruse them, having seen them this Morning for the first Time. But one Thing I could not but || notice, That in the Instructions, one Article contains a Cypher, in which the Captain or Supercargo was to correspond with their Owners. And altho' the Cypher seems to be nice, and well enough devised at first to cover the Correspondence from any ordinary Curiosity; yet so great Anxiety has been shewn concerning this Cypher, that the Freighters send a Letter after the Ship; adding an Instruction, That besides the Character to be used, there should be this further Disguise added, that the last Letter of the preceding Word should be always repeated before the first Letter of the next Word; of which, for Illustration, the Letter contains an Example, giving Direction how Letters should be addressed to the Writer himself. But neither was this Caution sufficient: For next Day another Letter is written, relating still to the Cypher; and wherein the Writer expressly advises, that the Letters from the Ship should not be directed to himself, but to a Scrivener living in — Street, London; and that they should not be subscribed. Why all this Mystery? The Correspondence must be in Cypher; and this Cypher exquisite and refin'd: And yet the Letters to be addressed to a Third Person, obscure, for what I know. They were not to contain any Address or Subscription, which should either discover the Writer, or the Person to whom he writes. Fair Trading requires no such Affection.

But further, you will be pleased to take notice, That the outward Cargo for a Ship of 200 Tons, and 20 Guns mounted, sailed with 36 Men, was in Value but 999*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* Sterling; which appears by the † Document † Voucher, produced by themselves, for instructing their Entry at the Custom-House; and that too, for the most Part, Arms. I have not so much Experience in Matters of Trade; but to me it seems very strange, that a Voyage so exceedingly hazardous and expensive, should have been undertaken with so small || Means. And || Stock, these Things, in the very undertaking of the Voyage being joined with the shrewd Evidences of the Crimes, whereof these Pannels stand accused, seem to be of very great Weight: And where such † Fineness † Cunning, occurs in the Entry, and the Effects are so tragical, in such an Enquiry; I hope I shall be forgiven by every body, having laid them before you with as much Tenderness to the Freighters (with whom I have nothing to do) as possible.

As to the Second Part of the Libel, I mean these Circumstances which concur to give Light to the Crimes chiefly libelled; there is also sufficient Evidence. The first of these Circumstances is what concerns Mr. Reynolds, one of the Pannels. The Indictment bears, That there was a Letter found, writ to him by his Wife's Sister, in Return to one of his writ to his Wife; wherein his said Sister advises him to confess; adding, That in his own Letter, which she had seen, he says, That some of their Men had basely confess'd; which implied, that they were guilty. And Reynolds being questioned upon this Letter, produced the Copy of his Letter to his Wife, which occasioned his Sister's writing to him, agreeing with this Letter. These you have before you.

I am not ignorant, that Ferdinando (the first Witness) says, He believes Reynolds was ashore: But the Testimony as to that is not positive; neither is it, in my Judgment, sufficient to take off the Accession of the Crime, or † Art and Part libelled; since the said Reynolds † Contriving and Acting was of the same Crew, and did not separate himself from them; and it is most presumable, had his own Share of the Booty. Besides, it's plain from the Letters, he was conscious to the Truth, which (he says) was basely confess'd: And it is of little Weight, what has been offer'd as a Glofs; viz. basely confess'd, is as much as if he had said, falsely told Stories. For in the ordinary way of speaking, to confess, is to tell true; and the Adverb basely implies no more than if he had said, that they had ungenerously confessed; tho' it be indeed rather a Duty, whatever Mr. Reynolds thinks.

The next observable Circumstance is what concerns George Haines: As to whom, by laying together the Testimonies of James Wilkie, Kenneth Mackenzie, William Wood, John Henderson, and Anne Seaton, you will find it proven, That upon asking a Question about Drummond's Ship, Haines fell in Passion; by the Depositions of Wilkie and Kenneth Mackenzie. 2. That Haines said, That when the Ship the Worcester was seized in the Road of Leith, he had that in his Custody, which he would not have fallen in the Seizer's Hands for twice the Value of the Ship; and that he threw it over-board; is proven by the Testimonies of James Wilkie and Anne

Anne Seaton. 3. That James Wilkie's Mother employ'd Anne Seaton to enquire of Haines concerning her Son, who had gone Doctor to Drummond's Ship; is proven by the Testimonies of Wilkie and Seaton. And Kenneth Mackenzie depones, That he was present when the said Anne Seaton gave an Account of what had pass'd betwixt her and Haines; and that she told, that Haines said, They had a Design to pump him: And that being ask'd why he fell in a Passion at the mentioning of Captain Drummond? He answered, That he knew more of Captain Drummond than he would tell. And Anne Seaton concurs with Mackenzie as to these Particulars. 4.

|| broke out. That Haines, in a melancholy Fit || burst forth in these, or like Words, It's a wonder that, since we did not sink at Sea, God does not open the Earth, to swallow us up at Shore, for the Wickedness committed during the last Voyage, in that old Bitch Befs (pointing to Captain Green's Ship) is proven by the concurring Testimonies of William Wood, John Henderson, and Anne Seaton. And, 5. That Haines said, If what Captain Madder did during the last Voyage, were as well known as what his Uncle undertook at Amsterdam, he deserved as much as his Uncle met with; which was, to be boiled in Oil; is only attested by William Wood. Nor does every minute Circumstance need a concurring Probation.

Having thus laid before you the Indictment and Probation, conjoining these Proofs, which, I am confident, to all impartial Men, will appear clear and plain Evidence of the Crimes of which these Pannels are accused; I shall take Liberty, in the next Place, to precaution you against certain Insinuations, which the Pannels Lawyers have discover'd when the || Probation was a leading.

I need be at little Pains to convince you, that the first Witness, tho' a Black, is a legal Witness; seeing that, upon full Debate, has been already determined by the Honourable Judges. And indeed, besides that, he is not only a Man, but a Christian, and adduced for proving a Crime covered, committed at Sea, which is more solitary than any Defart at Land. His Testimony had such a distinguishable Air of Truth and Sincerity, as made him not only a legal Witness, but a very material and probative one. But the Pannels Lawyers would fain have observed some Inconsistency in his Testimony, and betwixt it and that of Mr. May's: For, say they, Ferdinando depones, That he came aboard two Years and a half ago; and that the Action happen'd about a Month after he came aboard; so that it must have been in the Month of November, 1702, and not in the Months of February, March, &c. 1703. But ye were Witnesses, that the Black did not depone positively as to the Time of his coming aboard, but said it was about two Years and a half ago; and that the Engagement was about a Month after. Both these Designations of the Time admit a Latitude: And he was so cautious, that he stopt again before he signed his Oath; until it was told him, that it could not be otherways understood.

But then they urge, that he depones, That the Engagement happen'd betwixt Tillicberry and Callecut, upon the Coast of Malabar; yet Mr. May depones, That he heard the Shooting at Callicoiloan; which, say they, being at such a vast Distance from Tillicberry, was impossible.

But these Gentlemen do not observe, That the Engagement continued for three Days; and that it is expressly deponed, There was a running Fight during that Time: So that tho' the Beginning of the Attack might have been betwixt Tillicberry and Callecut, yet it might have continued along the Coast.

Neither is it of more Moment what these Gentlemen observe, That the Strangers Ship attacked might have in three Days got off: Because it appears, she was attacked and pursued by the Sloop, which was a light Vessel; and the Ship itself attack'd was weakly mann'd, having but about ten Men aboard, and a Ship of 20 Guns.

But it may possibly be further urged, That the Black deponed, That Mr. Loveday and Mr. Linstead were aboard the Sloop; whereas Mr. May depones, That Mr. Linstead was left at Keilon; and that he heard him order'd to go ashore before, and saw him taken into the Ship some Time afterwards.

But neither is there any Inconsistency in this Particular, betwixt these two Oaths: For Mr. May depones, That when the Ship came upon the Coast of Malabar, he himself was put ashore: And altho' before he was put a-shore he heard Linstead and Hammond ordered a-shore, yet he did not see them go; so that Linstead might have continued in the Ship notwithstanding. Or, in the next Place, let us suppose that Linstead had once gone a-shore; does it from thence necessarily follow, that he did not come aboard again, till the Doctor saw him taken up? Certainly it does not; for Mr. May continued a very long Time a-shore. But now granting what these Gentlemen so earnestly desire, that Ferdinando had been mistaken as to some such Circumstance; can that overturn his Testimony? The Thing happening upwards of two Years ago: The Subject was an Engagement at Sea; perhaps the first Fighting ever he was Witness to: And the Confusion which, for the most part, is incident to the firmest Spirits in their first Adventures, might excuse this Witness, if in a † minute † small. Circumstance he had mistaken; seeing his Oath, as to what is material and essential, is most pregnantly || supported. as has been already said.

It may be likewise observed, That it was very much urged for the Pannels, that Ferdinando came aboard the Ship at Anjango, only two Days before the Ship parted from the Coast of Malabar: But tho' that were true, it would be little to the Purpose: For it is evident by his own Deposition, that at first he enter'd to the Service of Mr. Loveday, the Purser; and that he came aboard of the Sloop at Callicoiloan with Loveday; and the Sloop was the chief Instrument made use of in the Piracy libelled.

It is not unlikely, that the Lawyers on the other side will amuse you with Observes upon Mr. May's Testimony; as that he is but a Witness † de auditu, not having been † By Hear-say. present at the Action: But in this they are again mistaken; for, as I take it, a Witness de auditu is such an one, who repeats at second-hand: As if Mr. May had deponed, That another Person had told him he had heard Shooting. But since our Hearing is as much to be depended on as our Seeing, in what concerns the proper Object of the Ear, Mr. May's Testimony, which chiefly consists of what he heard and saw himself, is not in the Sense of Law de auditu. Mr. May depones he heard the Shooting; and the next Day that he came down, he saw the Worcester riding, with another Ship at her Stern; and that he saw some of the Crew come a-shore in a Boat; and that they told him that they had brought in a Ship; and that Coge Commodo, or the Lingister, told him he had bought the Ship. He saw and handled the Black's H h h h 2 Wounds:

Wounds: he was Eye and Earwitness to Madder's Threatning, and imposing a rigorous Silence. In all this there is nothing properly de auditu; for that the Seamen told him they had brought in a Ship, did not depend barely upon their telling, but upon these Circumstances, that they were the Persons brought it in; and that the Ship was riding under his Eye at the Stern of the Worcester. And just so what he heard from Coge Commado, and the Linguist, being upon the Place, and seeing the Ship under his Eye, is not to depone only de auditu, but has as much Evidence, as is necessary to create a full Certainty in the Mind of any reasonable and indifferent Person.

As for the other Circumstances, I beg Liberty to forewarn you, Gentlemen, That every Thing material is proven; and that even as to the least Circumstance, there is some Evidence. That the Goods were not regularly marked, as is ordinary in fair Trade, is proven by the Oaths of * Masters of Ships of * Skippers: That the Seal of the African Company was seen in the Hand of Captain Madder; is deponed by Glen, a Seal-Cutter, who could not well be mistaken in a Matter of that kind. And in like Manner, that there was something aboard of the Worcester, which would not be found, tho' they should tear her Board from Board; is deponed by James Wilkie. None of these Circumstances are absolutely without Evidence: And the rest of the Libel, both what is essential, and even as to lesser Circumstances, is distinctly and plainly proven.

To conclude, Gentlemen, As, on the one Hand, you are to be very tender of admitting that for a Proof, in a Case of Life and Death, which ought not to be admitted; so you must be careful not to reject such Evidence, as must convince the whole World, that these unhappy Criminals are guilty of the cruel and atrocious Crimes libelled. Take the Matter in its whole Series: The affected Darkeness in the Entry to the Undertaking, a Correspondence in Cypher, wherein the Parties were neither to be mentioned on the Cover, nor in the Letters, nor were they to subscribe. That the Cargo was inconsiderable, and chiefly composed of Arms, not to the Value of a Thousand Pounds Sterling. And it seems almost ridiculous, that a Ship of 200 Tuns, with 20 Guns mounted, sailed by 36 Men, should be sent to the East-Indies upon an ordinary Adventure, with so invaluable a Cargo: And join with that the Evidence of the Murder and Robberies, mentioned in the Indictment. Consider how much Light the Providence of GOD has discover'd in so dark a Crime committed in a Place so distant and solitary; and I am confident, you will conclude with me, That the Murder and Piracy is proven.

* Speak to the Jury. The Advocates for the Pannels did also on their Part * speech the Assize, by resuming the Defences for the Pannels, and for taking off the Weight of the Probation led against them, and by alledging what could be further said for their Exculpation and Defence.

* Off-hand by word of mouth. But these Speeches having been made * extempore, & viva voce, albeit the Advocates for the Pannels were desired at the printing of this † Process, to give in to be printed a full Copy of what they had said in Defence to the Assize; yet they declined to do the same.

The Judge of the High Court of Admiralty and Assessors ordain the * Assize presently to inclose, and to return their Verdict upon Friday next, being the Sixteenth of March Instant, at ten a Clock in the Forenoon; and the † hail Fifteen Assessors to be present, each under the Pain of Three Hundred Merks, and continue the Dyet till that Time: and ordain the Pannels to be carried back to the respective Prisons.

Edinburgh 16th March. 1705.

DECLARATION by Thomas Linseed, emitted in Presence of Sir James Stewart Her Majesty's Advocate, hereto subscribing with the said Linseed.

T Thomas Linseed declares, That being in the Ship the Worcester as Assistant to the Supercargo, when the Vessel came to Callicoiloan, upon the Coast of Malabar, which was about the Beginning of the Year 1703, Mr. Hammond and he were sent a-shore to look after the Goods they had sold, and the Returns they expected at Callicoiloan and Keilon; That the Ship the Worcester left Callicoiloan with her Sloop in January 1703, for to go to Calicut, and other Places up that Coast; but within five or six Days after the Ships parting, there came in Fisher-Boats to Callicoiloan, who told them that their Ship the Worcester had had an Engagement at Sea, and that it was the Sloop that first attack'd the Vessel, and that they fought until they were out of sight of the Fishermen, who could give no further Account of it. But thereupon the Declarant and Mr. Hammond wrote and sent a Messenger either to Cochin or Calicut, to know what was become of the Worcester; and that they got a Return after some Days, that they should mind their Business, and not concern themselves with any Thing that Callant the Supercargo did aboard. That some Days thereafter, the Declarant met with Coge Commodo in the Ibeck of Keilon, who told him, that he had bought a Ship, and he took the Declarant aboard; that the Vessel was about 100 Tons, and did bear about twelve or thirteen Guns, and that she appeared to be of the Country Build. And Coge Commodo said, he had bought her from the Pirates of Cota or Burgara, which are two little Pirating Towns on either side of a River on the Coast of Malabar; but when the Declarant came to Keilon, the Dutch and Portuguese there told him, that that Vessel which Coge Commodo had bought was brought in in the Night Season by some of the Crew of the Worcester, and that her Top-mast was taken down, and her Sails taken off, and the Yards lower'd; and that the Dutch and Portuguese made no more reckoning of it, because 'tis what is ordinary on that Coast. That the Declarant and Mr. Hammond stayed, for two or three Months after their parting from the Ship, at Callicoiloan and thereabouts, until the Ship the Worcester came back to the Road of Callicoiloan, and that there he went aboard: That when he went aboard, he told them what he had heard, but they gave him no Account of the Action; nor could he learn more of it. That the Doctor was a-shore at Ibeck while the Ship was at Anchor at Callicoiloan, and that at that Time the Declarant was gone up to Callicoiloan, and knows no more of the Doctor's being a-shore, That the Sloop with Mr. Loveday and others aboard did first come back to Callicoiloan, and advertised the Declarant and Mr. Hammond to be in readiness, for the Ship was coming back; and that when she came back they went aboard, and the Declarant went aboard at Anjango, from whence they failed to Bengal. And this the Declarant declares to be a Truth. Causa scientia patet.

T. Linseed.

J. A. STEWART.

Edinburgh, 27 March, 1705.

IN Presence of Mr James Graham Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, George Haines one of the Crew of the Worcester, being desirous to make a Confession of what he knew in relation to the Crimes for which he and the rest of the Crew are pursued; Declared, That when the Ship the Worcester was in the Downs, the Declarant received a Letter from a Friend in London, telling him, that it was surmised in London that their Ship was going out upon some ill Design; and that he had likewise another Letter from his Father to the same Purpose, and heard the Gunner James Symphon say, he had also another of the same Nature. The Declarant declares, that thereafter he used all his his Endeavours to get ashore, and accordingly he having got leave to see some Friends aboard the Fleet-Frigat that was then riding in the Downs, he got into her Long Boat that was then going ashore, but some of the Frigate's Crew having got notice where the Declarant was, after he went ashore, they came to him, and having drunk with him to some Pitch, persuaded him to go aboard of his own Ship again; and the Declarant was accordingly carried aboard, in one of the Boats belonging to the Town of Deal. And some Time thereafter, the Declarant designed likewise to have got into a Man of War, riding hard by their Ship; but Mr. Callant, the Supercargo, came after him, and brought him back: And the Declarant believes the Name of the Man of War was the Salisbury. That the Ship Worcester sailed from the Downs the 8th of March, 1702, in the Morning. That in the Month of June, or July thereafter, the Ship arrived at Delagoa, where their Sloop was built of Timber, and other Materials which they had brought from England aboard the Ship. That having sailed from Delagoa, some few Days before they came upon the Coast of Malabar, he heard some of the Crew, and particularly John Bruckley the Cooper talk of turning Pirates, and persuading others of the Crew to go in with them. That when they came upon the Coast of Malabar, and had been there about a Month, they endeavoured to take a large Country Boat; and for that end, the Sloop endeavour'd to get betwixt the said Boat and the Shore, that so the Ship might come up with the said Boat; but there being several Hands aboard, and the Boat having Fifty Oars, out-failed both Ship and Sloop, and got off. Declares, That Coge Commodo was aboard the Ship the Time of the aforesaid Chase; and that he drew his Sabre, and encouraged the Crew of the Worcester. Declares, That hereafter the Ship and Sloop sailed for Cochin, with a Design to have cleaned both at that Place; (the Sloop being much spoil'd with Worms) but the Governor would not allow them to be cleaned there; and therefore they went up to Callecut, where the Sloop was cleaned and refitted, and mann'd with about Eight Men, and Two Guns, Two Patteraroes, and other Small Arms and Ammunition put aboard; and then the Sloop alone sailed up towards Tillicberry, and stayed away from the Ship about Eight Days. Declares, That the Sloop took no Goods along with her when she went out; but when she returned, she had aboard Eight Hog-heads of Rack, and knows not how she came by them. But John Roberts, one of the Crew who had been with the Sloop at that Time, was very melancholy after his Return; and the Declarant having a Cocunut, full of Rack in his Hand, desired Roberts to take a Part; but he would not, and went down to his Hammock mightily concern'd: And afterwards told the Declarant, that the Reason of his Concern and Melancholy, was, That he was accessary to the cutting off of some Mens Heads at Sacrifice Rock, betwixt Tillicberry and Callecut. Declares, That the Sloop did sail by her self from Callecut thereafter; and the Ship followed down to Callicoiloan, and did there meet with the Sloop: and having discover'd a Ship coming as from the Southward, the Sloop was under Sail, and made to get in betwixt the said Ship and the Offing, that so she might not get to Sea: And the Ship coming nearer to the Worcester, in which the Declarant was at the Time; the Worcester slipped her Anchors, and made towards the foresaid Ship, and at length came up with her, and fired a sharp Shot, to cause her to come to; which she did accordingly, by breaking her Head-sails back to the Masts; and that thereafter she was boarded. Declares, That the Ship was about Seventy Tuns Burden, and square-sterned, and painted in the Quarters with Red and Yellow; and that she had a Main Deck, and Quarter Deck, and a little Fore-Castle, and was of the Indian Build: And that there was in the Ship, when boarded, about Twelve or Fourteen Men, all white, and sickly, as the Declarant clearly perceived before the Ship was boarded. But when the Declarant was endeavouring to know of what Country the Men were, Edward Carry, one of the Worcester's Crew, knock'd him down with a Hand-spike into the Midship Hatch: But he afterwards heard amongst the Crew, that the Men of the taken Ship were Britons. Declares, That he knew not what became of the Men which were aboard of the taken ship, not having been able to come above Deck, with the Stroke which he received from Edward Carry, and whereof he yet bears the Mark: But declares that the Sloop went off before he came above Deck, and stayed away for Three or Four Days; and that the Declarant thereafter heard the Men were put into the Sloop. And what was done with the said Men of the taken Ship he cannot tell; but doubts not they were murdered and made away, because they could not be put ashore at any Place at hand on that Coast; there being English and Dutch Factories all along the Coast, very near each other. Declares, That these of the Crew who went with the Sloop from the Ship at that time, were Mr. Loveday, Thomas Calcute, Andrew Robertson Gunner of the Sloop, John Roberts, Edward Carry, Duncan Mackay, Alexander Taylor, and Antonio Ferdinando the Black; but cannot be positive who besides were there. Declares, That the next Evening after the Action, the Ship which was taken the Day before, was carried in by some of the Crew to Callicoiloan and sold to Coge Commodo for 1500 Rupies: and that the Goods of the said taken Ship were some Bales and Matts of China Roots, and Four Chests of Copper; which Chests were sold afterwards at Bengal, to a Bannion Merchant named Tagodas. Declares, That some Days after the Action, the Declarant was sent ashore with a Letter to the Supercargo; and that he then heard that Coge Commodo to whom the Ship was sold, was a great Assister of all Pirates, and was very serviceable to Kidd and Avery when upon that Coast, and bought off their Goods, as the Declarant was credibly informed of the People on that Coast. And declares, That the Time the Declarant was on Shore, the Supercargo, Mr. Linstead, Reynolds, Hammond, and the Doctor were a-shore. And the Declarant did likewise see Antonio Ferdinando, the Black, at the Ibeck of Callicoiloan, who complained of a Wound in his Arm. Declares, That after the Action, and before the Declarant went ashore, the Doctor Charles May, came aboard from the Ibeck of Callicoiloan; and seeing the Chests which had come out of the taken Ship upon the Deck, he asked Captain Madder, What did all that Lumber upon the Deck? And that Madder answer'd him with a Curse, and told him to mind his Plaster-Box, and ask no Questions. Declares, That while the Ship was upon the Coast of Malabar, she sprung a Leak in the Strake next the Keel, which made the Crew to pump constantly: However they went not into any Place upon the Coast of Malabar, to refit her, but failed to Bengal, which was about Five Weeks Sailing; and there the Ship was refitted, not only of the Leak, but of an Hurt which the Ship got in the Action, in the Plank, Plank, betwixt the Midship's Crupper and the Chestree, and a new Plank put in, in the Larboard side, where the Hurt was. Declares, That the Declarant did keep a Note, by way of Journal, during the Voyage, which contained the Substance of what he now declares in relation to the above Particulars; and that when the Ship was seized in the Road of Leith, he heaved the same over-Board, lest it should have fallen in the Seizers Hands. Declares, That he would have emitted this Declaration and Confession sooner, but that he was always made believe by Captain Green's Agents, that the Defences made for the Crew, would certainly bring them off: And if they did all agree in one Mind, and keep close Moutbs, there would be no Fear; for nothing could be otherways proven that could do them Harm. And declares, That Wilcocks, the Chyrurgeon's Mate, told the Declarant, that he saw a Letter from the Owners of the Worcester, in London, to Captain Green; which bore, That altho' the Crew were condemned in Scotland, they had Pardons ready to send down for them. And this the Declarant was likewise informed of from the Carpenter's Wife.

 appeared.* IN Prefence of Sir Robert Forbes, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty,  compeared* Gorges Haines, one of the Crew of the Ship the Worcester, and declared that he now adds to his former Declaration; That after the Ship therein mentioned was seized, he saw the Men which were therein killed and murdered with Pole-Axes and Cutlases, and saw their dead Bodies put into the Sloop, and thereafter thrown over-board: And, to the best of the Declarant's Knowledge, the said Men so killed were Scotsmen; the Declarant having heard them speak the Scots Language. And further declares, That the said Ship then seized, was understood by the Crew of the Worcester to have been Captain Drummond his Ship; and particularly he heard Captain Madder, John Bruckley, and the deceas'd Edward Carry, say so. And further adds, that he would have emitted what is above before this Time, but was afraid lest his mentioning the Ship so seized to belong to Captain Drummond, and the Men aboard of the same to have been murder'd, might have rendered the Government offended, and obliged them to deal hardly with the Declarant. And this he declares to be Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

Edinburgh, 31 March, 1705.

IN Prefence of Mr. James Grabam, Judge Admiral, John Bruckley, Cooper of the Ship Worcester, being desirous to make a Confession of the Crimes, whereupon he and the rest of the Crew were pursu'd; declares, That some Time after the Ship the Worcester came upon the Coast of Malabar, that she and the Sloop gave Chase to a Country Boat, which escaped by reason of her Oars. That afterwards the Ship and Sloop sailed in Company to Cochin, where they were denied Access to clean; and therefore they thereafter sailed to Calicut, where the Sloop (which had been spoiled by the Worms) was hal'd upon the Shore, and clean'd, and thereafter was mann'd with about 10 Men, and 2 Guns, 2 Patteraroes, with other small Arms put aboard. From Calicut, the Sloop was order'd to sail towards Tillicberry, but there was no Goods sent along; and in about six or eight Days thereafter, the Sloop came back in Chase of another Ship. Declares, That when the Ship the Worcester saw the Sloop in Chase of the other Ship, she slipt her Anchors, and made out to Sea to meet them. Declares, That he saw the Sloop board the said Ship towards Night; and that the Long-Boat was after order'd to be mann'd, and Captain Madder went along in the Long-Boat. Declares, He does not know what became of the Men who were on Board the taken Ship; but that the Declarant did see they were white Men. And the Reason why he knows not what became of the Men, is, that the Declarant was never on Board the taken Ship; and that the Sloop which had boarded the Ship, was ordered away next Morning; and he doubts not but the Men were alongst which were taken out of the Prize Ship. Declares, That the Ship which was taken, was mann'd with some of the Worcester's Crew, and sailed alongst with the Worcester till they came to Callicoilan, where they found the Sloop. Declares, That whilst the Worcester, with the other Ship, came in sight of the Sloop, the Sloop weighed Anchor, and stood to the Offing; so that the taken Ship came into Callicoilan betwixt the Sloop and the Worcester; and all three came to an Anchor together. Declares, That after they came to an Anchor, the taken Ship rode under the Stern of the Worcester, and was thereafter sent into Callicoilan River, and sold to Coge Commodo, as the Declarant supposes, Declares, That thereafter the Declarant was sent ashore for Water to the Ibeck of Callicoilan, where he met with Doctor May; and that he sent on Board a Pinguetta, with Water, according to his Orders. Declares, That some Time after they came to an Anchor before Callicoilan; and before the Declarant was sent ashore for Water as above, they saw a Ship at Sea coming from the Southward; that the Sloop was under Sail at that Time, being a cruising about: That she sailed towards the Sea, and bore down the Ship towards the Worcester. That the Worcester, when the Ship came near, slipt from her Anchors, and made towards the Ship; which thereafter was boarded, first by the Sloop, and then by the Worcester, about ten or eleven a Clock in the Forenoon. Declares, That there was both Whites and Blacks on Board that Ship, and most part Whites; but the Declarant did not know what became of them; but that the Sloop went off in a few Hours after the Engagement and did not return till after Two or Three Days. That the Declarant does not know what became of that Ship; but declares, that he was in a Moorish King's House, with about six of the Crew; and that that King was Coge Commodo's Master, who had bargained for one of the taken Ships; the Declarant cannot be positive which: And that at the same time the Supercargo, who was along with them, presented the King with a small Fowling-Piece. Declares, That the Declarant stayed ashore, trimming the Casks, for about six Weeks thereafter: And does not remember at present any more of the Affair. And declares, he cannot sign but by this Mark.

Edinburgh, 3. April. 1705.

IN Prefence of Sir Robert Forbes, Judge of the High-Court of Admiralty, compeared John Bruckley, one of the Crew of the Ship the Worcester; and declares, That he adheres to his former Declaration, emitted before Mr. James Graham, Judge-Admiral, the thirty first of March. And now adds, That the Men which were aboard the Ship, which was seized before Callicoiloan, were for the most part White Men; and the Declarant heard them speak the English Tongue, being in Number about Twelve or Fourteen. And declares, That Captain Madder was in the Sloop, and one of those That boarded the said Ship; and that the Men were put into the Sloop, and carried away to the Northward in the Sea; and the Declarant never heard any more of them. And that the Goods aboard the taken Ship were brought into the Ship the Worcester, and consisted of China Root, and four Chests of Copper; which Chests were sold at Bengal, to a Bannian Merchant. And further adds That the Men seized in the taken Ship were killed after they were put into the Sloop, and before they were carried to the Sea Northward. And further adds, That immediately after the Action was over, the Declarant did hear the Supercargo, Callant, Captain Madder, John Roberts, and Edward Carry say, That the seiz'd Ship was Captain Drummond's Ship, belonging to the Scots African Company. And adds, That when the Worcester sailed from the Downs, the Declarant did not know where the Ship was bound; but heard it frequently said, they were going upon a Discovery. And declares this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD. And declares he cannot write, but by this Mark.

ROBERT FORBES.

A P P E N D I X.

THE foregoing Account of the Trial of Captain Green and his Crew, being taken * closely from the Records of Court; and the usual form of the Court being to hear and discuss Objections against the Witnesses, before they be examined, viva voce, without any written Debate; it is therefore thought fit here to add the Objections that were made against the Witnesses, and the Answers given thereto, with the Interlocutors pass'd thereon; that there may be nothing wanting to the Reader's full Information.

And first, it was objected against Antonio Ferdinando, the Cook's Mate, That he could not be a Witness, because of his Poverty; he not being worth (as the Stile of the Court is) the Queen's * Unlaw, that is, ten Pounds Scots, in case he should transgress: And so, according to the Law of this Kingdom, was to be rejected. 2. That he was not a Christian, and therefore could not be received as a Witness against Christians, specially in a Pursuit that reached their Lives and Fortunes. Nor could he indeed be supposed to have the just Knowledge of the Religion of an Oath.

To which it was answer'd, 1. That tho' the Standard of Ten Pounds Scots, settled by the Law and Custom of this Kingdom, as to the Quality of Witnesses, might well be refused in a Trial of Crimes of this Nature against the Law of Nations, and which were to be tried accordingly; yet the Matter of Fact was false; Antonio Ferdinando, being worth more than ten Pounds Scots, by the very Wages due to him; and which, by the Pannels own Books, were attested to be fifteen Shillings per Menssem, whereof, to this Hour, he hath got no Payment. 2. Antonio Ferdinando was a Christian, as he himself owned from the Beginning; and that he was born of Christian Parents: Like as it's known, that such Names are only given to Christians. Besides, tho' his not being a Christian might be a * Prejudice against him, yet it could be no just Exception against his Testimony as a Witness; since he both profess'd the Knowledge of GOD, and the Conscience of an Oath, as he had often declared.

The Judge and Assessors having consider'd the foresaid Objections and Answers, they repel the Objections in respect to the Answers, and allow the Witnesses to be admitted.

2. It was objected against Antonio Francisco That he was not worth ten Pounds Scots; and had indeed nothing; besides, that he was no Christian, but a Servant or Slave to Captain Green; and also had no Religion.

To which it was answer'd, 1. That tho' ten Pounds Scots be the Rate of Witnesses in our Scots Law; yet, as hath been said, this Rule cannot * vie in the Case of the * bear. Crimes libelled, committed against the Law of Nations in remote Parts, & in alto Mari, in the deep Sea; which made the Crimes to be Crimes excepted. And it's known to be the Rule and Privilege, as to Crimes atrocious and * occult; and therefore ex- * hidden. cepted to exempt even the Witnesses from the ordinary Qualifications. Nor was Antonio Francisco to be reckon'd no Christian; since, 1. He bears a Christian Name; and next declares, that a Christian Mistress he had in Peggy, who gave him to Captain Green, did first procure him to be Baptized and Christned. And 3. He professes the Knowledge of the true GOD. Nor, being a Christian, can he be reckoned any longer a Slave.

But upon the whole, as to these Two, and the whole other Witnesses; the Nature of the atrocious Crime against the Law of Nations, with the Manner of their having been committed, and the Endeavours used for their Concealment, ought principally to be remembered; since thereby, in the Opinion of all Lawyers, they become Crimes excepted: And that it is the known Privilege of Crimes excepted, to relax from the ordinary Rules, and to proceed on such Evidence as the Matter doth doth afford, the Substance of the Probation being only observ'd.

The Judge and Assessors having considered the foresaid Objections, and Answers, they repel the Objections, in respect of the Answers, and allow the Witness to be admitted.

3. It was objected against Anne Seaton, that she could not be a Witness, because a Woman.

To which it was answered, that in Crimes where the Probation proceeds not upon Testes requisiti, but such as Providence offers, even Women are admitted. But 2. It's the general Opinion and Practice over all, that Crimes atrocious, occult and excepted, a Woman is never refused.

The Judge and Assessors having considered the foresaid Objection and Answer, they repel the Objection in respect of the Answer, and allow the Witnesses to be admitted.

 Excerpts out of the Instructions and Letters found in Captain Green's Books, to which Sir David Dalrymple's Speech to the Jury relates.*

 Extracts.*

IN the Instructions or Orders given by the Freighters of the Worcester, Captain Thomas Green Commander, to Mr. Robert Callant Super-cargo there occurs one Article in these Words,

We would have you write us by all Opportunities, especially from Sinde, by any Ships bound from thence to Persia; and for the greater Secrecy, especially of the Letter to be sent to Mauritius for us, here under is an Alphabet for you to write us by; your Subscription must be in common English, directing all such Letters to Captain Thomas Bowrey in Well-close-Square, London.

(Nota, At this Place the whole Alphabet is insert distinctly, and above each Letter a different Character is set down, to be used in Place of the Letters of the Alphabet.)

When your Cargo for England is provided, or near compleated, then we would have you sell the Sloop for what you can get, and invest the Produce in Goods for England.

And lower amongst the same Orders in another Article are these Words,

You must engage the Master of the Sloop not to let any Letter from himself or any other be sent to England, but only our Letter, in which you may insert the Names of any Dead; and for the Care and Secrecy of those who go in the Sloop, in case no Letter or News comes to England, but our Letter concerning our Business, then we will on the return of the Ship give the Master and Crew one Month's Pay gratis, and they shall also have their Shares of the Benefit promised the Ship's Company for the Whale Fishing.

By a Letter dated London, 3 February, 1702, from Captain T. B---y to Mr. Callant, the said Captain advises him in these Words,

For the greater Security of our Affairs, when you write by the Alphabet in your Instructions, I would have you carry the last Letter of each Word to be in the room of the first Letter to the next Word, as for Example.

Captain Thomas Bowrey, Sir wee are all well.

Captai nthoma sbowre yfi rwe ear eal lwell.

Make no Title (as is usual) to begin your Letter, nor no Date, nor Compliment, no Name at last; But let all be comprehended in the Lines of your Letter, so as to make no distinction, and make but one Paragraph of all your Letter, and if any Men dead, set their Names immediately after your own Name subscribed to the Letter, all in Characters before directed, and please to keep this as Directions therein.

By another Letter from the said Captain T. B---y to the said Mr. Callant, dated London, 16 February 1702, he adds concerning the foresaid Cypher in these Words,

On further Consideration, I think, I have committed an Error in my Letter to you Yesterday, it being wrote in it as, viz.

Captai nthoma sbowre yfi rwe ear eal lwell.

That is,

Captain Thomas Bowrey, Sir we are all well.

Now, I doubt the naming any Name in the beginning, or making any Complement there, may be a Means to find the Key of the Alphabet, therefore pray Strike out of the Letter I sent you Yesterday, as above done, and begin directly with your Business, following the Directions given you. And whereas you are ordered to direct your said Letter to me, I would not have you mention my Name in the Subscription, but direct the said Letter to Mr. Nicholas Pope Scrivener, in Nicholas Lane, London, to pay 5 l. to the Bearer as in your Instructions.

CLXXXII. The Trial of ROBERT FEILDING, Esq; at the Old-Baily for Bigamy, in marrying the Duchess of Cleveland, his former Wife being then living, Dec. 4. 1706. 5 Ann.

On Wednesday the 4th of December, At the Sessions House in the Old Baily, This Day came on the Trial of Robert Feilding, Esq; for Felony, in Marrying her Grace the Duchess of Cleveland; Mary Wadsworth, his first Wife, being then alive. The Court being sat, proceed in this manner.

Clerk of Arraignment. S E T Robert Feilding to the Bar. (which was done.)

Robert Feilding, hold up thy hand (which he did). Cl. of Arr. Robert Feilding, you stand indicted by the Name of Robert Feilding, late of the Parish of St. James's, within the Liberty of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, For that you, on the ninth Day

Day of November, in the fourth Year of Her now Majesty's Reign, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, took to Wife one Mary Wadsworth, Spinster, and the same Mary Wadsworth, then and there had for your Wife; and that you the said Robert Feilding, afterwards, viz. on the twenty fifth of the same Month of November, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields, in the said County, did feloniously take to Wife the most noble Barbara Duchess of Cleveland (the said Mary Wadsworth, his former Wife, being then living) against the Peace of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided.

How say'st thou, Robert Feilding, art thou Guilty of this Indictment, or not Guilty?

Feilding. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit. How wilt thou be tried?

Feilding. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. Call the Jury. Mr. Feilding, if you except to any of the Jury, you must do it before they are sworn.

Feilding. I do not challenge any of them.

The Jury sworn, viz.

Francis Chapman,
Thomas Moody,
Peter Lovigne,
Hugh Merchant,
Joseph D'avenish,
Edward How,

Edward Boswell,
John Mills,
Richard Hazzard,
Samuel Chace,
Thomas Yeomond,
John Johnson.

Proclamation made, That if any can inform the Queen's Justices, and the Queen's Council, of any the Matters the Prisoner stands charged with; let them come forth and they shall be heard.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am, in this Case, Council for the Queen. The Prisoner at the Bar, Robert Feilding, stands indicted, That he on the ninth Day of November, in the fourth Year of her now Majesty's Reign, &c. (the Indictment repeated). To which Indictment he has pleaded not Guilty, and put himself on God and his Country, which Country you are. I hope if we prove the Indictment, you will find him Guilty.

Sir Ja. Mountague. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council with the Queen against the Prisoner, Mr. Robert Feilding, who stands indicted for taking to Wife Barbara Duchess of Cleveland, after he had before marry'd one Mary Wadsworth, who is still alive: This is a Crime that amounts to Felony; and tho' the Law doth not take away from him that shall be convicted thereof, the Benefit of his Clergy; yet, since it is such a Crime as doth take away from the Prisoner the Assistance of Council, I shall only state Matter of Fact, which is as followeth.

About a Year ago, or a little better, there was a young Lady left a Widow by Mr. Deleau, and reputed a great Fortune; Mr. Feilding thinking himself qualified for the greatest Fortune, had a Design upon this Lady; and in August, 1705, he applied himself to one Mrs. Streights to consult with her, and contrive some Method how he might have Access to court this Widow. This Mrs. Streights had no Acquaintance with the Widow her self but knew Mrs. Charlott Villars was acquainted with her, and used to cut her Hair; so the best Thing they could think of at that Time, was to make

Mrs. Villars their Friend, that by her Means he might have Admittance into the Lady's Company; for he did not question if the Lady had but once a Sight of his very handsome Person, she would have the same Affection for him, that he had met with from other Ladies, even on their first seeing of him. Mrs. Villars was promised 500*l.* to bring this Affair about; and tho' she doubted with her self, whether she could ever accomplish it, yet by these Means she might perhaps make a Penny of it to herself; and thereupon she promises Mrs. Streights to use her endeavour to serve the Major-General, meaning Mr. Feilding, tho' Mrs. Villars could not be sure such an Overture would be well received by Mrs. Deleau: Yet being acquainted with one Mary Wadsworth, a young Woman not much unlike in Person to Mrs. Deleau, she imagined it would be no difficult Matter for her to set up the said Mrs. Wadsworth to represent Mrs. Deleau; and accordingly it was done, and Mr. Feilding proved so intent upon the Matter, that he went in few Days to Doctors-Commons, to see for Mr. Deleau's Will (and found thereby that Mrs. Deleau was left very considerable). And that he might judge the better whether she were truly the Fortune she was represented to him, he took a Copy of the said Will, and soon after went to Mrs. Villars and told her, That what Mrs. Streights had said concerning Mrs. Deleau's Fortune was true: And being very well satisfied with her Fortune, he was resolved to get a View of her. Soon after, Mr. Feilding went to Tunbridge, and after two or three Days stay there, returned and called at Waddon, the Place where Mrs. Deleau resided, with a Pretence to see the House and Gardens, but in reality it was to see the Widow; he thought nothing else was then to be done, but to give the Lady a sight of his handsome Person he designed to lay at her Feet; but it happened that the Lady would not be seen her self, but her Servants were permitted to shew him the Gardens, and he fancied himself that he had had a Sight of Mrs. Deleau too; for a Kinswoman of Mrs. Deleau's looking out into the Garden while he was there, gave him the Sight of a Woman at the Window, and he presently concluded it could be no body but Mrs. Deleau admiring Beau Feilding. About three Days after Mr. Feilding's Return from Tunbridge, which was about a Fortnight after St. Bartholomew-tide last was Twelve-month, he told Mrs. Villars of his calling at Waddon, and that he had acquainted the Duchess of Cleveland of the fine Gardens that were there, and he said that her Grace had a great Desire to see them, and therefore directed Mrs. Villars to go from her Grace to Mrs. Deleau, to ask the Favour of her to permit her Grace to see the House and Gardens. Accordingly Mrs. Villars went down to Waddon; and Mrs. Deleau treated her very civilly, and told her whenever her Grace pleased, she should see her House and Gardens; but as she was a Widow she could not attend upon her Grace: But tho' the Duchess was expected after this, yet she did not go, for indeed she did not know any Thing of the Message. So the next Time Mr. Feilding attempted to see her, was at a Horse-Race at Banstead-Downs, whither he went for that Purpose, but did not see her. After this, or some Time before, he sent a Letter to Mrs. Deleau's House, but the Servants when they saw the Name to it, knowing the Character of Mr.

Feilding, threw it into the Fire.—When Mrs. Villars found that the Duchess of Cleveland knew nothing of her being sent to Waddon, and that it was only a Contrivance of Mr. Feilding's to get an Opportunity of seeing Mrs. Deleau, and that in Truth he had never seen her, she resolved to play Trick for Trick with him, and thereupon proposed the Matter to Mary Wadsworth, the Woman I before mentioned to be of her Acquaintance, but one that Mr. Feilding did not know, and one that would not worst her self much by such an Undertaking, whether it succeeded or not. Mrs. Wadsworth, upon the first opening of it readily embraced the Offer, and thereupon Mrs. Villars went to Mr. Feilding and told him, she had proposed the Matter to the Lady (Mrs. Deleau) which she at first rejected, but at last did give a favourable Ear to it; and that she did not fear, but if Matters could be prudently managed, his Desires might be accomplished.—A little before my Lord-Mayor's Day last was Twelve-month, she told Mr. Feilding that she had at length obtained of the Lady the Favour of a Promise of an Interview, and that she was shortly to bring her to his Lodgings, but he must take care not to let her know they were his Lodgings, or to give her the least Cause to suspect he had any Thing to do there: Accordingly Mrs. Villars, the Evening of my Lord-Mayor's Day, brought Mrs. Wadsworth in a Mourning Coach and Widow's Dress to Mr. Feilding's Lodgings: He was not within at the Time they came thither, but being sent for, came in soon after, and was extremely complaisant for some Time; but at length tho' he had been cautioned not to let the Lady know they were his Lodgings, yet he could not forbear shewing her his fine Cloaths, and what Furniture he had; and in a little Time after sent for Mrs. Margaretta to sing to her; and pretended he was so extremely taken with her, that nothing would satisfy him but being married that Night; but she, with a seeming Modesty, check'd his forward Behaviour, and made a shew of going away in displeasure; but before they parted, he prevailed upon her to promise not to put off their Marriage longer than Wednesday Seven-Night. My Lord Mr. Feilding rightly judged by this Conversation what an Interest he had fix'd in the Lady, and looking upon himself to be sure of her, he actually went to a Goldsmith and bespoke a Ring, and directed himself what Posie should be engrav'd. When the Day came which had first been agreed on, sham Pretences were made, not to seem over-hasty in so serious a Matter, and the Marriage was put off till the Friday following, being the 9th of November last was Twelve-month; at which Time Mrs. Villars and the Lady came again to Mr. Feilding's Lodgings, where he received her with an extraordinary Transport of Joy, and the Marriage must immediately be proceeded on; but she for some Time framed several Put-offs, and at length made an Offer to have gone away; but Mr. Feilding by no Means would permit her to go, without making her his own, which he was resolved should be done presently; and to make all Things sure, he ran out and lock'd the Chamber-door to keep her and Mrs. Villars in, whilst he went for a Priest; and taking Coach immediately drove to Count Gallas's the Emperor's Envoy; when he came to his Gate, he enquired of the Porter for one Francisco Drian, that was stiled, The Father in Red upon account of a red Habit he usually wore; but he not being within, Mr. Feilding asked for another Father; and one Father Florence was called to him, whom he acquainted with the Business he came about; but whilst he was treating with Father Florence, the Father in Red luckily came in, and Mr. Feilding immediately took him away with him in the Hackney-Coach to his Lodgings. My Lord, and Gentlemen, we shall shew you that this Father in Red stay'd there about an Hour, and then went away.—We shall shew your Lordship likewise, That Mr. Feilding and Mary Wadsworth supped together, and after Supper he was actually marry'd to Mrs. Wadsworth. And that this Marriage was consummate, we shall prove by several Particulars, viz. That clean Sheets were laid upon the Bed, and all Ceremonies performed that are usual upon such Occasions; and they actually went to Bed together, and lay together all that Night; and the next Day the Lady and Mrs. Villars went away, and as Mr. Feilding supposed, to Waddon, the Widow Deleau's House; to which Place your Lordship and the Jury will find he directed his Letters to her afterwards, and in the Supercriptions stiles her the Countess of Feilding. To corroborate this Evidence we shall likewise prove to your Lordship, that about a Week after, he lay with her again at the very same Lodgings; and we can make it appear that he hath lain with her Three several Times since this first Night, twice before, and once after his Marriage with the Duchess of Cleveland. My Lord, we shall shew you that he made her Presents, furnish'd her with Money, and treated her as his Wife, until the Cheat was found out, which was not till May after; and then finding how he had been served, that instead of marrying a Fortune of 60000*l.* he had been impos'd upon and marry'd one not worth so many Farthings, he discarded her in great Wroth.

My Lord, we will call our Witnesses who will prove to your Lordship, step by step, how this Matter was brought about; and first we will begin with Mrs. Villars.

Mrs. Villars sworn.

Mrs. Villars: My Lord, there came one Mrs. Streights to my Lodgings and wanted to speak with me (it was Bartolomew-tide was Twelve-month) but I was not at home; when I came home, they told me Mrs. Streights had been there, and left word that I was always out of the way when it was to do my self good; she said it would be five hundred Pounds out of my way if I did not come to her. I met with her and Mr. Feilding, and being acquainted with Mr. Feilding's Design upon Mrs. Deleau, he asked me whether I knew the Lady? I said I had no particular Acquaintance with her, but I used to cut her Hair; He told me that he was in Love with her, and asked me whether I would assist him in his Courtship? And whether a Marriage might be brought about? I told him I could not tell, I did not know whether I had that Interest in the Lady as to be made serviceable in such a Design. Mr. Feilding enquired very strictly after her, and said, he would try Means to come into her Company that he might gain her Acquaintance: Upon which we parted at that Time.—And about three Days after Mrs. Streights

Streights came to my House again, and said, Mr. Feilding would speak with me. I went to him; and he told me, he found that the Lady was worth 60000*l.* as he had been told before. He asked me where it was she liv'd? I told him, in Coptbal-Court, near the Change. I told him likewise where her Country-House was; That it was at Waddon in Surrey. Mr. Feilding told me, He would go to Tunbridge, and call by the way to see the Gardens; and by that means he might have an Opportunity of seeing Mrs. Deleau; which he did accordingly. I was sent for again; and he told me he had seen the Gardens, and they were very fine: And that he saw the Lady through a Casement; and that she might have the more perfect View of him, he took divers Turns in the Garden, pull'd out his Watch and set it by the Sun-Dial: And that he came round the Country, and almost murder'd his Horses, to get a Sight of her. But he desired to be in her Company, that he might have a full View of her. He desired me to go to Mrs. Deleau, and tell her, that the Dukes of Cleveland had heard a great Character of her Gardens, and was very desirous to see them.—— I went and acquainted Mrs. Deleau with it: She said, she would not refuse a Woman of her Quality; but would take it as a great Favour, to shew her any Thing that belong'd to her: But desir'd that it might not be that Week, but the Week following; because she was to see a Race on Banstead Downs. I told Mr. Feilding this; and he made Answer for the Dukes of Cleveland, and said, The Dukes was not well; and could not go to see the Gardens. When I found that Mr. Feilding did not send me from the Dukes, but from himself, I was out of Countenance, that I should innocently impose upon the Lady. Mr. Feilding told me, he would go and see the Race upon the Downs; and when he came back, he would send for me, and acquaint me whether he had seen the Lady. And when he came to Town again, he sent Mrs. Streights to me, to come to him; and when I came to him, he told me he saw Mrs. Deleau, he believed, upon the Downs. Mr. Feilding made a Bow to them, and they to him. He said, From thence he went to Epsom, and sent a Letter to be deliver'd into Mrs. Deleau's own Hands, by a Servant of his, not in a Livery. I think it was accordingly deliver'd. Mr. Feilding told me, Mrs. Deleau read it, and said it required no Answer: and said no more. Mr. Feilding asked me, whether I could not get a Letter to Mrs. Deleau? He said, he was much in Love with her. I told him, I believ'd he was mistaken; and that it was another whom he saw.——I perceiv'd that he had no Knowledge of Mrs. Deleau.——I acquainted a young Woman (whom I supposed he might have seen) with his Inclination (Mrs. Wadsworth): She said, she did not expect to be so happy; but wish'd it might be so. I engag'd to Mr. Feilding to do what I could to bring it about.——There were divers Letters pass'd between them till my Lord-Mayor's Day. Divers Presents were sent from Mr. Feilding, by me, to the Lady. The first Present was a Gold Apron, struck with Green: That was the first Present Mr. Feilding sent to Mrs. Wadsworth, whom he thought was Mrs. Deleau all the while; but it was Mrs. Wadsworth. I did not think Mrs. Deleau, who was a great Fortune, would agree to marry a Man of Mr. Feilding's Character. Mr. Feilding kept sending of Presents and Letters from that Time, from the latter End of Bartolomeu-tide, to my Lord-Mayor's Day. He sent her a Suit of white Sattin Knots, and Gloves, and other Things. He desir'd I would bring her to his Lodgings on my Lord-Mayor's Day, at Night; which I did about nine a Clock, in a Mourning Coach. Mr. Feilding was not at home, but came immediately. When he came in, he fell down upon his Knees, and kiss'd her, and express'd Abundance of fond Expressions. He asked her, why she stayed so long? And whether she loved Singing? He said, He would send for Margaretta to come up. When she came, Mr. Feilding bid her sing the two Songs which he lov'd;——which she did; The one was, Charming Creature; and the other was Ianthe the Lovely. After which, Mr. Feilding sent for two Pints of Wine, and some Plumb-Cakes. He urg'd very much to marry her; but she declin'd it, and made him a Promise to come to him the Wednesday following. In the interim she sent him a Letter, to acquaint him she could not come according to her Appointment; but she would come to him on the Friday following, which was the 9th of November. Then he sent her another Letter, to desire her not to fail, but come to his Arms; and told her, That there wanted nothing but the Holy Father to join their Happiness; for their Hearts were all one already. And when Friday came, Mrs. Wadsworth and I went to Mr. Feilding's Lodgings again: He was not within; but came running into the Room in a little Time after with a great deal of Joy, and took Mrs. Wadsworth into his Arms, and said, Nothing could ease his Mind, but a Promise to make him happy, in marrying him presently.——He said, he would fetch the Priest; but Mrs. Wadsworth refused his Proposal, and would have dissuaded him from going then; and desired him to put it off till another Time, and would have gone away. But he would not hear of it; and said, She had disappointed him before; and that he repented he had let her go away before; but now he was resolved to make her his own, before she went away. Mr. Feilding then went for the Priest, and lock'd the Chamber-Door after him, and took the Key with him, for fear Mrs. Wadsworth should go away; and order'd Boucher to let no Body into the Dining-Room till his Return. Mr. Feilding returned in a little Time, and brought a Priest with him, in a long Red Gown lin'd with Blew, and a long Beard, and a Fur Cap. Mr. Feilding told her, that this was the Holy Father that was to make them one. Mr. Feilding then ordered the Man to lay the Cloth, and fetch a Dish of Pickles to Supper.——At supper Mrs. Wadsworth seemed cautious; and for fear the Priest should not be in Orders, said, How shall I know that this is a Priest in Orders? Mr. Feilding question'd him. Then the Priest pull'd a Picture out of his Pocket, about the Bigness of a Crown-Piece; and told them, That none but Priests had such Pictures. And that she might be still further satisfied, she desired another Token.

After this, Boucher, and the rest of the Servants were order'd down Stairs. Then the Priest call'd for Water, Salt and Rosemary, to make Holy Water. Boucher brought up Water and Salt, but could get no Rosemary. Mr. Feilding and I received it at the Dining-Room Door. Then Mr. Feilding lock'd the Door, and took the Key in the Inside. Mr. Feilding ask'd Mrs. Wadsworth, Whether it should be done in the Bed-Chamber, or Dining Room? Mrs. Wadsworth agreed it should be in the Bed-Chamber. There were none present, but Mr. Feilding, Mrs. Wadsworth, the Priest, and my self. The Priest made Holy-Water, and blessed it: Then he set Mrs. Wadsworth at the right of Mr. Feilding: the Priest stood before them and read the Ceremony in Latin, as I understood; and Mrs. Wadsworth said, She was not yet satisfied he was a Priest. Then he laid down his Book, took from under his Gown a Piece of Silk like a Scarf, that was mark'd with a Cross in the middle; and said, None but Priests us'd such a Thing. Then Mrs. Wadsworth was well satisfied he was a Priest. Says Mr. Feilding to her, Do you think, my Dear, that I would have any Body to do this Business, But the Holy Father? Mrs. Wadsworth was well satisfied till he came to that Part, Wilt thou have this Woman to thy wedded Wife? She desir'd it might be spoke in English by him as well as he could. He did so. He ask'd Mr. Feilding, Whether he would have this Gentlewoman to be his wedded Wife? He said, Yes, with all my Heart. He asked the Lady then, Whether she would have this Gentleman for her Husband? She said, Yes, faintly: But says Mr. Feilding, You don't speak it so earnestly as I do: You must say, With all my Heart and Soul; which she did. Then the Priest blessed the Ring, and gave it to Mr. Feilding, to put it on the Lady's Finger. He said something in Latin, but what it was I know not. Then we went into the Dining-Room. Boucher brought up Wine; and when all had drank, the Priest was discharg'd. Mrs. Wadsworth and I went into the Bed-Chamber, and I put her to Bed. Mr. Feilding called her his Dear Wife, the Countess of Feilding; and said, He would make haste and fly to her Arms. After I put her to Bed, he went to Bed to her; and order'd me to come into the Room to see them in Bed; which I did. I rose the next Morning, and came to Mr. Feilding's Room, where Boucher came soon after to light a Fire: Then I saw Mrs. Wadsworth in naked Bed with Mr. Feilding, Mrs. Wadsworth put on her Cloaths as soon as she could; and a Hackney Coach was call'd for her, and she went away. At parting with Mr. Feilding, she told him, she did not know when she could return; but about a Fortnight after, she came again. There were Fires made in both Rooms, and Candles lighted up; clean Sheets upon the Bed, and every Thing prepared for her lying there. Mrs. Wadsworth went to Bed. Mr. Feilding did not come home till late that Night. I saw them that Night in Bed, and went into the Room the next Morning, and saw them in Bed again: She rose, and went away as before. Mr. Feilding desir'd her not to stay so long as she had done before; for if she did, he would come and fetch her. She promis'd him she would return sooner. Mr. Feilding kept sending of Letters to her between Times, which was about fifteen or sixteen Days, till she came to him again. He desired her to come to him, and he would be at home to receive her. She accordingly came to him, after having given him notice of her coming. He was not at home when she came; but She went to Supper by herself. — She had for her Supper some toasted Cheese, a Pint of Wine, and a Bottle of Oat Ale. When he came home to her, he asked her, Why she did not send for something better for Supper? They went to Bed again, as before; and I saw them in Bed together. Mrs. Wadsworth got up in the Morning;

Mr. Feilding treated her; and away she went as before. Then Mr. Feilding kept writing to her [which Letters are inserted in their proper Places] and desir'd her to come to him again, as being the last Night she should lie with him at his Lodgings; for he was going to leave his Lodgings for altogether, and be with her Grace the Duchess of Cleveland. Mrs. Wadsworth came; but neither Mr. Feilding nor Boucher were at the Lodgings: But she had not been there long, but Boucher came in, and said, That he had brought his Master's Night-Gown and Slippers from the Duchess of Cleveland's.

Council. Mrs. Villars, You say, most of the Service was in a Language you did not understand.

Mrs. Villars. It was, my Lord—But one Part of it was in English. I heard Mr. Feilding say, He would take this Lady to be his wedded Wife.

Council. Who is that Lady?

Mrs. Villars. That Lady Mrs. Wadsworth; pointing at her; (she being in Court).

Council. What did you hear Mrs. Wadsworth say?

Mrs. Villars. I heard her say, That she took Mr. Feilding to her wedded Husband.

Council. What did you observe else that was remarkable?

Mrs. Villars. I saw the Ceremony of the Ring performed. I saw the Priest bless the Ring with Holy-Water, and sign himself with the Sign of the Cross. The Priest held Mrs. Wadsworth by the lower Joint of the Finger and put the Ring on.

Council. What is Mrs. Wadsworth's Christian Name?

Mrs. Villars. Mary.

Council. What did he say further, when he said, I take thee to be my wedded Wife?

Mrs. Villars. He named no Name, but I take this Lady, &c. — The Priest ask'd him, Whether he took her with all his Heart and Soul? He said, I take her with all my Heart, and Soul, and Blood, and every thing else.

Council. What Time was this?

Mrs. Villars. It was Bartholomew-tide was Twelve-month, as near as I can remember to the Time.

Council. Did Mr. Feilding tell you he had been at Waddon?

Mrs. Villars. Yes, he did; and said, That he had seen the Lady thro' the Window, whence he fell in Love with her.

Council. Why was this Marriage kept private?

Mrs. Villars. Because Mr. Feilding took the Lady to be Mrs. Deleau.

Justice Powel. How long was it before it was discover'd?

Mrs. Villars. It was not discover'd till the latter End of May last, or the Beginning of June.

Justice Powel. When was the Time Mr. Feilding was marry'd?

Mrs. Villars. It was the 9th of November was Twelve-month.

Council. What was the Reason why the Marriage was carry'd on so privately?

Mrs. Villars. The Reason was, because Mrs. Deleau had a Father alive, who had in his Hands a Part of her Fortune; and for fear of disoblighing him, Mrs. Wadsworth, that went for Mrs. Deleau, was willing it should be kept private.

Council. Can you tell the Reason of its being discovered?

Mrs. Villars.

Mrs. Villars. Mrs. Wadsworth sent to Mr. Feilding for Money.—Then Mr. Feilding found he had not a Woman of that Fortune which he took her to be. When Mr. Feilding did find it out, he took Mrs. Streights into a Closet, at the Duchefs of Cleveland's, and sent for me there: Then Mr. Feilding wanted to have the Presents returned. Mr. Feilding then beat me, and asked me whether that was a fit Wife for him? And then took a Thing made of Steel at one end, and a Hammer at the other end; and told me, if I would not unsay what I said of his Marriage with Wadsworth, he would slit my Nose off: And that he would get two Blacks; the one should hold me upon his Back, and the other should break my Bones.

Justice Powel. One would have thought you should have been afraid to have seen Mr. Feilding.

Mrs. Villars. My Lord, It was not till then found out.

Sir Ja. Mountague. My Lord I think she hath clearly proved the Marriage; and that she saw them three times in Bed together, in the Space of six Weeks after the Marriage.

Mr. Feilding. By what Name did Mrs. Wadsworth go?

Mrs. Villars. By no Name at all.

Mr. Feilding. Did I ever appear with her in Publick?

Mrs. Villars. No, never.

Mr. Feilding. What was the first Place I saw her in?

Mrs. Villars. The first Place you saw her, was at your Lodgings, last Lord Mayor's Day, was Twelve-month.

Mr. Feilding. My Lord, I desire it may be asked her, how she came to think that I should send such mean Presents as she hath mentioned, to a Lady of Mrs. Deleau's Fortune? They were not at all suitable to Mrs. Deleau.

Justice Powel. Ay, Mrs. Villars, What say you to that? Mr. Feilding thinks it a very strange Thing, that he should send such Trifles to a Lady of Mrs. Deleau's Quality.

Mrs. Villars. He did think, at that Time, that he made his Addresses to Mrs. Deleau; and I am sure such Presents were sent; and he was really marry'd to her, and marry'd her for Mrs. Deleau.

Justice Powel. Mrs. Villars, Mr. Feilding desires this Question should be ask'd you; When was the first Time you acquainted the Duchefs of Cleveland with this Matter?

Mrs. Villars. I will tell your Lordship. Mrs. Feilding, that is now, told me, Mr. Feilding beat her at the Lodge at Whitehall (I did not see the beating) and said, she should have Occasion to bring me upon my Oath, to prove that Mr. Feilding was marry'd to her the ninth of November. I went with Mrs. Feilding to the Duke of Grafton, and told him, I was sure he was marry'd the ninth of November before.

Justice Powel. How long was it after the beating, before you and Mrs. Feilding went to the Duke of Grafton?

Mrs. Villars. It was about three Weeks.

Justice Powel. Are you sure it was before that Time that there was any Parting betwixt Mr. Feilding and the Duchefs of Cleveland.

Mrs. Villars. Mrs. Feilding acquainted me with it her self, that the beating was before the Difference between the Duchefs of Cleveland and Mr. Feilding.

Council. Altho' you did not see what pass'd at Whitehall; Whether was this before the Difference between the Duchefs and Mr. Feilding?

Mrs. Villars. I believe it was about a Fortnight or three Weeks.

Mr. Feilding. How came it to pass that it was not discovered till now of late?

Mrs. Villars. It was not discover'd till she sent to Mr. Feilding for Money, about May, after the Marriage.

Justice Powel. Why did you not apply yourself to Mr. Feilding for the Reward?

Mrs. Villars. I was to have no Reward.

Mr. Feilding. Mrs. Villars, What Reward did the Duchefs of Cleveland promise you?

Mrs. Villars. I never saw the Duchefs of Cleveland; and I was never promis'd any Reward.

Justice Powel. Was you not to have had a Reward for helping Mr. Feilding to Mrs. Deleau?

Mrs. Villars. Mrs. Streights left such word at my Lodgings; but I had no Promise of it from Mr. Feilding.

Sir Ja. Mountague. My Lord, Mrs. Villars has given you so full an Account of every Thing I have open'd, that all that we have to do now, is to support Mrs. Villars's Evidence; and to make it appear to your Lordship, that she is right in all these Particulars that she tells you of. And the better to make our selves understood, we will go on, and give your Lordship an Account how these Things were carry'd on from Time to Time. But first we shall prove to your Lordship, How that after Mr. Feilding was thus marry'd to Mrs. Wadsworth, he did actually marry the Duchefs of Cleveland.

Mr. Feilding. My Lord, I do not deny my Marriage to the Duchefs of Cleveland.

Sir Ja. Mountague. Then, my Lord, we will not trouble you with any Proof of that Matter, but go on with making out the Circumstances of his Marriage with Mrs. Wadsworth; and we shall verify, in every Particular, Mrs. Villars's Evidence. And first we shall prove, that he actually took a Copy of Mr. Deleau's Will. For that call Mr. Searle (who was sworn).

Sir James Mountague. Mr. Searle, Give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of Mr. Feilding's coming to Doctors Commons, to see the Will of Mr. Deleau.

Mr. Searle. My Lord, I am a Servant to Mr. Cottle, Proctor to the Prerogative Office. Mr. Feilding came to Doctors Commons about the Beginning of Michaelmas Term, 1705, and desired me to search, and see whether Mr. Deleau's Will was come into the Office, or no. I look'd in the Kalendar, and found it was come in; and spoke to the Clerk, in whose Possession it was, and he read it over to him; and he desired a Copy of it, which I wrote out. Mr. Feilding came in three Days after for it, but it was not done. I desir'd him to come another Time; which he did, and had it.

Council. Who did he bespeak it of?

Mr. Searle. He bespoke it of me, and had the Copy of me.

Council. When was this?

Mr. Searle. It was about the Beginning of Michaelmas Term.

Sir James Mountague. The next Thing we shall prove, is, that Mr. Feilding was actually at Wadon, Mrs. Deleau's House: And we shall prove that even by Mrs. Deleau (who was sworn).

Council.

Council. Pray, Madam, have you any Acquaintance with Mr. Feilding?

Mrs. Deleau. None at all.

Council. Do you remember he came to your House in the Country?

Mrs. Deleau. He did about Bartholomew-tide was Twelve-month.

Council. When he was there, had he a fight of you, Madam?

Mrs. Deleau. No, my Lord; he was not in the House, but in the Garden.

Council. Do you know Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Deleau. I do, my Lord.

Council. Did she ever come to you upon such a Message, That my Lady Duchess of Cleveland and Mr. Feilding had a Desire to see the Gardens?

Mrs. Deleau. She did so; and it was about the same Time Mr. Feilding had been there, or some little Time after, I believe.

Council. Did you go to the Race on Banstead Downs?

Mrs. Deleau. No, my Lord.

Council. Did Mrs. Villars use to Cut your Hair?

Mrs. Deleau. No, my Lord—Her Mistress did.

Council. Was there any Letter brought to your House from Mr. Feilding?

Mrs. Deleau. I heard there was.

Council. Who receiv'd the Letter from Mr. Feilding?

Mrs. Deleau. Some of the Servants, but I receiv'd none; but some of the Servants receiv'd it. I was then at my Father's, and left Orders that they should take in no Letters but such as came from my Relations, which would come by themselves.

Council. When had you Notice of Mr. Feilding's being at your House?

Mrs. Deleau. My own Butler came up, and acquainted me Mr. Feilding was below. He came to my House with the Character of Major General Villars. I did not see him; but here's the Lady that saw him out of the Window; who, it seems, he took for my self.

(That Lady sworn.)

Council. My Lord, we only bring this Lady to prove what the first Witnesses said, That Mr. Feilding saw Mrs. Deleau thro' a Window—Madam, Do you remember Mr. Feilding was at Waddon, and when?

Lady. He was there about Bartholomew-tide was Twelve-month. I did see him thro' a Window, and inform'd my Cousin of it.

Council. Then call Mr. Boucher (who was sworn).

Council. Mr. Boucher, Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of all you know of this Matter.

Mr. Boucher. My Lord, I went with Mr. Feilding to my Lord-Mayor's Show last Lord-Mayors Day was Twelve-month. He went in his Chariot to Mr. Feilding's a Linnen-Drapers at the Three-Legs in Cheapside. I looked into the Balcony and saw Mrs. Villars there—My Master came down again, and went to Sir Basil Firebrass's; from thence I was order'd to go home, and meet my Master in Bond-Street; which I did. He ask'd me whether any body had been at his Lodgings to enquire for him? I said, no, and went home again. Then I found the Lady and Mrs. Villars at Mr. Feilding's Lodgings. They had been there but a little time, but Mr. Feilding came in. Mr. Feilding complemented the Lady, and ask'd her if she lov'd Singing? Mrs. Margaretta was sent for, and accommodated this Lady and Mrs. Villars with two Songs. Mr. Feilding treated them with a Bottle of Wine and a Plumb Cake—Margaretta went away; and soon after Mrs. Villars and this Lady went away. So, says Mrs. Heath afterwards to me, Do you know what Woman of Quality that is in the Coach? This Mrs. Heath is the Landlady where Mr. Feilding lodged. Mrs. Villars and the Lady went away in a Coach. She was in a Mourning-Dress, and the Coach was a Mourning Coach.

Council. What Time was this?

Mr. Boucher. It was my Lord-Mayor's Day was Twelve-month, on the twenty ninth of October.

Council. Well, go on, and tell what you know of the Marriage.

Mr. Boucher. Not long after this, my Master order'd me to be at home, to get clean Sheets for the Bed, Wax-Candles, and Sconces, and Fires in both the Rooms: He told me some Ladies would be there that Night; and order'd if he was not at home when they came, to tell them, that he would be there presently. Accordingly they came, and he was not at home; but in a little Time he came and went up to them. Some time after that, he came down Stairs in great Hast, and said, Boucher, go and bespeak a Dish of Pickles. I did so; and brought over a Cloth, and the rest of the Things, and left them in the Window. I stay'd by the Stairs till he came back in a Hackney-Coach, with a Priest along with him in a long Gown, and long Beard, and a Furr-Cap; I knew him to belong to the Emperor's Envoy; and I heard Mr. Feilding call him Reverend Father. Then I was order'd to set the Table and Glasses, and Wine, and Things of that kind, upon the Side-board. I waited at Table all the while. When Supper was over, Mr. Feilding order'd me to go down and fetch Water, Salt, and Rosemary, I went and got Water and Salt, but could get no Rosemary. Then I was order'd to go down, and they were lock'd in about three quarters of an Hour: He then call'd, Boucher, says he, will you fill some Wine?—I did so, and perceiv'd upon the Thumb of this Lady, upon her Left Hand, a plain Gold Ring, which before Supper she had not. When this was over, the Priest went away. Presently after, says Mr. Feilding, take the Sheets from my Bed, and lay them on the other Bed, for Mrs. Villars; and see that none lie there. I told my Master 'twas done. Mrs. Villars, in the mean time, put the Lady to Bed. When I came down to tell them of it, I saw the Lady's Clothes upon a Stool in the Chamber; and Mrs. Villars folding them up, and laying them in another Room. I then light Mrs. Villars to Bed, and then went to Bed my self. In the Morning I was call'd to make a Fire; I then perceiv'd Mr. Feilding and this Lady in Bed together. The Fire being made, I was order'd to get a Hackney-Coach. Mrs. Villars dress'd the Lady hastily, and she was carried away in the Hackney-Coach. About a Fortnight after, Mr. Feilding order'd me to prepare the Lodgings again. This Lady came to my Master's Lodgings That Night, and had something for Supper; my Master order'd me to get ready Mrs. Villars's Bed: I did so. In the Morning was called down to make a Fire, which I did: the Curtains being open next the Fire, I perceiv'd them in Bed again. I was order'd to get a Hackney-Coach, which I did; and they went away again. This was about the Twenty fifth of November. Soon after this, I understood by some of the Duchess of Cleveland's Servants, that Mr. Feilding was marry'd to my Lady Duchefs. At the same time Mr. Feilding ordered me to go to Mrs. Heath's to bring his Night-Gown, Cap and Slippers to the Duchefs of Cleveland's House, and to attend the next Morning with clean Linnen, his Wig, &c. And about, or on the Fifth of December, says he, Boucher get my Lodgings in Order again, for I expect Mrs. Villars and the Lady to be there; which accordingly I did. I was sent from the Duchefs of Cleveland's with his Night-Gown, Cap and Slippers. Mrs. Villars and the Lady came accordingly that Night, and had a beil'd Chicken for Supper. Mr. Feilding and the Lady lay together that Night; and in the Morning I saw them in Bed together; and when she got up, she went away again in a Hackney-Coach. That was the last time I saw the Lady in Mr. Feilding's Lodgings.

Council. Were you at Epsom with Mr. Feilding?

Mr. Boucher. I was there with him, and went to Waddon with him to Mrs. Delean's. Mr. Feilding went into the Gardens and walk'd in them.

Mr. Feilding. I would ask you, Boucher, whether the Priest that came in a Red Gown lin'd with Blue, whether you did not sometimes see him dine at the Duchefs of Cleveland's House?

Mr. Boucher. I did see him there, I cannot say often; but once I am sure I did.

Justice Powel. Was it not that Priest that was there that Night upon which Mr. Feilding was suppos'd to be married, at the Duchefs of Cleveland's.

Mr. Boucher. I saw him there once.

Justice Powel. Was it before or after that suppos'd Marriage?

Mr. Boucher. I cannot be positive whether it was before or after.

Mr. Feilding. Whose Servant are you at this time?

Mr. Boucher. I am now Cook to Coll. Webb's Regiment.

Mr. Feilding. How came you here?

Mr. Boucher. My Master desir'd me to go to the Duke of Grafton's House, where his Grace told me I was to justify the Truth of what I knew of Mr. Feilding's Marriage; that's all. I was sent for to England by my Master.

Mr. Feilding. I desire to know whether he did not only make Mrs. Villars's Bed, but lie with her likewise?

Council. Call Mrs. Martin (who was sworn).

Sir Ja. Montague. Mrs. Martin, Will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Martin. I know Mrs. Villars.

Council. What do you know of her, and of any Body else coming to your Sister's House after Mr. Feilding?

Mrs. Martin. The next Day after the Lodgings were taken, Mrs. Villars came and ask'd for the Major-General, and continued coming almost every Day as long as he was at our House.

Council. What time did Mr. Feilding come first to your House?

Mrs. Martin. It was the beginning of October was Twelve-month.

Council. Did you ever see any other Gentlewoman come with her?

Mrs. Martin. My Lord, on my Lord-Mayor's Day at Night I saw Mrs. Villars come in, and another Gentlewoman with her.

Council. Did you see the Coach they came in?

Mrs. Martin. There are others that saw the Mourning-Coach.

VOL. V.

Council. What time was this?

Mrs. Martin. It was my-Lord Mayor's Day at Night.

Council. Where do you live?

Mrs. Martin. At Mrs. Heath's, my Sister's in Pall-Mall, at that time.

Council. Did Mrs. Villars and the Lady continue there all Night?

Mrs. Martin. No, they did not.

Council. Was there any Body came in afterwards?

Mrs. Martin. I did not see any Body.

Council. How long did they continue in your Sister's Lodgings that Night?

Mrs. Martin. I cannot tell.

Council. Did you see them there again?

Mrs. Martin. The second time was about November.

Council. Who came then?

Mrs. Martin. I did not see them come in; but Mrs. Villars came into the Parlour, and said, that there was the same Lady that had been there the Night before.

Council. Did they stay then that Night?

Mrs. Martin. I believe they stay'd there that Night.

Council. Did you see them go away in the Morning?

Mrs. Martin. I did not see them in the Morning.

Council. Did you ever see any Body come at them whilst they were there in an extraordinary Habit, a Red Gown, &c.?

Mrs. Martin. There was a tall Man knock'd at the Door in a long Gown, Blew Facing, and Furr-Cap, with a long Beard. He was conducted to the Major-General's, up Stairs.

Council. Do you remember the Supper that Night?

Mrs. Martin. I remember a Dish of Pickles.

Council. How long did the Gentleman in Red stay?

Mrs. Martin. I know not; I did not see him go away again.

Council. Do you remember that the Lady and Mrs. Villars, with a Gentleman in Red, and Mr. Feilding were together?

Mrs. Martin. I remember when they were together, Boucher was sent down.

Council. Do you remember any Bed got ready?

Mrs. Martin. I remember that Orders was given to his Servant to make ready a Bed, and to put on clean Sheets.

Justice Powel. Do you believe there was any Marriage that Night?

Mrs. Martin. I do not know any thing of the Marriage.

Council. Then call Mrs. Heath (who was sworn).

Sir Ja. Montague. Mrs. Heath, give an Account what time Major-General Feilding came to take Lodgings at your House.

Mrs. Heath. About the beginning of October last was a Twelve-month.

Council. Do you remember that one Mrs. Villars came to see him there?

Mrs. Heath. Yes, frequently, my Lord, she has been in my Parlour, and told me there frequently, that she came from a Lady of Quality.

Council. Did you ever see this Lady?

Mrs. Heath. I never saw her, my Family being retired from Lodgers.

Council. What Discourse did you hear from Boucher?

K k k k

Mrs. Heath.

Mrs. Heath. He said that a Woman of Quality was there, and that she came there two or three Times with Mrs. Villars.

Council. What Time did you hear of that Lady's being there first?

Mrs. Heath. On my Lord-Mayor's Day; for I dined in the City, and when I came home, my Family acquainted me with it. Mrs. Villars came down to me one Night, which was the Night the Man in Red was there, but I did not see him.

Sir Ja. Mountague. Do you know of their staying there all Night?

Mrs. Heath. Mrs. Villars came to me, and said that her Lady was a Person of Quality worth 80000*l*. she shewed me a little Picture, which she said was her Lady's Picture: That Night she came to me, and desired that the Lady and she might lie in a Room up two Pair of Stairs; for they had stay'd late, and did not care to go home. I disputed it, but she said we should have no trouble, for Boucher should make the Bed, and the General's Sheets should serve them.

Council. Do you remember at any Time after that, that Mr. Feilding came to you, and rail'd against Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Heath. He did come to my House, after he had discharged my Lodgings, and he told me that Mrs. Villars was a very bad Woman; and that she imposed a Woman of the Town upon him for a Woman of Quality.

Council. What Time was it that Mr. Feilding told you so?

Mrs. Heath. It was two or Three Months ago, but I don't well remember the Time; says he, Damner, I do not know how she contrived it, but I saw her at a Woman of Quality's House in the Country. He said this at that Time.

Council. Let's hear it again.

Mrs. Heath. Mr. Feilding told me, That Mrs. Villars was a Bitch, and had imposed a base Woman upon him, instead of a Woman of Quality. He said likewise, That he thought he saw the Lady look out of a Window of a Person of Quality's House in the Country.

Justice Powel. Mrs. Heath, Did you ever hear or believe that they were married?

Mrs. Heath. I did not believe it a Marriage, but a Conversion; because his Man came down into the Parlour, and asked for Salt and Water and Rosemary; which occasioned these Words, Lord, said I, I fancy they are making a Convert of this Woman; because they said it was a Priest above. And his Man at that Time said, there was a Priest above.

Mr. Feilding. Did my Man, at that Time, tell you I was married to that Woman, or any Time else?

Mrs. Heath. Nothing, my Lord; no body told me Mr. Feilding was married at that Time.

Council. Then call Mrs. Margaretta (who was sworn).

Mrs. Margaretta. My Lord, I remember that Mr. Feilding sent for me to his Lodgings in Pall-Mall; I was sent for in the Evening, but I can't tell how long it was before he was married to my Lady Duchels.

Council. What Company was there in the Room at that Time?

Mrs. Margaretta. I cannot tell.

Council. What were the Songs you sung?

Mrs. Margaretta. I sung several Italian Songs, and one English, and that was Iantbe the lovely.

Council. Who was then in the Room?

Mrs. Margaretta. No body was there then, as I remember, but the Gentlewoman, Mr. Feilding and I.

Council. What sort of Woman was this you speak of?

Mrs. Margaretta. She was in Mourning; she had a Velvet-Scarf. I never heard her speak, for he desired me to sing that Song, Iantbe the lovely; for he said he had the Original of it, and had translated it out of Greek.

Justice Powel. Were you then more than once at Mr. Feilding's Lodgings?

Mrs. Margaretta. But once; and I saw no more there than the Gentlewoman that sat by the Fire with her Back towards me. But I did not see her Face, nor hear her speak.

Justice Powel. What Time was it?

Mrs. Margaretta. I cannot tell justly the Time; it was dirty Weather and dark: I believe it might be about Six a Clock, but am not sure.

Mr. Feilding. My Lord, she says there was but one Woman there: Mrs. Villars was not there.

Justice Powel. Name the Persons that were there.

Mrs. Margaretta. There was that Gentlewoman in Mourning, whose Name I do not know, Mr. Feilding, and my self; there was no body else that I saw; and no body could be there, but I must see them, for I was Mistress of all the Doors.

Justice Powel. Did Mr. Feilding pretend it was to entertain his Wife?

Mrs. Margaretta. No; he desired me to come to him, and left a Direction at my Lodgings, and said there were some People of Quality there; and when I came I saw none but the Lady that sat by the Fire.

Council. Then call Mrs. Price (who was sworn).

Council. Mrs. Price, do you live at Mrs. Heath's House?

Mrs. Price. I do.

Council. Give an Account to my Lord of the Mourning-Coach coming to Mr. Feilding's Lodgings on Lord-Mayor's Day was Twelve-month.

Mrs. Price. I saw a Mourning Coach come to Mr. Feilding's Lodgings at Mrs. Heath's House, but did not see the Ladies come out of it; two Ladies were lighted into Mr. Feilding's Lodgings, Mrs. Villars and another; and Mrs. Villars followed the other Lady up Stairs, and immediately Mrs. Villars came down, and ask'd for the General: Boucher in the mean Time came in, and told them he would be there presently. Accordingly he came. They continued some Time, and when they were gone, the Coach was gone.

Council. Was Mrs. Margaretta there?

Mrs. Price. I did not see her.

Council. Do you know of any other Time of their coming there?

Mrs. Price. Some time after my Lord Mayor's Day, this Gentlewoman and Mrs. Villars came again; at the same Time Mrs. Martin told me she let in a Gentleman in Red, in an Armenian Habit; but I cannot tell what he came there for; I think his Man Boucher said he was a Priest.

Council. Whilst the Priest was there, do you remember Boucher's coming down for any remarkable Thing?

Mrs. Price. I remember Boucher came down, but do not remember what he came down for.

Council. How long did they stay the second Time?

Mrs. Price.

Mrs. Price. They staid there all Night; there were clean Sheets put on the Bed, and Lodgings prepared for the Lady and Mrs. Villars.

Council. Do you know Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Price. I did know Mrs. Villars by her coming to Mr. Feilding.

Justice Powel. Do you know what Reputation Mrs. Villars has?

Mrs. Price. I do not, my Lord.

Mrs. Heath called again.

Mrs. Heath. My Lord, I never had any Acquaintance with Mrs. Villars, no more than by her coming to the Major General. One Mrs. Howard came with her, and she has told me that she was a Woman of no Reputation, and that she was a Singer too, my Lord.

Council. Then call Thomas Sone (who was sworn).

Council. What do you know of Mr. Fielding's buying a Ring of you? Give us an Account of it?

Mr. Sone. I know Mr. Feilding, by Sight; he bought a Gold Ring of me, but I cannot remember the Time.

Council. How long ago do you think it is?

Mr. Sone. I believe it may be a Year ago.

Council. Was there any Pofy in it?

Mr. Sone. Yes, I grav'd a Pofy whilst he took a turn in the Alley: The Pofy was by his Direction (Tibi Soli).

Council. Who did you deliver this Ring to?

Mr. Sone. I sold it out of my Glafs to Mr. Feilding.

Council. Swear Mr. Wilkins. (He was sworn.)

Council. What do you know of Mr. Fielding's buying a Ring of Mr. Sone? The Time when this Ring was bought?

Mr. Wilkins. It is about a Year and Two Months ago; I was by when the Gentleman gave Direction for it; and I saw him write down (Tibi Soli).

Council. Then swear the Register of Doctors-Commons.

The Register of Doctors-Commons sworn.

Council. Shew the Register the Ring.

Register. My Lord this Ring was brought by my Lady Ducheſs's Proctor with the Letters.

The Ring produced, and shewn to Mr Sone the Goldsmith, who deposed, That that was the Ring which he made for Mr. Feilding; and the Pofy the same which Mr. Feilding directed.

Council. How do you know it to be the same which you sold to Mr. Feilding?

Mr. Sone. I know it to be the same by my Mark and Work.

Mr. Cooke, Proctor, sworn.

Mr. Cooke. My Lord, there was a Ring brought, it is the same that was exhibited in Court, and the Ring was brought first of all by the Lady, Mrs. Feilding; it was afterwards in the Custody of my Brother; my Brother brought it to me, and I delivered it to the Register, and believe it to be the same Ring by the Pofy (Tibi Soli).

Council. Now, my Lord, we shall prove Mr. Fielding's coming to Count Gallas's for a Priest.

Call Constantine Pozzy (who was sworn).

Council. Where do you live?

Pozzy. I am a Servant to the Emperor's Envoy.

Council. Do you know Mr. Feilding?

Pozzy. I know General Feilding by Sight; I remember one Night he came and asked for the Father in Red? I told him that he was not within;

then he ask'd for Count Gallas's Almoner (meaning Father Vanderber, his Lordship's first Chaplain) but he happened not to be within neither. I told him that Father Florence, one of the Chaplains was within. Then said Mr. Feilding call him to me; I did so. Upon which Mr. Feilding gave me Half a Crown. Mr. Florence came immediately to Mr. Feilding.

Council. Was there a Priest at that Time in Red that had a long Beard?

Pozzy. My Lord had such a Priest then; after Mr. Florence and Mr. Feilding had been discoursing some Time in the Hall together, Mr. Florence went up Stairs to Count Gallas; whilst Mr. Florence was up Stairs, the Father in Red came in; I saw Mr. Feilding and the Father in Red go away together in the Hackney-Coach before Mr. Florence came down.

Council. What Time was this?

Pozzy. It was in November, the beginning of it.

Council. Did you hear what Mr. Fielding and Mr. Florence did discourse of?

Pozzy. No, nothing.

Council. Then swear Mr. Florence (who was sworn).

Council. Give my Lord and the Jury, an Account of what you know of Mr. Fielding's coming to you.

Mr. Florence. I have seen Mr. Feilding.

Council. Upon what Occasion had you any Discourse with him?

Mr. Florence. It was on Friday Night, Post-Night, about the beginning of November, Constantine Pozzy came under my Chamber-Window, called to me and said, Here is Major General Feilding, he wants one of the Chaplains, he desires to speak with you. I went to him immediately, and introduced him into the Hall. The Major General spoke to me in French. Sir, says he, I come here to look for the Father in Red; but I understand he is not at home; you will do as well, be pleased to go along with me. He told me he had courted a young Lady for some Time, and now found her well disposed, and therefore desired me to go along with him to marry them. I understood there had been some Treatment between him and the Duchefs of Cleveland, and therefore I ask'd him whether it were to the Duchefs; He did not inform me. I told him I did not care to do any Thing out of the House; and desired him to let me ask my Lord; says he, give my Service to Count Gallas and tell him. I went up to him and spoke to him, and told him the Business Mr. Feilding came about. He bid me, says he, What you do, do it wisely. When I came down Mr. Feilding was gone, I was told that the Gentleman in Red came in, and that Mr. Feilding and he were gone away together.

Council. That which he would have you to do, was to have married him with a certain Lady, was it not?

Mr. Florence. It was so.

Council. What Time was that?

Mr. Florence. It was upon Friday, I am sure.

Council. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Feilding after this?

Mr. Florence. The next Sunday after this, says he, I give you many Thanks for the last Favour. I knew of no other Favour I did him but this.

Council. Then call Matthew Paul (who was sworn).

K k k k 2

Council.

Council. Do you give my Lord and the Jury an account of Mr. Feilding's beating a Gentlewoman; and if any Marriage was claimed at that Time by a Gentlewoman.

Paul. Mr. Feilding came to Whiteball-Gate in a Chariot; he litt out of it. There was a Hackney Coach brought two Women; one of these Women got out of the Coach, and came up to Mr. Feilding: Mr. Feilding call'd her Bitch; the Lady call'd him Rogue, and said she was his lawful Wife; at that Mr. Feilding having a Stick, he punch'd it at her; it happen'd upon her Mouth, and made her Teeth bleed. He order'd the Centry to keep her till he was gone, and he would give 'em a Crown. She said, as I told you before, that she was his lawful Wife, and for that Reason they did not care to meddle with her.

Council. Sir, Do you know what Time this was?

Paul. I cannot justly tell: It was as near as I can judge, about the latter end of May.

Council. Pray call Mrs. Feilding, and let the Witnefs see if he knows the Woman again that he saw Mr. Feilding beat.

Mrs. Feilding called into Court.

Council. Is this the Woman you saw?

Paul. This is the Woman, my Lord, I really believe.

Council. Then swear Mr. Seymour (who was sworn).

Council. Do you know Mr. Feilding?

Mr. Seymour. Yes, Sir.

Council. Do you remember his beating any Woman at Whiteball-Gate?

Mr. Seymour. Yes, Sir.

Council. What Time was it?

Mr. Seymour. It was in the last Summer, but I cannot be positive to the Time.

Council. Do you know the Gentlewoman when you see her?

Mr. Seymour. Yes, I do; that's the Gentlewoman (pointing to Mrs. Feilding) I am sure of it.

Council. What did she say to Mr. Feilding?

Mr. Seymour. She said to him, you are a Rogue, I am your lawful Wife.

Council. Then swear Captain Eaton (who was sworn).

Council. Captain, do you know any Thing of Mr. Feilding's beating a Woman?

Captain Eaton. I was at the King's Arms Tavern, and whilst I was there, the Drawer came to me, and told me there was two Women would speak with me; this Woman (pointing at Mrs. Feilding) and another, whom she call'd Mother. She told me she was married to Mr. Feilding, before he was married to my Lady Ducheſs, and desired me to acquaint my Lord Duke of Northumberland with it, that the Ducheſs of Cleveland might know of it: I told her I did not design to concern myself about it. See told me she had been much abused by him.

Council. What Time was this?

Captain Eaton. It was some time before the 18th of August; it was the latter End of June or beginning of July.

Council. Was it before the Difference between Mr. Feilding and my Lady Ducheſs?

Captain Eaton. It was before that Time.

Council. Now we shall produce Mr. Feilding's own Letters, where under his Hand your Lordship will find he took Mrs. Wadsworth, for Madam Delean.

Divers Letters produced in Court.

Council. Call Mr. Lilley. (He appears).

Council. Do you know these Letters to be Mr. Feilding's Hand-Writing?

Mr. Lilley. I am a Stranger to his Hand. Boucher call'd.

Council. Can you read and write?

Boucher. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Council. Do you know these Letters to be Mr. Feilding's Hand-Writing?

Boucher. This is his Hand, I believe. I have seen him write an hundred Times; I have had the Curiosity to observe his Hand, and this is his own Writing.

Council. Then swear Frances Beale (who was sworn).

Council. Do you know Mr. Feilding's Hand-Writing?

Beale. I do my Lord.

Council. Do you know that Letter to be his Hand?

Beale. I have seen him write several Times, and believe it to be his Hand.

Council. Now, my Lord, we will beg the Favour to read these Letters, and first of all, one directed

To the Countess of Feilding.

Sunday Night.

I Hope my Dearest Wife will easily believe that nothing can be Welcomer to me than the Assurance of her Health; but as I received hers but this Day, I could not have the Felicity of seeing her to Morrow, and she have notice of it; therefore if she thinks fit on Thursday next at Four a-Clock, I will see her at Puggy's, and there endeavour to repair this tedious Absence.

Eternally Your own, Feilding.

Another Letter proved to be his Hand by Boucher and Beale:

To my Dearest Wife, the Countess of Feilding.

Friday.

I Had return'd my Dear Wife's Favour long before now, but my Lady Ducheſs's Sickness on one hand, and more than ordinary Business (of which I will give my Dear a particular Account) on the other hand, has not given me a Moment of Time to write to my Love. Puggy brings you the Set of Knots you desir'd, and the Pattern of the Damask; or if my dearest Life wants any Thing else, she may with Pleasure command it; for I am never so well pleased as when employ'd by my Dearest Wife, and must be ever her affectionate Husband, till Death,

Feilding.

Another Letter proved by Boucher and Beale.

Nov. 27. 1705.

THE last Letter I had from my dearest Wife has mortified me much, finding, that notwithstanding all my Kindnesses, she taxes me with Coldness in my Letters, which I call Heaven to witness I never in the least intended; and beg my Dearest to give me some Warning before she taxes me of Unkindness. Puggy tells me that my Dear designs to come to Town to Morrow, which I hope she will put off till another Day, because I am obliged to be at her Grace's to morrow all the Afternoon, and till late at Night; but any other Day my Dear shall find she is always welcome to the Arms

Arms of him who loves her more than Life it self; and I shall never fail of giving her fresh Proofs that I am,
Her loving and affectionate Husband,
Feilding.

Justice Powel. It is plain it is his Hand; and that he wrote to one whom he terms his Wife.

Council. Do you know these Letters to be writ by Mr. Feilding and sent to his Wife?

Mrs. Villars. I have seen them before, and I believe them to be Mr. Feilding's Hand. I saw Mr. Feilding write them, as well as I can see by my Eyes; and when he had writ them, he deliver'd them into my Hands, and order'd me to deliver them to his dear Wife.

Council. What does he mean by Puggy in his Letters? Who is Puggy?

Mrs. Villars. He us'd to call me Puggy.

Council. My Lord, we have done for the present (having proved clearly his Marriage with this Woman) without Mr. Feilding denies his Marriage to the Duchefs of Cleveland.

Mr. Feilding. My Lord, I own my Marriage with the Duchefs of Cleveland.

Justice Powel. Mr. Feilding, You have heard from the Evidence that hath been given against you, That you were married to another Woman, before you were married to the Duchefs of Cleveland: And now is the Time to make your Defence.

Mr. Feilding. All the Evidence against me, consists in what Mrs. Villars hath said: She is the only Evidence that swears positively to this Fact; the rest are very inconsistent with themselves. I beg of your Lordship in a Case so nice as this is, where my Honour and Reputation, and every thing that is dear lies at State, that the Evidence in this Cause may be clear and positive. Mrs. Villars (my Lord) hath forsworn herself; 1. In that she swears she cut Mrs. Deleau's Hair: Mrs. Deleau takes notice, that she never cut it. And as to her Reputation, it's so bad, that when our Witnesses are heard, I hope your Lordship will see little Reason to believe any thing she says to be true. My Lord, we will prove, that she hath been in Custody of a Master of Bridewel; that there she hath received the Correction of the House; therefore I think she is not fit to appear as Evidence in this Court. She swears, that the Singing-Woman was at the Marriage; but it appears she was not, for the Singing-Woman contradicts it. And as to this Mrs. Wadsworth, who they set up, she was married to another Man, one Bradby.

Justice Powel. I must deal plainly with you, Mr. Feilding, from the Proof: I cannot speak of Mrs. Villars's Credit, for she is an ill Woman (no doubt) from her own Evidence, in that she put a false Woman upon you: But her Evidence is well supported by Circumstances of Time and Place; and all of them put together bid fair for a Proof, that you were married to this Woman. You may call what Witnesses you please to Mrs. Villars's Reputation, and they may be heard. No Woman of Reputation will bring a mean Woman to a Man, instead of a Person of Quality. I think you say, Mrs. Wadsworth was married to another Man at the same Time: Indeed that will be to the Purpose, if you can make it out.

Mr. Feilding. My Lord, I can: She was married to another Husband, one Bradby. Call Elizabeth Basset (who was sworn).

Justice Powel. Do you call this Woman to be Witnesses to the Marriage?

Mr. Feilding. My Lord, I do.

Justice Powel. Do you know Mrs. Wadsworth?

Mrs. Basset. My Lord, I do not know her from another Woman; but there was a certain Woman, two or three Months ago, came to take a Name out of the Register-Book.

Council. What Register do you speak of?

Mrs. Basset. The Register of Marriages in the Fleet.

Council. Who keeps that Book?

Mrs. Basset. I keep it at present: My Father-in-Law is the Keeper of them; but he is sick, and therefore he hath left them in my Charge.

Council. Where is your Father?

Mrs. Basset. He is not able to appear.

Council. Do you keep them in your Custody?

Mrs. Basset. Yes, I do.

Council. Does nobody else come at them but your self?

Mrs. Basset. No, not this Twelve-month; since they have been in my keeping.

Council. Who then makes the Entries?

Mrs. Basset. These were my Father's Books when he was in Health.

Council. What can you say of this Woman;

Mrs. Basset. I do not know her. But some time ago there was a Woman came to my House: She told me, she wanted to speak with Mr. Basset. I told her she could not speak with him. She pressed to speak with him: But when I told her he was ill, and could not be spoken with; says she to me, Here is a Marriage in your Book of one Lilly Bradby and Mary Wadsworth. Says she to me, If you'll put it out of your Book, I'll give you a Piece of Money.

Council. Is this the Woman that made you this Offer?

Mrs. Basset. I will not swear to the Woman: I never saw her but that one Time, my Lord, I am not positive in the Matter; but I believe it is.

The Certificate of the Marriage read.

Lilly Bradby marry'd to Mary Wadsworth, the 28th of October 1703. The Man of St. James's, the Woman of St. Margaret's Westminster.

Justice Powel. Who us'd to write down the Certificates in the Register-Book?

Mrs. Basset. Several People, my Lord, we hir'd to do it.

(The Place of the Register shewn Mrs. Basset.)

Council. Have not you yourself look'd upon this Place now given as Evidence?

Mrs. Basset. Yes, I have.

Council. Whose Hand is that? (Pointing to the Certificate.)

Mrs. Basset. It is my Father-in-Law's: He that was Clerk of the Fleet.

Council. Is the whole Leaf of his Hand-writing?

Mrs. Basset. I cannot tell.

Justice Powel. Can you read Writing?

Mrs. Basset. Yes, my Lord.

(The Certificate view'd by the Court, and prov'd to be a different Hand from the rest.)

Council. There are Hands various in this Book.
Mrs. Basset.

Mrs. Basset. My Husband's Brother us'd to make Entries sometimes.

Sir James Mountague. Does your Husband's Brother use only to make Entries at the latter end of the Book?

Mrs. Basset. I don't know.

Council. Do you know when the Entry was made?

Mrs. Basset. I do not know when the Entry was made.

Council. Do you remember, that there were any Gentlemen with you to examine the Book?

Mrs. Basset. Yes, Sir, there were.

Council. Did you shew them this very Book?

Mrs. Basset. I did not; because Mrs. Wadsworth said there would be some trouble about it.

Council. Have you several Registers at the same Time?

Mrs. Basset. Yes, there are several Ministers, and therefore are Entries made in several Books.

Council. Why were you so friendly to Mrs. Wadsworth; when the Gentlemen came to examine the Book for this Register, and you shew'd them other Books instead of this?

Mrs. Basset. I did not shew them that, because Mrs. Wadsworth desired me.

Council. What did Mrs. Wadsworth give you?

Mrs. Basset. She gave me nothing. I will not say it was Mrs. Wadsworth.

Council. Do you remember you shew'd any Books to these Gentlemen, where there were Marriages registred in 1703?

Mrs. Basset. The Book is at Home in my House.

Council. Do you keep two Books for the Register of Marriages, for one and the same Year and Time?

Mrs. Basset. There are several Books; and we enter sometimes in one, and sometimes in another; by reason that there are several Ministers, and each hath his particular Book.

Council. Did the Gentlemen ask you at that Time, whether there were more Books of Marriages?

Mrs. Basset. I do not remember.

Council. How many Books have you of that Year?

Mrs. Basset. But Two.

Council. Did you shew them any false Book? That is, Did you shew them a false Register of Marriages for a true one?

Mrs. Basset. I know nothing of that.

Mr. Feilding. Call Mrs. Drinkwater (who was sworn).

Justice Powel. Do you know Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I have known her above a Year.

Justice Powel. What is her Character and Reputation?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I know nothing of that — But I know so far of her, That she said she was married to Colonel Feilding on the fifth of November: She accordingly gave it out that she was with Child by him. And that she told me, that the Duchess of Cleveland proffer'd to give her 200 l. and 100 l. a Year, for fifteen Years, if she would prove a Marriage with Mr. Feilding: But that she would do more for Mr. Feilding for 40 l. than she would for the Duchess of Cleveland for a much greater Sum. And said, it was purely Want, that made her comply with my Lady Duchess's Desire. I have read all the Letters between Mrs.

Villars and the Colonel; and I never heard of any Marriage between Mrs. Bradby and Mr. Feilding, but between Mr. Feilding and Mrs. Villars.

Council. When was this Discourse between you and Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I cannot tell exactly the Day; but the Time they were marry'd was the fifth of November was Twelve-month, as she said.

Sir Ja. Mountague. You pretend to say, she said, That if Mr. Feilding gave her 40 l. she would do more for him, than she would do for a greater Sum from my Lady Duchess. How long was this ago when she said this?

Mrs. Drinkwater. It was about three Months, or better.

Council. Where was this Discourse pray?

Mrs. Drinkwater. It was at her Lodgings, when she lodged at the Back-side of Red-Lion Square, at a Widow Gentlewoman's House.

Council. How came you to be there when this Discourse was?

Mrs. Drinkwater. She, some Time before, gave me an Invitation to her Lodgings; and I went to give her a Visit, and then this Discourse happen'd.

Council. Who was by then?

Mrs. Drinkwater. None but I and She. She said it was Want and Necessity, that made her act after this manner.

Mr. Feilding. Did she not send for you, to tell you she was going to forswear herself?

Mrs. Drinkwater. She talk'd of it first.

Council. When did you tell the Colonel of it?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I do not know justly the Time.

Council. How long have you been acquainted with Colonel Feilding?

Mrs. Drinkwater. Not but since this Thing happen'd. I never had any further Conversation with him, than to speak in her Behalf to him. But I have this further to say, that an Outlandish Man came to me about a Fortnight's Distance, and said, If I could do any thing on the Behalf of the Duchess of Cleveland, it would be a considerable Sum of Money in my way.

Council. Where do you live yourself?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I live in the same House where Mrs. Villars lodged: I am a Servant to one Captain Howard: My Master is now in the Service.

Council. Who lives in the Family?

Mrs. Drinkwater. We have none but a Footman and my Master.

Mr. Feilding. Call Mrs. English (who was sworn).

Justice Powel. What have you to say?

Mrs. English. My Lord, I went down to Mrs. Villars's Lodging the Morrow after last Valentine's Day, for some Money; for I washed for her. Says she, I have none at present. She told me, she would send to her Spouse for some. A Gentleman came in and said, I have none for you: Says he, my Master says, If a Crown will do, he will send it you out of Charity; but he cannot supply your Extravagances. On the fifth of November (she said) she was marry'd to Mr. Feilding; and she said, she would have Money from Mr. Feilding, or she would send her Soul to the Devil.

Mr. Feilding. Call Mrs. Fletcher (who was sworn). Give my Lord an account of what you know of Mrs. Villars.

Mrs. Fletcher. All I know of her and Mrs. Bradby is, Mrs. Villars lived with me a Twelve-month. She told me she had had two Bastards; one one by my Lord Torrington, the other by my Lord Stamford.

Justice Powel. How long was this ago, that she was at your House for a Twelve-month?

Mrs. Fletcher. It was about four Years ago. She confes'd she had had two Bastard-Children; and that she had been in Bridewel. I have nothing more than from her own Tongue, that she was a very infamous Woman.

Sir Ja. Mountague. Mistress, How long have you been acquainted with Mrs. Villars?

Mrs. Fletcher. She was recommended to me by one in the Court, and by her good Behaviour.

Sir Ja. Mountague. Would you have a Correspondence with a Woman that had two Bastards? Pray what is your way of Living in the World?

Mrs. Fletcher. My Husband is a broken Mercer; he allows me 20l. a Year.

Council. What Vocation are you of?

Mrs. Fletcher. I drive little Trade, but work Plain-Work.

Sir Ja. Mountague. You are acquainted with Mr. Feilding; are you not?

Mrs. Fletcher. I know him.

Council. How long have you known him?

Mrs. Fletcher. About three or four Years.

Council. You would not scruple to assist Mr. Feilding, if he wanted a fair Lady. Look upon that Letter, and see whether it be your Hand-Writing, or no?

[Then a Letter was shewn her.]

Mr. Longford. If you deny it, we will prove it.

Mrs. Fletcher. It is my Hand-Writing.

Justice Powel. Mistress, you can say no more of it?

Mrs. Fletcher. No, my Lord.

Mr. Feilding. Call Mrs. Gardiner.

[Who was sworn.]

Justice Powel. What have you to say?

Mrs. Gardiner. My Lord, Mrs. Villars lodged in my House; and she came one Morning.

Council. When was it?

Mrs. Gardiner. It was the 6th of November last was Twelve-month; She came in then, and had been abroad all Night. She told me, she was married to Colonel Feilding. She gave a Pair of Gloves to me, and to this Gentlewoman; and likewise gave Favours and Garters in the House. But she desired me to keep it secret. Mrs. Bradby, about a Fortnight or three Weeks before Christmas, came into Mrs. Villars's Lodging, and happened to fall down as if she had been in a Swoon; and within a few Days she fell in Labour.

Justice Powel. Was it a Boy, or a Girl, she was deliver'd with?

Mrs. Gardiner. I was not there. It was not at my House, but at new Lodgings.

Justice Powel. Where was it she was brought to bed?

Mr. Feilding. We can bring Evidence of that, my Lord.

Justice Powel. Woman, how can you swear, that she was brought to bed before Christmas?

Mrs. Gardiner. I may say it, my Lord, because here is one, I believe, that will swear it. Mrs. Villars her self told me so; and the Midwife said she deliver'd her, for which Mrs. Bradby gave her a Guinea. The next Day after her Fall she was very ill, and continued so till she was brought to bed.

Justice Powel. Was she big?

Mrs. Gardiner. She was past breeding; she was very big.

Mrs. Drinkwater call'd again.

Justice Powel. What can you say about Mrs. Bradby's Labour?

Mrs. Drinkwater. My Lord, Mrs. Villars and I were at Mrs. Bradby's Labour.

Council. When was this?

Mrs. Drinkwater. To the best of my Remembrance, it was about a Fortnight before Christmas; but she did not look before February. I do not know, but the Fall she had in Mrs. Villars's House, might be the Occasion of her coming before her Time.

Justice Powel. Was she deliver'd of a live or dead Child?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I do not remember that, my Lord.

Council. Was it a Boy or a Girl?

Mrs. Drinkwater. I know not that neither.

Justice Powel. I thought verily that if you were at her Labour, that you could tell whether she had a Child or no Child?

Mrs. Drinkwater. There were others that were at her Labour, can justify that the Midwife said she had a Child.

Council. Don't you know what became of the Child afterwards?

Mrs. Drinkwater. To the best of my Knowledge, I think it died as soon as it was born.

Council. Just now you said, you did not know whether it was alive or no?

Mrs. Drinkwater. Here is Madam Luet will justify it.

Mrs. Villars call'd again.

Justice Powel. Mrs. Villars, Do you know she was with Child?

Mrs. Villars. I know that she miscarried.

Council. What time was it?

Mrs. Villars. After Christmas.

Mr. Feilding. Call the Keeper of the House of Correction (who was sworn).

Justice Powel. What can you say?

Keeper. All that I know of Mrs. Villars, is, that she was a Prisoner in the House where I live.

Justice Powel. Where is that?

Keeper. In Westminster. I remember this Person was in my Custody above five Years ago.

Justice Powel. Had she the Correction of the House?

Keeper. She had not the Correction of the House, because she was then with Child.

Mr. Feilding. Call Mr. Minors (who was sworn).

Justice Powel. Mr. Minors, What have you to say?

Mr. Minors. My Lord, in October was Twelve-month, when Mr. Feilding lodged at Mrs. Heatb's, I was then with Mr. Feilding almost every Day; I saw this Woman there every Day, except Saturday and Sunday. I din'd there, and there was Mrs. Margaretta, and sung these Songs which she spoke of now. Two or three Days after this, Mr. Feilding communicated to me his Treaty of Marriage with the Duchefs of Cleveland, and spoke to me to settle some Writings between them. (He produced the Writings). Mr. Feilding desired me that I would be ready with them by the beginning of November, or the latter end of October. This is all I can say of this matter. As to the Women, I saw these, and abundance of common Women of the Town: I saw him take no more notice of Mrs. Bradby, than he did of any of the others.

Justice Powel. When did you see Margaretta there?

Mr. Minors.

Mr. Minors. I cannot speak to a Day; but she was at Dinner when I dined there about October was Twelve-month.

Mr. Feilding. Call Mr. Chomley (who was sworn).

Justice Powel. What can you say?

Mr. Chomley. My Lord, Not long ago there was a certain Person taken up, by the Name of Villars, about a Twelve-month ago.

Justice Powel. Do you know her when you see her?

Mr. Chomley. My Lord, I believe that is the Person (pointing at her) but whether she was committed or not, I cannot say. I have seen her divers times at a lewd time of Night, when she ought to have been at home.

A Letter produc'd of Father Dryan's, and shewn to Mr. Florence.

(Mr. Florence sworn).

Council. Mr. Florence, Do you know this Letter?

Mr. Florence. I have seen it, and given an Answer to it accordingly.

Council. Is it Dryan's Hand?

Mr. Florence. I cannot say positively it is his Hand. There are some more of his Letters in the House; I cannot believe, or disbelieve it.

Council. Could Francis Dryan speak English?

Mr. Florence. Very little.

Council. How long was he in England?

Mr. Florence. About Eleven Months. He hath been gone a considerable Time.

Justice Powel. This Father that is now gone, Did he speak English at all?

Mr. Florence. He was learning of it. Some English he could speak; for I taught him from time to time.

Justice Powel. Do you think that he could enquire for Mr. Feilding in English?

Mr. Florence. I believe he might say, Is Mr. Feilding at home? But could speak little Sense in English.

Justice Powel. Do you think that if he were desired to speak these Words, I take this Man for my Husband, that he understood so much.

Mr. Florence. I believe he might say what another said before.

Then the Queen's Council reply'd.

Sir Ja. Mountague. My Lord, Mr. Feilding's Defence consists of Two Parts. First, he does endeavour to falsify his Marriage with Mrs. Wadsworth, by contradicting the Evidence of Mrs. Villars; and for that he calls divers to prove Mrs. Villars to be a dishonest Woman. My Lord, we think there is no Occasion for us to make a Reply to that Particular, since we our selves do not pretend to say she is a Woman of very good Reputation. That which we insist upon is, that Mr. Feilding hath been impos'd upon, and marry'd this Woman; and this we hope we have prov'd not only by Mrs. Villars's Evidence, but by other concurring Circumstances, which are so strong, that they cannot possibly be deny'd. And as to these Facts, he hath not at all contradicted our Evidence. For he does not so much as give your Lordship an Account how he came by the Ring, or for what End and Purpose he bespoke it. He does not deny that he directed the Poſy of it to be Tibi Soli. So that, my Lord, he gives no manner of Answer to all these Matters.

In the next place, he seems to admit that he had been foolish enough to be thus impos'd upon by these Intriguing Women. But, says he, they have not gain'd their Point; for this imposing upon me signifies nothing, because this Woman was Wife to another Man, when we said she was marry'd to Mr. Feilding. Now this sort of Defence does, in great measure, admit the Thing we contend for, His Marriage with Mrs. Wadsworth; and whether he hath made it appear that this Marriage is null and void, shall be taken into Consideration next, by making some few Observations on the Nature of the Evidence that he hath produced to prove this Woman's Marriage with another Man. He says she is the Wife of one Lilly Bradby. That Man, by the Book, is describ'd to live in St. James's, and the Woman to be of St. Margaret's Westminster. But he hath not so much as given you any Account that there is such a Man in the World, that he would have to be the suppos'd Husband of this Woman. In the next place, they have not undertaken to produce one Witness that was by at this Marriage, not one Witness. And what do they rely upon to prove this Wedding? Truly, nothing but the Register-Book; and the Man that keeps the Register-Book is not here. It's true, indeed, they say that it's a true Register, but we desire the Jury may inspect it; for it appears by divers Circumstances to be a Counterfeit-Entry; for it is written in another Character than what the rest are; and it is written in the lower part of the Leaf, where we may suppose a Vacancy left to insert such a thing as this is, upon occasion. The Person that wrote it is not here. The whole Year that is set down here, is all entirely one Hand Writing; and it is not at all like the Writing of this Entry. I think they pretend to say, there is something of the like Hand-Writing in the same Book; and that they make use of to be a corroborating Circumstance. But that appears likewise to be at the latter end of another Book. The Book is Rul'd, and this Entry is writ below Lines without a Rule.

My Lord, this is what I think fit to take Notice upon the View of the Thing. We had an Intimation given us of this Book. It was rumour'd about the Town that this was the Defence which we were like to meet with. Therefore we did send to all Places where suspicious Registers were kept, and among the rest to this Fleet-Register. My Lord, we shall shew you that our Witnesses went to enquire for this Book; but there they found no Book where this Entry was written. It's a very unaccountable thing that this Book should be concealed. Here is a Woman indeed gives you a Reason why she did it. She says she did it, because she was desired to keep it secret by a Woman whom she never saw before; and of whom she says she never had a Penny. This, methinks, is very extraordinary. But this very Book was shewn them, if my Instructions be true, and the Place where this Entry is made was then a Blank, and filled up since. There was no such Entry at that time when they look'd upon it. This is all we shall say in respect of the Register, which is all the Evidence they bring to prove this Marriage.

But there is another thing they insist upon; They make it an Objection, That this Father in Red was seen at Dinner with the Dukes of Cleveland, after Mr. Feilding was marry'd to my Lady Dukes. As to that Matter, we say it does not appear when that time was; nor do they make it out that the Father in Red did know that he was married to the Dukes of Cleveland at that time; tho' in Fact they might be marry'd. Twenty People might be at Dinner there, and yet might be ignorant of this Marriage. It's possible that a Man may eat and drink with another, and yet not know whether he be married or unmarried. They do not make it appear that there was any Occasion given at Table that would would give rise to such a Discourse. The Man not having an Opportunity to speak of it, to what end and purpose should he do it? The next thing they insist upon, and have endeavour'd to prove, is, That Mrs. Feilding was with Child, and brought to bed the Christmas after she was marry'd to Mr. Feilding. But they do not pretend to tell whether the Child she was brought to bed of, was dead or alive; or whether it was a Boy or a Girl; but at last it proved a Miscarriage. We have given your Lordship an Account how it is likely she should be with Child; for we have proved to you undoubtedly that she was married to Mr. Feilding; that they lay together several Times; and we have no Reason to suspect Mr. Feilding's Ability. Mr. Feilding knew she was with Child by him. He was the proudest Man in the World of this Thing, and call'd it young Lord Tunbridge. To prove this, my Lord, here is a Letter written by himself. The Style is something peculiar too; it is directed, To the best of Wives, Anne Countess of Feilding. Now, my Lord, Mrs. Delean, whom Mr. Feilding thought he had married, her Name is Anne, but Mrs. Feilding's Name is Mary.

The Letter produced and prov'd by Boucher and Beale, and it was directed

To the best of Wives, Anne Countess of Feilding, at Waddon.

Novem. 14. 1705.

Here is nothing can please me more upon this Occasion, than to hear my Dearest Wife say I had made her sick, by turning her Liver; for without that we could not hope for a young Lord Tunbridge; which would be, the next to my Dear herself, the most welcome Present to my Arms. Make haste then, my Dearest Life, to Cultivate the young Spark; and be sure you don't starve my Boy. As for your coming to me, it wholly depends upon yourself, who can best judge when it is most proper to come to me; which you can do, by giving out you are to stay all Night in London; and then you and Puggy have nothing to do but to come to me at Bed-time, and so we may go to Bed and lye till Morning, when Puggy may come again and call you. Adieu my Soul's Love, whom I must ever value more than Life.

Feilding.

Council. Call Mr. Longford (who was sworn).

Sir Ja. Mountague. Were you directed to go to the Fleet, and look into the Register-Book?

Mr. Longford. Mr. Attorney General telling me that he heard there would be some Pretence of a Marriage that would be set up, advised me to enquire after it. I was informed, that some Certificate was, or would be given in the Fleet. I went with Mr. Rescorloe to see the Books. We looked all over those Months for the Year 1703. This Book is the very Book I take it to be, but am not positive. That which we saw, I observed had an Entry dated the Year 1705, before the Marriages in the Year 1704, in yellowish Ink at the top of a Leaf.

Council. Call Mr. Rescorloe (who was sworn).

Sir Ja. Mountague. Do you remember that you saw that Book?

Mr. Rescorloe. I do remember that I saw that Book with Mr. Longford. Mr. Longford and I went by the Attorney General's Order, to search the Books at the Fleet, to see whether we could find any Entry of Lilley Bradby's Marriage with Mrs. Wadsworth. This Woman that gave her Evidence here brought in this Book, and we look'd back for three Years. We found no such Entry as she shews here in this Book. We ask'd her again, whether there were any other Books of Entries of Marriages? She said, No. I ask'd her, whether there had been any one there to see after such a Certificate; She said, there was a Woman and a Man about a Week or Fortnight ago. I ask'd her, whether she shewed them this Book? She said, she had shew'd them this Book, and they gave her a Shilling for searching it. She said positively there was no such Certificate entred in the Book, and that there was no other Book for the Entry of Marriages. We search'd the Month of October more strictly; we look'd for the very Certificate with the greatest Care and Industry that could be. We went to Bassett's House, who, this Woman said, was not at home. She laugh'd in her Sleeve, and said, he was a doating Man; and if he spoke two Words, he could not speak a third. I do really believe this to be the Book. I took good Notice of the Blank where this Certificate is entred, and did remark that there was a vacant Space under this Certificate, where was no Writing. Mr. Longford and I turned back again to the Year 1705, which was put before the Year 1704, and observed it then, as it appears now, to be the Book, Except this Entry. I do believe it to be the same Book we then saw.

Vol. V.

Sir Ja. Mountague. There is but one thing more that I would mention, which is, that the Woman in the Top-knot confess'd, that this Letter was her own Hand-Writing. I desire it might be read.

The Letter was read. It is directed

To Major-General Feilding.

Tuesday Morning.

All that know the Name of Major General Feilding, must own the Generous and Charitable Actions that your Honour daily bestows upon 'em. I, among the rest, shall ever acknowledge your Goodness. It's Necessity that forces me to dispose of this Picture. Your Honour is a nice Judge of Painting, as well as an Admirer of such Pieces, which makes me humbly present it to you first; and in accepting the same, your Honour will highly oblige, as well as serve,

Your humble Servant,

M. FLETCHER.

POSTSCRIPT.

I long to see you. For your Encouragement, to grant me that Favour; I am now acquainted with a young Lady that's Pretty, and lives in good Fashion. Your Honour will oblige me in letting me receive your Commands.

Justice Powel. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Prisoner, Mr. Robert Feilding, stands indicted for a capital Offence, for Felony, in marrying a second Wife, his first being then alive. This is the Offence charged against him. The Council for the Queen have called several Witnesses to prove this Matter upon him. And the first is one Mrs. Villars, She hath given her Evidence from one end to the other, if you believe what she swears. She swears, that one Mrs. Streights came first to her Lodging, and she was not at home; but left word that she must needs speak with her; that she was always out of the way when any thing offer'd that would do her a Kindness; and that it would be 500 l. out of her way if she did not see her. It seems, that when Mrs. Streights met her, she acquainted her with Mr. Feilding's Inclinations; and being inform'd that she was acquainted with the Lady, that she us'd

to cut her Hair, thought that she might have such an Interest in her, as to be made serviceable to bring the Matter about; which if she was, it might be worth 500*l.* to her. Mrs. Villars undertakes the Business to bring Mr. Feilding and Mrs. Deleau together; she did readily accept of it; thereupon Mr. Feilding and she discours'd together concerning this Matter: she told him she was acquainted with Mrs. Deleau, and that she would do the best she could to bring it about. Mr. Feilding upon this went to Mrs. Deleau's Country-House at Waddon in Surry, that thereby the Lady might have an Opportunity of seeing him. She says Mr. Feilding told her that he had Access to the Gardens; that when he was there he saw the Lady through the Glass-Window; he was willing to give the Lady a full View of him, therefore he stood still and set his Watch by the Sun-Dial, and took several Turns in the Garden; and he did afterwards send a Letter to her. Mrs. Villars was afterwards sent of a Message, as tho' it was from the Duchess of Cleveland, to acquaint the Lady that the Duchess had a great mind to see the Gardens. Mrs. Deleau told Mrs. Villars that she should be proud that a Person of her Quality should come to her. She said that Mr. Feilding sent her, and she found afterward that the Duchess of Cleveland did not intend to go; nay, that she knew nothing of the matter. But see how she managed the matter, and play'd this Trick upon Mr. Feilding; it is no better, if true. They agreed together that Mrs. Deleau should come to a Place where Mr. Feilding should appoint; that something of Musick, or some Entertainment should be provided, they contrived when it should be, the Time was on my Lord-Mayors Day at Night, and according to Appointment Mrs. Villars came with Mrs. Deleau, as Mr. Feilding thought, but in reality it was one Mary Wadsworth, which represented Mrs. Deleau; she came in a Mourning Coach, and dress'd in a Widow's Habit; after this manner they came to Colonel Feilding's Lodgings in Pall-Mall. The Lady truly was not to know that they were Mr. Feilding's Lodgings; however Mr. Feilding was not at home, but it was not long before he came: He came up to the Lady: You have heard what Addresses he made to the Lady, and how much Love he express'd towards her: Ask'd her, whether she lov'd singing? one Margaretta was sent for, and sung two Songs. Mr. Feilding was so taken with her he would have marry'd her presently; but she being coy, modestly declin'd it, and so they parted for that Time. Mrs. Villars was to bring her afterwards, which was on the 9th of November, on the Night the supposed Wedding was; Mrs. Villars brought her. When she came there, Mr. Feilding propos'd to be married to her forthwith; she seem'd to be shy at present, but Mr. Feilding said he would fetch the Priest immediately; he lock'd them in, took the Key with him, and returned in three Quarters of an Hour; the Priest she describes to be in a long red Gown lin'd with blue, a long Beard and a Fur-Cap upon his Head, so he brought him along with him; when he came, he said, This is the Man that should join their Hearts together. She tells you further that Mrs. Wadsworth question'd the Priest; required of him a Proof to shew he was a Priest in Orders. The Priest pull'd a Picture of the Pope out of his Pocket, which he said was a Credential for Priests. After Supper the Marriage was propos'd, whether it should be in the Dining-Room, or Bed-Chamber? That was the Question. The Lady thought the Bed-Chamber best; he thought so too. Well then, in the Bed-Chamber it must be. The Priest did want Water, Salt and Rosemary, Things that he us'd in Performance of the Ceremony; Boucher was sent down for them; he brought up Water and Salt, but could get no Rosemary: After these Things were brought up, Boucher the Servant was turned out, and the Doors were shut. Then there was no Body present but Mr. Feilding, the Lady, the Priest and Mrs. Villars. Then she tells you of the Ceremony of the Wedding, the Ceremony of the Water, and the Ceremony of the Ring. After that was done, they proceeded to the Marriage; the Office was in Latin; when they came to the marriage Words, I take thee to be my Husband, &c. Mrs. Wadsworth desir'd it might be spoke in English; thereupon Mr. Feilding did say it in English, I take this Woman to be my wedded Wife, with all my Heart and with all my Soul. The Gentlewoman she said her Part likewise in English; I take this Man to be my wedded Husband; but Mr. Feilding observing her to speak it too low, desir'd her to speak it as earnestly as he did: Whereupon she did say, I take this Man to be my Husband, with all my Heart, and with all my Soul. The Ceremony of putting on the Ring the Priest directed; that was, to take hold of the End of one of her Fingers and put it on; she saw that done, and when the Ceremony was over, the Priest went away; that when he was gone away, she undressed the Bride, and put her to Bed, and then gave notice to Mr. Feilding that the Lady was in Bed. Then Mr. Feilding went to Bed, and she saw them in Bed together. Then she went to Bed her self in a Lodging that was provided for her up another Pair of Stairs: That the next Morning she arose, came down, went into the Room where there was a Fire made by Boucher: that then she saw them in naked Bed together. If you believe her, she swears the Marriage by this Priest, and the Consummation of it. Mrs. Villars goes further, and swears, that she brought her two other Times, and that those Times she saw them in Bed together as Man and Wife. I ask'd Mrs. Villars at last, how Mr. Feilding came to be undeceiv'd? She says, it was kept secret from November to May. Then Money was wanted; that was a great Disappointment to Mr. Feilding, for he thought he had marry'd a Lady that would have furnish'd him with Money. Then he discover'd the Fraud, and found he had been impos'd upon; then he was angry with her, beat her, and call'd her Names. Indeed, Gentlemen, I must deal plainly with you, if her Evidence stood alone, her Reputation is shaken to that degree, that in Truth, where a Man stands upon his Life, one would not have a great Regard for what such a Woman swears, if it were not supported otherwise. Now, tho' by her self she be not a good Evidence, yet the Matters of Fact which she swears to, are likewise proved by the concurrent Testimony of others.

First, They call Boucher, and truly he fortifies her Evidence in a great many Particulars, gives an Account of Mrs. Villars bringing Mrs. Wadsworth to Mr. Feilding's under the Character of a Person of Quality; gives an Account, just as she does, of their coming to Mr. Feilding's Lodgings in a Widow's Habit and Mourning Coach; their having a Treat of Plumb-Cake and two Bottles of Wine. He further gives an Account of their coming a second Time, and an Account of the Priest; knew knew the Priest; knew him to be the Emperor's Envoy's Priest. He remembers the Priest coming to the Place; he remembers also the Circumstances of being sent for Water, Salt and Rosemary. He says he was order'd down, and the Chamber-door was shut, and the Priest was then in the Chamber with Mr. Feilding, the Lady, and Mrs. Villars; and that when the Priest was gone, Mr. Feilding and the Lady went to Bed; that he saw them in Bed together; that the People that were below, when Boucher was sent down for Salt and Rosemary, they could conclude no otherwise but that they were making this Lady a Convert. Now Gentlemen, this is a material Thing, that there was a Priest at that Time, and they were private together; this is a concurrent Evidence to strengthen Mrs. Villars's Testimony. There is Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Heath, and Mrs. Price, they remember several of these Matters perfectly well. Mrs. Martin saw this Person and her Mourning Coach; she saw the Lady and Mrs. Villars go up Stairs, and the Time when the Priest came in, she let him in; describes him by his particular Habit as the rest do. Mrs. Heath remembers Mrs. Villars coming with a Woman that she thought was a Woman of Quality, but saw not the Priest. Mrs. Villars told her she was worth 80000*l.* she ask'd her whether she might lie there that Night, for it was too late to go home? She agreed they should lie together, Mrs. Villars and Mrs. Wadsworth. But now here is another Circumstance that hath mighty Weight in it, that is, the Ring; they have brought the Person of whom Mr. Feilding bought the Ring to the Value of 20*s.* that the Ring was ready made, and Mr. Feilding directed the Poy (Tibi Soli) to be engrav'd in it. There was another Man by when Mr. Feilding bought the Ring and order'd the Poy for it; and this very Ring with this Poy has been produc'd first by the Proctor and Register; the Proctor does say it was first brought to him by Mrs. Wadsworth, who came to retain him in an Action of Nullity of Marriage; he took notice of the Ring, and said that it had this Poy in it. Afterwards when Mrs. Wadsworth came again he was not at home; it was in the Hand of his Brother, and he is sure it is the same Ring. The Goldsmith swears it to be that Ring Mr. Feilding bought of him; he knew it by the Mark and Workmanship of it; for Goldsmiths know one another's Work. This Gentlemen, hath a great deal of Weight in it; it is a very great Circumstance, unless they could tell you, which they have not, upon what Occasion this Ring was bought at this Time.

Gentlemen, They give a further Account of this Matter by the Testimony of Letters, which they prove to be Mr. Feilding's Hand. Mrs. Villars was the Carrier of these Letters; Mr. Feilding stiling her in them by the Name of Puggy, a Name by which it seems he used to call her. These Letters are proved by Boucher and a Lady in the Gallery, to be Mr. Feilding's Writing. These Letters have been read to you, they are written as from a Husband to a Wife; in them he owns her to be his Wife, calls her Countess of Feilding, stiles himself her Husband. These Letters have been read to you. This, Gentlemen, as I remember, is the Substance of the Evidence that hath been given for the Queen.

Sir Ja. Mountague. My Lord, be pleas'd to take notice of Mr. Feilding's going to the Emperor's Envoy for the Father in Red.

Justice Powel. It is true, I had forgot the Evidence of Mr. Florence a Chaplain, that is a Priest, now belonging to Count Gallas the Emperor's Envoy, and the Porter. They tell you about this Time Mr. Feilding did come to enquire for this Priest; and gave the Porter half a Crown (by a good Token); but the Priest he asked for not being at home, he enquired for Mr. Florence; he told Mr. Florence that he had been in Love with a young Lady a good while, but now had prevailed with her to marry him. And seeing the Father in Red was not there, he desired he would go along with him and do the Office. Mr. Florence told him it was improper for him to go without the Envoy's Leave; he went up to the Envoy and acquainted him with it, the Envoy gave him Caution to do it with Discretion; but when he came down again, in seems that the Red Father had been with Mr. Feilding in the mean Time, and were both gone together.

Now, Gentlemen, you hear what Defence Mr. Feilding makes against this great Charge against him.

First, He calls a great many Witnesses to prove that this Mrs. Villars was married, as she pretended to Colonel Feilding, and that she was a very common Woman, so far as that she has been in a publick House of Correction; and one of their Witnesses does bear hard upon her Testimony; that is, that she should declare to her that she was married to Colonel Feilding, and that my Lady Duche's should say to her, If you can make that out that you are married to Mr. Feilding, she would give her two hundred Pounds, and settle 100*l.* a Year upon her for fifteen Years together. Then as for Mrs. Wadsworth, they call you divers to prove that she was brought to Bed about Christmas after this supposed Marriage. But when they came to be examined they did not prove very much of that; for indeed it proved to be a Miscarriage; the Woman could not say she saw the Child, could not tell whether it was a Boy or a Girl; whether it was dead or alive; it did not appear by their Evidence that she went out her Time with a Child. Another part of Mr. Feilding's Evidence is this, to prove Mrs. Wadsworth married to another Person; and then admitting she was married to Mr. Feilding, 'tis a null Marriage. To prove that Mrs. Wadsworth was before married to another, they have brought the Book of Marriages of the Fleet, and in that Book there is an Account of one Lilley Bradby, married such a Time to Mrs. Mary Wadsworth; the Man of St. James's, the Woman of St. Margaret's Westminster. The Woman of the Fleet, in whose Custody this Book was, pretends that Mrs. Wadsworth came to her, and desired if any came to see the Book, that she would not let them see the Entry of her Marriage; and why? Because there would be Trouble about her Marriage. This Woman swears that there were two Men came to search the Book but she shewed them another Book; but this Book she did not shew them. She was ask'd whether she had two Books of Marriages for the same Year; She said she had several Books for the same Year: One Parson made his Entry in one Book, and another Parson in another Book. She pretends she did not shew them this Book; but the Book she shewed them was at home. I cannot conclude much from what this Woman hath said; but Gentlemen you have look'd upon this Book, and if you are satisfied from this Evidence, that Mary Wadsworth was married to Bradby at this Time, I confess Mr. Feilding will not be within the Statute. You have look'd into the Book; they give you no Account that there was ever any such Man as Bradby, nor of no Co-habitation; but a meer Book is produced, and not of the best Credit neither; it is entred in the Bottom of the Leaf, but not in the Middle: it is written with another coloured Ink, and in another Hand, I ask'd the Woman whether she knew the Man that wrote it? She said yes; and it was her Husband's Brother's Hand. He is alive, why is not he produced?

Gentlemen, They have called no Witnesses to prove the Marriage with Lilley Bradby. There were two Gentlemen on the other side, they went to the Fleet to search the Books of the Entry of this Marriage. They say that a Person inform'd them that there had been there a Man and a Woman before them; these Gentlemen went and desired to see the Book, particularly for the Year 1703. They say the Woman did produce the Book of Marriages, but they could not see such an Entry; she denied to them that she had any other Book for that Year; they cannot swear positively that this is the Book that was shewn them; but one of them says he believes it to be the same, for in that which he saw, he observed Entries of the Year 1705, before the Year 1704. He took good notice of it, and so it is found in Court. The other Gentleman says, he took particular notice of the Space that was in the Book, where this Entry is now written. Now the Woman does not bring the other Book she pretended to have shewn them. Now, as to the Labour, they have produc'd a Letter under Mr. Feilding's Hand, whereby Mr. Feilding takes notice of her being with Child, directs the Letter to Anne Countess of Feilding at Waddon; he took it that he had married Mrs. Deleau, for her Name is Anne, he directed his Letter to her Country-Seat. There is another Thing of Mr. Feilding's coming to Mrs. Heath, and complaining what an ill Woman Mrs. Villars was, for she had served him a base Trick, instead of a Woman of Fortune, she had put a common Woman upon him. Gentlemen, You have heard the Account too concerning his beating of her; for this Woman, it seems, was troublesome to him at White-Hall; she demanding him as her Husband, said she was his lawful Wife; he struck her and caused her to be held till he got away from her.

Gentlemen, It is a very great Charge, upon Mr. Feilding, it is true, if there be Evidence to maintain it; it does not really depend upon Mrs. Villars's Evidence; for if her Evidence were to stand alone, no Credit should be given to it; but as it is supported by concurring Evidence, I leave it with you, whether it be not sufficient to find Mr. Feilding Guilty. But if you think that Mrs. Wadsworth's Marriage to Lilley Bradby is proved sufficiently, then, altho' you think Mr. Feilding's Marriage with Mrs. Wadsworth sufficiently prov'd yet you are to find for the Defendant.

The Jury having withdrawn for some Time, brought in their Verdict, That Mr. Feilding was Guilty of the Felony he stood indicted of.

Mr. Feilding (in case he was found Guilty) had obtained the Queen's Warrant to suspend Execution of this Sentence; and then by his Council took Exceptions to the Indictment, and moved in Arrest of Judgment; but they were answered by the Council for the Queen; but Mr. Feilding having obtained a Suspension of the Execution, the Judges by a Cur' advisare vult (as the Form is) suspended giving Judgment till the next Sessions, and accepted Bail for Mr. Feilding's Appearance the next Sessions.

The next Sessions, being the fifteenth of January following, Mr. Feilding appear'd, and his Council waving their Exception (as being Frivolous) he was ask'd what he had to say why the Court should not proceed to Judgment and Execution? And then he craved the Benefit of his Clergy; which was allow'd. And then Judgment was given (as usual) That he should be burnt in his Hand. But he having the Queen's Warrant to suspend Execution, he was admitted to Bail.

The Proceedings against Robert Feilding, Esq; in Doctors Commons.

Notwithstanding Mr. Feilding was found Guilty of Felony at the Old Baily, her Grace the Duchess of Cleveland having instituted a Cause of Nullity of Marriage against the said Mr. Feilding, by reason of a former Marriage with the said Mary Wadsworth, in the Arches Court of Canterbury; and having by Examination on Oath, of divers credible Witnesses, made good and sufficient Proof of the several Articles of the Libel by her Grace exhibited in the said Court against the said Mr. Feilding, did proceed to obtain the Sentence of the said Court; and accordingly on the 23d day of May, in the Year of our Lord God 1707, the Right Worshipful Sir John Cooke, Kt. Dr. of Laws, Official Principal of the said Court, then judicially sitting in the Common Hall of Doctors Commons, London, being then present the Duke of Grafton, the Duke of Northumberland, the Earls of Litchfield, Suffex, Jersey, and the Lord Quarrendon; as also the respective Proctors of her Grace the Duchess of Cleveland and Mr. Feilding, did, at the Petition of her Grace's Proctor, read and promulge his definitive Sentence in Latin, of the Tenor following, viz.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We John Cooke, “ Kt. Dr. of Laws, Official Principal of the “ Arches Court of Canterbury, lawfully appointed, “ rightly and duly proceeding, having heard, seen,
“ understood, and fully and maturely discuss'd
“ the Merits and Circumstances of a certain Cause
“ of Nullity of Marriage, by reason of a former,
“ now depending before us, between the most noble “ Lady, Barbara Duchess of Cleveland, the “ Party Agent and Complainant, on the one Part;
“ and Robert Feilding, Esq; of the Parish of St.
“ James's Westminster, in the County of Middlesex,
“ the Party against whom it is complain'd,
“ on the other Part. The Parties aforesaid lawfully “ appearing before us in Judgment, by their “ Proctors respectively; and the Proctor for the “ said most noble Lady, Barbara Duchess of Cleveland, “ praying Sentence to be given, and Justice
“ to be done to his Party; and also the Proctor
“ of

“ of the said Robert Feilding, Esq; praying Justice
 “ to be done to his Party: And having carefully “ and diligently search’d into, and consider’d of the “ whole Proceedings had and done before us in this “ Court; and having observ’d all and singular the “ Matters and Things, that by Law in this Be“ half ought to be observ’d; We have thought “ fit, and do thus think fit to proceed to the giv“ ing our Definitive Sentence, or Final Decree,
 “ in manner following; viz.

“ Forasmuch as we have by the Acts enacted,
 “ deduced, alledged, exhibited, propounded, prov“ ed and confessed, That the Proctor for the said
 “ most noble Lady, Barbara Duchess of Cleve- “ land, hath fully and sufficiently proved and “ founded his Intention in a certain Libel, and “ other Matters now remaining in the Registry of “ this Court, propounded and exhibited in this “ Cause on the Part and Behalf of his said Client;
 “ And that nothing hath been, on the Part and “ Behalf of the said Robert Feilding, effectually ex“ cepted, deduced, alledged, exhibited, propound-“ ed, proved and confessed, which might, or could “ in any wise (touching our Sentence hereafter to “ be pronounc’d) hurt or weaken the Intention of “ the said most noble Lady, Barbara Duchess of “ Cleveland:

“ Therefore, We John Cooke, Knight, Doctor
 “ of Laws, the Judge aforesaid, having first called “ upon God, and setting him alone before our Eyes,
 “ and having heard Council thereupon; do pro“ nounce, decree, and declare the before-named “ Robert Feilding, Esq; and one Mary Wadsworth, “ mentioned in the Proceedings of this Cause, be“ ing free from all Contract and Promise of Mar“ riage with any other (so far as appears to us)
 “ on the ninth Day of November, in the Year of “ our Lord God 1705, at a Place mentioned in “ the Libel in this Cause, did contract Marriage,
 “ and did solemnize, or procure the same to be “ solemnized between them; and did afterwards “ consummate the same: And that the said Robert “ Feilding and the said Mary Wadsworth were, and “ are Man and Wife. And that the said Robert “ Feilding Esq; after the Solemnization and Con“ summation of the aforesaid Marriage, not hav“ ing the Fear of God before his Eyes, on the “ 25th Day of the said Month of November, in “ the said Year of our Lord God, 1705, and in “ the Place also in the aforesaid Libel mention’d, “ did contract a pretended Marriage with the said
 “ most noble Lady, Barbara Duchess of Cleve- “ land. And also we pronounce, decree, and de“ clare, that the said pretended Marriage, or ra“ ther a Shew of Marriage, between the said Ro- “ bert Feilding and the said most noble Lady, Bar- “ bara Duchess of Cleveland, at the Time and “ Place libellated, was solemnized, or rather pro-“ phaned; the said Mary Wadsworth, alias Feil- “ ding, being then and since living. And also we “ pronounce, decree, and declare the same pre“ tended Marriage, or rather Shew of Marriage,
 “ between the said Robert Feilding and the said
 “ most noble Lady, Barbara Duchess of Cleveland,
 “ so as aforesaid contracted and solemnized, or ra“ ther prophaned, by reason of the former Mar“ riage between the said Robert Feilding and the “ said Mary Wadsworth solemnized and consum“ mated, was, and is, from the Beginning, void,
 “ and of no Force in Law, and doth, and ought “ to want the Force and the Effect of the Law.

“ Therefore, by this our Definitive Sentence, or “ our Final Decree, which we now promulge in “ these our Writings, We do pronounce, decree,
 “ and declare, the said most noble Lady, Barbara “ Duchess of Cleveland, was and is free from any “ Bond of Marriage with the said Robert Feilding, “ and had and hath the Liberty and Freedom of “ Marrying with any other Person.”

 Charles Stirling, Laird of Kippendavie; and Patrick Edmonston, of Newtoun.

INDicted and Accused at the Instance of Sir James Steuart, Her Majesty's Advocate, for Her Highness Interest, and as having Special Warrant from Her Majesty for that Effect. That where, by the Law of GOD, and the Laws of this, and all other well-govern'd Realms, the Crime of Treason and Leve-Majesty, and the Treasonable and Unlawful Rising and Continuing in Arms, are most Atrocious and Heinous Crimes, punishable by Forfeiture of Lands, Life and Estate, or other Pains of Law. Likeas by the Act of Parliament, Jac. I. Par. 1. Cap. 3. it is statute, That no Man openly rebel against the King's Person, under the Pain of forfeiture of Life and Goods. And by the Act of Parliament, Jac. II. Par. 6. Cap. 24. it is statute, That who commit Treason against the King's Person, or Majesty, or who rise in Feire of Weir against him, shall be punished as Traitors. And by the Act of Parliament, Car. II. Par. 1. Sess. 1. Cap. 3. it is declared to be High-Treason, for the Subjects more, or less, upon any Pretext, to rise and continue in Arms; and to make Treaties or Leagues with Foreign Princes or States, or among themselves, without His Majesty's Special Authority first interponed. And by the Act of Parliament, Car. II. Par. 1. Sess. 2. Cap. 2. it is statute, That if any Person shall Plot, Contrive or Intend, Death and Destruction to the King, or Bodily Harm tending thereto; or Deprive, Depose, or Suspend Him from the Stile, Honour, and Kingly Name of this, or any other His Majesty's Dominions; or levy War or take up Arms against Him, or any Commissionate by Him; or entice Strangers, or others, to invade any of his Dominions, and express and declare such Treasonable Intention; he shall be adjudged a Traitor, and punish'd as in the Case of High-Treason. Likeas by the Act of Parliament, 1702. intituled, Act Recognizing Her Majesty's Royal Authority, it is declared, That it shall be High-Treason in any of the Subjects of this Kingdom, by Writing, Speaking, or any other manner of way, to disown, quarrel, or impugn Her Majesty's Royal Power and Authority, or Right and Title to the Crown. And by the Act of Parliament, 1703. intituled, Act Asserting and Recognizing Her Majesty's Authority, it is again statute and declared, That it shall be High-Treason, in any of the Subjects of this Kingdom, to disown, quarrel or impugn, Her Majesty's Right and Title to the Crown of this Kingdom, or Her Exercise of the Government thereof. NEVER-THELESS it is of Verity, That the said James Stirling of Keir, Archibald Seaton of Touch, Archibald Stirling of Carden, Charles Stirling of Kippendavie, and Patrick Edmonston of Newtoun, all and each of them were guilty of the said Crimes, in sua far as they all, and each of them, shaking off all Fear of GOD, and Regard to Her Majesty's Person, Authority and Laws, upon one or other of the Days of the Months of February March or April last, when an Invasion of that Part of Great-Britain called SCOTLAND was threaten'd, by an Enemy-Fleet of Ships with Forces, and an Army aboard, sent by the French King or by the Pretender, who went some Time by the Name of the Prince of Wales, and now assumes to himself the Name, Stile and Title of King James, as King of Her Majesty's Dominions; with a manifest and open Design to invade Her Majesty's Dominions, and to destroy Her Majesty and Her good Subjects; at least to deprive and depose Her Majesty from the Stile, Honour, and Princely Name of these Her Dominions; Did convocate and convene in Arms, with others their Accomplices; such as Major William Graham, Alexander Steuart, Uncle to Ardvorlich, George Seaton, Brother to the said Archibald Seaton, and Mr. Charles Fleeming, alias Hay, Brother to the Earl of Wingtoun, all since absconded, and upon the same Account declared Fugitives: And thus did rise and continue in Arms without Her Majesty's Special Authority first interponed; poned; and did levy War, and take up Arms against Her Majesty. And farther, they having never before qualified themselves by any Mark of good Affection to Her Majesty or Her Government, did (at the Time aforesaid) gather themselves together, with their Accomplices, in Arms, with Swords and Pistols, and other offensive Weapons, in an open Correspondence with the said Enemies and Invaders, at the very Time of their said Invasion; and being so convocate and convened in Arms, did march in one Body, or Company, with their said Accomplices, several Days and Nights, to and from several Places, in the Shires of Stirling, Perth, and other Shires adjacent, on purpose to encourage and strengthen the said Invaders, or at least to raise Her Majesty's other Subjects in Rebellion against Her. Like as for that End, they did openly drink to the good Health of their Master, as they called him; who could be none else but the said Pretender. And did by their said Rising in Arms, and open Correspondence with Her Majesty's said declared Enemies, and otherways, entice them and others to invade Her Majesty's Dominions, to the destroying of Her, and Her good Subjects; at least to deprive and depose Her from the Stile, Honour, and Princely Name of Queen and Sovereign of this and Her other Dominions; or at least thereby endeavour the Alteration of the Right of Succession to the Crown, so happily by Law settled upon Her Majesty and Her Successors. By all which, they, and each of them were guilty, Art and Part, of the foresaid Crimes of Treason, Rebellion, and Lese-Majesty, at least of Treasonable Rising and Convening in Arms, without Her Majesty's Special Authority first had thereto; at least of a most unlawful Convocation in Arms, in a most dangerous and threatening Season and in open Correspondence with the said Enemies and Invaders; to the Destruction of Her Majesty's Government, and of the Quiet and Peace of Her Dominions. Which Crimes, all or any of them, being found proven against all or any of the forenamed Persons, by the Verdict of an Assize, before the Lords, Justice-General, Justice-Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary; They, and each of them, ought to be condemn'd by Sentence and Doom of the said Lords Commissioners, to forfeit their Lands, Lives and Goods, as Traitors; and be otherways punished in their Persons and Goods, by the Pains of Law, to the Example and Terror of others to commit the like in Time coming.

Mr. David Lauder.

Advocates.

My Lord Advocate judicially produced Her Majesty's Letter, authorizing and requiring his Lordship to raise and insist in the aforesaid Process; whereof the Tenor follows, superscribed thus:

ANNE R.

" Right Trusty and Well-beloved, We greet you well. Whereas James Stirling, Laird of Keir, Archibald Seaton, Laird of Touch, Archibald Stirling, Laird of Carden, Charles Stirling, Laird of Kippendavie, and Patrick Edmonston, of Newtown, were about the Time of the late intended Invasion apprehended by Warrants, for Suspicion of Treason, and treasonable Practices, against Us and Our Government; and have since been committed by Warrants for High-Treason, Depositions upon Oath having been made against them: Our Will and Pleasure is, and We do hereby authorize and require you, to raise a Process in the ordinary Form, before the Commissioners of Justiciary, against them, and each of them, for the treasonable Practices wherewith they, or any of them, are, or shall be charg'd. And herein you are to take the Assistance of Sir David Dalrymple, Mr. William Carmichael, Sir Walter Pringle, and Sir Francis Grant, Advocates; or any two of them, if necessary; and who are hereby required to concur with you accordingly. For all which, this shall be your Warrant." Given at Our Castle at Windsor, the nineteenth Day of July, 1708, in the seventh Year of our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,

Subscribed thus, S U N D E R L A N D.

Directed on the Back thus,
To Our Trusty and Well-beloved,
Sir James Steuart, Our Advocate for Scotland.

Which being read in Presence of the said Lords, Justice-General, Justice-Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, they ordained the same to be recorded.

CROMERTIE, I. P. D.

Thereafter, there was a Petition presented to the said Lords, by James Stirling of Keir, Archibald Seaton of Touch, Archibald Stirling of Carden, Charles Stirling of Kippendavie, and Patrick Edmonston of Newtown, humbly shewing, " That the Petitioners being indicted at the Instance of Her Majesty's Advocate, for the Crimes of Treason and Lese-Majesty; and this being the Day of their Appearance and Trial, they had according to the Privileges allowed to all the Lieges, and confirm'd by Acts of Parliament, made choice of the following Lawyers, to appear before their Lordships in their Defence; viz. Sir Patrick Home, Sir David Forbes, Sir James Steuart, Mr. Alexander Macleod, Mr. Walter Steuart, Mr. James Graham, Mr.

" Mr. Colin Mackenzie, Mr. Charles Cockburn, and
 " Mr. John Elphinstone. And it being also usual in " Cases of Treason, That Lawyers are publickly
 " authorized and warranted to manage the Trials
 " in their Pannels Defence; therefore humbly cra" ving their Lordships would be pleased to allow
 " of the Petitioners Choice of the Lawyers above-" mentioned, and to authorize these Gentlemen
 " accordingly, as the said Petition bears.

Which being consider'd by the said Lords, They,
 by their Deliverance thereon, allowed such Advocates as the Pannels should think fit to employ to appear and debate for them in the above-mentioned Indictment; they being already sufficiently authorized by Law for that Effect.

Sic subscribitur,
 C R O M E R T I E, I. P. D.

The said Indictment being read, and fully debated viva voce, in Presence of the said Lords, Pannels and Affizers; the said Lords, Justice-General, Justice Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, ordained the Pannels to give in their Information thereon betwixt and Wednesday's Night next: and Her Majesty's Advocate to give in his, betwixt and Friday's Night thereafter, in order to be recorded; and continued the Dyet till Monday next, at nine a Clock in the Forenoon; and ordained the whole Affizers and Witnesses to attend then, each of them under the Pain of one Hundred Marks; and the Pannels to be carried back to Prison.

INFORMATION for the Laird of Keir, and Others, against her Ma- jesty's Advocate.

IT is alledged for the Pannels, denying always the Indictment, and hail Articles and Qualifications thereof; 1. That the Indictment is not relevantly libelled, in respect it does not condescend upon any Overt-Act or Deed done by them, that could possibly be stretched to infer the Pains libelled; and the Acts of Parliament libelled on, expressly require such Facts and Deeds, to infer the Pains of Treason therein mentioned. As Act 3.
 Parl. 1. James I. That none rebel openly or notourly. And Act 14. Parl. 6. James II. bears, And if it happens, any within the Realm, openly or notourly against the King to Rebel, or make War against the King's Lieges, against his Forbidding, &c.
 And Act 2. Sess. 2. Parl. 1. Charles II. has these Words: *And shall, by Writing, Printing, Preaching, or other malicious and advised Speaking, express or declare such their Treasonable Intentions,
 &c. And the Act 1702. bears, That it shall be High-Treason, by Writing, Speaking, or any other manner of way, to disown or impugn Her Majesty's Royal Authority, &c.* Which Laws and generally all Laws, as well as the Nature of Crimes, require, That the same should be by express Words, Writs, or Deeds: and not strained by remote Inferences and Conjectures: And in the present Case, there is neither Words, Writ, or Deeds condescended on, that could possibly be drawn to infer the Crimes libelled.

2. Whereas the Indictment bears, That the Pannels did convocate and convene in Arms, with others their Accomplices, and so did rise and continue in Arms, without Her Majesty's Special Authority first interponed; and did levy War, and take up Arms against Her Majesty, &c. It is answered, That albeit Levying War against Her Majesty, or rising and continuing in Arms without Her Majesty's Authority, be undoubtedly Treason when duly qualified; yet there is no Circumstance of Fact, Word or Writ, condescended on in the Indictment, that can be imagined to infer a Rising in Arms, or Levying War against her Majesty. And albeit the Law statutes anent Rising in Arms, or Levying War generally; yet in all Libels duly founded thereupon, the Subsumption must condescend upon Particular Facts and Deeds, capable to be found and construed a Rising in Arms. The Common Law expresses it thus: Qui injussu Principis bellum gesserit, delectumve habuerit, exercitum comparaverit. And our Law, Act 75. Parl. 9. 2. Mary, explains what it is to rise in Arms; viz. That no manner of Persons attempt to do, or raise any Band of Men of War, or Horse or Foot, with Cul-verins, Pistolets, Pikes, &c. or other Munition bellical whatsoever, for Daily, Weekly, or Monthly Wages, in any Times to come, without special Licence in Writ had of our Sovereign Lady, and Her Successors thereto. And Sir George Mackenzie, in his Observation on Act 2. James I. defines Rising in Arms thus: The Rising of Men in warlike manner, by Mustering them, or Forming them in Companies, or Swearing them to Colours. Nor are these Qualifications by themselves sufficient, unless there be a formidable Number: And therefore he cites the Case of Macleod of Affint, Feb. 2. 1674, where the Lords of Justiciary refused to sustain the Articles wherein it was libelled, the raising of Men, and disposing of them under Colours, to be relevant; except it were alledged, that they were an hundred Men or upwards, and were under Colours, or mustered under weekly or daily Pay.
 Whence it is evident, that the Rising in Arms must be by publick and notour Appearance of Companies in Arms, so as their Design and Opposition to Authority could not be doubted; whereof the least Shadow cannot be alledged in this Case.

3. Whereas the Libel bears further, That the Pannels did gather themselves together, with their Accomplices, in Arms, with Swords and Pistols, and other offensive Weapons, in an open Correspondence with the said Enemies and Invaders, at the very Time of the Invasion. It is answered, That the said Article anent Correspondence is not relevantly libelled; their being no particular Condescendance of any Acts of Correspondence pass'd betwixt the Pannels and the Enemy, as is necessary to be condescended on for inferring the Crime libelled. Correspondence with the Enemy, in the Common Law, is thus express'd; Quive hostibus nuncium literasve miserit, signumve dederit, seceritve dolo malo quo hostes consilio juventur. And no such Fact or Qualifications can ever be pretended, or alledged in this Case and their meeting together so few in Number of near Relations and Neighbours, as it were lawful for them to do at all times, so the accidental Circumstance of an imminent Invasion could never render the same unlawful. Nor could their Travelling together for some Space in the Country, be strained to any Design of encouraging Enemies, or to raise the Subjects in Rebellion; whilst they were no other ways appoint-appointed or attended, than as they (and others of their Character) do usually travel, in a most peaceable manner, without giving the least Occasion, by Word or Deed, to any Rebellion or Sedition. And as there was not then any Body of Men in Arms in the Kingdom, against Authority, to whom they could be imagined to resort; so it is an Evidence that they had no mind of Convocating themselves against Authority, that they did not use the Means in their Power, by convocating their Tenants and Followers in Arms, either for assisting themselves, or giving Countenance and Encouragement to others on any such Designs.

4. Whereas the Libel mentions, That the Pannels did openly drink to the good Health of their Master, as they called him; who could be none else but the Pretender; it is no ways relevant. 1. Because the drinking of any Person's Health is not a Crime, their being no Law against it. 2. There is no Person named, whose Health is said to be drunk; and therefore cannot infer any Crime. And the Gloſs put thereupon, That it could be no other but the Pretender, is only a Conjecture and uncertain Inference of the Pursuers; which can be no wise sufficient to fix a Crime upon others, who can only be answerable for what is clearly expreſs'd and declar'd by them, by plain Words, Writs, or Deeds.

It was reply'd for the Pursuer, 1. That the Libel was most relevant, in so far as it did expressly bear, That the Pannels did rise and continue in Arms, without her Majesty's Special Authority first interponed: And the said Act 5. Parl. 1. Car. II. declares it Treason to the Subjects, or any Number of them, more or less, upon any Ground or Pretext whatsoever, to rise and continue in Arms, without His Majesty's Special Authority. And the particular Qualifications and Circumstances of their said Rising in Arms, will appear from the Probation.

2. The Pannels rising in Arms, leaving their own Houses, and marching in a Body thro' the Shires of Stirling and Pertb. in Company with the other Persons mention'd in the Libel, whereof some have been since denounced for not Compearance, to underly the Law therefore; at the same time that the Nation was threatned by an Invasion of a French Fleet, with Land-Forces Aboard, cannot be understood to be upon any other Design, than on purpose to encourage and strengthen the Invaders, and in open Correspondence with them, especially whilst the Pannels can adduce no reasonable Cause for their so Convocating and travelling together; and this was sustain'd Treason in Caldwel's Case.

3. The Laws libelled on, do not only make actual Rising in Arms, and Levying War against the Sovereign, to incur the Crimes and Pains of Treason, but likewise any Attempt so to do: For any Attempt or Conatus in the Case of Treason, is to be punished with the same Pains as the consummate Crime, as the Law says, Eadem enim severitate voluntatem sceleris qua effectum puniri Jura voluerunt. And Attempts are reckon'd as Treason in the Acts above-mention'd.

4. The Libel bearing Art and Part, is sufficiently relevant, notwithstanding the Generality thereof, such Libels being expressly ordained to be relevant by the Act of Parliament 151. Parl. 12. Ja. 16th. So that no Objection can be sustained against the Libel as Irrelevant, upon the Account of the Generality thereof, since Art and Part is libelled; which takes off any Objection, for not particularly condescending upon the Pannels Accession to the Crimes libelled.

VOL. V.

It is Duplyed for the Pannels to the First, That albeit the Rising in Arms without Authority be mention'd in General, to infer the Crime of Treason, since the Law could not descend to every particular Qualification, that might happen to infer Rising in Arms to be Treason, but left the same to be determined by the Judges competent: Yet the Pursuer of a criminal Libel must adduce special Qualifications, and circumstantiate Matters of Fact, that may be sufficient to infer, That the Pannels did treasonably rise in Arms, or otherways the Libel cannot be sustain'd. For as it could not be allowed to libel in General, that a Person is guilty of Murder, so no more can it be allowed to libel in General, that a Person is guilty of rising in Arms without Authority; the Propositions in these Libels being equally founded in Law; but the Subsumption must be cleared and qualified by circumstantiate Matters of Fact, inferring the respective Crimes; and if it were otherways, these evident Inconveniences would follow.

As, 1. That the Pannels would be deprived of the Benefit of Exculpations, which could not easily be brought to meet with general Libels; whereas special circumstantiate Matters of Fact might have been more readily taken off by proper particular Grounds of Exculpation, whereby the Deeds condescended on, might be applied to other reasonable Causes, that might wholly exclude the animus delinquendi, or dolus, requisite in all Crimes.

2. This Inconveniency would likewise be inevitable, That the Assize would become Judge of the Relevancy, as well as of the Probation. For if the Libel bearing in General, the Pannels to be guilty of rising in Arms against Authority, should be sustain'd, and the Qualifications left to be determin'd by the Probation, then the Assize would be Judges both of the Relevancy and Probation; for they behoved to determine, whether the Qualifications arising from the Probation, did amount to a Rising in Arms, or other Crimes, generally mention'd in the Statute: whence it might come to pass, that Pannels might be put to the Knowledge of an Inquest upon irrelevant Crimes; and therefore Crimes should be particularly subsumed, as Sir George Mackenzie observes in his Criminals Tit. Libels. Page 465.

To the 2d. it's Duplyed, That whether the Pannels Travelling for some Space from their own Houses, either for Diversion or Business, in the most peaceable Manner imaginable, had happen'd in the Time in the threatned Invasion or not, could never alter the Nature of that Deed, since it cannot so much as be pretended, that they were versantes in illicito; the Travelling in such a peaceful Manner singly with Domestick Servants, being unquestionably allowed by Law. And this Defence of the Pannels Travelling in their usual Manner, and with their ordinary Equipage, was so evident of it self, that the Pursuers acknowledged there could nothing culpable be inferred from it at other Seasons; but that the Crime now insisted on, was founded, in that their Meeting and Travelling was the Time of the threatned Invasion, when a Fleet of Enemies Ships was upon the Coast. And yet the Libel does not bear, that the Pannels knew of any such Design, or that the French were actually upon the Coast; and without this Knowledge, the Circumstance which the Pursuers insist chiefly to make the Crime, was, as to the Pannels, no Circumstance at all. So that the Libel shortly resolves in the Pannels Travelling with

with their ordinary Equipage, after their usual way, in a peaceable Manner; which neither in common Sense, nor in the Construction and Interpretation of our Law, and Opinion of our Lawyers above-mention'd, can be pled a Rising in Arms against Her Majesty or Government, or give the Occasion of the least Suspicion of any Intention that way. Neither can Suspicions, albeit there had been more evident Grounds for them, be sufficient to infer a Crime; the Law saying expressly, That ex suspicionibus nemo est damnandus, Leg. 5. ff. de Pen. And whereas it is pretended, that the Pannels have given no reasonable Account of their Progress and March at that Time; and therefore leaves place for the Pursuers Conjectures; the same is no ways of any weight to fortify the Pursuers Libel; it being sufficient for the Pannels to alledge, That the meeting of a few Gentlemen, and Travelling with Swords and Pistols, as they were hitherto used, does not infer a Rising in Arms. And to pretend that the Pannels should give special Accounts of their Progresses, is plainly to found a Criminal Charge or Libel super inquirendis, and so expressly discharged by Law: And doubtless it is sufficient for the Pannels to say, that their Meeting or Travelling together with such small Retinue, and in such peaceable and unprovided Manner, could not give the least Jealousy to any Person whatsoever; and if this Defence were not sustained, the natural Liberty of the Lieges would be very much circumscribed; and no Man could be sure, but the Action of his Life which he intended should be most innocent, should be the most fatal, as concluding him under Treason, and the worst of Crimes. And the Practique in Caldwel's Case is greatly differenced from this, in that there was a considerable Body of Men with all sorts of Arms actually in Rebellion against the Government at the Time; and that Caldwel, with his Associates, likewise of a Considerable Number, had intercepted common Posts, and particularly some Letters to the Earl of Eglington, a Privy-Counsellor, which was an Overt-Act, and sufficiently declared their bad Design; besides these Sentences were reduced, and the Persons restored per modum Justitiarum.

To the 3d. it is Duplyed, That albeit it be generally received by Lawyers, that Attempt or Conatus in Treason is punishable as Treason; yet that is never to be understood of a naked Design or actus animi; the Law saying expressly, that Cogitationis pœnam nemo patitur Leg. 18. ff. de Pen. and neminem qui male facere voluit plesti equum est nisi quod factum voluit etiam fecerit. But that Voluntas or Conatus mention'd in Law, must break out into an external Act; if not consummating the intended Crime, at least in choating the same, so as to become a Deed obvious to the external Senses, before it can be subjected to the Censure of human Laws. And albeit Dolus or Propositum be requisite in all Crimes; yet not as it is latent in the Mind, but as it is express'd and declar'd by an external Act. And so Mattheus de Crim. in Proleg. says, Dolo contrahi crimen diximus, per dolum autem factum dolum intelligimus. As it is clear by the express Statutes libelled upon, particularly the said Act 2d. sess. 2. Parl. 1st Ch. II. That Treasonable Intentions should be expressed and declared by Writing, Printing, or advised Speaking, before the same can be said to have inferred the Pains mention'd in the Act; yea, even where there was Writing alledged upon; yet in Mr. Robert Caddel's Case, that was not found sufficient to infer the Crimes in the Statute, unless it should have been qualified, that the Writing was published, and out of the Writers's Hand, whereby the Attempt would become manifest; and in the Case of an Overt-Act, which was the Point upon which Balmerino's Trial proceeded; and without which, no Crime could have been found against him. And in the present Case, as the Pannels had truly no manner of ill Design, so no external Act whatsoever is, or can be condescended on, either of Word or Deed, that infers any Design of the Pannels to oppose Authority, or to act any thing contrair to Law, or their Duty to the Sovereign; for as they used their natural and innocent Liberty of Travelling in a peaceable Manner with their near Relations and Neighbours, for their Diversion or Business, so when they were called by Authority, they did not absent or withdraw themselves, but readily appeared and gave Obedience, upon the first Citation.

To the 4th. it is Duplyed, That the Libelling of Art and Part, is not sufficient to exclude the Objection upon the Generality of the Libel, because Art and Part relates to the particular criminal Facts, and Qualifications thereof libelled, and includes an Alternative, that the Person complain'd upon, was either Actor, or Art and Part of the criminal Facts and Deeds particularly libelled. Which general and indefinite Qualification of Accession, Law and Custom had not allowed, without a more special Condescendence of the Parties Accession to the Deeds libelled, which could only be certainly and distinctly known by the Probation: But still that does not take off the Necessity of special Condescendences of the Qualifications that make up the principal Crime libelled, without which Pannels could not have the Benefit of Exculpations; nor could the Relevancy be determined by the Judges, but remitted with the Probation to the Assize, which always has been cautiously shunned as of dangerous Consequence. And in the present Case, the sustaining of the Libel in the Generality thereof above-mention'd, would be a most dangerous Preparative; it being evident, that if a few Gentlemen, Meeting and Travelling together with their ordinar Retinue and Equipage, which is generally with Swords and Pistols, could be thought to fall under the Act of Parliament, of Rising in Arms without the Sovereign's Consent, no Gentleman in the Kingdom could be free from Grounds of a Criminal Process, if the bearing such Weapons should be construed a Rising in Arms; and few or many, making no Difference, as the Pursuer contends, it would necessarily follow, that two or three Persons meeting or Travelling with Swords or Pistols, might be liable to a Process of Treason, as rising in Arms without Authority; which were most absurd, and of dangerous Consequence to the Lieges. And as no Company can ever be found to have met and travelled in a more peaceable and inoffensive manner than the Pannels have done, doing no Injury by Word or Deed, to any Person whatsoever, and travelling in such a simple Manner, as did exclude all imaginable Jealousy of their having any Warlike Designs, or creating the least Disturbance to themselves or others, and giving a ready Obedience when called by Authority on a simple Citation: So they ought to be Assailized from the said groundless and irrelevant Libel.

The Pannels shall not take up the Lords Time in informing more particularly upon the other Circumstances of the Libel, such as drinking of Healths, Correspondence, and enticing of the Country; by reason that my Lord Advocate did not insist upon these in the Debate, but only pretended to have libelled them as Aggravations, which is of no Moment in a Process of Treason, and can be of no manner of Effect in this Case, where the Crime libelled is so manifestly elided. Sic subscribitur, Alexr. Macleod.

Information for her Majesty's Advocate against the Lairds of Keir, Touch, and others, now Prisoners in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh.

HER Majesty's Advocate, holding the Indictment as repeated, and here premised, before he offer to answer and remove the Exceptions and Objections made against it for the Defenders; takes leave to remember what cannot well be forgot, That the Occasion of the present Trial was an actual Invasion of an Enemy-Fleet with French, Irish and Popish Forces aboard, in March last, threatening an imminent Invasion upon our Coast, to destroy her Majesty, and all her good Subjects, and ruin our Religion, Laws and Liberties.

Which Invasion was the more formidable, that it was intended and carried on by Papists and French, and by Irish Papists, the Dregs of both, which are certainly the worst Characters that can be apprehended in an Enemy.

While we stood thus threatned by such Enemies that had risen up against us, and were ready to swallow us up quick, so that the Waters had overwhelmed us, and the Stream had gone over our Soul, if GOD had not appeared for us; and Her Majesty, by his Blessing upon her careful and most vigilant Conduct, interposed for our Delivery, and when the Enemy was upon our Coast, and ready to enter our Firth, and when all good Men were in the greatest Suspence of the saddest Apprehensions of what might ensue, by turning our Country at least to a Field of Blood, and Scene of all Confusions and Mischiefs: Yet there were found amongst us, even among Scots Protestants, a Knot of Men who may justly seem to have wished and longed for that which all Men besides feared.

It is now indeed made an Argument to exculpate, that they were so few; and yet it may far more reasonably to be wondered, that there was so much as one Man to be found of such a desperate Resolution and Practice.

The Five Gentlemen now in the Pannel, being of the Knot mentioned, so soon as this Invasion was noised abroad, and when it was brought just upon our Coast, then they think fit to leave their Houses, and going with their Horses and Servants, and all well armed with Swords and Pistols, and other invasive Weapons, they rise and continue in Arms, without any lawful Authority interposed: And thus appearing in Arms, and marching from Place to Place in several Shires, and for several Days and Nights, as it were in Correspondence with the foresaid Invaders, did what in them lay (if not to rise to their Assistance, at least) to disturb Her Majesty's good Subjects, from the Opposition and Defence that was at that Time so necessary.

It's true, when their Hopes were disappointed, then they shrunk home, and such of them as had more to lose than they knew how to save otherways, compeared and rendred when called; when others of them that had no more Guilt, but less to lose, thought fit to retire and abscond: Whereupon Her Majesty most justly ordered, that the Persons now in the Pannel should be brought to this present Trial.

The Indictment exhibit against them, founds, upon most plain and positive Laws and Acts of Parliament, That none rebel openly against the King's Person or Government; That none levy War and take up Arms against the King and His Government; And that for any of the Subjects, more or fewer, to rise and continue in Arms upon any Pretext, or to attempt the same without His Majesty's special Authority first interposed, it shall be High-Treason; and that if any levy War, or take up Arms against the King, or entice Strangers or others to invade, and express and declare such treasonable Intentions, he shall be adjudged a Traytor, and punished as in the Case of High-Treason. And then the Indictment subsumes in the very Terms of the Law, That at such a Time, and in such a Manner, and with the other Circumstances mentioned, the Defenders did actually rise and convene, and continue in Arms without Her Majesty's special Authority first interposed; which in Law is justly construed to be the Levying of War, and taking up Arms against Her Majesty, and did plainly appear to be in a real Correspondence with, and for the Encouragement of the French Invaders; whom thereby, and otherways they did entice, to the invading of Her Majesty's Dominions, and the destroying of Her and all Her good Subjects: Of which Crime the Defenders being Actors, Art or Part, ought to be punished with the Pains of Law.

To this Indictment the Defenders made Answer, denying the Crime libelled with all its Qualifications; that the Indictment is not relevant, in respect it doth not condescend upon any Overt-Act or Deed that can be stretched to infer the Crime, or any treasonable Intention; and that all the Acts of Parliament libelled upon, require such open Facts and Deeds; and the Act of Parliament, Car. II. Parl. 1. Sess. 2. requires expressly, That by Writing, Printing, Preaching, or other malicious and advised speaking, such treasonable Intentions should be expressed or declared; nothing of which can be found in this Case.

To which it is replied, 1. That it is granted, That neither inward Thoughts nor Intentions, unless some way expressed or declared, can be made criminal, and far less treasonable; but on the other Hand, when the Law and Acts of Parliament does set down a specifick palpable Deed, such as rising and continuing in Arms, which is visibly an open Overt-Act, and requires no more for the declaring of the Rebels Intention, save his so rising and continuing in Arms, without having Her Majesty's Authority interposed; what more can be required, either as to the Overt Act, since the Fact it self is truly and openly such; or as to the Certainty of the Parties Intention when the Law hath ascertained it, viz. By the want of Authority; which is plainly the present Case? But 2. It is to be adverted, That our old Laws libelled upon, do indeed bear open and notour Rebellion: As likewise, The levying of War against the King and His Person and Government: But these Laws having been found very liable to the very Exceptions that the Defenders now make against the Indictment, when in the Year 1661 this came to be considered, and the Parliament judged fit to ascertain and define the Crime of Treason, so as every Man might most plainly understand it, and that there could be no Place for any of the former Evasions: The Act of Parliament condescends upon rising and continuing in Arms, as the very open and Overt Act requisite to the Crime; and withal fixes the treasonable Intention, upon this one Qualification, That the rising and continuing in Arms, is without His Majesty's Authority interposed, a Negative that proves it self, and requires no other Evidence. 3. As to what the Act of Parliament, Car. II. Par. 1. Sef. 2. Cap. 2. requires, That such treasonable Intentions should be expressed and declared; these Words are plainly subjoined to a long Enumeration of several Points and Kinds of Treason, and are certainly only to be applied to the Cases wherein the Intention may be doubtful, but can never in any good Sense or Reason be applied to such Deeds as the Law itself declares to be open and to import the Intention, such as rising and continuing in Arms, levying of War, or taking up Arms, where both the Deed and the Intention are manifest, and by Law declared and condemned. And in effect to alledge, where there is an open rising in Arms, or a levying of War, or the Maintaining a Fort or Garrison, That yet the Intention should be desiderate, where the Law requires no more to prove, but that it is done without Authority, is visibly absurd.

Secondly, Where it is objected, that albeit rising and continuing in Arms without Her Majesty's Authority be undoubtedly Treason, yet it must still be qualified by some Circumstances of Fact, Word or Writ, to infer the Intention; and to libel rising in Arms is but general, and it ought to be cleared by some particular Fact and Deed libelled, to make the rising criminal. Thus the common Law says, Qui injussu principis bellum gesserit, delectumve habuerit exercitum Comparaverit, &c. And our Act of Parliament, Q. Mary, explains the Matter, viz. That no Man raise Bands of Men of Weir on Horse or Foot, with Pistols and other bellical Arms, for daily or Monthly Wages, without special Licence, &c.

To all which it is answered, that it is granted by the Defenders, that rising and continuing in Arms, if duly qualified to be against Her Majesty, is undoubtedly Treason: But then it is not as evident, that all the Qualification that the Act of Parliament requires, is, that the same be done without Her Majesty's Authority? So that where the Qualification is so plainly Defined, to require any farther, is to impose on the Law. It's true, that the Act Queen Mary, speaks of raising of Bands of Men of Weir, and keeping them under Pay; and the Common Law may also have something of that Nature. But if the Act of Parliament 1661, thought fit so far to secure the Prerogative as to cut short and forbid all rising in Arms without Her Majesty's Authority, under the Pain of Treason, is not this plain Law, which the Defenders could neither misken, nor ought to have transgressed?

The Case of Affint is much insisted on, That it was not found to be a treasonable Rising, unless there had been more than an hundred Men convened, and mustered under Colours and Pay. But 1. A Practick cannot change the Law. 2. The Reason of that Practick is manifest, viz. That Affints Convocation was covered with another Colour and Pretext, and was certainly not against the Government; and therefore the said Qualifications were required, which doth no ways hold in this Case.

For to deal plainly, and to cut off all the Defenders groundless Pretexts, that they were only innocently convened, that they had no Arms, but such as are ordinary and allowed to Gentlemen in their Travelling; that they were only a small Number of Friends and Neighbours for their Diversion and Recreation: That they had no Correspondence with the Invaders, tho' their meeting and travelling together happened about that Time: And lastly, that if they should be overtaken on the Fact and Deed libelled against them, none could be in Safety to travel with Arms, even in the smallest Company.

To all this it is answered, 1. For all that the Defenders have alledged or can alledge for Excuse, yet their meeting and marching in Arms, at the Time and Manner that they did, is generally under this Prejugee by all that ever heard it, that it was at least the height of Folly, and had the worst of Appearances.

But 2. If the Defenders would have the Deed to be considered with all its Circumstances, it is not declined. Now as to the Deed it self, it is open and palpable, viz. rising and continuing in Arms. 2. It has all the Qualification that Law requires to make it criminal, viz. That it was without Her Majesty's Authority being interposed. But 3. Admit of all the Circumstances that the Defenders can alledge for alleviating, are they not only bare Supposition and Question? What if they meet by Rencontre? What if they met for Diversion? Are not such Meetings ordinary? And what was acted by them against the Government? All which do not import so much as one positive colourable Excuse. Whereas to consider the Deed certainly condemned in Law on the other side, with its undeniable Circumstances, viz. That the Defenders left their own Houses, having no just Occasion to invite them abroad: That they met in such a Company as perhaps all of them never met before; that they met well mounted, and with Swords and Pistols of all sorts, better appointed than most Men that go to War; that they were thus well mounted and armed, beyond what the Law and Act of Parliament 1693, allows to Men of their Fashion, there being none of them qualified to the Government; that all this happened when the Invasion was generally known, and just upon our Coast: That they marched backward and forward for several Days and Nights, as it were hovering in expectation of what they look'd after: That they did not at all dissolve and go home, until their Hope of the Invasion was lost; and that since several of them have absconded. Can any Man lay and reflect upon these Things together, but he must say, That besides their being clearly Guilty in the Terms of Law as having risen and continued in Arms without her Majesty's Authority, which in the Construction of Law, is to levy War against Her Majesty, their Intention was as treasonable as the Law presumes: so that upon the whole, this Judgment may be both righteously and safely pass'd in this Matter, viz. That their rising and continuing in Arms at the Time and in the Manner, and with the other Circumstances libelled, without Her Majesty's Authority first interposed, was Treason, unless they could exculpate, by at least some colourable or probable Pretext, which they never can prove, or have so much as alledged.

Nor could a Judgment of this Nature so clearly founded, be of the least ill Consequence or Inconvenience, since every ordinary Meeting bears its own Excuse; nor can indeed a lawful Meeting of this Sort be found without Excuse. And further, it would secure the Government according to the true Intention of the Law, against all suspicious and evil Designs and Attempts in Time coming.

The

The Defenders object, That the Indictment doth not libel relevantly, as to the Point of Correspondence with the Invaders; which should be qualified by a Condescendence on the particular Acts of Correspondence; and, as the Common Law expresses it, That Hostibus nuncium literarum miserunt, signumve dederunt, feceruntque dolo malo quo hostes consilio juventur.

To which it is answered; If Correspondence with Invaders had been the principal Crime libelled, the Defenders might have contended for such a Condescendence quo modo they corresponded: But when the Correspondence is only libelled, viz. an open and real Correspondence, by their rising at the same Time in Arms without Authority, that a Foreign Enemy was actually invading: This real Correspondence, or this Correspondence in re ipsa, is more than sufficient to make out the Presumption of Law; viz. That their Rising and Continuing in Arms without Authority, was plainly against Authority. If at the Time of the Invasion, some Hundreds of disaffected Persons had got together in Arms; would it have been doubted, but that their getting together at that Time in Arms, without Her Majesty's Authority, was really to correspond with the Invaders, and to countenance and encourage them in their Invasion. If then all the Difference be, that the Defenders did convene in a smaller Number; it only remains to be considered, That the Act of Parliament doth expressly declare against any Number, their Rising and Continuing in Arms without Authority; and that the same is Treasonable; which fully reaches the Number libelled.

As to what is added, of their being so small a Number, and only armed in the ordinary Manner accustomed by Gentlemen Travellers; it is already answered, and withal it is certain, that the greatest Mischiefs may have their Rise from small Beginnings. And as for the Defenders, they were very early in their Appearance, and visibly did what in them lay, both to encourage the Invaders, and to raise an Insurrection in the Country: And it was only the Goodness of God, and her Majesty's vigilant Conduct, that cut off both their further Hopes, and the increasing of their Numbers; which might have been infallibly expected, if the Invasion had succeeded.

The Defenders take notice of that Part of the Indictment, which alledges, That they did openly drink the good Health of their Master, who could be none else but the Pretender; which they alledge is no ways relevant to infer the Conclusion of the Libel.

To which it is answered, That the foresaid Drinking having been only mentioned in the Libel, for a further Illustration of the Defenders Intentions, it is granted, that per se it is not relevant to infer a Crime. But, 2. Being joined with the other Circumstances above mentioned, even in its doubtful Sense, it cannot be denied to import a further Discovery of these Gentlemen's Intentions, in appearing and continuing in Arms without Authority; which (in Effect) is the principal Crime, sufficiently declared by the Act of Parliament itself, tho' it were not administrate by this and the other Circumstances above-mentioned.

The Defenders go on to resume and answer the Charge brought against them; but the whole of the Matter being above abundantly cleared, it may suffice to notice, that they still insist, That the Rising in Arms libelled without Authority, is but general, and so could not infer the Crime of Treason, unless more particularly qualified: Whereas it is certain, that the Rising in Arms is a specifick Act; and of the which, if libelled circumstantiately as to Time and Place, as it here is, makes a most particular Libel: and for qualifying the Intention of the Act, and of the Risers, all that the Law requires, is, That the rising and continuing in Arms, be without her Majesty's Authority first interposed; which, in the Construction of Law, is to levy War against her Majesty.

The Defenders alledge, That to libel rising in Arms in general, is no better than to libel Murder in general: But if Murder be libelled circumstantiately, as to the Person murdered, and the Time and Place; the Libel is no doubt particular and relevant, without any further Qualification. What then should hinder, why rising and continuing in Arms circumstantiately libelled as to Time and Place, and plainly qualified as the Law requires, (viz. without her Majesty's Authority) should not also be a particular and relevant Libel of Treason?

But the Defenders say, That by such a Libel they are deprived of the Benefit of Exculpation. But this is wholly groundless; it having been often said, That if the Defenders can but qualify any probable Pretext for their rising and continuing in Arms without Authority, to take of the Presumption of the Law, it should be admitted. But when they can qualify no Pretext, nor can assign the least probable Cause for their rising and continuing in Arms as they did, except it was to countenance Invaders, or to raise Insurrections within the Country; how is it possible, that this their rising in Arms without Authority, as is libelled, should not be Treason? Nor is there any thing here left to the Judgment of the Assize, save most plain and palpable Matter of Fact; viz. That the Defenders rose, and continued in Arms; which being qualified as the Law requires, viz. That it was without her Majesty's Authority, it inevitably presumes the treasonable Intention; which being further joined with the Circumstances mentioned in the Indictment, cannot but evince to all Men, That the rising and continuing in Arms without Authority, and in the Circumstances above-mentioned, was an Overt-Act of Rebellion; specially when nothing is, or can be adduced, to give it a more probable Interpretation.

The Defenders insist much, That they were not versantes in Illicito; That they only went out for Diversion, or Business, with their ordinary Arms and Servants: But what can be more Illicitum, than to rise and continue in Arms without Authority; the very Deed forbid by the Law as Treasonable? And what need of any further Qualifications of their Intention, since the Law makes without Authority to be sufficient? And the Indictment doth also superadd most pregnant Circumstances, to verify their ill Intention? which are not so much as offered to be cavilled, except by, What if this? or, What if that? which plainly signify nothing.

The Defenders seem to insinuate, That they did not so much as know there was an invading Fleet upon our Coast: But it is so notour, that at that Time the Invasion was universally known, and likewise signified by a Proclamation That this Alledgeance is manifestly disingenuous.

But the Defenders further alledge (Esso) That rising and continuing in Arms, as they did, was suspicious; yet Suspicions cannot found a Libel of Treason.

Treason. But the Defenders advert not, That it is not Matter of Suspicion that is objected, far less their travelling with their ordinary Horses, Arms and Equipage, as formerly they were wont; but plainly that at such a Time, when the Country was openly invaded by a foreign and most formidable Enemy, they, being never qualified to the Government should have run together in Arms, without her Majesty's Authority; which is all that the Law requires to make them guilty, and which in Effect, with the other Circumstances libelled, declares their treasonable Intentions to a Demonstration.

The Defenders say, That their Case differs from Caldwal's: But albeit they may vary in some Circumstances, yet it's certain, that as to the main, Caldwal and his Complices were found guilty of Treason, only for their raising of about Thirty or Forty, and continuing in Arms without Authority, when there was another Party in the Country engaged in an open Insurrection. So that the Defenders have in like manner risen and continued in Arms without Authority, when there was a far more dreadful Enemy imminent upon our Coast, cannot but fall under the same Construction. And that Caldwal's Process and Doom was afterwards reduced, signifies nothing; since it was reduced for Reasons wholly different and alien from the Case in Hand, and which are so well known, as they need not be repeated.

The Defenders do also endeavour to take off what was alledged from the Act of Parliament, That even the Attempt and Conatus in this Case is condemned, by telling us, that this Conatus doth also require an Overt-Act. But Esto, it be so; what more Overt-Act can be required, than open Rising in Arms? And what Doubt can there be of the Intention and Design, when both the Act of Parliament, and the other Circumstances of the Deed, do so fully clear it? And therefore it is in vain to notice either Caldwal's Case, wherein there was indeed no Sentence; or yet Balmerino's Case, where the Overt-Act was thought to be doubtful; when the rising and continuing in Arms is, in this Case, an Act both Overt in itself, and expressly defined to be such by the Act of Parliament.

The Defenders are at some Pains to make it believed, That the Libelling of Art and Part cannot sustain this Indictment. But, 1. The Advocate adheres to his Indictment, as libelled and qualified with Art and Part. 2. Though Art and Part be libelled, and the Act of Parliament makes it a Supplement for Relevancy in all Cases; yet her Majesty's Advocate finds no Necessity to enter further into that Debate, than to adhere as above; seeing that his Indictment is founded on clear Law, and that he as clearly subsumes in the Terms of Law; viz. The rising and continuing in Arms without her Majesty's Authority interposed; the Levying of War, and taking up Arms against her Majesty, and open Corresponding with her Majesty's Enemies, and our Invaders; and that not only by the abovementioned real Correspondence, but even by enticing them other ways to invade, as shall be proven, if needful. All which are too manifestly Acts and Deeds of Rebellion, to need the constructive Support of Art and Part, further than that Actor Art and Part, are perpetually connected together.

And therefore, upon the whole, since, as hath been said, the Country was (at the Time libelled) in the most imminent Hazard of a most destructive Invasion; and that at that very Time, the Defenders, to the great Surprize and Astonishment of all her Majesty's good Subjects, did flee out in Arms, and convene and march, and troop together in Arms, without her Majesty's Authority, which in Law is sufficient; and that with the other aggravating and most concludent Circumstances above libelled, which were not offered to be taken off with any rational or probable Pretext: It appears to be without Question, That the Defenders fall under all the Conclusions of the Libel, and ought to be made liable in the Pains thereof.

CLXXXIV.

CLXXXIV. *The Trial of HENRY SACHEVERELL, D. D. upon an Impeachment before the House of Lords for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, February 27, 17⁰⁰, 9 Ann. **

The First Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, for the Trial of Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, in the manner following.

The Lord Chancellor's Gentlemen-Attendants, two and two.

The Clerks of the House of Lords, with the two Clerks of the Crown in the Courts of Chancery and King's-Bench.

The Masters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges.

The Peers Eldest Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

The Yeoman-Usher of the House.

The Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod.

Then the Peers, two and two, beginning with the youngest Barons.

The Serjeant at Arms, with his Mace.

Then one of the Heralds.

Then the Lord Chancellor alone.

The Lords being seated in the Place for that Purpose prepared in Westminster-Hall, and the Commons in a Committee of the whole House being in the Seats prepared for them, and the Managers for the House being at their Lordships Bar, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamations as follow.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes! Our Sovereign Lady the Queen doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes! Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, come forth, save thee and thy Bail, or thou forfeitest thy Recognizance.

Then Doctor Henry Sacheverell came to the Bar and kneeled; his Counsel, viz. Sir Simon Harcourt, Mr. Dodd, Mr. Phipps, Mr. Dee, and Dr. Henschman, standing near him at the Bar; and rising again by Direction of the Lord Chancellor, the Serjeant at Arms again made Proclamation as follows.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes! Whereas a Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors has been exhibited by the House of Commons, in the Name of themselves and all the Commons of Great Britain, against Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity; all Persons concerned are to take Notice that he now stands upon his Trial, and they may come forth, in order to make good the said Charge.

Lord Chancellor. Doctor Sacheverell, it is needless to give you any Directions concerning your Behaviour during the Time of your Trial, or the ordering your Defence, because the Lords have not only allowed, but assigned you the Counsel you desired, some both of the Civil and Common Law, who will be able to direct and advise you, not only in the Substance, but Form of your Defence. The Lords have also made an Order for summoning all such Witnesses as you have propounded to appear for you. And that you might be the better able to provide for your Defence, you have had your Liberty on the first Application for it, and giving Security for your Appearance; you have also had all the Time you thought fit to desire, in order to prepare for your Defence: So that you ought ever to remember, that their Lordships have used towards you all the Indulgence you could reasonably expect.

Then the Clerk, by Direction of the Lord Chancellor, read the Articles of Impeachment, Doctor Sacheverell's Answer, and the Replication of the House of Commons, as follows.

ARTICLES exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament assembled, in the Name of Themselves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, against Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

WHEREAS his late Majesty King William the Third, then Prince of Orange, did with an armed Force undertake a glorious Enterprize for delivering this Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power; and divers Subjects of this Realm, well affected to their Country, joined with and assisted his late Majesty in the said Enterprize: And it having pleas'd Almighty God to crown the same with Success, the late happy Revolution did take Effect, and was established. And whereas the said glorious Enterprize is approved by several Acts of Parliament, and amongst others, by an Act made in the first Year of the Reign of King William and Queen Mary, intitled, An Act, declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown; and also by one other Act made in the same Year, intitled, An Act for preventing vexatious Suits against such as acted in order to the bringing in their Majesties, or for their Service; and also by one other Act made in the same Year, intitled, An Act for appropriating certain Duties for paying the States General of the United Provinces, their Charges for his Majesty's Expedition into this Kingdom, and for other Uses: And the Actings of the said well-affected Subjects in Aid and Pursuance of the said Enterprize, are also declared to have been Necessary, and that the same ought to be justified. And whereas the happy and blessed Consequences of the said Revolution are, the Enjoyment of the Light of God's true Religion established among us, and of the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom; the Uniting her Majesty's Protestant Subjects in Interest and Affection, by a legal Indulgence or Toleration granted to Dissenters; the Preservation of her Majesty's jeſty's Sacred Perſon ; the many and continual Benefits ariſing from her Maſteſty's wiſe and glorious Adminiſtration, and the Proſpect of Happineſs for future Ages, by the Settlement of the Succeſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, and the Union of the two Kingdoms. And whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, did, by their Addreſs of the Seventeenth of December, in the Year of our Lord One thouſand ſeven hundred and five, lay before her Maſteſty the following Vote or Reſolution, viz. That the Church of England, as by Law eſtabliſhed, which was reſcued from the extremeſt Danger by King William the Third of glorious Memory, is now, by God's Bleſſing, under the happy Reign of her Maſteſty, in a moſt ſafe and flouriſhing Condition ; and that whoever goes about to ſuggeſt or inſinuate that the Church is in Danger under her Maſteſty's Adminiſtration, is an Enemy to the Queen, the Church, and the Kingdom : And by their ſaid Addreſs did humbly beſeech her Maſteſty to take effectual Meaſures for making the ſaid Vote or Reſolution publick, and alſo for puniſhing the Authors and Spreaders of ſuch ſeditious and ſcandalous Reports ; and on the twentieth Day of the ſame December her Maſteſty was pleaſed to iſſue her Royal Proclamation accordingly. Yet nevertheleſs the ſaid Henry Sacheverell preach'd a Sermon at the Aſſizes held at Derby, Auguſt the Fifteenth, in the Year of our Lord One thouſand ſeven hundred and nine, and afterwards published the ſame in Print, with a Dedication thereof ; and the ſaid Henry Sacheverell alſo preach'd a Sermon at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, before the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London, on the fifth Day of November laſt, being the Anniverſary Thankſgiving to Almighty God for the Deliverance from the Gunpowder-Treafon, and for beginning the late happy Revolution, by giving his late Maſteſty a ſafe Arrival here, and for completing the ſame, by making all Oppoſition fall before him, till he became our King and Governor ; which ſaid Sermon he the ſaid Henry Sacheverell likewiſe published in Print, with a Dedication thereof to Sir Samuel Gerrard, Baronet, Lord Mayor of the City of London ; and with a wicked, malicious, and ſeditious Intention to undermine and ſubvert her Maſteſty's Government and the Proteſtant Succeſſion as by Law eſtabliſhed ; to defame her Maſteſty's Adminiſtration ; to aſperſe the Memory of his late Maſteſty ; to traduce and condemn the late happy Revolution ; to contradict and arraign the Reſolutions of both Houſes of Parliament ; to create Jealouſies and Diviſions amongſt her Maſteſty's Subjects ; and to incite them to Sedition and Rebellion.

ARTICLE I.

He, the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, in his ſaid Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, doth ſuggeſt and maintain, That the neceſſary Means uſed to bring about the ſaid happy Revolution, were odious and unjuſtifiable : That his late Maſteſty, in his Declaration, diſclaimed the leaſt Imputation of Reſiſtance : And that to impute Reſiſtance to the ſaid Revolution, is to caſt black and odious Colours upon his late Maſteſty and the ſaid Revolution.

ARTICLE II.

He, the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, in his ſaid Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, doth ſuggeſt and maintain, That the ſoſaid Toleration, granted by Law, is unreaſonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable : And aſſerts, That he is a False Brother with relation to God, Religion, or the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conſcience : That Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbiſhop Grindall, whom he ſcurriloſly calls a False Son of the Church, and a Perfidious Prelate, to the Toleration of the Genevian Diſcipline : And that it is the Duty of ſuperior Paſtors to thunder out their Eccleſiaſtical Anathemas againſt Perſons intitled to the Benefit of the ſaid Toleration ; and inſolently dares, or deſies, any Power on Earth to Reverse ſuch Sentences.

ARTICLE III.

He, the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, in his ſaid Sermon preach'd at St. Paul's, doth falſely and ſeditiouſly ſuggeſt and aſſert, That the Church of England is in a Condition of great Peril and Adverſity under her Maſteſty's Adminiſtration ; and in order to arraign and blacken the ſaid Vote or Reſolution of both Houſes of Parliament, approved by her Maſteſty as aforeſaid, he, in Oppoſition thereto, doth ſuggeſt the Church to be in Danger ; and, as a Parallel, mentions a Vote, That the Perſon of King Charles the Firſt was voted to be out of Danger at the ſame Time that his Murderers were conſpiring his Death ; thereby wickedly and maliciously inſinuating, That the Members of both Houſes, who paſſed the ſaid Vote, were then conſpiring the Ruin of the Church.

ARTICLE IV.

He, the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, in his ſaid Sermons and Books, doth falſely and maliciously ſuggeſt, That her Maſteſty's Adminiſtration, both in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution : And that there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State who are False Brethren, and do themſelves weaken, undermine, and betray, and do encourage, and put it in the Power of others, who are profeſſed Enemies, to overturn and deſtroy the Conſtitution and Eſtabliſhment ; and chargeth her Maſteſty, and thoſe in Authority under Her, both in Church and State, with a general Male-Adminiſtration : And, as a publick Incendiary, he perſuades her Maſteſty's Subjects to keep up a Diſtinction of Faſtions and Parties ; inſtils groundleſs Jealouſies, fomentſ deſtructive Diviſions among them, and excites and ſtirs them up to Arms and Violence : And that his ſaid malicious and ſeditious Suggeſtions may make the ſtronger Impreſſion upon the Minds of her Maſteſty's Subjects, he the ſaid Henry Sacheverell doth wickedly wreſt and pervert divers Texts and Paſſages of Holy Scripture.

All which Crimes and Miſdemors the Commons are ready to prove, not only by the general Scope of the ſame Sermons or Books, but likewiſe by ſeveral Clauſes, Sentences, and Exprefſions in the ſaid Sermons or Books contained ; and that he the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, by preaching the Sermons, and publiſhing the Books aforeſaid, did abuſe his Holy Function, and hath moſt grievouſly offended againſt the Peace of her Maſteſty, her Crown and Dignity, the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom, and the Proſperity and good Government of the ſame. And the ſaid Commons, by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter, any other Article or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Henry Sacheverell ; and alſo of replying to his Answers, or any of them, and of offering Proofs of all the Premises, or of any of them, and of any other Article or Impeachment that shall be exhibited by them, as the Case, according to Course of Parliament, shall require, do pray that he the said Henry Sacheverell be put to answer to all and every the Premises; and that such Proceeding, Examination, Trial, Judgment, and exemplary Punishment, may be thereupon had and executed, as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

The ANSWER of Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, to the ARTICLES exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeffes in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

THE said Henry Sacheverell, saving to himself all Advantages of Exception to the said Articles for the Generality, Uncertainty, and Insufficiency thereof, and of not being prejudiced by any Words or want of Form in this his Answer, admits, That at the Request of George Sacheverell, Esq; High Sheriff of the County of Derby, he preached a Sermon at the Affizes held for that County, on the 15th Day of August, one thousand seven hundred and nine; and that at the Desire of the Right Honourable Sir Samuel Garrard, Baronet, Lord Mayor of the City of London, he also preached a Sermon at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, before the said Lord Mayor, and the Aldermen and Citizens of London, on the fifth Day of November last; and that he caused the said Sermons to be printed: But denies that he preached, or caused the same to be printed or published, with any such wicked, malicious, or seditious Intent, as in the Preamble of the said Articles is affirmed; the said Henry Sacheverell having been induced to print the Sermon he preached at Derby, at the Request of the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury for that County, to whom he humbly presumed to dedicate the same, as the most publick Acknowledgment he was capable of making, for the peculiar Honour he had received by their publick Approbation of that Sermon. And the said Lord Mayor having been pleased to express his good Liking of the said Sermon preached at St. Paul's, the said Henry Sacheverell, at his Request, caused the same to be printed, with a Dedication thereof to him. And for Answer to the said Articles, humbly saith, Answer to First Article.

To the first Part of the first Article, the said Henry Sacheverell denies, That, in his said Sermon preached at St. Paul's, he doth suggest and maintain, that the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution were odious and unjustifiable. Nor doth he in any Part of that Sermon affirm any Thing concerning the necessary Means used to bring about the happy Revolution. The said Henry Sacheverell is so far from reflecting on his late Majesty, or the happy Revolution, that he endeavours, in that Sermon, to clear the Revolution, and his late Majesty, from the black and odious Colours which their greatest Enemies has endeavoured to cast upon both.

And as to that Part of the said Article, whereby the said Henry Sacheverell is charged with suggesting and maintaining, that his late Majesty, in his Declaration, disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance; the said Henry Sacheverell doth acknowledge himself to have made such Suggestion; and declares, that he made it not in Dishonour, but in Vindication of his said Majesty. The Resistance the said Henry Sacheverell represents the late King to have disclaimed, being such a Resistance as tended to the Conquest of this Realm, as plainly appears from that Part of his late Majesty's Declaration which is referred to, and verbatim set forth at the Bottom of the same Page, in which he mentions his late Majesty's disclaiming any such Imputation.

Whether the said Henry Sacheverell was mistaken or not, in expressing himself as if the late King had disclaimed any Imputation of Resistance, when he the said Henry Sacheverell meant thereby, that the late King disclaimed the Imputation of a Design of Conquest, he humbly conceives, such a Suggestion by him, plainly designed for the Honour of the late King, cannot in any reasonable Construction be thought a Reflection on his said Majesty, or deemed any Crime or Misdemeanor.

For the further Justification of what the said Henry Sacheverell said in Reference to his late Majesty's having disclaimed any the least Imputation of Resistance, the said Henry Sacheverell humbly observes, That in his late Majesty's Declaration, the following Passages are contained: We have thought fit to go over to England, and to carry over with us a Force, sufficient, by the Blessing of God, to defend ourselves from the Violence of Evil Counsellors. — We think fit to declare, that this our Expedition is intended for no other Design, but to have a free and lawful Parliament assembled.

As to the last Charge in the said Article, the said Henry Sacheverell denies, That he doth in his said Sermon suggest and maintain, that to impute Resistance to the said Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the said Revolution. The Persons whom the said Henry Sacheverell, in his Sermon describes, as casting black and odious Colours upon his late Majesty and the Revolution, are not those who impute Resistance to the late Revolution, of whom the said Henry Sacheverell affirms nothing, but those new Preachers and new Politicians, who teach, in Contradiction to both Gospel and the Laws, that the People have the Power vested in them, the Fountain and Original of it, to cancel their Allegiance at their Pleasure, and to call their Sovereign to Account for High Treason against his Subjects; nay, and to dethrone and murder him for a Criminal, as they did the Royal Martyr by a Judiciary Sentence; who are Maintainers of anti-monarchical Schemes, and of such damnable Positions as are, by the Laws of Church and State, condemned for Rebellion and High Treason; and who urge the Revolution in Defence of such Principles. Unless, therefore, those who impute Resistance to the Revolution, be the same with those new Preachers and new Politicians above specified, the said Henry Sacheverell affirms nothing concerning them.

The said Henry Sacheverell, upon the strictest Search into his said Sermon preached at St. Paul's, doth not find that he hath given any the least colourable Pretence for the Accusation exhibited against him in this first Article, but barely by his asserting the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supream Power upon any Pretence whatsoever; for which Assertion, he humbly conceives he hath the Authority of the Church of England, which in divers Passages of her Homilies, too large and too numerous to be here specified, but by the said Henry Sacheverell ready to be produced, hath taught and incul-inculcated this Doctrine, as founded on the Word of God; particularly in the second Part of the Sermon of Obedience, contained in the former Book of Homilies, set forth in the Time of King Edward the VIth, where are these Words: Here good People, let us all mark diligently: It is not lawful for Inferiors and Subjects in any Case to resist and stand against the superior Powers; for St. Paul's Words be plain, that whosoever withstandeth, shall get to themselves Damnation; for whosoever withstandeth, withstandeth the Ordinance of God.

Which said Book of Homilies is affirmed in one of the Thirty Nine Articles of Religion, which concern the Confession of the true Christian Faith, to contain a godly and wholesome Doctrine, and is ordered to be read in Churches, by the Ministers, diligently and distinctly, that they may be understood of the People. And the said Henry Sacheverell, in further Maintenance of the said Doctrine and Position, contained in the Book of Homilies, and of the Authority of those Books, saith, That by an Act of Parliament made in the thirteenth Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled, An Act for the Ministers of the Church to be of sound Religion, 'tis enacted, That no Person should thereafter be admitted to any Benefice with Cure, except he should first have subscribed the said Articles in the Presence of the Ordinary, and publicly read the same in the Parish Church of that Benefice, with Declaration of his unfeigned Assent to the same. And that by an Act made in the fifth Year of her present Majesty's Reign, intituled, An Act for securing the Church of England as by Law established, it was enacted, That the said Act, made in the said thirteenth Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, should remain and be in full Force for ever; and be inserted in express Terms in any Act which should be made for ratifying the Union of the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland; and therein declared to be an essential and fundamental Part thereof. And the said Act was accordingly inserted in express Terms, in an Act for the Union of the two Kingdoms; and thereby ratified and declared to be an essential and fundamental Part thereof.

And the said Henry Sacheverell doth further humbly insist, and is advised, that the afore said Assertion is agreeable to, and warranted by, the Common Law of England, and divers Acts of Parliament now remaining in full Force.

The said Henry Sacheverell doth with all Humility aver the Illegality of Resistance on any Pretence whatsoever to be the Doctrine of the Church of England, and to have been the general Opinion of our most orthodox and able Divines, from the Time of the Reformation to this Day: This Doctrine hath, in the most solemn Manner, been taught in that University, whereof he hath been for more than twenty Years a Member; this hath been often, with publick Approbation of each House of Parliament, preached and printed; and in Terms of greater Force than any used by the said Henry Sacheverell, hath by the Right Reverend Fathers of our Church, dead and living, been avowed and maintained.

And the said Henry Sacheverell was the rather induced to preach against the Doctrine of Resistance of the supreme Power upon the fifth Day of November, because on that Day the Church commemorates our Deliverance from the traitorous Attempts of rebellious Papists, and because the Lawfulness of resisting the supreme Power, was originally a Popish Doctrine; for which Reasons, as he humbly conceives, the Rubrick of the Office appointed for that Day, by her late Majesty Queen Mary (of blessed Memory) directs, That after the Creed, if there be no Sermon, shall be read one of the six Homilies against Rebellion.

Whilst therefore the Church of England as by Law established, is in a safe and flourishing Condition under her Majesty's happy Administration, whilst Popish Tenets are by all good Protestants condemned and abhorred, whilst the Laws of this Realm continue in their full Force and Vigour, the said Henry Sacheverell humbly hopes, that a dutiful Son of that Church, a sincere Protestant, and a faithful Subject of her Majesty, shall not suffer for asserting the Doctrine of Non-resistance of the supreme Powers. But if this Doctrine be declared erroneous, and it should please God that he should suffer for asserting it, he trusts that God will enable him to shew his steady Belief of this Doctrine, by a meek and patient Resignation to whatever shall befall him on that Account.

Answer to the Second Article.

To that Part of the second Article which charges, that he the said Henry Sacheverell doth suggest and maintain, that the Toleration granted by Law is unreasonable, and the allowance of it unwarrantable; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That, upon the most diligent Enquiry, he hath not been able to inform himself that a Toleration hath been granted by Law; but admits, that an Act did pass in the first Year of King William and Queen Mary, intituled, An Act for exempting their Majesties Protestant Subjects dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties of certain Laws. Which Exemption the said Henry Sacheverell doth not any where maintain or suggest to be unreasonable; or that the Allowance of it is unwarrantable; but hoped, that he had prevented any such Misapprehension, by declaring his sincere Meaning in these Words, contained in his Sermon preached at St. Paul's; — I would not be here misunderstood, as if I intended to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence which the Government hath condescended to give them, which I am sure all those who wish well to our Church, are ready to grant to Consciences truly scrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law has prescribed them.

If there be any other Expressions concerning Toleration, which may seem to carry a dubious Sense in any other Parts of his Sermon, he hopes that they will not be applied to the Exemption granted by Law, but will be interpreted agreeably to his avowed Approbation of that Law.

And to such Part of the said second Article as charges, that the said Henry Sacheverell asserts, That he is a false Brother with Relation to God, Religion, or the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; he the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That he having so plainly declared himself in Favour of the Exemption granted by Law, when he blames those, who, upon all Occasions, defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, cannot be thought to reflect on the Defenders of that legal Exemption or Indulgence which he himself approves and defends: He doth indeed suggest it to be one Part of the Character of a false Brother, upon all Occasions to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; and to excuse the Separation, lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high. Which universal Defence of Toleration, and Excuse of Separation, attended with the laying the Fault of such Separation tion upon the true Sons of the Church, are by him jointly mentioned in one and the same Clause of the Sentence, and in one and the same Branch of the Character. So that his Reflection doth not extend to all who defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, much less to those who defend the Exemption granted by Law to Protestant Dissenters; but to such only, who at the same Time they defend universal Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, do also excuse the Separation, and lay the Fault thereof upon the true Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high. And these he did then, and still doth, with all Humility, conceive to be justly blameable, and, if Members of this Church, to be false Brethren.

And as to that Part of the second Article, whereby the said Henry Sacheverell is charged with asserting, That Queen Elizabeth was deluded by Archbishop Grindall, to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline; he the said Henry Sacheverell saith, he humbly conceives he hath good Authority from the Histories and Monuments of those Times for such Assertion; but whether he hath, or hath not, he humbly apprehends such Assertion to be no Proof of his maintaining or suggesting, That the Exemption of Protestant Subjects dissenting from the Church of England from the Penalties of certain Laws, granted by an Act made in the first Year of the Reign of King William and Queen Mary, (which Exemption he supposes to be intended by the legal Indulgence or Toleration granted to Dissenters, mention'd in the Preamble of the Articles, and by the Toleration granted by Law, mentioned in this second Article) is unreasonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable. For he is humbly of Opinion, that there is a wide and manifest Difference between a Toleration of the Genevian Discipline, and an Exemption of Protestant Dissenters from the Penalties of certain Laws; between a Toleration allowed merely by the Regal Power, and an Exemption granted by Act of Parliament; which Exemption he is so far from thinking unreasonable or unwarrantable, that from the bottom of his Heart he wisheth it, under the same Restrictions and Limitations, extended to all her Majesty's Protestant Subjects throughout the whole Kingdom of Great Britain.

And as to such Part of the second Article, whereby the said Henry Sacheverell is charged with scurrilously calling the said Archbishop Grindall a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate; the said Henry Sacheverell humbly hopes, that any harsh Expressions he hath used concerning that Prelate, may be rather excused, because the said Archbishop having permitted Innovations to be obtruded on the Church, did thereby incur the high Displeasure of so good and pious a Princess as Queen Elizabeth, by whose Order he was suspended, and continued under such Suspension to the Day of his Death. However, the said Henry Sacheverell presumes, that no Words spoken of an Archbishop above one hundred and twenty Years since deceased, will, in Construction of Law, amount to an High Crime and Misdemeanor.

And as to such Part of the second Article, whereby the said Henry Sacheverell is charged with maintaining, That it is the Duty of superior Pastors to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons entituled to the Benefit of the said Toleration; he the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That he doth not maintain or suggest that it is the Duty of superior Pastors to thunder out Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons entituled to the Benefit of the Toleration; which Persons, where he speaks of such Anathema's, are neither by him mentioned nor intended; but if the Expressions by him unapplied to any, must be determined to any one sort of Persons, he humbly conceives, that the Connection of his Discourse will determine them to those schismatical and factious Persons, who take Permission for Power, and advance Toleration immediately into an Establishment; and such schismatical and factious Persons, he humbly apprehends, are not the Persons entituled to the Benefit of the Act of Exemption, which was designed only to give some Ease to scrupulous Consciences in the Exercise of their Religion.

And as to the last Part of the second Article, whereby the said Henry Sacheverell is charged with insolently daring or defying any Power on Earth to reverse such Sentences; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That the Sentence which he the said Henry Sacheverell dares any Power on Earth to reverse, is such, and such only, as is ratified in Heaven; and such Sentence he still affirms to be by any earthly Power irreversible; and hopes it will not be thought Insolence in him to affirm, what he conceives would be Blasphemy in any one to deny: And doth further acknowledge himself firmly to believe, that some Sentences pronounced by the Pastors of the Church are ratified in Heaven; and that some Persons exempted from Punishment by the particular Laws of the Land, may yet, by the Laws of Christ, be justly liable to such Sentence; and that Schism, or a causeless Separation from a Church imposing no sinful Terms of Communion, is a Sin, which exposes the Persons guilty thereof to the Censures of the Church.

Answer to the Third Article.

As to so much of the third Article, as charges the said Henry Sacheverell, That he doth falsely and seditiously suggest and assert, that the Church of England is in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under her Majesty's Administration; and that, in order to arraign and blacken the said Vote and Resolution of both Houses of Parliament, approved by her Majesty, he, in Opposition thereto, doth suggest the Church to be in Danger; the said Henry Sacheverell denies that he hath either asserted or suggested the Church of England to be in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under her Majesty's Administration; but he doth freely acknowledge, that he hath in his Sermon suggested, That when National Sins are ripened up to a full Maturity, to call down Vengeance from Providence on a Church and Kingdom, debauched in Principles, and corrupted in Manners, and instead of the true Faith, Discipline and Worship, given over to all Licentiousness both in Opinion and Practice, to all Sensuality, Hypocrisy, Lewdness, and Atheism, then we, (that is evidently) all the Members of such a Church or Kingdom, are in Danger in such deplorable Circumstances. And this Suggestion of Danger arising to a Church and Kingdom from Vice and Infidelity, he humbly presumes is not opposite to the Vote of the two Houses, or Seditious, but entirely agreeable to what is solemnly declared in an Act of Parliament made in the ninth and tenth of his late Majesty King William the Third, for the more effectual suppressing of Blasphemy and Profaneness; wherein it is affirmed, That many Persons had of late Years openly avowed and published many blasphemous and impious Opinions, contrary to the Doctrines trines and Principles of the Christian Religion; greatly tending to the Dishonour of Almighty God, which might prove destructive to the Peace and Welfare of this Kingdom: And he conceives, that since the passing that Act, the detestable Crimes for the effectually suppressing of which that Act was intended, have greatly increased. And the said Henry Sacheverell saith, the Suggestions by him made of Dangers arising to us from Vice and Infidelity, he apprehends to be in no wise more seditious or repugnant to the Vote of the two Houses approved by her Majesty, then the like Suggestions occurring in the solemn Prayers of the Church authorized by her Majesty, and frequently used before each House of Parliament; wherein we beseech God, that no Sedition may disturb the State, nor Schism distract this Church; and that he would give us Grace seriously to lay to Heart the great Dangers we are in by our unhappy Divisions.

And as to so much of the said third Article, whereby 'tis charged, That the said Henry Sacheverell, as a Parallel, mentions a Vote, That the Person of King Charles the First was voted to be out of Danger, at the same Time that his Murderers were conspiring his Death; thereby wickedly and maliciously insinuating, that the Members of both Houses who passed the said Vote, were then conspiring the Ruin of the Church; he the said Henry Sacheverell doth say, That he doth not draw any Parallel between the Vote concerning the King's Person, and the late Vote of the two Houses, which he neither there, nor elsewhere in his Sermon, mentions: But had he suggested one Vote to be parallel to the other, which he hath not, yet would not he thereby have wickedly and maliciously insinuated, that the Members of both Houses, who passed the late Vote, were then conspiring the Ruin of the Church; but would only have intimated, that as some Persons were conspiring the Murder of the King, whilst others, no way privy to their wicked Intentions voted his Person to be out of Danger; so when the two Houses voted the Church of England to be in no Danger under her Majesty's Administration, there might be some others who were conspiring the Ruin of the Church; and many others, who, by their Vice and Infidelity, were drawing down God's Vengeance both on Church and Kingdom.

As the Vote of both Houses, made four Years ago, did concern those only who did then insinuate the Church of England to be in Danger under her Majesty's Administration; so it cannot, he presumes, affect those who do now suggest the Christian Faith, which is the Foundation upon which every Christian Church stands, to be endangered by those atheistical and irreligious Principles which are daily from the Press propagated amongst us, notwithstanding the Provision made by the said Act for suppressing Blasphemy and Profaneness: So that the said Henry Sacheverell thinks, that he might with Truth affirm, (as he did in his Sermon preached at Derby) That there were never such outrageous Blasphemies against God and all Religion, Natural as well as Revealed, vented publicly with Impunity, in any Christian Church or Kingdom in the whole World, as at present in our own; of which Assertion the said Henry Sacheverell is ready to produce undeniable and ample Proofs, if called thereto.

Answer to the Fourth Article.

As to the fourth Article, it contains several Charges of a very high and criminal Nature, of which the said Henry Sacheverell knows his Heart to be entirely innocent; and he observes with Comfort, That whereas in the former three Articles he is said to have maintained or asserted, as well as to have suggested, the Doctrines and Things therein laid to his Charge, in this fourth Article he is not accused of maintaining and asserting, but barely suggesting what is therein contained: And he humbly hopes, that bare Suggestions or Insinuations, could they with any Colour or Probability be made out, as he is fully satisfied they cannot, will not, under the most mild and gracious Government, (at a Time when several new Laws have been made for securing the Liberties of the Subject) by your Lordships, the great Guardians of our Laws and Liberties, be adjudged sufficient to involve an English Subject in the Guilt and Punishment of high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

To the several Parts of the said fourth Article, the said Henry Sacheverell doth in all Humility answer: As to such Part thereof whereby it is charged, That the said Henry Sacheverell, in his said Sermons and Books, doth falsely and maliciously suggest, that her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs tends to the Destruction of the Constitution; he the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That he hath not made any mention, in either of his Books or Sermons, of her Majesty's Administration in Ecclesiastical or Civil Affairs, or of her Ministers: So far is he from suggesting that her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution, that amongst the inestimable Blessings which are owing to our Deliverance annually commemorated on the fifth of November, he reckons this to be one, That her Majesty, the good and pious Relict of the Royal Family, sits now happily upon the Throne of her Ancestors; and prays that God may long preserve Her, for the Comfort and Support of the Church; and professeth, that what he spoke proceeded from a tender Concern for her Majesty's Person and Government: And in the Dedication also of his said Sermon preached at St. Paul's, solemnly declares, as he did before in his Discourse, That his only Aim and Intention was earnestly to contend for the Safety, Rights, and Establishment of her Majesty, together with those of the Church.

And as to such Part of the said fourth Article, whereby it is charged, That the said Henry Sacheverell doth suggest, that there are Men of Characters and Stations in the Church who are false Brethren; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That the false Brethren, as described by him in his Sermon, are either those who propagate false Doctrines, or who give up the Discipline and Worship of the Church, or who are for a Neutrality in Religion, or who wish well to the Church of England, and are ready to sacrifice their Persons and Estates in their Vindication, but do not shew their Zeal in the Communion of the Church, as well as for it, in obeying her Precepts, as well as defending her Rights. These being the several sorts of false Brethren enumerated by the said Henry Sacheverell, if he should have suggested that there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, (Words by no Means restrained to the highest Characters and Stations) to whom the Denomination of false Brethren, in some or more Senses of that Word, as by him interpreted, doth belong, he humbly hopes that such Suggestion would not be deemed False, Malicious, or highly Criminal.

And as to such other Part of the said fourth Article, whereby it is charged, That the said Henry Sacheverell doth suggest, That there are Men of Characters and Stations in the Church and State, who do themselves weaken, undermine, and betray, and do encourage and put it into the Power of others who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment; the said Henry Sacheverell denieth that he suggesteth any such Things concerning Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State. Where he speaks of those who weaken, undermine, and betray, and encourage and put it in the Power of our professed Enemies to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment, there Men of Characters and Stations are not mentioned by him; and where he mentions Men of Characters and Stations, twelve Pages afterwards, the only Place wherein he mentions them, there he speaks nothing of weakening, undermining and betraying, or encouraging and putting it in the Power of our professed Enemies to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment: And hopes therefore that he shall be no ways answerable for a supposed Reflection, which depends upon the Conjunction of Passages so widely distant from, and so little relating to each other. The Weakners, Underminers, and Betrayers of our Constitution, and the Encouragers to whom the said Henry Sacheverell doth in any Part of his Sermon refer, will, he presumes, upon a candid Examination of those Passages, appear to be one of these three Sorts of Persons; either, First, such as by their Writings endeavour to subvert the Foundation of our Church and State; or, Secondly, such, whether Writers or others, who are for a Latitudinarian Heterogeneous Mixture of all Persons of what different Faith soever, uniting only in Protestancy, which would let into her Bowels those who neither believe her Faith, own her own Mission, submit to her Discipline, or comply with her Liturgy; which he afterwards styles the Model of an universal Coalition; or, Thirdly, those occasional Conformists, who have so far eluded the Corporation and Test Acts, by their abominable Hypocrisy, as to have undermined the Foundations, and endangered the Government, by filling it, (as far as they could) with its professed Enemies, that is, with themselves. Of all these, and their Encouragers, the said Henry Sacheverell confesses himself to have suggested that they do, in his Opinion, weaken, undermine, and betray the Constitution: But that either these, or their Encouragers, are Men of Characters or Stations in the Church or State, he hath not any where suggested.

And as to such other Part of the said fourth Article, which charges the said Henry Sacheverell with charging her Majesty, and those in Authority under her, both in Church and State, with a general Male-Administration; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That he abhors the Thoughts of bringing any Charge against her sacred Majesty, whom he never mentions, but in Terms of the profoundest Duty and Respect. Nor doth he tax those in Authority with a General, or with any Male-Administration; which is a Word he hath never used, nor (as far as he can find) any other Word or Words by which the Thing is imply'd. So far is the said Henry Sacheverell from making any undutiful Reflections upon her Majesty or her Administration, that in the several Writings that he has published, since her happy Accession to the Throne, particularly in one which is an avowed Defence of her Title to the Crown, and Justification of her entering into a War with France and Spain, he hath expressed himself with the most hearty and loyal Zeal for her Majesty's Person, Government, and Administration.

And as to such other Part of the said fourth Article, whereby it is charged, That the said Henry Sacheverell, as a publick Incendiary, persuades her Majesty's Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Factions and Parties; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That he is so far from being guilty of this Charge, that in his said Sermon he invites the Separatists to renounce their Schism, and come sincerely into the Church; and complains of those who have wil-lainously divided Us with the knavish Distinctions of High and Low Church-Men, and wishes we may be one Fold under one Shepherd; and that all those invidious Distinctions that now distract and confound Us, were lost, so that we might be terrible, like an Army with Banners, to our Enemies, who could never break in upon such an uniform and well compassed Body.

And to such other Part of the said fourth Article, as chargeth, That the said Henry Sacheverell instills groundless Jealousies, and foment destructive Divisions among her Majesty's Subjects; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, That in his said Sermon, he, on the contrary, rebukes and condemns those, who, by false Insinuations, and raising groundless Jealousies and Fears, embroil the Publick, and bring it into Confusion.

And as to such other Part of the fourth Article, whereby it is charged, That the said Henry Sacheverell excites and stirs up her Majesty's Subjects to Arms and Violence; the said Henry Sacheverell saith, God forbid that he should be guilty of so heinous a Crime, who asserts the utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power upon any Pretence whatsoever; which Assertion he conceives to be the chief, if not only Ground of the Charge exhibited against him in the first Article.

In Confutation of this Charge, he begs Leave to recite one Passage out of his Sermon preached at Derby in the following Words: We may be Partakers of other Mens Sins, if we do not, to the utmost of our Power, endeavour to prevent or obstruct their Commission, when they manifestly endanger the Good of the Publick: As we are Members of any Government, or Society, we are all obliged in Point of Honour, Interest and Conscience, to maintain its Security, promote its Welfare, and guard it against factious Designs, or seditious Conspiracies, that may threaten its Constitution, discompose its Peace, or violate and subvert its Laws. God and Nature have invested every Subject from his Cradle, with a Commission to engage, discover and disappoint the Enemies of his Church and Country; and he that is either privy to, industriously conceals, or any way abets their schismatical, illegal or rebellious Enterprizes, both in the Eyes of human as well as divine Laws, is an Accomplice and Partaker in the Guilt, a Traytor to God and his Prince, a Patron and Protector of Injustice, and a common Adversary to himself as well as all Mankind. And the said Henry Sacheverell hopes, what he hath said in the Dedication of the same Sermon, That there are not wanting some to preach the Truth, and others to support it, at the Expence of their Lives and Fortunes, will not be construed as exciting her Majesty's Subjects to Sedition and Rebellion; since that Truth which he commends some for preaching, and others for supporting, is by him opposed to the Attempts of those who betray and run down the Principles and Interests of our Church and Constitution ; and since, he there deservedly commends the High Sheriff of that County, on the Account of his steady Loyalty and Zeal to serve her Majesty and the Government, for which he hath been so remarkably distinguished.

In the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, he doth indeed excite Christians to put on the whole Armour of God, as wrestling, not only against Flesh and Blood, but against Principalities, against Powers, against the Rulers of the Darknes of this World, against spiritual Wickedness in high Places. But he hath learned from the same St. Paul, That the Arms of Resistance taken up by the Subjects against the higher Powers, are no Part of the spiritual Armour ; and the Principalities and Powers by him mentioned, being plainly distinguished from Flesh and Blood, cannot, he thinks, be so far misinterpreted, as to be understood of earthly Potentates and Rulers.

And as to so much of the said fourth Article, whereby it is charged, that he the said Henry Sacheverell doth wickedly wrest and pervert divers Texts and Passages of Holy Scripture, that his said malicious and seditious Suggestions may make the stronger Impression upon the Minds of her Majesty's Subjects ; the said Henry Sacheverell says, That having no malicious or seditious Suggestions to imprint, he could not intend to wrest any Passages of the Holy Scripture to that wicked Purpose. Hard is the Lot of the Ministers of the Gospel, if when they cite the Word of God in their general Exhortations to Piety and Virtue, or in their Reproofs of Mens Transgressions, or where they are lamenting the Difficulties and Conflicts with which the Church of Christ, whilst Militant here on Earth, must always struggle, the several Texts and Passages by them cited, shall be said to have been by them meant of particular Persons and Things, and shall be construed in the most Criminal Sense, and be made by such Construction one Ground of an Impeachment for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

And as to all other Matters and Things in the said Articles contained, and not herein before particularly answered unto, the said Henry Sacheverell saith, he is not Guilty of them, or any of them, in Manner and Form as the same are charged upon him in and by the said Articles ; and humbly submits himself to your Lordships Judgment.

HENRY SACHEVERELL.

The Commons Replication to the Answer of Doctor Henry Sacheverell.

THE Commons have considered the Answer of Henry Sacheverell, Doctor in Divinity, to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled ; and observe, that there are many Things in it not warranted by the Course of Proceedings upon Impeachments, foreign to the Charge of the Commons, unbecoming a Person impeached, and plainly designed to reflect upon the Honour of the House of Commons in this Proceeding, for which they might demand your Lordships immediate Justice.

But the Commons being sensible that the Nature of the Crimes whereof he stands impeached, and the Necessity of bringing him to a speedy and exemplary Punishment, require that all Occasions of Delay should be avoided, and not doubting that your Lordships will in due Time vindicate the Honour of the Commons, and the Justice of their Proceedings, the Commons do aver their Charge against the said Henry Sacheverell for High Crimes and Misdemeanors to be true, and that the said Henry Sacheverell is Guilty in such manner as he stands impeached, and that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge against him at such convenient Time as shall be appointed for that Purpose.

Lord Chancellor. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed with your Evidence.

Mr. Attorney Gen. MY Lords, by Command of Sir J. Mountague. THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, in Parliament assembled, we appear in Behalf of all the Commons of Great Britain, to make good the Impeachment against the Prisoner at the Bar, Doctor Henry Sacheverell.

The Misdemeanors he stands accused of are specified in the Articles which have been just now read to your Lordships, and the Facts there charged, are laid to have been done with a wicked, malicious, seditious Intention, to undermine and subvert her Majesty's Government, and the Protestant Succession as by Law established ; to defame her Majesty's Administration ; to asperse the Memory of his late Majesty King William ; to traduce and condemn the late happy Revolution ; to contradict and arraign the Resolution of both Houses of Parliament ; to create Jealousies and Divisions among her Majesty's Subjects ; and to incite them to Sedition and Rebellion.

My Lords, if the Charge is made good (as I am apt to think it will) I may presume to say, no Words can either aggravate or alleviate the Offence.

My Lords, our Proofs in this Case will arise from Evidence which cannot be liable to the Imputation of being over-awed by the Weight of the Prosecutors, or corrupted or perverted ; for out of his own Mouth we shall charge him, and by his own Words and Sermons we shall convict him.

My Lords, I can with Truth say, That it is no small Trouble to the Commons of Great Britain, to have this Occasion of coming in this Manner before your Lordships : Could they have satisfied themselves that her Majesty's Honour, the Safety of her People, and the Protestant Succession as by Law established, were not highly concerned to bring this Man to speedy Justice, they could very willingly have spared your Lordships this Trouble.

But when they considered of what Import it was to the Nation, how much it concerned the very Being of our Constitution, to discountenance and put an End to such Sort of seditious Proceedings as the Doctor and some others of his Brethren have been lately practising in divers Parts of the Kingdom, they could not think otherwise than that it was a Matter fit for the Grand Inquest of the Nation to take Notice of : And finding it to be a Cause of so great Moment to the Publick, they judged it fit to be taken under their own Management, and not trust it to the Decision of any inferior Tribunal. And, my Lords, it must be agreed that your Lordships are the only proper Judges, when the whole Commons of Great Britain find it necessary to be the Prosecutors ; nor can Doctor Sacheverell have any just Cause to complain of this manner of Proceeding, when it gives him so publick an Opportunity of defending himself (if his Innocence can clear him) ; and what can he desire more, when he lies

lies under so heavy an Accusation, than to have your Lordships for his Judges, who have already shewn your great Indulgence to him, by allowing him (as the noble Lord from the Woolpack just now observ'd) all the Advantages a Man under his Circumstances can ask, or desire to have?

My Lords, This Prosecution took its Rise from a Complaint that was made in the House of Commons the thirteenth of December last, of two Books which had been lately printed and published under the Name of Doctor Henry Sacheverell. The Books being delivered in, several Paragraphs were read; and by divers Passages, too many for me now to enumerate to your Lordships, it did plainly appear that both Books did contain very scandalous and seditious Matter, highly reflecting upon the Queen and Her Administration.

Hereupon the Doctor was ordered to attend; which he did accordingly the next Day, and at the Bar of the Commons House own'd and avow'd both Books to be his; That they were Sermons he himself had preached; and that he had caused them to be printed and published.

After such a Confession, Your Lordships may imagine Her Majesty's Dutiful Commons did express their just Repentments of the great Wrong and Injuries that were done to her Majesty, and all that were in Authority under Her; and immediately ordered this Impeachment.

Your Lordships will perceive, by Perusal of the Sermons and Epistles Dedicatory, that the Design and Drift of the same is to possess the People with strange Notions, and terrible Apprehensions of the Danger they are in, by a general Male-Administration of the Publick Affairs both in Church and State.

That both these Sermons were preached upon Publick Occasions; and had, since the Printing thereof, been handed about with more than ordinary Application.

One of these Books is intitled [The Communication of Sin,] being a Sermon preached at the Affizes held at Derby in August last: And because the Doctor thought he had not said enough against the Queen and Her Government in the Sermon, he affixes a Dedication to it, wherein he affirms, That the Principles of our Church and Constitution are shamefully betrayed and run down: That both are persecuted, on the one Side by rude and presumptuous Insults, and base undermining Treachery on the other; and that this Persecution is carried on by associated Maligants.

The other Sermon was preached at St. Paul's London, on the Fifth of November, which is a Day set apart for a general Day of Thanksgiving, for two very great Deliverances vouchsafed to this Nation, by the Discovery of the Gun-Powder Plot, and the Arrival of his late Majesty King William, to redeem us from Popish Tyranny and Arbitrary Power.

My Lords, When ye come to hear this Sermon read, I am confident, that it must appear very strange to find, that when there were two such memorable Occasions for the Doctor to have set forth his Eloquence in a Thanksgiving Sermon, he should in great Measure pass by both the Businesses of the Day, and entertain his Audience with a long Harangue of the deplorable Condition the Church was in; not so much from Papists, (the avowed Enemies of the Church) as from her pretended Friends, as he calls them, the false Sons of the Church, who were crept into her Bowels, and shewn themselves to be perfidious Brethren, by defending Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and favouring the Dissenters.

And to shew his little Liking of the great Work which was begun to be wrought on that Day by the Arrival of His late Majesty, the chief Turn of his Discourse is to cry up Non-Resistance and Passive Obedience.

And to make it most evident, that what he said of Non-Resistance, was to cast black and odious Colours upon the Revolution; he lays down a General Position, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to make Resistance to the Supreme Power; which Supreme Power, by other Passages, he explains to be the Regal Power.

And being apprehensive that every one that heard him talking in that manner against Resistance, would see plainly he was censuring and condemning the Means that brought about the Revolution, and being desirous to cast as heavy Reflections as he could upon the Memory of King William, he asserts, That the Prince of Orange, in his Declaration, utterly disclaimed all manner of Resistance.

My Lords, Every Body knows, that knows any thing of the Revolution, That the Prince of Orange came over hither with an armed Force; and that in several Paragraphs of his Declaration, (the Doctor speaks of) His late Majesty invites and requires all Peers of the Realm, both Spiritual and Temporal Lords, all Gentlemen, Citizens, and other Commoners, to come in and assist him, in order to the executing that Design he had then undertook, against all that should endeavour to oppose him.

Therefore it must be accounted very ridiculous for the Doctor to advance such a Position, if he had no further Meaning in it, than to give an Account of the Prince of Orange's Design in coming over here into England.

And this will make it necessary for your Lordships to consider what is the true Meaning of this Assertion: Is it not plainly to make the Prince of Orange say one thing, and at the same time do directly another? And can this be done with any other Design, than to asperse the Memory of the late King William?

Then as to his Discourse concerning Passive Obedience and Non-resistance, in such Latitude as is there mention'd; what could it tend to, but to cast Reflections upon that Resistance, which was the Means which brought about the Revolution?

For was there any Occasion at that time to be so earnest to cry down Resistance, and preach up Passive Obedience?

Can any one pretend to say, there were any Symptoms of Discontent throughout the Nation, in any Parts thereof?

No: To our Comfort be it spoken, no Reign, no Age, no History, can give a better Account of the good Dispositions of the People to their Sovereign. Therefore since the Preaching these Doctrines was needless, it does favour of some wicked Design, to be talking so unseasonably of this Subject.

If what the Doctor very frequently asserts in this Sermon be true, That all are false Sons of the Church, who assisted in bringing about the Revolution, or that joined in the Opposition that was made to the Encroachments which were begun by evil Ministers in the Reign of King James II. against our Religion and Liberties; let the Doctor a little consider, how far his Character of a False Brother may be carried!

Every Body knows, that liv'd in those Days, that the Body of the Clergy of the Church of England made a noble Stand against the Encroachments which were then making, and appear'd as active as any of the Laity.

And was it not by their Writings, Preaching, and Example, that the Nobility and Gentry were animated to maintain and defend their Rights, Religion and Liberties? And as an undoubted Monument that this was the Sense of the whole Kingdom at the Time of the Revolution, it is enter'd in the Journal of the House of Commons, on the First of February, 1688.

That the unanimous Thanks of the House was given, Nemine Contradicente, to the Clergy of the Church of England, for the great Service they had done their Religion and Country, by the Opposition they had made to the Execution of the Ecclesiastical Commission, and their refusing to read the King's Declaration for a Toleration, which was then founded upon the dispensing Power.

And how did the Archbishops receive the Message that was sent them upon this Occasion, that they might communicate that Resolution to the Clergy in their respective Dioceses?

Our Journals tell us, That Mr. Levison Gower the next Day acquainted the House of Commons, that he had attended the two Archbishops, according to Order, with the Thanks of the House; and that Archbishop Sancroft, and the then Archbishop of York, returned their Thanks to the Commons for themselves, and in Behalf of all their Clergy, for their favourable Vote.

Your Lordships see, the Commons were then happy enough to be thought favourable to the Clergy of the Church of England; and yet those very Commons were the Men who passed the Toleration-Act, for exempting Protestant Dissenters from the Penalties of certain Laws, as one of the most necessary Acts for the Good of the Kingdom.

And were they not encouraged to go about that Charitable Work, by the Petition of the seven Bishops, presented to King James; wherein they acquainted him, That it was not for want of a due Tenderneſs to Dissenters, which made them refuse reading his Declaration for Toleration to Dissenters; in relation to whom, they were willing to come to such a Temper as should be thought fit, when the same came to be considered in Parliament.

But now the same hath been considered in Parliament, and the Toleration hath been settled and established by the Legislative Authority of the Kingdom, and hath been ratify'd and approv'd of in his Reign, by Her Majesty and both Houses of Parliament; Doctor Sacheverell belike disapproves of it, and is pleased to tell us in a most extraordinary Manner, That a Man must be very weak, or something worse, that thinks or pretends the Dissenters are to be gained by any other Grants and Indulgences, than giving up our whole Constitution: And he that recedes the least Tittle from it, to satisfy and ingratiate with these clamorous, insatiable, Church-devouring Malignants, knows not what Spirit they are of.

After such an ample Declaration of his Opinion, what fatal Consequences will attend the granting Indulgences to Dissenters; Can the Doctor imagine, that his saying, in his Answer to the Articles, That he intends not to cast the least invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government has condescended to give them, will take off the hard Censures he hath pass'd upon Dissenters?

And, my Lords, if an Archbishop, who hath been dead almost a hundred and twenty Years, cannot be permitted to rest quiet in his Grave, but must have foul Aspersions cast upon his Memory, as being a false Son, and a perfidious Prelate of the Church, for interceding (as Doctor Sacheverell says) with Queen Elizabeth for the Dissenters in those Days: What must the present Archbishops and Bishops of our Church expect from Doctor Henry Sacheverell, if they do not thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Dissenters as often as the Doctor shall think there is Occasion for them?

My Lords, I perceive the Doctor hopes to save all he hath said against Toleration to Dissenters, by a nice Distinction he hath hit upon between an Indulgence and a Toleration.

Therefore he tells your Lordships, That upon the most diligent Enquiry, he hath not been able to inform himself that a Toleration hath been granted by Law.

Can the Doctor pretend to say, that this Word Toleration has never been made use of to express the Religious Liberty and Indulgence that is granted and allow'd to Dissenters? If we wanted Authorities to justify the Use of the Word, after the Doctor has made use of it in the same Sense over and over, in many Passages in his Sermons, as will be taken Notice of by the Gentlemen that are to make good the second Article, the Doctor might be put in Mind, that Her Majesty in Her Speech from the Throne, on the 17th of December 1705, hath been pleased to declare, That she will inviolably maintain the Toleration.

My Lords, As the Time was most unseasonable for the preaching such Doctrines as these, so the Place was very improper for a Lecture of Politicks: For your Lordships do perceive this latter Sermon, which was preached on the fifth of November last, was preach'd in the great Metropolis of this Kingdom, before the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London; from whose steady Loyalty to Her Majesty, and firm Affections to the Revolution, such vast Sums have been contributed for carrying on this long War against France, which hath proved so fatal to the French King, and other Enemies of this Kingdom.

And what more likely to give a fatal Wound to the publick Credit at this Time, than such Doctrine, which tends to the Overthrow of all the Acts of Parliament which have been made in Support of this Constitution?

And how strange an Attempt was it for the Doctor to preach against the Revolution and this Government, before those Citizens who owe the Restoration of their Charters, and all their Franchises and Immunities to it?

But, to do Justice to the Doctor, he in his Answer denies he hath said any thing of the Means which brought about the Revolution.

And, if your Lordships can believe him, he says, he has endeavour'd to vindicate the Revolution from the black and odious Colours the Enemies of the Revolution would throw both upon that and his late Majesty.

To what End and Purpose then are these Doctrines preach'd with so much Vehemence at this Time, unless it be to reflect backwards upon what was done at the Time of the Revolution?

There is certainly no Occasion to preach Non-resistance to her Majesty's loyal and dutiful Subjects, who have never shewn the least Inclination to give Disturbances to this present Government.

Was there ever known a Time, in which there was so universal an Agreement in all Ranks and Degrees

Degrees amongst us? Does not every one almost strive to shew their Zeal and Affection for Her Majesty and Her Government? If there be any that are less quiet than their Neighbours, we shall find them amongst the Friends of Doctor Sacheverell, who are professedly no Friends to the Revolution. Nothing is more certain, than that all that are not satisfied with what was done at the Time of the Revolution, must be Enemies to the present Establishment: And 'tis from this Source, all these Declamations against Men of Character and Station, both in Church and State, do proceed.

But I would have the Doctor consider, that we have Laws to punish Spreaders of false News, and horrible Stories, of the great Men and great Officers of the Kingdom; and 'tis to put a Stop to these malicious Practices now on Foot, that this Delinquent is now brought to this Bar.

When we shall have read our several Proofs, which will justify every Particular charged on the Doctor in the Articles of Impeachment, the Commons will not doubt of your Lordships Judgment against this Defendant.

Mr. Lechmere. MY Lords, I am commanded to assist in stating to your Lordships the Grounds of the Charge of the Commons, and the Nature and Tendency of the Crimes now before you, in Judgment.

Your Lordships have had open'd to you an Impeachment of the Commons of Great Britain: The Subjects of both Nations had an equal Concern in that which is the Ground of it: They are happily united in this Prosecution; and the common Interest of your Lordships, and us all, is inseparable in its Event.

I need say no more to your Lordships of the greatness of this Cause; not for the Person of the Offender, but for the high Importance of those Matters which he has presumed to draw in Question.

The Commons, on their Part, have been exceedingly careful, in every Step of this Proceeding, that it should receive a Deliberation suitable to the Weight of the Cause, and the Dignity of the Commons; and they observe it to your Lordships, with great Satisfaction, That by your ready Concurrence, no Difficulties have arisen to delay or discourage their Impeachment. They ascribe this to a Desire in your Lordships, equally with themselves, to cultivate a good Correspondence on so important an Occasion, and to that due Regard your Lordships shew to the Course of Impeachments, the ancient Right, and great Security of the Commons.

In framing their Charge, the Commons have thought fit, by a Preamble to their Articles, to lay before you the Grounds of their Accusation, in Terms the most cogent and expressive; to the End your Lordships might have early and perfect Notice of the Points on which the Commons intended to proceed; that your Lordships, and the whole Kingdom, might know the unanimous and hearty Zeal of the Commons, to assert the Justice of the late happy Revolution, and the Foundations of Her Majesty's Government and Administration; and that the Judgment of the Commons, on this weighty Occasion, might stand fully on the Records of Parliament, and be transmitted to all Posterity.

Your Lordships will observe, in reading their Evidence, many Things excepted to by the Commons, precedent to the Ground of their first Article; but you will soon perceive, that all Parts of the Design of the Prisoner center in that. They could not therefore have acquitted themselves, if they had not made that their Foundation: Being firmly convinced, they never can have the Honour and Justice of that glorious Work too much at Heart; nor be too jealous of those, who under any Pretences, though never so specious, shall attempt to lessen it. And when they consider the certain Dependence that the Justice of the late Revolution itself must have upon the Steps that led to it, they can have no doubt but your Lordships will think him equally Criminal, who condemns the Means by which it was effected.

My Lords, The necessary Means, (which is the Phrase used by the Commons in their first Article) are Words made choice of by them with the greatest Caution. Those Means are described (in the Preamble to their Charge) to be, That glorious Enterprize, which his late Majesty undertook with an arm'd Force, to deliver this Kingdom from Popery and arbitrary Power; the Concurrence of many Subjects of the Realm, who came over with him in that Enterprize, and of many others of all Ranks and Orders, who appeared in Arms in many Parts of the Kingdom, in Aid of that Enterprize.

These were the Means that brought about the Revolution, and which the Act that passed soon after, declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown, intends, when his late Majesty is therein called the glorious Instrument of delivering the Kingdom; and which the Commons, in the last Part of their first Article, express by the Word Resistance.

But the Commons, who will never be unmindful of the Allegiance of the Subjects to the Crown of this Realm, judg'd it highly incumbent upon them, out of regard to the Safety of Her Majesty's Person and Government, and the antient and legal Constitution of this Kingdom, to call that Resistance the necessary Means; thereby plainly founding that Power, of Right and Resistance, which was exercised by the People at the Time of the happy Revolution, and which the Duties of Self-preservation and Religion called them to, upon the Necessity of the Case; and at the same time effectually securing Her Majesty's Government, and the due Allegiance of all Her Subjects.

Your Lordships will find, That the Prisoner, in his Sermon preached at St. Paul's, has asserted a Doctrine in direct Defiance and Contradiction of that Resistance used to bring about the Revolution; when he affirms the utter Illegality of Resistance, on any Pretence whatsoever, to be a Fundamental of our Constitution: And, as your Lordships will hear it fully made out from the Proofs, by those Gentlemen to whom that Part is assigned, he has also plainly declared himself, that even that Resistance used at the Time of the late happy Revolution, is not to be excepted out of his fundamental Rule.

My Lords, when a Preacher of the Gospel, and a Minister of the Church of England, even under this happy Establishment, shall thus publicly condemn the Foundations on which it stands, in Defiance of her Majesty and the great Council of the Nation then sitting in Parliament; it becomes an indispensable Duty upon us, who appear in the Name and on the Behalf of all the Commons of Great Britain, not only to demand your Lordships Justice on such a Criminal, but clearly and openly to assert our Foundations.

I crave Leave to remind your Lordships of the Condition of Things in both Kingdoms, immediately preceding the late Revolution: The Case is stated and recorded, between the late King James and the Subjects of both Kingdoms, in the several Declarations of the Rights of both Nations made by them at that Time.

I shall forbear to aggravate the Miscarriages of that unhappy Prince, further than by saying, That it is declared in the Preamble to the Bill passed in England, That by the Assistance of evil Counsellors, Judges and Ministers, employ'd by him, he did endeavour to subvert and extirpate the Protestant Religion, the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, in the several Instances there enumerated. And in that passed in the Kingdom of Scotland, it stands declared, That, by the Advice of evil Counsellors, he did invade the fundamental Constitution of that Kingdom, and alter'd it from a Legal limited Monarchy, to an arbitrary despotick Power.

Your Lordships, on this Occasion, will again consider the antient legal Constitution of the Government of this Kingdom; from which it will evidently appear to your Lordships, That the Subjects of this Realm had not only a Power and Right in themselves to make that Resistance, but lay under an indispenfible Obligation to do it.

The Nature of our Constitution is that of a limited Monarchy, wherein the supreme Power is communicated and divided between Queen, Lords, and Commons, tho' the executive Power and Administration be wholly in the Crown. The Terms of such a Constitution do not only suppose, but express an original Contract, between the Crown and the People; by which that supreme Power was [by mutual Consent, and not by Accident] limited and lodged in more Hands than one: And the uniform Preservation of such a Constitution for so many Ages, without any fundamental Change, demonstrates to your Lordships the Continuance of the same Contract.

The Consequences of such a Frame of Government are obvious: That the Laws are the Rule to both, the common Measure of the Power of the Crown, and of the Obedience of the Subject; and if the executive Part endeavours the Subversion, and total Destruction of the Government, the original Contract is thereby broke, and the Right of Allegiance ceases: That part of the Government thus fundamentally injured, hath a Right to save or recover that Constitution, in which it had an original Interest.

Nay, the Nature of such an original Contract of Government proves, That there is not only a Power in the People, who have inherited its Freedom, to assert their own Title to it, but they are bound in Duty to transmit the same Constitution to their Posterity also.

'Tis mis-spending your Lordship's Time to illustrate this: 'Tis an eternal Truth, essential to the Government itself, and not to be defaced, or destroyed, by any Force or Device.

That the Rights of the Crown of England are legal Rights, and its Power stated and bounded by the Laws of the Kingdom; That the executive Power and Administration itself is under the strictest Guard, for the Security of the People; and that the Subjects have an Inheritance in their antient fundamental Constitutions, and the Laws of the Land, appears from every Branch of this Government. 'Tis the Tenor of all Antiquity; our Histories and Records afford innumerable Proofs of it: And when your Lordships look back on the History of Magna Charta alone, you can't doubt of the Sense of our Ancestors, that they were Masters of Franchises that were truly their own, and which no earthly Power had Right to extort from them. Many others, of incontestable Authority, are those valuable Relicks, which our Popish Ancestors have left us, as Proofs of the Freedom of our Constitution, of the constant Claims they made, both in and out of Parliament, to their Inheritance in their Laws, against the Encroachment of arbitrary Power; and when the last Extremity call'd them to it, they never fail'd to vindicate them by the Arms of Resistance.

"Such was the Genius of a People, whose Government was built on that noble Foundation, not to be bound by Laws, to which they did not consent; that, muffled up in Darkness and Superstition, as our Ancestors were, yet that Notion seem'd engraven on their Minds, and the Impressions so strong, that nothing could impair them."

Upon the Reformation of Religion, when all foreign Power was abolished, and the Supremacy of the Crown was restor'd to its Height by many Acts of Parliament, your Lordships will always find Declarations at the same Time made of the Rights of the People; particularly that of the 25th of H. VIII. where 'tis said, That the Realm of England is free from any Man's Laws, but such as have been devised, made and ordained within the same, for the Wealth of it; or such other, as the People of the Realm have taken at their free Will and Consent, and by long Use have bound themselves to, as the antient established Laws of the Realm, and none otherwise.

Your Lordships will, I doubt not, consider those Laws made at that Time, to be fresh and remarkable Declarations, and Ratifications of the original Contract.

This excellent Constitution of our Government has been, thro' many Struggles, preserv'd from that Time to this, and the true Spirit of the English Nation still kept alive, down to the Times of the late happy Revolution; at which Time the Danger being imminent, not only to the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, but to the Protestant Religion, THE ANTIENT VIRTUE OF THE ENGLISH NATION EXERTED ITSELF, AND SHONE OUT IN ITS FULL LUSTRE, IN THAT GLORIOUS WORK.

The many Laws pass'd since, more particularly those for the Settlement of the Crown and Succession, are so many repeated Declarations of their late Majesties, and her Majesty now on the Throne, together with the representative Body of the Nation, in Confirmation of their antient Constitution. Nay, my Lords, we have higher Testimonies to appeal to; the many glorious Successes with which God Almighty has blessed the Arms of her most Sacred Majesty, employ'd in Defence of the Arms of Resistance, are so many Testimonies from Heaven in our Vindication.

Your Lordships take notice on what Grounds the Doctor continues to assert the same Position in his Answer. But is it not most Evident, that the general Exhortations to be met with in the Homilies of the Church of England, and such like Declarations in the Statutes of the Kingdom, are meant only as Rules for the Civil Obedience of the Subject to the legal Administration of the supreme Power in ordinary Cases? And it is equally absurd, to construe any Words in a Positive Law to authorize the Destruction of the whole, as to expect, that that King, Lords, and Commons should, in express Terms of Law, declare such an ultimate Resort as the Right of Resistance, at a Time when the Case supposes that the Force of all Law is ceased.

But the Commons think he hath, by his Answer, highly aggravated his Crime, by charging so pernicious a Tenet, as that of absolute unlimited Non-Resistance, to be a fundamental Part of our Government, and by asserting this as the Doctrine of the Church of England.

It is a great Reproach to the Excellency of our Constitution, to impute such Principles to it as inevitably infer its Destruction; and an equal Dishonour to the Crown of this Realm, the great Glory of which is to be set over and govern a Nation of free-born Subjects, the meanest of which has an Inheritance in the Government and the Laws equal with the greatest.

They likewise esteem it an high Reflection on Religion itself, and the Church of England, to charge its purest Doctrines with such Constructions, by which all Irreligion and Oppression would be authorized.

The Commons must for ever consider themselves under the strongest Obligations of Gratitude to our great Deliverer, to assert the Honour and Justice of that Resistance by which he rescued an oppressed People from inevitable Destruction; and think they should not deserve the Name of Subjects of Great Britain, or the least Blessing of so good a Government, if at this Time before your Lordships, and for ever hereafter, they did not assert, in the most strenuous Manner, the Honour and Justice of that Resistance which brought about the late happy Revolution. And upon this Foundation it is, that they doubt not but your Lordships, will, in a Parliamentary Way, fasten a Brand of indelible Infamy on that enslaving Tenet by which it is condemned.

I shall take up less of your Lordships Time on the following Articles.

The Commons esteem the Toleration of Protestant Dissenters to be one of the earliest and happiest Effects of the late Revolution, wisely calculated for the Support and strengthening the Protestant Interest, the great End of the Revolution itself.

They remember, with the highest Gratitude to her Majesty, her Royal Resolution declared from the Throne, to preserve it inviolably; and they observe to your Lordships, that it appears to them, from a Report on their own Journals of a Conference between both Houses, on the Bill against Occasional Conformity, (not meant to enlarge the Liberties of Protestant Dissenters) That the Persecution of Protestants is, in the Preamble to that Bill, declared to be contrary to the Christian Religion, and the Doctrine of the Church of England, and that the Act of Toleration ought to be kept inviolably; and the Commons find no Exception then taken by your Lordships to that Declaration; but on the contrary, many Expressions from both Houses, highly extolling the Policy and good Effects of that Law.

Your Lordships will perceive, from the Evidence of the Commons, many plain Declarations of the Prisoner in Maintenance of this Article; but we offer it to your Lordships, as a further Evidence, that he most shamefully arraigns the Memory of a Prelate, eminent for his Zeal to the Protestant Religion, for his compassionate Intercessions with Q. Elizabeth, in Favour of Dissenting Protestants; a Reflection plainly meant by him to cast an Odium on the Act of Toleration, and on the present Fathers of the Church, so eminent for their Charity and Moderation; and from the Applauses he gives to the Severities shown by that Queen, he illustrates the Calumny thrown by him on her present Majesty, and her Approbation of the Toleration: Your Lordships will duly consider the Malignity of Expressions meant to condemn so good a Law, now standing in its full Force, and to encourage the Unchristian Principles of Persecution.

The latter Part of the second Article is founded on the legal Supremacy of the Government in Matters Ecclesiastical, by which all Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, by the antient undoubted Laws of the Kingdom, is made subject to the Civil Power.

The Prisoner, in Terms very unbecoming, has struck at this essential Part of our Constitution, in those Words; wherein, after having persuaded the superiour Pastors of the Church to thunder out their Anathema's against Protestant Dissenters, He defies any earthly Power to reverse such Sentences.

My Lords, the restoring the legal Supremacy of the Crown, was the Effect of the Reformation of Religion in this Kingdom; and the Abuse of that Power, to the apparent Danger and Destruction of the Church of England, in the Instance of the late illegal Ecclesiastical Commission, remains condemned by the Bill of Rights.

But the Commons crave Leave to observe, that the independent Power or Jurisdiction of the Church, or of Ecclesiastical Judges, which is the Doctrine advanced by the Prisoner, is no less dangerous. It stands in utter Defiance and Contradiction of Magna Charta, and the Laws of the Land; 'tis destructive of the legal Supremacy of the Crown and Legislature; a Violation of the Oath of Supremacy; contrary to the Principles of the Reformation, and the Doctrine and Interest of the Church of England, of which he is a Member.

The Commons are strengthened in their Concern for the legal Supremacy, when they call to Mind her Majesty's Letter to his Grace of Canterbury, of the 25th of February 1705, for proroguing the Convocation; wherein her Majesty is pleased to declare her constant Care and Endeavours to preserve the Constitution of the Church of England as by Law established, and her Resolution to preserve the Supremacy, as being a fundamental Part of it: And upon these Considerations, they have an absolute Assurance of an equal Regard on your Lordships Part, to a Matter of so great Importance.

Your Lordships will observe the third Article to be included within the general Charge of the fourth: But, the Commons being sensible, with how distinguished a Malice the Substance of this Charge is levelled by the Prisoner against the Honour of her Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, they thought it their Duty to her Majesty to lay this before your Lordships in a distinct Article, for your particular Consideration and Judgment.

When your Lordships reflect on the late heavy Censure, which the Queen and both Houses so justly laid on the Authors of the like groundless Slander, you will think that the Prisoner has revived and avowed the same, from an inveterate Pride to signalize his Enmity to her Majesty and both Houses, and in the most publick Manner to insult the Honour of the Queen and Legislature, at the same time that he was endeavouring to subvert their Foundation.

The Commons will ever shew the utmost Jealousy for the Safety and Honour of her Majesty's Person, and must always esteem it their peculiar Concern to vindicate every Attempt that shall be made against it;

it; and assure your Lordships, they can't be forgetful of that signal Regard her Sacred Majesty shewed to the Church of England, at the Time of the late Revolution; of that constant uniform Zeal she has expressed for it from that Day to this; that perpetual Monument of her Royal Bounty to the Clergy of the Church of England, to the Diminution of her own Revenue; nor of her Royal Care for the perpetual Establishment of its Discipline and Worship, in making it a fundamental and essential Part of the Union of the two Kingdoms: These Things they esteem an absolute Security, that her Royal Protection and Affection for the Church of England can never fail.

The Commons doubt not of your Lordships particular Notice of the Parallel mentioned in this Article, by which your Lordships will collect the Inveteracy of the Design from the Odiousness of the Comparison.

In their fourth Article the Commons have laid before your Lordships many Charges; which, tho' of different Considerations, yet all conduce to the main Charge of the Commons, as tending to undermine her Majesty's Government, and to raise Sedition and Rebellion.

Your Lordships will find, from many and pregnant Proofs supporting this Article, That her Majesty's Administration, whereby she has justly gained the Affections of all her true Subjects, is represented by the Prisoner as deserving the utmost Odium and Contempt of her People.

That the Civil and Religious Rights of her Subjects, which her Majesty has protected with the Tenderness of a most indulgent Mother, are betrayed by those to whom she has committed the Care of them, and that they are now in a Condition more Calamitous than at that Time, when Superstition and Tyranny were ready to have swallowed them up.

Your Lordships will find him labouring to persuade the People, that the Condition of Peace and Prosperity, which the good Government of her Majesty has secured to her Kingdom, is a State of utter Distraction and Confusion, wherein all Irreligion and Disorder is not only unpunished, but encouraged.

Nor will your Lordships wonder to find a Person, who has thus set himself to weaken the Title of her Majesty to the Throne, representing her Administration like that of one who has no Title at all.

And from this ruinous and almost irretrievable Posture of Affairs, your Lordships will find him considering himself as a peculiar Messenger, appointed and called out to open the Eyes of the deluded People, and to undeceive a Nation thus abused. And this, my Lords, he has done, not in the Words of Meekness and Peace; not by exhorting them to the Exercise of the submissive Doctrines of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance; but he assures them, that he does not come to preach Peace, but to sound a Trumpet; he endeavours to excite such true Sons of the Church as are of his Persuasion, to recover, defend, and maintain, with their Lives and Fortunes, their invaded Rights, and such Doctrines as he has thought fit to deliver to them.

My Lords, I take Liberty to acquaint your Lordships, that the Commons conceive, that the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and the Order and Peace of Government, necessarily injoin it as a Duty upon all private Subjects, to represent their Sense of the Nation's Grievances in a Course of Law and Justice, and not otherwise; and whenever the Oppressions become National or Publick, They claim it as the peculiar Right of their own Body, to pursue the evil Instruments of them, till publick Vengeance be done; and at the same time the Commons assure your Lordships, that they will account it their indispensable Duty to her Majesty and their Country, to assert the Justice and Wisdom of her Administration, against the Enemies of both.

I have thus stated to your Lordships the Nature of this Cause; wherein, I persuade myself, you perceive many Points of the highest Moment to the Peace and Welfare of the Kingdom.

The Tendency of the Crimes, of which the Prisoner stands accused, lies open and apparent: But I yet beg your Patience, to draw the Scene a little closer.

Your Lordships will consider the necessary Consequence of a Position, meant and expounded so as to persuade the World, that the glorious Work of the Revolution was the Fruit of Rebellion, and the Work of Traitors. Does it not declare the late Reign to be one continued Usurpation? And under what better Circumstances does it bring the present?

Is the Act of Toleration condemned with any other Tendency than to weaken so great a Support of the Revolution itself? And I intreat your Lordships to consider the certain fatal Effects of an universal Dissatisfaction of the People, in Things that concern them nearest, the Safety of the Church of England, and the Protestant Interest, and the Security of themselves and their Posterity.

It's true, my Lords, that, considered at a Distance, there seems a Repugnancy in this Gentleman's System. How comes it to pass, that absolute Non-Resistance and the Spirit of Rebellion stand so well together, and are made so suitable, in the same Discourse?

But, if your Lordships should discern, in any Part of his Sermon, any dark Hints, or disguised Opinions, of a Sole Hereditary Right of Succession to the Crown, that will shew your Lordships the true Consistency of the whole; your Lordships will find, that in his Opinion, the Duty of the absolute Non-Resistance is owing to him only that has the Divine Commission to govern; and from thence your Lordships cannot fail of knowing against what Queen, what Government, what Establishment, he encourages the taking up the Arms of Resistance.

I have thus endeavoured to discharge the Trust reposed in me by the Commons, and am not unsensible how far short I have fallen; but, my Lords, I assure myself that the Cause cannot suffer by it, its own Strength and Vigour will support it at this Time, and so long, I hope, as the Nation endures.

Your Lordships see plainly, that the Duty of the Commons, which they will always discharge, called upon them very loudly to make Inquisition on so remarkable an Offender as the Prisoner at the Bar.

Your Lordships see they had not acquitted themselves aright, if they had intrusted the Prosecution of this great Cause in any other Hands but their own, or suffered these Points to have been handled in any Place but in full Parliament; or before any other Judicature but that of your Lordships: And it is with the greatest Cheerfulness and Security, that they submit the Cause of the Queen, of the whole Nation, of the Protestant Religion, and Protestant Succession, to the Weight and Wisdom of your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Attorney General. I did acquaint your Lordships that there were two Sermons delivered into the House of Commons, which I desire may be now delivered in, and read to your Lordships. We must desire Mr. Jodrell to give an Account where he had those Books in his Hands.

Then Mr. Jodrell was sworn.

Mr. Jodrell. These two Books were delivered in at the Table of the House of Commons, by one of the Members.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they shewn to Dr. Sacheverell when he attended the House?

Mr. Jodrell. They were shewn to him at the Bar of the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he own them to be his Books, or what did he own about them?

Mr. Jodrell. That which is the Sermon preached the fifth of November he owned to be his, and that he directed it to be printed.

Then that Book was delivered in.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is another Sermon which was preached at the Assizes at Derby, that was also shewn him at the Bar, and he owned it.

Lord Chancellor. What say you as to the Preface of the other Sermon?

Mr. Jodrell. He owned the Dedication of it to be agreeable with the Dedication of that Impression which he ordered to be printed.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray the Dedication may be shewn to him; if he denies it, we are ready to prove it by the Printer.

Sir Simon Harcourt. My Lords, the Doctor did own the Sermon, and the Dedication of both the Sermons, before the House of Commons; and he will not give your Lordships the Trouble of hearing any Proof of them. He doth own them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we desire they may be read.

Clerk reads the Dedication of the Derby Sermon, and the Dedication and Sermon at St. Paul's.

The DEDICATION of a SERMON preached at the Assizes held at Derby, August 15, 1709, by Henry Sacheverell, D. D. Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon, and Chaplain of St. Saviour's, Southwark.

To the Right Worshipful

GEORGE SACHEVERELL, Esq;

High Sheriff of the County of Derby;

AND TO

The Honourable GENTLEMEN of the GRAND JURY,

Gilbert Thacker, Esq;	William Horton, Esq;
Robert Wilnot, Esq;	George Savill, Esq;
John Fitz-Herbert, Esq;	William Brown, Esq;
John Beresford, Esq;	Paul Balledon, Esq;
Henry Vernon, Esq;	James Cbetbam, Esq;
William Cook, Esq;	William Wolley, Esq;
William Cavendish, Esq;	George Turner, Gent.
Francis Pole, Esq;

GENTLEMEN,

THE Peculiar Honour You were pleased to confer upon me after the Delivery of this plain Discourse, was so Signal, that nothing less than this Publick Acknowledgment can acquit Me of Ingratitude.

Now, when the Principles and Interests, of our Church, and Constitution, are so shamefully Betray'd, and Run down, it can be no little Comfort to all those who wish their Welfare and Security, to see, that notwithstanding the Secret Malice, and Open Violence they are Persecuted with, there are still to be found such Worthy Patrons of both, who dare Own and Defend them as well against the Rude and Presumptuous Insults of the One Side, as the Base, Undermining Treachery of the Other; and who Scorn to Sit silently by, and partake in the Sins of these Associated Malignants.

Though the Truth seems to be so much Forsaken at present, yet, God be thanked, they shall yet find, to our Honour, that we have still amongst Us those who have Courage to speak it, as well as those who have Lives and Fortunes to Maintain it: And tho' the Age is sunk into the Lowest Dregs of Corruption that it cannot endure Sound Doctrine, there are not wanting Some to Preach it, and Others to Support it, at the Expence of Both. May the Influence of your Good Examples, which as much Animates our Friends, as it Terrifies our Enemies, be as diffusively Prevailing, as 'tis nobly Conspicuous; and the Blessing of that Church attend you, which you so Eminently adorn and sustain!

And, as I am obliged by the Relation I have the Honour to bear your Family, may a double Portion of the Divine Favour rest on You, (Mr. High Sheriff) whose Commands I was very ready to execute in this Office, since you thought neither the Advancement of your Years, so generously expended for the Good of your Country, nor the great Trouble attending this Post, sufficient to exempt you from shewing that steady Loyalty and Zeal to serve Her Majesty and the Government, for which you have been so remarkably Distinguished.

I am, with all Regard,

GENTLEMEN,

Your very Humble Servant,

Henry Sacheverell.

The PERILS of FALSE BRETHREN,
both in Church and State:

Set forth in a

SERMON Preached before the Right Honourable the LORD MAYOR, Aldermen, and Citizens of London, at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, on the Fifth of November 1709. By Henry Sacheverell, D. D. Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon, and Chaplain of St. Saviour's Southwark.

To

To the Right Honourable

Sir SAMUEL GERRARD, Bart.

Lord Mayor of the City of London.

My LORD,

BY Your Lordship's Command, this Discourse ventures to appear in Publick, in Contempt of all those Scandalous Misrepresentations the Malicious Adversaries of our Church have traduced it with, and that Impartial Sentence it had the Honour to receive from some of those Acute and Wise Judges, who Condemned it, without Sight or Hearing. But it is no New Thing with some Men to Censure at Random what lies out of their Sphere; Examining a Cause may prove Dangerous, for fear of their own Conviction of its Merits. When Men are resolved to leap into a Gulph, the best Way is to shut their Eyes, for fear they should see their Danger, and Repent of their Folly. When they are thus abandoned and given up to Ruin, the Charitable Hand, that would hold out an unwelcome Light to prevent it, must expect to be treated with that ungrateful Insolence and Reproach, which usually attends the Generous Freedom of those who Dare speak Seasonable, and Necessary Truths. That Patient's Case doubtless is very Desperate, that sets himself against his Cure; and when Men are so stupidly hardened in their Errors as to resist the most glaring Evidence, there's no Room for Argument, or Gospel. Moses, and the Prophets, may with Christ, and his Apostles, be Banished our Synagogues, when Truth must be Oppressed by Number, and Noise, and Rebellious Appeals to the People, as the only Judges of Right, and Wrong, and the dernier Resort of Justice and Dominion. Are not these the Fashionable Methods now made use of to Overbear, and Silence our Church, to Affront and Revile our Legislature, in order to Break in upon the Prerogative of the Crown? By Threatening them with Imaginary Legions, and a popular Tribunal, where their Authority, and Establishment are to be Try'd and Determined? To put a Stop to which Dangerous and Encroaching Mischief, that now with Impunity walks up and down through this Distracted Kingdom, I thought it my Duty (being Summoned to this Office by your Lordship) to Discharge it in the BEST METHOD I could, to Preserve Us from these Malicious Designs, by endeavouring, if possible, to Open the Eyes of the Deluded People in this Our Great Metropolis; being Conscious of what Prodigious Importance it is to the Welfare of the whole Nation, to have its Rich and Powerful Inhabitants set right in their Notions of Government, both in Church and State; that they may not be Flatter'd into their Ruin, but seeing the Fatal Consequences of these Damnable false Doctrines, which some Seditious Impostors have laboured to Poison them with, may Forake and Detest them. I am confident, My Lord, that this Glorious and Renowned City can Boast of so many Excellent Examples of Unshaken Steadiness, Disinterested Probity and True Zeal, and Loyalty for Our Church, and Sovereign, that if they would act with the same Open, and Undaunted Resolution Your Lordship does, these Affrighting Phantoms must Vanish. But if Honest Gentlemen will sit still, and give up their Cause through want of Courage, or a Just Sense of the Dangerous Attempts of Our Enemies, without the Spirit of Prophecy, We may foretel what will become of Our Constitution, when 'tis so Vigorously Attacked from Without, and so Lazily Defended from Within.

We are told by these Men, who would fain shut both our Eyes, and our Mouths, in order the more effectually to Undermine, and Destroy Us, that the Pulpit is not a Place for Politicks; and that 'tis the Business of a Clergyman to Preach Peace, and not Sound a Trumpet in Zion; so expressly contrary to the Command of God, to Cry aloud, and Spare not. My Lord, I was humbly of Opinion, that the Fifth Commandment was Genuine; the Fanaticks would do well to strike that Dangerous Precept out of the Decalogue, as the Papiests have the Second, that neither might Rise in Judgment against these United Friends, and Brethren. Now as This stands the First in the Second Table, is it not of the utmost Importance, to be rightly Understood, as containing the Principal Duty that we owe to God's Vicegerents, which has been so Scandalously, and Villanously Misinterpreted of late, to the Great Dishonour of Both? Certainly Our Church thought so Formerly, when it took such Care to Guard Our Obedience, with more Homilies concerning the Peril of Rebellion, than any other Sin. And when was more Reason for Enforcing their Doctrines than now, when We see these admirable Dissuatives against Faction and Sedition, maliciously Wrested to Countenance and Support it? If our Excellent Constitution apprehends no Hazard from these Licentious Proceedings, I am sure Those who would defend it from them, have Reason to do so, with Regard to their Own Persons: Our Pastors cannot do their Duty, without being Menaced for it, and Slandered by the Vile Amanuenses of the Mob, to expose us to their Fury, as Papiests, and Men Disaffected to Her Majesty's Government, whose Safety, Rights and Establishment, together with Those of the Church, We so earnestly contend for; which I solemnly here Declare (as I did before in this Discourse) to be my only Aim and Intention; and in a humble way to follow the Footsteps of your Lordship, who is so bright an Ornament, and Support of them. That this great City may flourish under your auspicious Conduct, and never want a Magistrate of your steady Principles to Guide and Govern it, is the hearty Prayer of,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP's

Most Humble Servant,

HENRY SACHEVERELL.

2 COR. xi. 26.

In Perils among false Brethren.

AMONG all the most dreadful Plots that ever threatened this Church, and Kingdom, the dismal Tragedy contrived as this Day to be executed on Both, may justly claim the horrible Precedence, and consequently the highest Expressions of our Gratitude for so astonishing and miraculous a Deliverance from it.

For

For whether we consider the Black Depth of its subtle Contrivance, the destructive Extent, and sanguinary Consequences of it, or its surprizing and unaccountable Discovery, we must confess, that nothing but the All-Powerful and Gracious Hand of God, interposing against the utter Subversion of Our Nation and Religion, could have prevented such a Fatal Conspiracy: A Conspiracy! so full of the most Unheard-of Malice, most Insatiable Cruelty, most Diabolical Revenge, as only could be hatch'd in the Cabinet-Council of Hell, and brought forth in a Conclave of Romish Jesuits! Now tho' the History of this unparalleled Mystery of Iniquity was Designed against Us at such a Distance of Time, and the Fact so evidently Acknowledg'd, that the Papists themselves are so far from Denying, that they Extol it with the Highest Panegyrics; so that there needs neither Proof of the one, nor Repetition of the other: Yet doubtless 'tis as much our Duty, as Interest, to keep up the Annual Celebration of this Never-to-be-forgotten Festival. For that the very Face and Shadow of our Church and Constitution is yet Surviving; That this Good and Pious Relict of the Royal Family Sits now Happily upon the Throne of Her Great Ancestors; That our Hierarchy and Nobility was not finally Extirpated and cut off; That our Country was not made an Aceldama, a Field of Blood, and a Receptacle of Usurping Robbers; That We yet, without Slavery, Superstition, or Idolatry, enjoy the Benefit of our Excellent Laws, and most Holy Profession Undeild: In a Word, That God has yet vouchsafed us this Opportunity of coming into his Presence, to Acknowledge these Inestimable Blessings, is owing to his Mercy so signally shewn to Us, in Disappointing the Barbarous Massacre intended This Day. A Day! which ought to stand for Ever in the English Kalendar, as an Eternal Era, at the One End, as the Thirtieth Day of January at the Other, for Indelible Monuments of the Irreconcilable Rage, and Blood-Thirstiness of both the Papish, and Fanatick Enemies of Our Church, and Government! For these are equally such Treacherous FALSE BRETHREN, from whom we must always expect the utmost Perils, and against whom we can never sufficiently Arm Our selves with the greatest Caution and Security. These TWO DAYS indeed, are but One United Proof, and Visible Testimonial of the same Dangerous, and Rebellious Principles, these Confederates in Iniquity maintain: And as the One is but a Thanksgiving for our Deliverance from what the First Projected; so is the Other an Humiliation, for what God permitted the Latter, by Their Help and Direction, to put in Execution. I think therefore the Best way of Acknowledging these Great Mercies, and Judgments of God, and Acquitting Both Solemnities in a Proper way, is by so justly Considering Our Circumstances with respect to Each Side, as to Guard against Their Malicious and Factionous Designs for the future; that we may never Trust Either, to need a Second Deliverance from those Villainous Enterprizes, they will never cease to put in Practice, whenever they see an Opportunity of Doing it with Security.

Now as Persecution, and Affliction, were the distinguishing Badges of the Messiah, who was a Man of Sorrows, and Acquainted with Griefs; so to convince his Disciples, that his Kingdom was not of this World, He Bequeathed the same sad Legacy to Them, to share the Character, as well as imitate the Example, of their dying Lord, and Master. With unshaken Courage, and Resolution, to take up His Bloody Cross, and follow the Great Leader of their Salvation: To March with a Cheerful Magnanimity through all the Powers of Darkness, looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of their Faith, who for the Joy that was set before Him, Endur'd the Cross, despising the Shame, and is set down at the Right-hand of the Throne of God. Thus was His Church to expect no Better Treatment than Her Great Founder and Original, to pass through the same Fiery Trial, to be made Perfect through Sufferings, to be Militant here, in order to be Triumphant hereafter; and like Him, to be Crown'd with Thorns in this World, to Obtain a Crown of Glory in the Next. Not only to Encounter the Open Fury and Violence of Her Profess'd and Inveterate Enemies; but (which was the Bitterest Part of Her Sufferings) like Her Saviour, to be Betray'd, and perfidiously Given up by Her Own False-hearted and Insidious Apostles.

As the Histories of the Church in All Ages are as 'twere but One Continued Ratification of this Melancholy Truth, made up of so many Mournful Narratives of the Unhappy Lives, and Disastrous Deaths of Saints, Martyrs, and Confessors, who Bravely seal'd the Faith with their Blood; so it is Exemplified in no One Instance more than in that Primitive, and Heroick Champion of Christianity, the Author of this Epistle. Wherein, for the Wonder, and Emulation of Posterity, He has recorded a Long and Frightful Catalogue of those Altonishing Calamities He had underwent in the Propagation of the Gospel. Such Ample Satisfaction did the Pious Labours of the Convent make for the wicked Persecution of the Jew, when, by a Miraculous Turn of Providence, the Greatest Sinner was changed into the Devotest Saint, and the most Zealous Bigot against, into the most Resolute Sufferer for, Religion. Yet however this Great Apostle might have Attain'd so extraordinary a Degree of Merit, as to Outshine all that Noble Army of Martyrs which Adorn the Bloody Kalendar of the Church; nay, as He expresses it, to come never a Whit short of the Greatest Apostles, and as 'twere to Vye Characters with the very Chosen of the Son of God; Does it not seem a little to carry the Air of Ostentation, and Vain-glory, thus to claim the Pre-eminence and Supremacy, and to boast himself in that Pompous Shew of Services that He hath done for God and the Church? But We shall easily Reconcile the Apostle and the Orator, and find no Imputation upon his Modesty, if we consider the Occasion of it. He had (as He informs Us) with much Pains and Expence, Planted Christianity in Corinth, where he had no sooner, by a Miraculous Ministry, Establish'd it, but several False Apostles and Seducers were, in his Absence, Crept into the Church, to Vitiate and Corrupt his New Profelytes, under Pretence of More Purity and Holiness, (like our Modern Sectarists) to raise a Schism amongst them, and to draw them off from the Opinion they had of St. Paul; by Ridiculing Him for his Person and Address, as a Little Unedifying, Ungifted Preacher, of a weak bodily Presence, and Contemptible Speech; thus Wounding the Ministry through the Sides of the Minister. Such Slights and Provocations certainly were a sufficient Ground for the Apostle to insist upon his Character, lest the Gospel should suffer by it: And with Authority to Rebuke the Ingratitude of the Corinthians, and Vindicate his Dignity, and Transcendent Excellencies, against the base Lies, and Calumnies, cast upon Him by such ‘ false Apostles, deceitful Workers, transforming themselves into the Apostles of Christ, like their True Father the Devil, transforming himself into an Angel of Light. With what Justice then might He here stand upon the Comparison, when thus vilely Run down, by such Wretched, Empty, Hypocritical Sophisters? To appeal to his Spiritual Gifts, and Revelations, and Sufferings, in Competition with such Impudent, Boasting, Self-conceited Pretenders, was the Lowest Act of Humility, and Good-Nature; to Condescend to Dispute with such as ought to be Answered, not with Arguments, but Anathema’s! Yet behold the Singular Modesty of this Great Apostle! He cannot enter upon his own Justification, without much Reluctance, and a long Apology to introduce it. I am become a Fool in Glorifying (says he) but you have compelled Me to it. I speak as concerning Reproach, as tho’ we had been Weak: Howbeit, wherein any is Bold, I speak foolishly, I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I! Are they Israelites? so am I! Are they the Seed of Abraham? so am I! Are they Ministers of Christ? I speak as a Fool, I am more. In Labours more Abundant, in Stripes above Measure, in Prisons more Frequent, in Deaths often; of the Jews five Times received I forty Stripes, save one. Thrice was I beaten with Rods, Once was I ston’d, Thrice I suffered Shipwreck, a Night and a Day have I been in the Deep. In Journeyings often, in Perils of Waters, in Perils of Robbers, in Perils by my own Countrymen, in Perils by the Heathen, in Perils in the City, in Perils in the Wilderness, in Perils in the Sea, in Perils amongst FALSE BRETHREN. In this Rhetorical Abridgment of the Sufferings, and Dangers of his Life, there’s a very Observable Gradation; the Apostle still Rises in his Calamities, and puts this Last as the Highest Perfection of his Misery, as that which made the deepest Impression upon his Passions, and what He bore with the greatest Resentment and Difficulty. The many severe Pains, and Tortures inflicted on his Body, were nothing to This; nay, the Good-Nature, and Mercy of Highwaymen, and Pagans, and even the Devouring Bosom of the Deep, were to be Preferr’d before, and sooner (it seems) to be Truſted to, than the more certainly Destructive, and Fallacious Bosom of a Treacherous, FALSE BROTHER.

‘ I shall take the Expression in its full Latitude, without confining it to the express Design of the Place; tho’ it were very obvious to draw a Parallel here, betwixt the sad Circumstances of the Church of Corinth formerly, and of the Church of England at present; wherein Her Holy Communion has been Rent, and Divided by Faction, and Schismatical Impostors; Her pure Doctrine has been Corrupted, and Defil’d; Her Primitive Worship, and Discipline Prophan’d, and Abus’d; Her Sacred Orders Deny’d and Villified; Her Priests and Professors (like St. Paul) Calumniated, Misrepresented, and Ridicul’d; Her Altars, and Sacraments Prostituted to Hypocrites, Deists, Socinians, and Atheists; and this done, I wish I could not say, without Discouragement, I am sure with Impunity, not only by our profess’d Enemies, but which is worse, by our pretended Friends, and FALSE BRETHREN. But to proceed to the Matter before us: In my Discourse upon these Words I shall endeavour,

I. First, To shew in what Sense, and upon what Accounts Men may be Denominated FALSE BRETHREN.

II. Secondly, I will lay before you the Great PE-

RIL, and Mischief of such, both in Church and State.

III. Thirdly, I will set forth the Heinous Malignity, Enormous Guilt, and Folly of this Prodigious Sin.

IV. Lastly, As a Consequence from the Whole, I will undertake to Evince what mighty Reason we have at all Times, and more especially at present, to stick firmly to the Principles both of our Church and Constitution; and how much it concerns Us to Beware of all those FALSE BRETHREN, that Desert, or Betray them.

‘ And First, I will shew you in what Sense, and upon what Accounts Men may be Denominated FALSE Brethren. In order to which it will be Necessary to State the full Extent of the Nature of FALSE BROTHERHOOD.

‘ This Term ψευδὲς ἀδελφία being of a Relative Signification, must respect Men as considered under all Social Cases, or as they are placed under such Regards and Circumstances, as, in Duty oblige them both to Think, Speak, and Act, with Truth, and Integrity, correspondent to their inward Principles, and outward Professions. And wherein they are found deviating wilfully from either, by an unreasonable Alteration of Judgment, by any tacit Mental Reserve, or Equivocation, upon any indirect Ends, or Designs, or guiding their Expressions and Actions contrary to these stated Rules, they are guilty of Falshood, both in Conscience and Practice, of a Breach of that Veracity, Justice, and Trust that they owe to God, themselves, and the World, and are properly what are styl’d in the Text FALSE BRETHREN. For whereas every Man that either believes, speaks, or acts Rationally, must be supposed to have some Standing-Ground, and Measure of Judgment, settled upon some Grand, Primitive Maxims of Truth, both Speculative and Practical, whether founded upon Revelation, Reason, or Honour, which are what we call any Man’s Principles either in Religion, Society, or Friendship: If these Fundamental Axioms have with true Deliberation been sifted, and weigh’d, not only as to their intrinsic Nature, and Goodness, but as to their outward Tendency, and Consequences, they must appear, tho’ not perhaps as infallible in themselves, yet with Respect to the Person so considering them, as demonstrative Truths, as the Light, and Oracles of God, and Reason, set up in his Breast; by which He is always oblig’d to Direct, and Govern his Thoughts, Resolutions, and Actions; and which if He swerves from, disowns, or betrays upon any sinister Motive whatsoever (tho’ after this nice Search they should prove Erroneous) involve the Man in a very heinous Sin, treacherously acting against his Judgment, and giving the Lye both to his Faith, his Reason and his Knowledge. This Matter being thus briefly Premis’d, it is evident, that with regard to the several Objects it is Conversant about, Men may in three Respects be term’d Guilty of FALSE BROTHERHOOD.

1. First, With Relation to God, the Church, or Religion, in which they hold Faith, or Communion.

2. Secondly, With Relation to the State, Government, or Society, of which they are Members.

3. Thirdly, With Relation to those Private Persons, with whom they have either Friendship, Correspondence, or Dealing.

1. And First, He is a FALSE BROTHER with Relation to God, Religion, or the Church, in which he holds Communion, that Believes, Maintains, tains, or Propagates any False, or Heterodox Tenet, or Doctrine repugnant to the express Declarations of Scripture, and the Decrees, or Sense of the Church, and Antiquity thereupon. For as in the first alone are contain'd the Essential Points, and Articles of our most Holy Faith; so the Primitive Expositions, Decisions, and Practice of the antient Writers of the Pure, and uncorrupted Ages of Christianity, must certainly be acknowledg'd the best, and most Authentick Comments upon their Meaning. In Opposition to which, if any upstart Novelist, or self-conceited Enthusiast, out of Pride, as letting Himself above these Genuine Oracles of Truth; or out of Ignorance, as being unacquainted with the Learning, and Records of Antiquity; or out of Perverseness, scorning to submit his Understanding to the Dictates, or better Reason of others; or out of Ambition and Vain-glory, as affecting to be the Head, and Leader of some New Sect, or Party; (all, or either of which have, and will be found for ever the Parents of Heresy) and should break in upon this Sacred Depositum of the Church; and should attempt Blasphemously to Corrupt that inviolable Fountain of Truth, with erroneous Conjectures, and vain Philosophical Systems; to Prophane and Degrade the Holy Mysteries of Religion, by absurd Interpretations, and impudent Reasonings; should we stick to call such a Rebel to God, and Traytor to his Church, a FALSE BROTHER? If a Man should dare not only to Revive, but to Justify any Execrable Exploded Heresies, as those of Arius, and Nestorius, denying the Hypostatical Union, or the Eternity of the Son of God; or should affirm that He was God in Man, or that the Godbeard was only Locally in his Manhood, as God was in the Cloud; or that should presume to Evacuate the great Sanction of the Gospel, the Eternity of Hell-Torments; or Expound any of the Articles of Our Faith, in such a Loose and Vagrant way, as may suit 'em as well to a Mahometan's as a Christian's Creed; and to lay open all those Sacred Boundaries of the Church, to let in all Sectarists, and Schismatics, of whatsoever Wild, Romantic, or Enthusiastick Notions, so as to make the House of God, not only a Den of Thieves, but a Reception of Legions of Devils: Should we cover such a False Apostle under the Sacred Umbrage of a True Church-man? In short, whosoever presumes to Recede the least Tittle from the express Word of God, or to explain the great Credenda of our Faith in New-fang'd Terms of Modern Philosophy, must publish a new Gospel, Un-god his Saviour, and Destroy his Revelation; and by unsettling the Universal, Receiv'd Doctrine of the Church, give up Christianity into Scepticism, and Atheism; and to speak the best of his Character, is FALSE both to his God, and his Religion, and shall be called hereafter, The least in the Kingdom of Heaven, how Great soever he may be in the Kingdoms here below. And as a Man may thus Betray the Doctrine of his Church, so he is no less FALSE to its Interest, that gives up any Point, of her Discipline, and Worship. These are the Exterior Fences to Guard the Internals of Religion, without which they are left Naked, without Beauty, Order, or Defence. Should any Man, out of Ignorance, or Prejudice, to the antient Rights, and Essential Constitution, of the Catholick Church, Affirm, That the Divine Apostolical Institution of Episcopacy, is a Novel Doctrine, not sufficiently Warranted by Scripture, and that 'tis indifferent whether the Church is Govern'd by Bishops, or Presbyters; Is not such an one an Apostate from his own Orders? Let the Christian World be Judge, who best deserve the Name of Churchmen, those that strictly Defend, and Maintain the Catholick Doctrines, upon which the Church, as a Society, is Founded, or those who would Barter them for a Mungril-Union of all Sects? Those who Zealously support her Mission, which only can support her, or those who would destroy it, to take in Schismatical Presbyters without Episcopal Ordination, which would Un-Church the very Church, and Annihilate her Constitution? Is this the Spirit and Doctrine of our Holy Mother? To assert Separation from Her Communion, to be no Schism; or if it was, that Schism is no Damnable Sin; that Occasional Conformity is no Hypocrisy, but rather for the Benefit of the Church; that any one may be an Occasional Conformist with Schismatics, and yet not guilty of Schism; that a Christian may serve God in any Way or Congregation of Worship, as well by Extemporary Prayers, as by a Prescrib'd Form, and Liturgy; that Conformity to the Church, and Ecclesiastical Authority, are no Parts of Morality, and a Good Life, which are only necessary to Salvation: That the Orders and Ceremonies of the Church, are only Carnal, Arbitrary Obediences, to be Dispens'd with as Men please, both by Clergy and Laity; that the Censures and Excommunications of the Church, are mere Bruta Fulmina; Canonical Obedience, and Absolution, Spiritual Tyranny, and Usurpation; and in a Word, that the whole Body of the Worship, and Discipline of the Church of England, is nothing else but Priestcraft, and Popery in Masquerade. If upon all Occasions to comply with the Dissenters both in Publick and Private Affairs, as Persons of Tender Consciences and Piety, to promote their Interests in Elections, to sneak to 'em for Places and Preferment, to Defend Toleration, and Liberty of Conscience, and under the Pretence of Moderation, to excuse Their Separation, and lay the Fault upon the True Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high; if to Court the Fanatics in Private, and to hear 'em with Patience, if not Approbation, Rail at and Blaspheme the Church, and upon Occasion to Justify the King's Murder; If to Flatter both the Dead and the Living in their Vices, and to tell the World, that if they have Wit and Money enough, they need no Repentance, and that only Fools and Beggars can be Damn'd; If these, I say, are the Modish, and Fashionable Criteria of a True Church-man, God deliver Us all from such FALSE BRETHREN.

There is another Sort of them who are for a Neutrality in Religion, who really are of none, but are a secret Sort of Reserv'd Atheists, who always pretend to be of the Church, join in the Herd, and will sometimes frequent our Publick Communion, as long as the Government appears on our Side; but if any thing is to be got by it, can with as safe a Conscience slide privately into a Conventicle, and look as demure as the shyest Saint amongst 'em. They are equally of all, and of no Communion, they are the Gallio's that care for none of these Things; They tell us they are for the Religion Establish'd by Law, but no longer than 'tis so; they can see neither Sin nor Danger in that Ecclesiastical Bugbear, as they call Schism, yet talk very loud about Union, Comprehension and Moderation; by all which canting Expressions, they mean nothing but getting Money and Preferment, by holding in with Persons of all Parties and Characters, balting betwixt the Diversity of Opinions, and Reconciling God and Belial for Gain. To these we may add those who either out of Fear, or Complaisance, can tamely, and without Vindication, hear their God and Religion Blasphem'd and Abus'd. But there is another sort of FALSE BRETHREN, who set up for a greater Perfection of Piety than their Neighbours, who, like their Originals, the Pharisees in the Gospel, are always pleading their Merits before God, and the World, with an Ostentation of Sanctity, in Comparison with their Profane Brethren, with a Stand off, for I am Holier than Thou! These are the Saints that under the Pretence of Conscience, shall commit the most abominable Impieties, and justify Murder, Sacrilege and Rebellion, by Texts of Scripture. There are yet another sort of FALSE BRETHREN, of a quite opposite Character to these, who wish well to the Church of England, and really believe her Constitution in Doctrine, Discipline and Worship, the best and purest in the Christian World; and when either their Tongues, Hands, or Purse are wanting in her Defence, are ready to Sacrifice their Persons, and Estates in her Vindication. These indeed are noble Qualifications, and 'tis Pity so good a Character should want any thing to Complete it. And to turn the Words of our Blessed Saviour to the rich Man, yet one thing thou lackest, thy Zeal is to be shewn in, as well as for, the Communion of the Church, in obeying her Precepts, as well as defending her Rights. In all these Cases there is a Serious and Deliberate Act of Treachery against Conscience and Conviction, a base Forfeiture of that Spiritual Allegiance we owe to God, and our Church, as a sacred Body, and Fraternity, that ought to preserve inviolable Unity, professing one Faith, one Baptism, one God, and Saviour of us all.

2. But Secondly, Men may be Denominated FALSE BRETHREN, with Relation to the State, Government, or Society of which they are Members. The Constitutions of most Governments differing according to their several Frames, and Laws, upon which they are built and Founded, it is impossible to lay down any one Universal Rule, as the Scheme and Measure of Obedience, that may square to every one of them. Only this Maxim in general, I presume, may be Establish'd for the Safety, Tranquility, and Support of all Governments, that no Innovation whatsoever should be allow'd in the Fundamental Constitution of any State, without a very pressing, nay, unavoidable Necessity for it; and whosoever singly or in a private Capacity should attempt it, is guilty of the Highest Misdemeanor, and is an Enemy to that Politick Body of which he is a Member. To apply this Maxim to our Government, in which the Truth of it will very evidently appear. Our Constitution both in Church and State, has been so admirably contriv'd, with that Wisdom, Weight and Sagacity, and the Temper and Genius of each so exactly Suited, and Modell'd to the mutual Support, and Assistance of one another, that 'tis hard to say whether the Doctrines of the Church of England contribute more to Authorise and Inforce our Civil Laws, or our Laws to Maintain and Defend the Doctrines of our Church. The Natures of both are so nicely Correspondent, and so happily Intermixt, that 'tis almost impossible to offer a Violation to the one, without Breaking in upon the Body of the other. So that in all those Cases before-mention'd, whosoever presumes to Innovate, Alter, or Misrepresent any Point in the Articles of the Faith of our Church, ought to be Arraign'd as a Traitor to our State; Hetero-doxy in the Doctrines of the one, naturally producing, and almost necessarily inferring Rebellion, and High Treason, in the other; and consequently a Crime that concerns the Civil Magistrate, as much to Punish, and Restrain, as the Ecclesiastical. However this Assertion at first View may look like an High-flown Paradox, the Proof of it will fully appear in a few Instances. The Grand Security of our Government, and the very Pillar upon which it stands, is founded upon the steady Belief of the Subjects Obligation to an Absolute, and Unconditional Obedience to the Supreme Power, in all Things lawful, and the utter Illegality of Resistance upon any Pretence whatsoever. But this Fundamental Doctrine, notwithstanding its Divine Sanction in the Express Command of God in Scripture, and without which, it is impossible any Government of any Kind, or Denomination in the World should subsist with Safety, and which has been so long the Honourable and Distinguishing Characteristick of our Church, is now, it seems, quite Exploded, and Ridiculed out of Countenance, as an Unfashionable, Superannuated, nay (which is more wonderful) as a Dangerous Tenet, utterly Inconsistent with the Right, Liberty and Property, of the PEOPLE; who, as our New Preachers, and New Politicians teach us, (I suppose by a New and Unheard-of Gospel, as well as Laws) have, in Contradiction to both, the Power Invested in Them, the Fountain and Original of it, to Cancel their Allegiance at Pleasure, and call their Sovereign to account for High Treason against his supreme Subjects forsooth; nay to Dethrone and Murder Him for a Criminal, as they did the Royal Martyr by a justiciary Sentence. And, what is most incredible, presume to make their Court to their Prince, by maintaining such Antimonarchical Schemes. But, God be Thanked! neither the Constitution of our Church or State, is so far Alter'd, but that by the Laws of Both, (still in Force, and which I hope, for ever will be) these Damnable Positions, let them come either from Rome or Geneva, from the Pulpit, or the Press, are condemned for Rebellion, and High Treason. Our Adversaries think they effectually stop our Mouths, and have Us sure and unanswerable on this Point, when they urge the Revolution of this Day in their Defence. But certainly They are the Greatest Enemies of That, and his late Majesty, and the most Ungrateful for the Deliverance, who endeavour to cast such Black and Odious Colours upon Both. How often must they be told, that the King Himself solemnly Disclaim'd the least Imputation of Resistance in his Declaration; and that the Parliament declar'd, That they set the Crown on his Head, upon no other Title, but that of the Vacancy of the Throne? And did they not Unanimously condemn to the Flames (as it justly Deserv'd) that Infamous Libel, that would have pleaded the Title of Conquest, by which Resistance was suppos'd? So tender were they of the Regal Rights, and so averse to infringe the least Tittle of our Constitution! We see how ready these Incendiaries are to take the least Umbrage, to charge their own cursed Tenets on

* His Highness Declares, in Opposition to those who give out, That we do intend to CONQUER and ENSLAVE these NATIONS, that we have thought fit to add a few Words to our Declaration; "It is not to be imagined, that either those who have invited Us, or those who are already come to Assist Us, can join in a WICKED ATTEMPT OF CONQUEST, to make void their own Lawful Titles to their Honours, Estates, and Interests." See the Prince of Orange's Declaration. Dr. Kennet's History of the Four Last Reigns, p. 493.

the Church of England, to Derive their Guilt upon it, and Quit Scores with it for Their Iniquity! Thus do they endeavour to draw Comparisons, and to Justify the Horrid Actions and Principles of Forty One, which have been of late Years, to the Scandal of Our Church, and Nation, so publicly defended, not only by the Agents and Writers of the Republican Faction, but by some that have the Confidence to style themselves Sons, and Presbyters of the Church of England; who in open Defiance of the most peremptory Declarations of God in Scripture, (never to be evaded by any Shifts or Misrepresentations) and the Universal Doctrine, and Expositions of the Catholick Church upon it in all Ages, with the Express Testimony, and Concurrence of Our Church, from its Reformation down to the present Times, Corroborated with the Sense of Our Legislature, so unexceptionably confirm'd in Our Laws, Dare, in Despite and Contempt of all this Evidence, manifestly defend the Resistance of the Supreme Power, under a New-fangled Notion of Self-Defence; the only Instance they shew of Shame, that they dare not YET maintain Rebellion by its proper Name. Yet, if those silly Pretences, and weak Excuses for it alledg'd, carry any Strength, or Reason in them at all, they will equally serve to justify All the Rebellions that ever were or can be committed in the World. Now as the Republicans Copy after the Papists in most of their Doctrines and Practices, I would fain know in this where the Difference lies, betwixt the Power Granted to (as 'tis suppos'd Originally Invested, but from what Commission God knows, in) the People, to Judge and Dethrone their Sovereigns, for any Cause they think fit; or a no less Usurped Power of the Pope, to solve the People from their Allegiance, and dispose of Sceptres, and Diadems to his Favourites, whenever he thinks it his Interest to pluck them from his Enemies Heads. Comparisons are generally Odious; but a Learned Bishop of our Kingdom, whose Aversion to Popery, I hope, is not doubted, I mean the * Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Sarum, has been bold Judiciously to determine, even on the Papists Side in this Case, That if such a Deposing Power is to be intrusted in Mortals Hands, less Inconveniencies will ensue in placing it in One, than in Many; tho' God forbid it ever should be Lodg'd in any other than that of God himself, the Original of all Power, from whom it proceeds, and to whom it must Return; the King of Kings, Lord of Lords, and ONLY Ruler of Princes. So that these Romantick wild Notions will carry Us into something worse (if 'tis possible) than Popery itself; more Fatal to the Rights and Interests of the Crown, and the Welfare and Tranquility of Our Constitution, which can never be Safe under such precarious Dependencies, and Despotick Imaginations. A Prince indeed in another Sense, will be the Breath of his Subjects Nostrils, to be blown in, or out, at their Caprice, and Pleasure, and a worse Vassal than even the meanest of his Guards. Such Villainous and Seditious Principles as these, Demand a Confutation from that Government they

* Less Disorder may be apprehended from the Pretensions of the Roman Bishops, than from these Maxims, that put the Power of Judging and Controlling the Magistracy in the PEOPLE's Hands, which opens a Door to Endless Confusions, and indeed, sets every private Person upon the Throne, and introduceth an Anarchy, which will never admit of Order and Remedy; whereas, Those who have but One PRETENDER over Them, could more easily deal with Him, and more Vigorously RESIST Him. so insolently Threaten and Arraign, and which are only proper to be answer'd by that Sword they would make our Princes bear in Vain, by the So-long-call'd-for Censure of an Ecclesiastical Synod, and the Correction of a Provoked and Affronted Legislature; to whose strict Justice, and undeserved Mercy, I commit both them and Their Authors. Only give me Leave to dismiss 'em with a Remark of the pious and learned Bishop Andrews, upon some of their FALSE BRETHREN in his Time. † "What (says that Good Prelate) is now become of those Words of God, Touch not mine Anointed? Are we not fallen into Strange Times, that Men dare thus print and publish, yea, even preach and proclaim their Sins; even those sinful and shameless Positions, to the Eyes and Ears of the whole World? Whereby God's Anointed are Endanger'd, Mens Souls are Poison'd, Christian Religion is Blasphem'd as a Murderer of her own Kings; God in his Charge is openly Contradicted, and Men made Believe, they shall go to Heaven in breaking God's Commandments." What could have been spoken with a more Prophetical Spirit, of these filthy Dreamers, these Presumptuous and Self-will'd Men, Despisers of Dominion, and Government, who are not afraid to speak Evil of Dignities, who wrest the Word of God to their Own, and their deluded People's Perdition, and think to Consecrate even the worst of Sins, with what is almost Analogous to the Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost! These FALSE BRETHREN in Our Government, do not Singly, and in Private spread their Poison, but (what is lamentable to be spoken) are suffer'd to combine into Bodies and Seminaries, wherein Atheism, Deism, Tritheism, Socinianism, with all the Hellish Principles of Fanaticism, Regicide, and Anarchy, are openly Profess'd and Taught, to Corrupt and Debauch the Youth of the Nation, in all Parts of it, down to Posterity, to the Present Reproach, and Future Extermination of Our Laws and Religion. Certainly the Toleration was never intended to Indulge and Cherish such Monsters, and Vipers in our Bosom, that scatter Their Pestilence at Noon-day, and will Rend, Distract, and Confound, the firmest and Best-settled Constitution in the World. In short, as the English Government can never be Secure on any other Principles, but strictly Those of the Church of England, so I will be bold to say, where any Part of it is Trusted in Persons of any Other Notions, They must be False to Themselves, if They are True to their Trusts; or if they are True to their Opinions and Interests, must Betray that Government they are Enemies to upon Principle. Indeed, We must do 'em that Justice, to confess, that since the Sectarists have found out a Way (which their Forefathers, God knows, as wicked as they were, would have abhor'd) to swallow not only Oaths, but Sacraments, to Qualify themselves to get into Places and Preferments; these Sanctify'd Hypocrites can put on a Shew of Loyalty, and seem tolerably Easy in the Government, if they can Engross the Honours and Profits of it: But let her Majesty reach out her Little Finger to touch their Loins, and these sworn Adversaries to Passive Obedience, and the Royal Family, shall fret themselves, and Curse the Queen, and their God, and shall look upwards. And so much for Our Political FALSE BRETHREN, till I come to speak with them again by and by. I proceed, † Sermon 3. on the Conspiracy of the GOWRIES, preach'd before the King at Holdenberg, Aug. 5. 1610. p. 803.

3. In the Third Place, to a more Inferior Species of them, that Act in a lower Sphere, namely, Those who in their Private Capacities, are FALSE either in their Friendship, Correspondence, or Dealing: But these Sins of Unfaithfulness, as the Psalmist calls them, being of so Copious, and Extensive a Nature, and respecting the Private Concerns of Human Life, I shall only trouble you with enumerating some of the General Instances of them: Such as are, Betraying Our Friend in his Secrets, Deserting him in his Misfortunes, in not Defending his Reputation, when falsely Accus'd, in an Obsequious Compliance with Him in any Indirect, or Dishonourable Measures, in a Nauseous Flattery of his Follies, or Vices, in permitting him in any Error, without Admonition, and in giving him wrong Advice, and not leading him out of it. Such are also, with regard to Our Neighbour, the Concealing, or Misrepresenting any Truth that he is Concern'd to know, Playing upon his Faith with doubtful and ambiguous Insinuations, with Double Equivocations, and Diffimulatory Expressions, an Actual Breach of Word, Promise, or Profession, Clandestine Undermining, by Circumvention, Fraud, or Craft, Back-biting, and secretly Slandering, Propagating Scandal, and Bearing False Witness, and Partaking several Ways in his Sins; which are all the Characteristicks of an Insidious, Treacherous, and False-hearted Knave. But these Vices being of a Private Consideration, I hasten to the next General Head propos'd, Namely,

II. Secondly, To lay before you the Great Peril, and Mischiefs of these FALSE BRETHREN in Church and State; which I shall endeavour to do, by Proving that They Weaken, Undermine, and Betray in themselves, and Encourage, and put it in the Power of Our Profess'd Enemies, to Overturn, and Destroy the Constitution and Establishment of Both.

1. And First, as to the Church. But here it is very Necessary to Premise, That by the Church of England, We are to understand the True Genuine Notion of it, as it stands Contradistiguish'd in its Establish'd Doctrine, Discipline, and Worship, from all Other Churches, and Schismatics, who would Obtrude upon Us a Wild, Negative Idea of a NATIONAL CHURCH, so as to Incorporate themselves into the Body, as True Members of it; Whereas 'tis evident that this Latitudinarian, Heterogeneous Mixture of all Persons of what Different Faith soever, Uniting in Protestantism, (which is but One Single Note of the Church of England) would render it the most Absurd, Contradictory, and Self-Inconsistent Body in the World. This Spurious, and Villainous Notion, which will take in Jews, Quakers, Mahometans, and any Thing as well as Christians, as ridiculously incongruous as 'tis, may be first Observ'd, as one of those Prime, Popular Engines, Our FALSE BRETHREN have made Use of to Undermine the very Essential Constitution of Our Church; which as it stands Guarded with its Own sacred Fences, with Her only True Sons in Her Bosom, may defy all the Malice of the Devil, and Her Enemies, to prevail against Her. But such is Her hard Fortune, Her Worst Adversaries must be let into Her Bowels, under the holy Umbrage of Sons, who neither believe Her Faith, Own Her Mission, submit to Her Discipline, or comply with Her Liturgy. And to admit this Religious Tro- jan Horse, big with Arms and Ruin, into Our Holy City, the Strait Gate must be laid quite Open, Her Walls, and Inlosures pull'd down, and an High Road made in upon Her Communion, and this pure Spouse of Christ prostituted to more Adulterers than the Scarlet Whore in the Revelations. Her Articles must be Taught the Confusion of all Senses, Nations, and Languages, to render Her a Babel, and Desolation. This was indeed the Ready Way to Fill the House of God, but with what? With Pagan Beasts, instead of Christian Sacrifices, with such Unbellow'd, Loathsome, and detestable Guests, as would have driven out the Holy Spirit of God with Indignation. This Pious Design of making Our House of Prayer a Den of Thieves, of reforming Our Church into a Chaos, is well known, to have been Attempted several Times in This Kingdom, and lately within our Memory, When all Things seem'd to Favour it, but that Good Providence, which so happily interpos'd, against the Ruin of Our Church, and Blasted the Long projected Scheme of these Ecclesiastical Achitophels. A Scheme so Monstrous, so Romantic, and Absurd, that 'tis hard to say, whether it had more of Villainy, or Folly in it, and which even the Selfish of all Sorts (who will not be satisfied with any Thing less than Sovereignty) Exploded, and Laugh'd at, as Ridiculous, and Impracticable. It was doubtless a Wise Way to Exemplify Our Brotherly Love, and Charity for the Souls of Men, to put both Them, and Ourselves into a Gulph of Perdition, by throwing up the Essentials of Our Faith, and the Uniformity of our Worship. But since this Model of an Universal Liberty, and Coalition fail'd, and these FALSE BRETHREN could not carry the Conventicle into the Church, they are now resolved to bring the Church into the Conventicle, which will more plausibly, and slyly Effect Her Ruin. What could not be gain'd by Comprehension, and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation, and Occasional Conformity; that is, what they could not do by Open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to Accomplish. If the Church can't be pull'd down, it may be blown up; and no Matter with these Men How 'tis Destroy'd, so that it is Destroy'd. Now let Us, I beseech You in the Name of God, fairly consider what must be the Consequence of this Scandalous Fluctuation, and Trimming betwixt the Church and Dissenters, both in Conscience, and Prudence. Does not this Innovating in, Giving up, or Receding from, any One Point, or Article in our Faith, Violate, and Affect the whole Frame, and Body of it? Can we either Add to, or Diminish from, the least jot of our Religion? Are we to take its Constitution as our Saviour, and his Apostles deliver'd it down to Us; or have we Authority to Curtail, Mangle, or Alter it, to Suit it to the Pride, Humours, Caprice, and Quab-sick Stomachs, of Obstinate, Moody, Wayward, and Self-conceited Hypocrites, and Enthusiasts? Will not such a Base, and Time-serving Compliance give the Enemies of our Church an Occasion of Blaspheming Her as Weak, and Inconstant? Will it not argue the Illegality of Her Ordinances, and Laws, or that they were too Rigid, and wanted an Abatement? Will not this Harden, Encourage, nay Justify the Dissenters in their Opinion of their Separation, when they see such large Allowances, and Concessions made in its Favour? What Dishonourable, and Unworthy Opinions must they entertain of the Priests of that Church, who can Sacrifice their most Solemn Declarations, and Oaths to Complaisance, and Preferment? What would be the End of All this, but to Establish Herefy, and Erastianism upon the Ruins of our Faith, and Discipline? Would not this Spiritual Legerdemain, this Fallacious Tricking, and Double-dealing, eradicate all the Principles of Truth, and Honesty, or Piety out of Men's Minds, make 'em Unconcerned, whether there is Any, or No Religion, Run 'em into an Universal Scepticism, and Infidelity, and make 'em All Atheists, or Pagists? For when they had Turn'd about, and about, and were grown Giddy with Change, they would either Give up Themselves to the Disbelief of all Things, or Rest their weary'd Judgments in the Authority of that Church alone, that can Delude 'em with the Specious Pretences of an Infallible Guide. Thus our FALSE BRETHREN, as the Jews did our Blessed Saviour, crucify his Church betwixt Thieves; and as they committed that Execrable Villainy under a Pretended Fear lest the ROMANS should come and take away their Place, and Nation, which by that very Fact They brought upon Themselves: So these Men, out of a Fictitious Fear lest the Modern ROMANS should come, and Destroy Our Church, are Working that Ruin they pretend to Avoid, and under a False Zeal of Keeping out Popery, are Themselves infallibly Bringing in That very POPERY into Our Kingdom, with which they so Falsly and ungratefully endeavour to Attaint the Church of England, the Greatest Bulwark, and only Safe-guard against Popery in the whole World! Tho' it were highly to be wish'd that those Excellent Laws made for Her Defence and Security, were at present put strictly into Execution; for the Roman-Catholick Agents, and Missionaries that swarm about this Great City, as it were in Defiance and Contempt of them, were never more Busy in making Profelytes to their Superstition, and Idolatry, and Perverting and Debauching Her Majesty's Subjects in every Corner of our Streets.

2. Thus we see how Dangerous these FALSE BRETHREN are to our Church, which is so Great and Considerable a Branch of our Civil Constitution, that the Support of Our Government depends upon its Welfare, and what Affects That must strike at the Foundation of Our State; Innovations in Either tending to the Subversion of their Laws, and the Unsettling the Establishment, and consequently to Anarchy, and Confusion. But to draw this Argument more home to the Point; I will endeavour to prove, that our FALSE BRETHREN are as Destructive of our Civil, as Ecclesiastical Rights. For first, it cannot be deny'd, that tho' They do submit to the Government, their Obedience is Forc'd, and Constrain'd, and therefore so Treacherous, and Uncertain, as never to be Trusted, because proceeding upon no Principle, but meer Interest and Ambition; and whenever That changes, their Allegiance must follow it; and therefore (to use their Own Expression) are as much Occasional Loyalists to the State, as They are Occasional Conformists to the Church; that is, They will Betray either, whenever it is in their Power, and They think it for their Advantage. FALSHOOD always implies Treachery; and whether That is a Qualification for any One to be Trusted, especially with the Guardianship of our Church, or Crown, let our Governors consider. And certainly nothing but the most Sottish Infatuation, can so
